"In a vein of facetiousness and engaging frankness Mr Harris explores the prevailing apathy and skepticism of the undergraduate world with regard to religion. He also undertakes a constructive program for intensifying the religious appeal so far as the typical student is concerned. His experience with undergraduates and his exemplary candor permit generalizations that make an illuminating diagnosis. As for the remedies, they are well thought out and, at least, not over-confident."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 N 12 '25 600w

HARRIS, STANLEY. Baseball, how to play it. 131p $1 Stokes

797 Baseball

25-11127

The manager of the Washington Baseball club tells how. It is possible that boys will finish their ball game first and afterward read the book to find out how they should have played. But read it they doubtless will, and thereafter settle questions of technique on the field with "Yeh? Well Bucky Harris says. . . !"

Booklist 22:61 N '25

"A textbook of the kind most to be appreciated by the American boy."

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 26 '25 120w

HARRIS, STANLEY—Continued

"Harris has performed an inestimable service for boys by telling them just how he led his men to victory. His book tells all aspiring boys just how to play every position on the team, and 'Bucky' knows." E. A. H.
+ Lit R p5 J1 11 '25 160w

"If a youngster were to study the chapter on pitching alone and religiously follow instructions therein he would be on the road to learning more baseball than most amateurs know. In his consideration of each position the writer carefully refers back to phases of the game already discussed, knitting each separate job into a coherent series of lessons on the national game."

+ N Y Times p5 J1 12 '25 900w

N Y Tribune p11 S 13 '25 300w

"From beginning to end Bucky Harris has written a technical book of baseball, and very good it is too."

+ N Y World p9 J1 5 '25 450w

St Louis p407 N '25

HARRIS, STANLEY. Playing the game; from mine boy to manager; with an introd. by Clark Griffith. 227p il $1.50 Stokes

797 Baseball

25-7568

The manager of the Washington baseball club here tells the story of his interesting career. As a frail undersized lad his chief admiration was his big brother Merle, and his chief ambition was to grow up to be, like him, a big leaguer. The family encouraged the boy's hopes, the mother watching his diet, and the big brother seeing to it that he had plenty of baseball practice. Then one day came the first chance to play with a minor league team. "Bucky" started off with a high heart. The game saw the temporary defeat of his plans but not of his buoyant optimism. Thru repeated failures and discouragements he won to the present post of high honor.

Booklist 21:369 J1 '25

"It is a straight-forward account, not literary, told in language which rarely verges on the ultra-technical. Any one would like to read it, even the lady who has never seen a professional baseball game would find her interest quickened. But every boy in the country ought to read it because it is the story of an uphill fight made by the American boy today and of the qualities that helped him to win it."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 24 '25 220w

"Modest and likable story."

+ N Y Tribune p10 My 3 '25 150w

"The fans are emerging from their long winter abstinence, hungry for the thrills of the national pastime, and this unpretentious little book should not be missed by any who prides himself a follower. The author relates his career in the simplest terms, but with clear evidence of the rugged honesty and fighting spirit by which he has won his way to the first rank of his profession."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 19 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:196 J1 '25

HARRISON, AUSTIN. Lifting mist. 317p $2 Seltzer [7s 6d Heinemann]

25-8365

There is in "Lifting mist" a picture of an English public school where boys live a monastic life entirely to themselves, where girls and the subject of girls are taboo, frowned upon or ignored by the masters. To such a school Sam Brabazon-Hone goes at an early age. He has the normal boy's instincts and the normal boy's curiosity concerning them, tho his mental and physical abilities are above the normal. Thru his friendship and love for Thrush, an amazing girl, half-woman, half-child, he finds the thing he has unwittingly sought. Their love is not innocent in the accepted meaning of the term, nor is it impure; for it sets the boy straight, puts his mental and emotional house in order and gives him a clean and beautiful ideal for the future.

"Mr. Harrison has written a good novel on a most difficult subject. He has studied his material, has mastered the psychology of the boy. He has drawn deeply from his observations, perhaps from his own youth, and has succeeded, on the whole, in recording his matter realistically. His material is excellent; he has at his command a thorough knowledge of the mechanics of novel writing; the two, combined with a naturally pleasing style and a facility of phrase, unite to make a most agreeable novel." B. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 22 '25 840w

Cleveland p107 N '25

"Mr. Harrison accomplishes with surprising ease the task of making an American reader feel at home in the cricket-playing, tradition-loving atmosphere of an English public school. He is thus left unhandicapped for his greater task, the study of a growing boy, and Sam Brabazon-Hone is presented with sympathetic insight. The dialogue in the book is excellently handled, the prose in general smooth and strong, yet unnecessary errors obtrude. A careful rereading would have revealed these minor faults." J. T. Shipley

+ — Lit R p8 Je 6 '25 400w

"The present tendency of dealing with the more unpleasant aspects of school life and cult of the sensitive, thoughtful boy are almost as tiresome as the sentimentalism of 'Eric' or 'The Hill.' Fortunately, Mr. Harrison escapes into a pretty idyllic series of episodes, which have an air of Peter Pan, Wendy, and the treetops, and are full of fancy."

+ Nation and Ath 35:214 My 17 '24 150w

"It is not unfair to call Lifting Mist a tract. Its author's reason for writing it is so clearly not even the journalist's desire to describe, but the moralist's desire to teach. As for the story which results, it is a poor thing." Ralph Wright

— New Statesman 23:130 My 10 '24 260w

"His sound judgment and clarity of expression render it provocative and enlightening to teachers and parents. His suave understanding and ready sympathy make it at once helpful and entertaining for boys. 'Lifting Mist' is the thought-compelling richly human document which one might expect of a son of that eminent Victorian, Frederic Harrison."

+ N Y Times p16 Ap 19 '25 900w

"The treatment of subjects ordinarily considered 'delicate' (in that sense of the word which amounts to 'indicate') is at once frank and fine; the narrative is straightforward and cogent; but it remains true that this is a problem-novel, and people will think of it less as a novel than as a problem." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 137:490 My 10 '24 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p320 My 22 '24 450w

HARRISON, HENRY SYDNOR. Andrew Bride of Paris. 215p il $2 Houghton

25-18700

Andrew Bride, a young critic and intellectual with a cultivated distaste for all things American, shakes the dust of his country from his feet and goes to Paris. On the voyage out he has an adventure with a lady, an American girl reared abroad, whose love for her country is deeper than Andrew's scorn. The meeting of these two expatriates, the voluntary and the involuntary, has results, and in the clash of ideals America and Mary win.

Booklist 2:73 N '25

Boston Transcript p4 O 28 '25 1450w

"Mr. Harrison has written no more than a novel of neatly turned incidents charmingly expounded in his intimate tho unbeautiful style." Gerald Goode

— + Int Bk R p60 D '25 620w

"This is (we say it again) an amusing book. It is something brand-new in fiction. Whoever is interested in the tribulations of the militant intellectual—the kind which acquires intellectuality through experience and the study of years, and pugnacity, congenitally—whoever is interested in the question 'Ought the Artist Live in Europe?' will find the story illuminating. Whoever can be interested in a man who has thought, selflessly, less of his physical life than of his and others' intellectual life will find the novel a most pleasant excursion in love and life." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p2 O 10 '25 600w

Nation and Ath 38:220 N 7 '25 350w

"The theme offers obvious opportunities for crude sentimentalism, and I cannot deny that Mr. Harrison has his lapses. But on the whole he keeps the comedy note in tune, and writes with grace, point and irony." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 26:49 O 24 '25 130w

"A graceful and pleasing little love story, a mildly satirical analysis of the younger generation movement in literature and the great exodus from Greenwich Village to Paris. So delicately and surely is this satirical feature maintained that the book has almost the aspect of a fable."

+ N Y Times p8 O 4 '25 800w

"A very entertaining, deft, clever novelette, and even though frankly partisan, it is much more moderate than the lucubrations of the intelligentsia. I read it with continuous enjoyment. But I rather wish Mr. Harrison had not dragged in Huneker. The caricature is not only unfair but malapropos." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p10 O 18 '25 750w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y World p7m O 18 '25 130w

"Mr. Harrison has a sense of humor, and, as we began by saying, he is always a graceful writer. His narrative possesses urbane charm. It is a slight but entertaining romance." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 2:427 D 19 '25 450w

"The narrative will be found entertaining, whether or not the reader believes that Mr. Harrison has fully explored all the issues involved."

+ Springfd Republican p6a D 6 '25 360w

"With all his errors Andrew is such a simple and pleasant young celebrity that it is impossible not to grow fond of him. The book is diverting, and the scenes on board the boat in which the famous young man sails from America, when he explains his motives to various philistines who are unable to understand them, have a peculiar excellence."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p672 O 15 '25 30Jw

HARRISON, HUBERT DEACON. Industrial psychology and the production of wealth. 184p $2 Dodd [5s Methuen]

331.015 Psychology, Applied. Industrial management [25-5683]

Finding the right man for the job and the right job for the man, eliminating unnecessary operations by scientific study, improving working conditions so that a maximum efficiency may be maintained; these are among the problems in industrial psychology considered in the present volume.

"The author has succeeded in writing a book which is both learned and interesting; for it shows the vastness of the field already covered by investigation, and it is vividly and pointedly written." C. D. B.

+ Int J Ethics 36:105 O '25 120w

"Well documented and well filled with quantitative data. Profoundly interesting." Stuart Chase

+ Nation 120:666 Je 10 '25 900w

Reviewed by Stuart Chase

N Y Tribune p10 Ap 5 '25 1200w

Reviewed by H. E. Gaston

N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 180w

"Those who wish to learn the nature of Taylorism and to understand the deep-rooted objection of labour to the system of payment by results will find a clear and philosophical exposition of the subject in this volume."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p803 N 27 '24 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:227 O '25

HARRISON, MARY ST LEGER (KINGSLEY) (MRS WILLIAM HARRISON) (LUCAS MALET, pseud.). Dogs of want. 349p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-6945

Both hero and heroine are dogged by a fear of poverty which prevents their independence and determines their choices. These dogs of want keep Barbara Heritage in a distasteful position as companion to a hard and calculating girl and they drive Denison Fisher, who loves Barbara, into marriage with this same girl because of the material advantages which will accrue to him and his family. Barbara says good-bye to the dogs of want by accepting marriage with Fisher's father-in-law, a marriage which satisfies her ambitions but which leaves her cold and places her in a most delicate and complicated relationship.

Boston Transcript p2 My 9 '25 500w

Ind 114:704 Je 20 '25 80w

"It is a relief to find here a dignified, impressive style, rising frequently to passages of rare descriptive beauty, a complete mastery of character values, a mellow, leisurely direction of conflicting elements shorn of sensational exaggerations. The conclusion is faultlessly achieved, a courageous disregard of the expected, the shoddy, the sentimentally conventional. Accepting its high consistency, we have no hesitation in commending the book as a mature, distinguished and thoroughly worth-while novel." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 Ap 4 '25 470w

"So far as its story is concerned, this very long novel seems a good deal of ado about comparatively little, but its characters are well drawn and its comments often discerning, so that it holds the reader's interest, in spite of being rather over-written."

+ — N Y Times p17 Ap 5 '25 750w

"It is all proper, elegant, improving and, what is the chief thing, of exceeding interest in a quiet way. Lucas Malet is probably not up on current slang. For her human nature and the English language are just about where they were when Sir Richard Calmady was knee high to a grasshopper." Will Cuppy

+ — N Y Tribune p11 Ap 12 '25 580w

"The Dogs of Want' is far too wordy. Nevertheless the volume holds the interest of the reader, although we realize that none of it is of any consequence."

+ — N Y World p7m Ap 12 '25 120w

"We cannot help being a little disappointed at the somewhat ridiculous and cynical end to a moving story. There is plenty of clever characterization and some delightful descriptions of mountain scenery."

+ — Spec 134:54 Ja 10 '25 120w

"Lucas Malet's new novel has many excellent things about it. The complication—a psychological one—is credible and interesting; the conflicting characters are well chosen and have, on the whole, an individual, besides a generic, significance; and there is a certain dignified amplitude in the method of narration which is deliberately, but quite successfully, adopted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p706 N 6 '24 460w

HARRISON, PAUL W. Arab at home. 345p il $3 50 Crowell

915.3 Arabia—Social life and customs. Missions—Arabia 24-23384

The written by a missionary who has spent fourteen years in Arabia the book is not a description of missionary work but an impression of the country and its people. The author describes with sympathy the life and character of the Arab and the desert which is his environment, his religion, the influence of western civilization and the hope of success for Christian missions in Arabia.

HARRISON, PAUL W.—Continued

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 17 '25 380w

"The book is not literature in the sense in which Lawrence and Powys make travel literature. But it is a work of very definite value and personality. It is a vivid and complete picture of Arab existence in both desert and town." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 26 '25 850w

"This is the finest book on Arab life and character that has appeared since C. M. Doughty's 'Arabia Deserta,' of forty years ago." C. E. Andrews

+ Sat R of Lit 1:492 Ja 31 '25 750w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 30 '24 880w

"The book is a simple record of long years of work and travel, all modestly told, amid the people in a land made inhospitable by nature. The author knows the Arabs thoroughly well (that is, as far as a Westerner can), and has written both for those who are interested in the future of the Arab in general and of those of Mesopotamia in particular. Almost every problem which he discusses is enlightened by shrewd judgment, and there is only one point with which we entirely disagree."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p607 S 24 '25 920w

HARRISON, SHELBY MILLARD, and others.
Public employment offices. 685p il $3.50 Russell Sage foundation

331.112 Employment agencies 24-28612

The book is a detailed study of the purpose, structure and methods of public employment offices. The study is divided into four parts, with a general introduction by Shelby M. Harrison. Part one, Agencies and methods by which employment work is being done and the place of the public employment bureau among them, by Bradley Buell; Part two, Organizing and administering a national public employment service, by Mary La Dame; Part three, Methods of organizing and performing the placement and administrative functions of a local office, by Leslie E. Woodcock; Part four, Methods of working with groups requiring special service, by Frederick A. King. There is a selective bibliography and a full index.

"There is much of interest to all students of labor problems and of governmental administration, although a more concise treatise would have been more valuable. A good summary is lacking and much of the descriptive data presented is a little out of date, as the field investigations were made as long ago as 1919 and 1920. Nevertheless, this book gives the best account which has yet appeared of the work of the public employment officers in this country." E. E. Witte

+ Am Econ R 15:530 S '25 480w

"Taken as a whole, the work does not make any striking contribution to the theory of employment exchanges, nor is its style such as to attract any large number of readers. Its chief use will be as a manual for those engaged in public employment work." P. H. Douglas

Ann Am Acad 121:196 S '25 500w

"The most exhaustive study of its kind."

Booklist 21:360 Jl '25

Management and Adm 9:292 Mr '25 150w

"A great part of the book is technical material, highly useful to persons working in employment offices. The general conclusion is of importance to everyone." R. J. Walsh

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 22 '25 550w

Outlook 140:71 My 13 '25 10w

HARTMANN, CYRIL HUGHES. Cavalier spirit, and its influence on the life and work of Richard Lovelace (1618-1658). 158p il $3 Dutton

942.06 Great Britain—History—Civil war, 1642-1649. Lovelace, Richard

Richard Lovelace was both poet and soldier, on the King's side during the struggle between Charles I and Parliament. It is as a cavalier that he is chiefly considered in this book which aims to give a picture of the man himself, his friends and his surroundings and the influences that contributed to the romance of his career.

"Mr. Hartmann is very fair in his estimates and opinions. He gives to Lovelace his full due, but does not try to make him out something that he was not." W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 26 '25 520w

Ind 115:685 D 12 '25 60w

"Mr. Hartmann presents, in spite of the unavoidable meagerness of authentic material, an entertaining book. And for those interested only in Lovelace, the poet, he has inserted the best of the poet's work, thoughtfully edited. It is not a long book—not a heavy one. In a thoroughly pleasing fashion, it projects a period through a rich and cultivated personality." Merton Winship

+ Lit R p4 O 31 '25 220w

HARTOUGH, E. W. Car inspector's handbook. (Railwaymen's handbook ser.) 284p il $2.50 Simmons-Boardman

625.22 Cars 24-18072

"Considers all phases of an inspector's duties and contains suggestions based on long experience. Includes a chapter on the work of wrecker and crew."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:417 Jl '25

HARTOUGH, E. W. Handbook of steel car repairs. (Railwaymen's handbook ser.) 280p il $2.50 Simmons-Boardman

699 Cars, Steel—Repair [25-11417]

"Deals with construction and repair of steel-frame flat-cars, and steel gondola, hopper, house, and tank cars."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:410 Jl '25

HARTOUGH, E. W. Handbook of wooden car repairs. (Railwaymen's handbook ser.) 290p il $2.50 Simmons-Boardman

699 Cars—Repair 25-11538

"Deals with construction and repair of wooden flat-cars, gondolas, and cabooses, and box, stock, and refrigerator cars."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:410 Jl '25

HARVEY, LEONARD CHARLES. Pulverised fuel, colloidal fuel, fuel economy and smokeless combustion. (Reconstructive technical ser.) 466p $18 Macmillan [42s Macdonald & E.]

662.6 Fuel. Coal, Pulverized. Fuel, Colloidal. Combustion [24-16430]

"A survey of the suitable fuels, their preparation and various applications. Contains valuable information, but the arrangement and proof-reading give evidence of careless work."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:417 Jl '25

HASSANEIN, AHMED MOHAMMED. Lost oases. 363p il $4 Century

916.19 Libyan desert 25-9054

An Egyptian and Oxford graduate, whose ancestors were Bedouins of the desert, describes his trek of twenty-two hundred miles by caravan into the more remote parts of the Libyan desert and his rediscovery of two lost oases. His narrative, which is written with unusual literary charm, has power to evoke the strange beauty of the desert, and is helped by an unusually fine collection of ninety-one pictures from photographs taken by himself.

"A fascinating account of a twenty-two-hundred-mile journey to the remote parts of the Libyan desert. The photographs are unusually attractive."

+ Booklist 22:28 O '25

"Great as is the scientific value of Hassanein Bey's discovery, remarkable as all the revelations of his rapt narrative, in his verbal and photographic descriptions and interpretations of the desert he has given his readers their most enduring memories." Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '25 1350w

Reviewed by H. C. Burr

Lit R p14 My 2 '25 780w

"An Egyptian Mussulman, unspoiled by his Western education, Hassanein Bey, with an obvious racial advantage, brings us a clear sense of the desert, its continuity and quiet pressure on the mind, undisturbed by that undisciplined rush of emotions consequent on new sights, sounds, or silences which the European tourist mainly supposes to be impressions."

+ Nation and Ath 38:215 N 7 '25 320w

"He writes with distinction, and his narrative, which is excellently illustrated with many first-rate photographs, is extremely interesting."

+ New Statesman 26:supvl N 14 '25 650w

"There is a vast amount of interesting, soberly told information in the book, humor too, and sustained interest in the narrative, despite occasional passages where the reader's attention flags, due to a certain monotony of detail and the not too flexible vocabulary of the writer, but it is a book that must be read slowly and with understanding." Marguerite Harrison

+ N Y Tribune p1 My 10 '25 950w

Reviewed by Alphonse Tonietti

N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 460w

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 20w

Pratt p31 autumn '25

"Although this is professedly, and very truly, a volume of travels it contains a great deal of information of importance to the statesman. The writer throws much light on the mentality, aspirations, and fears of the inhabitants of the borderland between Egypt and Italian Libya."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p665 O 15 '25 900w

"An interesting account of explorations in the Sahara written by a native Egyptian, educated in England."

Wis Lib Bul 21:198 J1 '25

"A fascinating and thrilling account." E. B. Reed

+ Yale R n s 14:802 J1 '25 280w

HATSCHEK, EMIL, ed. Foundations of colloid chemistry; a selection of early papers bearing on the subject. 173p $6 Macmillan
541.345 Colloids [25-11870]

"These nine important papers by various pioneers of the study of colloid chemistry range in date from 1838 to 1889, and are now reprinted." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The contents are as follows: On the physiological utility of the fats and on a new theory of cell formation based on their co-operation and supported by several new facts, by Dr. Ascherson; Studies on the demulsion of silver chloride, by Francesco Selmi; A study of the pseudo-solutions of Prussian blue and of the influence of salts in destroying them, by Francesco Selmi; On the products of decomposition of sulphuretted hydrogen and sulphurous acid in aqueous solutions, by Ascanio Solvero and Francesco Selmi; On the experimental relations of gold (and other metals) to light, by Michael Faraday; On the properties of silicic acid and other analogous colloidal substances, by Thomas Graham; The question of the silver sub-oxide compounds, by Wilhelm Muthmann; On the nature of colloids and their water content, by J. M. van Bemmelen; On allotropic forms of silver, by Carey Lea."—(J Phys Chem)

"These articles are all interesting and stimulating; in particular those of Ascherson, Faraday, Graham and Van Bemmelen because of the alertness, clarity and vigor of intellect which they disclose and that of Carey Lea for the originality, elegance and conclusiveness of the work which it describes. The volume should be a useful and illuminating one for students and devotees of colloid chemistry." A. B. Lamb

+ Am Chem Soc J 47:2065 J1 '25 380w

"In reading these papers one is continually arrested by the fact that the views expressed are so often strikingly in accord with modern ideas, and the editor further impresses this on the reader by means of notes giving the references to later literature. The task of selection must have been very difficult, but the choice made can only be described as an admirable one, and chemists in general will owe a great debt of gratitude to the editor and to the Colloids Committee." T. S. Price

+ J Phys Chem 29:896 J1 '25 450w

"Mr. Emil Hatschek has rendered a real service to all students of colloid chemistry. He has provided most useful notes to all these papers, and he is to be congratulated on his work as editor and translator." W. Clayton

+ Nature 116:494 O 3 '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p227 Mr 26 '25 120w

HAUPTMANN, GERHART JOHANN ROBERT. Island of the great mother; or, The miracle of Ile des dames; a story from the Utopian archipelago, tr. by Willa and Edwin Muir. 328p $2.50 Viking press

25-21492

A boatload of shipwrecked women and one boy arrive safely on an island in the Utopian archipelago. Immediately upon landing one of the ladies mounts a rock and announces to her still slightly hysterical companions that they must at once elect a president and organize a state. The organization proceeds forthwith, and the life of the community begins in orderly fashion. There is no male in the party save the twelve-year-old Phaon. A year later the population of the state is suddenly and no doubt miraculously increased. It continues to rise. The fate of the Utopian community and the diligent love affairs of Phaon form the substance of this ironic tale.

Reviewed by C. K. Trueblood

Dial 79:504 D '25 1100w

"Here is dignity, nobility and rare good taste. It holds the inevitability of life, the emphasis of fantasy. It is a book that stimulates deep, silent laughter, excites the mind, if any, and provokes and broadens the capacity for beauty." Merton Winship

+ Lit R p2 D 26 '25 250w

"Vaguely mystical and, unless its intention escapes me, rather pointless." J. W. Krutch

— Nation 121:580 N 18 '25 100w

"Its truth is general rather than particular. In its grandiose beauty it appeals to the Teutonic rather than the Anglo-Saxon imagination." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 45:144 D 23 '25 160w

"Gerhart Hauptmann is a man of genius, and, at his simplest, great: in The Island of the Great Mother he appears to have overreached himself. He has been ingenious; which is precisely the opposite of being subtle." P. C. Kennedy

— + New Statesman 26:240 D 5 '25 860w

"His acknowledged versatility has again acquitted itself in the beautiful realization of this fantastic fable. It is with high spirits and profound wisdom that he has related the founding of this colony of women in the South Seas. The situation is a titanic farce, with its mocking laughter brushing the high spots in the past civilizations of history."

+ N Y Times p8 N 8 '25 700w

HAUPTMANN, G. J. R.—Continued

"There is the same fine writing, a broader characterization, a singular insistence on youth and a delightful, coy malice that is most refreshing. One regrets only that Hauptmann did not write this book twenty years ago, when he might have made it a masterpiece."

+ — N Y Tribune p3 N 15 '25 450w

"Hauptmann's metaphysical speculations and sociological ideas stand out from the body of recent literature as the work of an intense and beautiful mind. It is a pity, almost, that there is nothing in the book to attract the antagonism of the Society for the Supervision of Vice. Lacking the advertisement which 'Jurgen' received Hauptmann's masterpiece is not likely to take America by storm. The fact that it deserves an even greater success than Mr. Cabell's romance remains, however, indisputable. Mr. and Mrs. Muir have done a fine work in making this book available to the non-German reader." E: Davison

+ Sat R of Lit 2:363 D 5 '25 550w

"Purely as a story this novel contains much to admire, a rich imagination, a considerable suggestiveness to reflection, and no little vivacity in the characterization of types such as the President. We are forced to confess that the luxuriance of the ladies' eloquence and the heavy grossness of some of the descriptions pall after a while."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p856 D 10 '25 550w

HAWKER, ROBERT STEPHEN. Twenty poems; with an introd. by John Drinkwater. (Little nineteenth century classics) 48p 75c Duffield [2s 6d Blackwell]

821

[25-21612]

This volume brings together a small selection from the poems of the devoted and eccentric Vicar of Morwenstow whose work, except for his stirring ballad of Trelawny, has all but passed out of remembrance.

"Some of his verse is very good indeed but some of it suffers from the fact that he lived away from literary men and was not always too particular with himself. The Trelawny ballad is very good and 'A Christ-Cross Rhyme' and 'The Dirge' are very good indeed." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 J1 25 '25 320w

"An outspoken quality of mind is reflected in the poems which Mr. Drinkwater has chosen. Some of them are uneven, but all have a ringing directness." Lisle Bell

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 16 '25 150w

HAWKES, C. P. London comedy; interludes in town. 235p $2.50 (7s 6d) Medici soc.

914.21 London—Social life and customs

Little sketches of the passing show in London that reflect the mingled pathos and comedy, tragedy and burlesque of the city scene. The book is dedicated "To that sagacious connoisseur of London life and character, the constable on point duty at Hyde Park corner."

"A rare collection of literary gems, semi-precious perhaps; they will delight all discriminating readers."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 21 '25 300w

"In such essays as 'Horsesense' there is a mature, whimsical humour as distinct from a sense of 'fun.' But the schoolboy spirit constantly emerges, very pleasantly, in Mr. Hawkes, as when he revels in the bustle in Victoria Station or rejoices in the 'sea atmosphere' of the Embankment and London Bridge. Like the schoolboy—only in careful, polished prose—he describes these places as if no one had seen them before."

+ Nation and Ath 37:548 Ag 1 '25 420w

"The London Comedy will please, especially, those who delight in meetings with old familiar literary ghosts."

+ New Statesman 25:582 S 5 '25 70w

"Mr. Hawkes's little stories and sketches—some witty, some pathetic—have a flavor and mellowness as though each character and incident on his enchanting pages had been distilled with a precious drop of an old rare London vintage. There is somehow permeated through the whole atmosphere of his anecdotes a sense of the richly, vividly stored past of London."

Sylvia Thompson

+ N Y Tribune p15 N 15 '25 660w

Reviewed by Earle Walbridge

Outlook 141:449 N 18 '25 180w

"Colonel Hawkes writes with all the joyousness and exuberance of the pioneer. London is for him a city of infinite variety, and he can find pleasure in all her changing aspects."

+ Sat R 140:294 S 12 '25 200w

"A very readable little volume, mellowed by kindly sentiment and urbane learning."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:325 N 21 '25 230w

"Vivid impressions set down with a capable and humorous touch."

+ Spec 135:456 S 19 '25 120w

"Mr. Hawkes writes floridly, determined (sometimes far too obviously) that if you are not interested in the subject you shall be interested in his way of writing about it."

-- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p517 Ag 6 '25 280w

HAWKINS, SIR ANTHONY HOPE (ANTHONY HOPE, pseud.). Little Tiger. 304p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-21417

"Mr. Hope writes of a woman who with her dull, meaningless husband comes from a dull, meaningless life in Australia to his cousin's country-home in England, and who, given a chance, embarks upon a social career in London whereby her charm and good looks win the admiration of several men."—Sat R of Lit

"Skill and forcefulness are displayed in the style, and the characters are real and well designed. It is a diverting story, and one that should find popularity with those who enjoyed 'The Prisoner of Zenda,' in spite of its being somewhat less romantic and somewhat more ephemeral."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 350w

"It is an entertaining story, well and often cleverly written, with many well-drawn minor characters, yet somehow strangely lacking in any effect of reality."

+ — N Y Times p9 N 8 '25 650w

"Anthony Hope is not the man to bore his expectant readers. In his 'Little Tiger' his characteristically engaging manner as he goes along is sufficient to keep one's nose in the book in default of any great cumulative interest in plot or character."

+ — N Y Tribune p9 Ja 3 '26 150w

"As a realist in 'Little Tiger' Anthony Hope exhibits a rather dismal competence. There is nothing about the book which one can single out as defective, but at the same time it is no mere desire for fault-finding which leads one to believe that it is mediocre in quality. It possesses no vigor, no color, no acute discernment, only the stock-in-trade of a good professional writer who commits no blunders and is dependably intelligent."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:467 Ja 2 '26 250w

"Mr. Hope seems to have succumbed to the post-war demand for the sophisticated and the hectic. Possibly this is the new romance."

— Spring'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p478 J1 16 '25 600w

HAWKSWORTH, HALLAM. Year in the wonderland of birds. (Strange adventures in nature's wonderlands) 245p il $1.60 Scribner 598.2 Birds 25-16798

The book, written for boys and girls, begins with September and progresses thru the year, month by month, with seasonal information about birds. Most of the well-known and a few uncommon birds are included. The book is illustrated and has an index.

"It should arouse interest and stimulate a real find-out-for-yourself spirit."
+ Booklist 22:122 D '25

"This small book is delightfully done, with seasonal divisions which are of great help, and with information imparted in a non-aggressive but extremely generous fashion. There is even convincing defense for the maligned sparrow."
M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p813 N '25 80w

"The author treats his subjects in a readable fashion for young folks."

+ Spring'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 60w

HAWORTH, PAUL LELAND. George Washington, country gentleman. 336p il $3 Bobbs B or 92 Washington, George 25-6041

"The book is a straightforward account of Washington's operations as a farmer. Through Mr. Haworth's pages we see our national hero as a business man engaged in the only business he knew—farming. We see him in doubt and perplexity, trying to employ a large number of slaves usefully on a plantation of such poor soil that it was hardly fit to support half the people who were living on it. We see him sending to England for agricultural treatises, carefully experimenting with this and that, keeping his books of account, evicting tenants and entertaining every stranger of decent appearance who happened to drop in. . . . Mr. Haworth's book is based on Washington's own records as a farmer. These records are voluminous."—N Y Tribune

"There are a myriad of amusing and important side lights thrown on the figure of the great man."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 16 '25 300w

"The substantial value of this book lies largely in the assemblage of data from many sources, bearing on Washington's life as a farmer, which is so arranged as to present a unified and well-proportioned view. The charm that has given it popularity is to be found, partly, in the nature of the subject, but perhaps even more in the simple, readable style."
A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p12 My 31 '25 1550w

"Mr. Haworth's book is written with simplicity and with a lucid charm which, I think will make it interesting even to those who do not understand farming. Its historical value lies in its clear account of the methods by which the Father of Our Country became its most opulent citizen."
W. E. Woodworth

+ N Y Tribune p1 Je 7 '25 1150w

"A pleasant book about the home life at Mount Vernon and about Washington as farmer, employer, and business man."

+ Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 20w

R of Rs 72:112 J1 '25 50w

HAWTHORNE, HILDEGARDE (MRS JOHN MILTON OSKISON). Makeshift farm. 246p $1.75 Appleton 25-17345

"An old farm near the sea is the temporary home of a literary father, a capable far-seeing mother and a family of six children of assorted ages. They are all thoroughly likable, their days teem with work and play and a nice regard for division of labor and responsibility is shown. A bit of mystery, happily solved, provides sufficient plot."—Booklist

Booklist 22:122 D '25

"'Makeshift Farm' is an ideal story—ideal because it is so beautifully, interestingly true to life."
M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p49 D '25 620w

HAY, IAN, pseud. See Beith, J: H.

HAY, JAMES. Bellamy case. 259p $2 Dodd 25-756

Joan Bellamy, a southern girl endowed with unusual courage and vitality, is the Republican candidate for the nomination to the State senate. Her triumph is certain until the arrival of Jackson, her opponent's, campaign manager who threatens to disclose a secret in her life unless she withdraws from the race. She ignores his warning. The following night Jackson is murdered. Rumor implicates Joan and her brother George in the affair, but with the help of Jefferson Hastings, Washington's cleverest detective, the Bellamy name is cleared four days before the primaries are closed.

Boston Transcript p4 F 4 '25 500w

"'The Bellamy Case' has a touch of novelty in its politician heroine, but its complications are unreal, and it falls rather flat."
L: Moore

+ — Int Bk R p471 Je '25 20w

"A fairly well managed puzzle story, though the solution is not logically reached, being popped in with no preparatory clew. But some one should donate a fund for the purpose of providing dictionaries—a small, inexpensive, school-size one would do—for writers, publishers and proofreaders to enable them to learn the meaning of 'aphasia.'" H. L. P.

+ — Lit R p11 Ja 17 '25 350w

"The dénouement covers too many pages to designate a good mystery. Good mysteries do not require lengthy solutions; moreover, this is too involved to satisfy the reader. That Joan triumphs in the end and everything glistens brightly is to be expected. It seems that 'The Bellamy Case' has been strained a seam or two to be different. And with its often ludicrous corkscrew threads, it does turn out to be very different, indeed."

— N Y Times p17 Ja 18 '25 550w

"A very snappy and up-to-date model in detective fiction." Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p10 Ja 18 '25 230w

"Good detective story; recommended for any library."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:200 J1 '25

HAYES, SIR BERTRAM FOX. Hull down; reminiscences of wind-jammers, troops and travellers. 310p il $4.50 Macmillan [10s 6d Cassell]

B or 92 Merchant marine—Great Britain. White Star line. European war, 1914-1918 —Naval operations [25-15679]

Retiring at the end of forty-five years in the merchant service, Sir Bertram Hayes has gathered together his memories of many voyages, many experiences, many travellers. His first voyages were on sailing ships to Calcutta and Melbourne. When he retired he was commodore of the White Star fleet. Many pages in his book relate to his experiences in the World war, during which he was in command of the transport Olympic.

"Altogether we are very grateful to the author for his highly entertaining account of life on the high seas. Hull Down is a straightforward record of an active life, delightfully spiced with humor." W: Whitman, 3rd.

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf S '25 680w

Booklist 22:71 N '25

"This story is of unremitting interest. The author's chatty style, his fidelity to detail in narrative, his frankness, his breeziness is admirable." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 22 '25 800w

"Out of a varied and colorful collection of memories he has selected and assembled the material for a most interesting book. Moreover, his story is informed with his personality. It is written by him and not about him. It is a book which all sea lovers will enjoy."

+ Ind 115:365 S 26 '25 100w

HAYES, BERTRAM FOX—Continued

"Sir Bertram Hayes makes no claim to literary style, but has a bluff and breezy vigour that admirably suits his matter."

+ Nation and Ath 37:sup344 Je 13 '25 250w

"He has many entertaining experiences to narrate and graces his pages, for the most part, with that conversational skill which is almost as necessary as seamanship to the captain of a transatlantic floating hotel."

+ New Statesman 25:supviii My 23 '25 360w

"No one expected that a seaman of Commodore Hayes's record of modest, self-effacing gallantry in his profession should be other than modest in presenting the record of his busy and honorable career. Yet his book would have been far more readable had he been a different sort of man, and at the same time less worth reading."

N Y Times p3 Je 7 '25 1950w

"As one turns the pages of Captain Hayes's reminiscences the qualities that made his career possible assemble themselves. But of the man's inner life, of his emotions throughout his nearly forty-five years at sea, one gets hardly a hint." Arthur Warner

N Y Tribune p10 Ag 2 '25 1150w

St Louis 23:438 D '25

"Sir Bertram Hayes has as much experience of the Atlantic passenger traffic as any man living, and his reminiscences are extremely readable."

+ Sat R 139:496 My 9 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p279 Ap 23 '25 900w

HAYNES, EDMUND SIDNEY POLLOCK. Enemies of liberty. 192p $2 Hyman-McGee [6s G. Richards]

323.4 Liberty [23-17957]

In these essays the author vigorously upholds the liberties of the individual against the tyranny of factions, groups, corporations and those types of person who wish to make social welfare compulsory. Among the enemies of liberty he reckons the church, the puritan, the collectivist, the communist, the prohibitionist, the prude, the war-lord, the super-capitalist and the politician, and each of these enemies he discusses singly.

"On the whole, the author makes out a pretty favorable case against 'the enemies of liberty'; and if he does nothing else, he forces the reader to look upon an often neglected phase of modern society." E. G.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 24 '25 400w

"The great part of the essay is very alert and pungent. The chapters on prohibition and prudery are very amusing reading and, incidentally, a serious historical retrospect."

+ Int J Ethics 34:200 Ja '25 400w

"Mr. Haynes's book is both provocative and, in its discussion of the specific forms assumed today by the repressive forces, sound. It suffers, however, on the theoretical side from two implied fallacies: first, the assumption that a free expression of the majority will would result in the greatest possible freedom of the individual; and second, the assumption that logic suffices to make clear the distinction between unjust repressions and those infringements of liberty which are necessary and good." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 120:45 Ja 14 '25 950w

Sat R 136:16 Jl 7 '23 800w

"Mr. Haynes combines robust common sense with hearty prejudice in the most enchanting manner. On the whole, Mr. Haynes has given us a slapdash but stimulating book, one not to be taken too seriously but distinctly worth reading."

+ Spec 131:322 S 8 '23 580w

"Unless we know whose liberty is to be considered, and how much liberty is to be allowed, his discussion, while pleasant reading, cannot prove of much immediate practical profit, still less of permanent importance. His criticism is obviously one-sided, and goes either too far or not far enough. The oppressors whom he despises may fairly claim that they too are exercising their individual liberty, even when, in doing so, they control and mould the lives of others."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 Jl 26 '23 1000w

HAYWARD, CHARLES H. English furniture at a glance. 106p il $2.50 Putnam [5s Architectural press]

749 Furniture 25-11046

This is a handbook of English period furniture from the 16th to the 18th centuries. The furniture is grouped according to type with illustrations from drawings by the author and explanatory text.

Arch Forum 43:49 S '25 180w

"The book will be useful as a guide for those who want a general and quick survey of the subject."

+ Booklist 22:61 N '25

"Prepared with a minimum of text, and with pen and ink pictures of the variety of forms, the book is a very complete graphic survey. The pictures are clear and informative, as is the text, which summarizes essential differences and similarities and directs the attention of the uninitiated reader to noteworthy changes down through the years."

+ Lit R p5 Ag 1 '25 200w

"The book is badly printed and the engraving carelessly done. The text, too, is merely factual, without any enthusiasm. Nobody with any real knowledge and love of old furniture would find the book of the slightest interest, and anybody lacking such love and knowledge will hardly find the key to them in anything so bald and crudely pictured."

— N Y Tribune p10 Jl 12 '25 350w

"The scheme is intelligent but the drawings might have been better."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Je 10 '25 60w

"The 106 illustrations occupy 61 of the 106 pages of the volume, by which it may be inferred that the text is chiefly a commentary on the pictures. The drawings, which might be bettered, seek to show the gradual development of style and therefore are typical rather than unusual."

Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 24 '25 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p506 Ag 27 '25 100w

HAYWARD, WALTER SUMNER. Retail handbook; with an introductory chapter by Carson S. Duncan, and a section on Credits and collections by Dwight E. Beebe. 617p il $5 McGraw

658.87 Retail trade 24-25297

"Attempts to set forth principles which will apply in the work of the retail merchant in any line."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Although the book is written primarily for the merchant, it will be found very useful in furnishing background for a course of instruction on retail-store management."

Harvard Business R 3:510 Jl '25 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:166 Mr '25

HAYWARD, WILLIAM RICHART, and JOHN-SON, GERALD WHITE. Story of man's work. 245p il $3 Minton, Balch & co.

331.09 Civilization. Economics. Industry—History 25-17727

The story of man's work traces the sources from which the industrial system of modern civilization derives. From the primitive savage working for and by himself, thru the era of slave and serf, and the slow development of a class consciousness that resulted in the labor guilds, down to the industrial revolution ushered in by the invention and use of machines in industry, step by step the evolution of the present factory system of labor is described.

Booklist 22:102 D '25

"One will search vainly for a volume which presents so clearly and compactly the closely related questions of why men work, how they worked in ancient times and what influences have dominated the development of industry."

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 26 '25 300w

"It is a masterly piece of work. It is popular without being careless. It is the work of scholars but with none of the pedantry of learning. There are no marks of a textbook about it; but its style, the beauty of its workmanship, the charm of its pictures, and the real fascination of its themes and of its discourse fit it for successful use as a basis of daily discussion in any high-school class of any grade."

+ Educ R 70:279 D '25 900w

"The work of simplifying and popularizing one of the most involved and in many respects the least spectacular aspects of history has been done so deftly that it would scarcely be too much to call it an epic of labor." Harold Calender

+ N Y Times p7 O 11 '25 1400w

HAZARD, CAROLINE. From college gates. 326p $2 Houghton

370.4 Education. Education of women 25-6409

A collection of thirty-two addresses delivered by Miss Hazard for the most part during her presidency of Wellesley, 1899-1910, and covering a wide range of educational topics, especially the education of women. The second section, Through the gates, records the influence of Alice Freeman Palmer, "that bright spirit who shed her luster upon Wellesley College."

Booklist 21:327 Je '25

"The book, in the main, is interesting and illuminating. It displays the fine ideals which actuated the leaders of the movement for higher education for women. It gives the layman an educational perspective."

+ Bookm 61:604 Jl '25 150w

"Part III, 'Within the Gates,' includes, as the title shows addresses given at Wellesley. It seems to us that several of these are so ephemeral in interest as hardly to warrant inclusion in a volume intended for the general public. However, there is rich meat for consumption without them." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p11 Mr 28 '25 350w

"Miss Hazard's theories are saved from being set aside as old-fashioned by the alertness of her mind and the thoroughness of her information. The reader cannot fail to be impressed by the rounded mature style."

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 29 '25 580w

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 10w

St Louis p338 S '25

Springf'd Republican p8 Mr 10 '25 520w

HAZELTINE, LOUIS ALAN. Electrical engineering. (Engineering science ser.) 625p $6.50 (30s) Macmillan

621.3 Electric engineering 24-31188

"This text on the general fundamentals of electrical engineering differs from existing texts in several ways. It accents fundamental circuit principles, develops them on a rigid analytical basis and minimizes details of electrical machinery design. . . A student who mastered the text would be thoroughly and broadly grounded in electrical engineering." (Electrical world, 1925)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:298 My '25

HAZLITT, WILLIAM. New writings; collected by P. P. Howe. 227p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Secker]

824

[25-14497]

"Mr. Howe, who has already put students under obligation with his admirable Life of Hazlitt, once more makes a claim on their gratitude by bringing to light a goodly sheaf of Hazlitt's essays hitherto buried in obscure files of periodicals. Most of the papers are now for the first time identified. Concerning the accuracy of the attributions there can scarcely be a doubt. With the possible exception of the last essay, they carry unmistakably on their face the stamp of Hazlitt's opinions and his style. They are taken from 'The New Monthly Magazine,' 'The London Weekly Review,' and 'The Atlas,' and belong to the last two years (1828-'29) of Hazlitt's life."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 22:110 D '25

Bookm 62:93 S '25 180w

"One is grateful to Hazlitt's biographer for presenting with characteristically precise footnotes and an index, these new later writings in which, resist it as one may, one recognizes a spirit as authoritative as it is unbusinesslike."

+ Dial 79:516 D '25 80w

"Viewed as journalism, 'New Writings' possesses astonishing vitality after this lapse of almost a century. It is a book for the lover of the essay, aside from those lovers of Hazlitt to whom every line of his is precious. Even in these 'crumbs' we sense the quality of Hazlitt's genius." Harry Salpeter

+ Int Bk R p671 S '25 1500w

"His style is almost unmistakable. Here are the Miltonic and Shakespearean quotations, profuse and unverified, as in the signed works; the old vigour, the obtrusive prejudices, the familiar preferences, the side-hits, in the manner of the Letters of Junius, as pet aversions. No one ever plagiarised more from himself than Hazlitt; and here we light on much that we have seen before over his name. The notes are brief and to the point; those only who have tried to do such things themselves can realise how much unostentatious labour has gone to the making of them. Mr. Howe is modest about them; and he has the candour to confess when he does not know." E. E. K.

+ New Statesman 25:76 My 2 '25 1900w

Reviewed by H: E. Armstrong

+ N Y Times p7 Jl 12 '25 1800w

"Every feature of Hazlitt's temper and style will be recognized in the course of these papers by readers who are already intimate with his writing." Jacob Zeitlin

N Y Tribune p8 Ag 2 '25 950w

"What are these essays? Nineteen of them have never before been assigned to Hazlitt, and others have been regarded as questionable. Yet of these the greater part carry their passport in their own style. And what a style! It would be a graceful tour de force to write of Hazlitt without using the word 'gusto,' but why be so artificial? 'Gusto,' then, is here; 'gusto' and allusiveness." B. C. Clough

+ Sat R of Lit 2:102 S 5 '25 650w

"Whether he is criticizing Leigh Hunt, Byron, and Landor or writing articles on phrenology or on travelling abroad, he is at his freest and his most delightful. It may be that Hazlitt had the least interesting mind of all our great English critics, as Mr. T. S. Eliot states; but the turn of his sentences will always rejoice our hearts; and even when he writes a mere pastiche, as in his account of Beau Brummell, he does it with a lighter and a more efficient touch than any of his contemporaries could attain."

+ Spec 134:503 Mr 28 '25 180w

"Here is a very welcome book. The articles in this collection show us both the strength and the weakness of this dithyrambic style. In the best of them we find stimulating energy, quickness of vision, and spontaneity of phrase and

HAZLITT, WILLIAM—Continued
idea, united by a 'passion that draws distinctions and conclusions finer than the subtlest reason can detect.' R: Church

+ Spec 134:sup749 My 9 '25 850w
+ Springfield Republican p12 J1 31 '25 1050w

"All the little unsigned essays and scraps of journalism which Mr. Howe reprints seem both by their merits and by their faults, to be the genuine products of Hazlitt's pen. It is his authentic voice, now railing, now talking divine good sense; and the themes are the themes which are already familiar to Hazlitt's readers. . . . They are, as Mr. Howe says, but the sweepings and crumbs from a rich man's table; and while to those who have never partaken of the feast they will give but a poor idea of its variety and richness, others who have already sat at the golden table will be once more reminded of the varied and rich fare, the fiery vintages, and the noble discourse, as well as of the noisy brawlings and altercations of that immortal banquet."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p265 Ap 16 '25 1800w

H'DOUBLER, MARGARET NEWELL. The dance. 283p il $5 Harcourt

793 Dancing 25-4462

"The author is teacher of dancing in the University of Wisconsin. Her book is an explanation and description of her method for other teachers but her discussion of the dance as a means of self expression will interest general readers. Illustrations from photographs and from drawings by Bernice Oehler."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 21:332 Je '25

"An authoritative, interesting manual, addressed primarily to the teacher, for the elementary school or for the college to replace in American life interpretative dancing as an intimate and real possession of the most beautiful things humanity has achieved." E. B. T.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 4 '25 570w
Cleveland p121 D '25

Reviewed by Brander Matthews
Int Bk R p527 J1 '25 550w

"The book is throughout very practical and especially so in its chapters devoted to showing how importantly the dance can be made to function as a factor in the college curriculum."

+ N Y Times p21 Mr 22 '25 580w

"It is difficult to see why so wide a title should have been chosen for this book, which is concerned with a particular kind of dancing—the 'interpretative' kind."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p474 J1 16 '25 1200w

"A useful textbook for instructors in schools and colleges."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:489 J1 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:86 Mr '25

HEARN, LAFCADIO. Occidental gleanings; ed. by Albert Mordell. 2v 275;289p $6 Dodd

814 25-18716

"After years of careful investigation, Mr. Albert Mordell, one of the best-informed Hearn scholars in this country, has compiled two volumes of Hearn's writing, practically all of which now appears in book form for the first time. . . . The first volume contains, among other articles, the famous Osias Midwinter letters, never before reprinted. In the second volume are included about sixty articles on educational, scientific, speculative, sociological and musical subjects."—Publisher's note

"The papers in these two volumes are extremely diverse. And of course through all his writings there is continuous evidence of his fondness for the weird and the strange, for myths, religious superstitions and folk lore." E. F. E.

Boston Transcript p7 S 16 '25 600w
Cleveland p121 D '25

"There is always a question regarding the advisability of preserving all a man's work, especially his journalistic work done under the compulsion of time and necessity but Hearn stands this test remarkably well." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p5 N 7 '25 200w

"It is doubtful that these posthumous publications will add anything to that fame of which Lafcadio Hearn now seems so assured. On the other hand there is no reason why it should detract from the stature of the man and writer."

N Y Times p3 O 11 '25 1250w

"As curiosities, the essays in the second volume rate somewhat higher, for they reveal a Lafcadio Hearn of another stripe than that we have adduced from the Japanese period." H. S.

N Y World 4pm O 11 '25 250w

Outlook 141:244 O 14 '25 120w

St Louis 23:435 D '25

"One may wonder whether the purpose served in ransacking the files of the New Orleans Item and Times-Democrat has any serious bearing on Hearn's literary reputation."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p689 O 22 '25 900w

HEDIN, SVEN ANDERS. My life as an explorer; tr. by Alfild Huebsch. 544p il $5 Boni & Liveright

B or 92 Asia—Description and travel. Tibet —Description and travel 25-24868

Sven Hedin has described his explorations in many volumes. Here he gathers his travels in one connected whole beginning with his journey to Baku in the Caucasus. There on the threshold of Asia his thoughts turned definitely from the North Pole, about which his youthful dreams had centered, to Asia, which became the scene of all his future explorations—in Persia, in Pamir, the plateau region of Central Asia known as the "roof of the world," in China and unknown parts of Tibet. The illustrations are by the author.

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Bookm 62:344 N '25 620w

Boston Transcript p7 N 21 '25 700w

"It is a stirring book of adventure, graphically written and well illustrated with the author's own sketches. It has only one serious fault for the lay reader. Those who like to read a travel-book with some sense of location, and to whom names like Saka-dsong and Taklamakan mean absolutely nothing, will find Sven Hedin's sketch-maps, trivial and poorly drawn, totally inadequate." Earl Hanson

+ Int Bk R p127 Ja '26 1550w

"Hedin is often moved to brief reflection, as when he comes upon the Tibetan monks who bury themselves alive, but his story marches forward incessantly, diversified by anecdote, broken by dialogue, so that it is always readable, though it avoids those merely frivolous and trivial personalia." Fullerton Waldo

+ Lit R p7 N 21 '25 470w

"The autobiography in which Hedin sums up his published reminiscences is translated by Alfild Huebsch, whose style enhances the charm that it reflects. No syllable is wasted; and each sentence is as vibrant as the lilt of a Norse saga." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p3 N 15 '25 900w

"The book is an account of an astonishing number of adventures and swiftly delineated outlines of the countries traversed, and of perils, a tithe of which would satisfy most men. The things of greatest value are the accounts of vanished pomps and customs, such as the glories of the Shah's palace and court life—glories and splendors which have now passed forever, to give place to the drab pseudo-equality and democracy of republicanism in the Orient." W: Beebe

+ N Y Tribune p4 D 6 '25 820w

"My Life as an Explorer' is the modest, adequate story of a rich and really important life. Its illustrations by Hedin himself are by no means the least of its attractions." W. P. Beazell

+ N Y World p7m N 1 '25 750w

"The narrative tends at times to prolixity, but one is rewarded by episodes of dramatic intensity, such as the description of crossing a desert, the camels and men dying of thirst, a tragic adventure recounted in the stark realistic vein natural to the writer. The book is intended for the general reader and contains a minimum of technical information."

+ Outlook 141:564 D 9 '25 210w

"Truly delightful are the many sketches, the work of Sven Hedin himself, which serve to illustrate his narrative. Of these there are nearly two hundred in number, supplemented by several full pages in color which are also good. For those who read this book in the hope of discovering what manner of man its author is there awaits a keen disappointment." Gene Lamb

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:444 D 26 '25 950w

HEIDENSTAM, VERNER VON. Tree of the Folkungs; tr. from the Swedish by Arthur G. Chater. 364p $3 Knopf

25-8740

Here is traced the rise and fall of the mighty line of the Folkungs which at its height in the 13th century, brought Sweden into a position of prominence and power in mediaeval Europe. The story begins at the close of the Viking era. On the return of the fleet, after a successful raid, old Folke Filbyter renounces the sea, shares his plunder with the crew, buys vast tracts of land and settles down as a wealthy landowner. From his union with a pagan dwarf woman the famous line begins. Their son, a moody weakling, steals the free born daughter of a neighbor and marries her. She dies giving birth to the child who is destined to become an earl and the father of kings. Thruout this first half of the book there is the sound of the fierce conflict between paganism and Christianity. The second half of the book records the struggle between the earl's sons for the kingdom and witnesses the beginning of its destined decay. The saga of the Folkungs is finished.

Booklist 21:383 J1 '25

Cleveland p81 J1 '25

"The persons of the story are handled neither heroically nor realistically, but in a stubborn, heavy, clumsy manner; and the blending of love and war throughout the story is naïve, crude, violent, barbarous, something that leaves us completely cold."

— Dial 79:350 O '25 120w

"A vivid, picturesque story, full of color, of strange customs and scenes, of wild, strange people."

+ Ind 114:535 My 9 '25 100w

"In 'The Tree of the Folkungs' you do not get so much the illusion of contemporary history as the exquisite enthrallment of a saga. The characters are symbols and allegories rather than men and women, and all the confused wars about dynasty and plunder and political ambition take on the shining contours of a vision beheld in a deep mirror." Donald Douglas

+ Nation 121:170 Ag 5 '25 500w

Nation and Ath 37:653 Ag 29 '25 220w

"As historical and social reconstruction the work is notable. Not great romance, loose-jointed, over-full, but both high-minded and moving." Abbe Niles

+ — New Repub 44:184 O 7 '25 180w

"Verner von Heidenstam was the recipient in 1916 of the Nobel Prize. It needs no award, however, to point an irresistible enjoyment of von Heidenstam's full-bodied narrative, his gorgeously meaty prose, the variety and heroic stature of his characters, the elemental passion of their drama and the profoundly experienced and consummately re-created panorama of the whole."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 12 '25 1250w

"The Tree of the Folkungs' is a book to get excited about. Those who are fortunate enough to know 'The Mabinogion,' that delightful collection of Welsh hero tales, will find a similar pungency and allusiveness of dialogue, glory of valiant deeds and thrilling 'action' in 'The Tree.'"

+ N Y World p7m Ap 12 '25 400w

"In The Tree of the Folkungs there is a particular northern vigour, common sense, tenderness of imagination and spirituality. It is a splendid, sweeping story."

+ Spec 135:341 Ag 29 '25 1700w

"The book is certainly an excellent historical romance. Its full appreciation, perhaps, must depend upon a natural reaction to national history and scene which would not be present in most English readers; nevertheless, from the vigorous opening scene, where Folke Filbyter runs his viking ships ashore upon the home beach and divides his booty for the last time among free followers, through all the varied pictures of medieval Swedish life, any reader will be attracted by the life and colour of the story."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 J1 '25 600w

HEIN, OTTO LOUIS. Memories of long ago. 310p il $3.75 Putnam

B or 92

25-12753

"Colonel Hein's army career fell entirely within the period between the close of the Civil War and the opening of the World War. He was graduated at West Point in the class of '70 and retired from active service in 1904, his health impaired by service in the Philippines. During the Spanish-American War he was Commandant of Cadets at West Point. His memories are less those of campaigns than of men and events, over a wide period of time and in many places."—N Y Times

"It is a rapidly moving, vivid, often delightful book."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 15 '25 180w

"The book is simply, sometimes awkwardly, written, and the manner is exceedingly naïve. There are a number of errors, some of them amusing. But these, after all, are motes. For the book is a friendly and engaging narrative, crowded with incident, and is sure to find a numerous and an appreciative circle of readers." W. J. Ghent

+ — Lit R p2 Ag 8 '25 380w

N Y Times p13 Ag 30 '25 700w

N Y Tribune p3 Ag 9 '25 220w

"The book could have been condensed to advantage. It is carelessly written and the English is not undefiled, but the author forestalls criticism by stating that it was not intended by him for publication. Nevertheless it is a book well worth reading."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:71 Ag 22 '25 200w

HEINMILLER, LOUIS E. First book in education. (Century education ser.) 277p $2 Century

371 Education, Elementary. Teaching 25-12963

The professor of education in the State normal school, Slippery Rock, Pennsylvania, surveys the field of elementary education from the viewpoint of the beginning student of education. The progress of the pupil thru the four divisions of the elementary system—primary, intermediate, junior high and rural schools—is considered and the characteristics of the pupils in each division are shown. The types of teaching most commonly used are discussed and their desirability for the different lessons. There are chapters on discipline, on the measurement of achievements and on outside-of-school activities.

HEINMILLER, LOUIS E.—Continued

"Young people aspiring to teach could not do better than prepare for their function from such a book as this, nor should its richly filled pages fail of appeal to seasoned teachers already at work on the impressionable human material in our elementary schools." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 15 '25 620w

"The viewpoint is neither ultra-modern nor conservative, Mr. Heinmiller's desire apparently being to preserve whatever has been found good in educational methods, principles and practice and to welcome whatever in new suggestions has proved itself worthy."
N Y Times p18 J1 26 '25 320w

"On the whole, the book offers nothing which has not been done as well or better in other introductory texts." C. V. Good
School R 33:711 N '25 600w

HELLER, FRANK, pseud. (GUNNAR SERNER). Mr Collin is ruined; tr. from the Swedish by Pauline De Chary. 335p $2 Crowell

25-4854

Gaston Picou reaches the height of his literary fame when the sale of one of his novels runs into six figures. He lives for years on his laurels, then pinched by necessity and a shrinking income, signs an advantageous contract to write for a newspaper syndicate. When the story opens Gaston is in Rome. His contract is unfulfilled, and the publishers are growing impatient. Then to his astonishment, the promised serial begins to appear under his name, tho he has not written a line. At the same time, Bruggemeyer, his one-time friend and a famous critic, finds himself in precisely the same predicament. Each is inclined to suspect the other. The reader is led thru a maze of intersecting plots until the culprit is at last discovered.

Cleveland p83 J1 '25

"No woman appears or is even hinted at in the 335 pages of this story. When we say she is not missed, is not that enough to prove its interest, especially when we add that it is written in Mr. Heller's excellent style. He has a light, somewhat ironical touch which just suits the subject matter." Helen Wallerstein
+ Lit R p16 Mr 21 '25 450w

"Frank Heller's new story, 'Mr. Collin Is Ruined,' fairly bristles with plot. Where most writers rest content with one or two or three narrative threads, this prolific Swedish novelist provides a whole network. But if somewhat disconcerting, one, at any rate, cannot call his method tedious."

+ — N Y Times p9 Je 7 '25 600w

N Y Tribune p15 My 31 '25 200w

N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 100w

"The complicated plot leads at times to an incoherence and crowding of incident which might have been avoided with a little more care. An unevenness of style also seems to indicate that the author was in a hurry. Yet these are common faults, and may be forgiven in view of the small glory attached to writing this type of fiction."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:650 Ap 4 '25 350w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

HELLER, FRANK, pseud. (GUNNAR SERNER). Thousand and second night; an arabesque; tr. from the Swedish by Edwin Björkman. 333p $2 Crowell

25-14714

The magic ring of the djinn gave unlimited power to its possessor. It could only be acquired by cunning, theft and lies. How six men sought to obtain it, and thru it the treasure buried in the salt lake of the desert, and how three men won while three men lost, is the plot of this weird tale of Arabian nights' adventure.

"In 'The Thousand and Second Night' you meet again the irresistible Mr. Collin, who is a much more fascinating rogue than Raffles or Lupin and who has a fund of ironic wit on things in general."

+ Nation 121:738 D 23 '25 50w

"His engaging humor, admirably conveyed in Edwin Björkman's translation, makes up for any slight absence of logic elsewhere. Indeed, the slightly made narrative method is a notable part of Heller's charm."

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 11 '25 180w

"We had heard of 'the cleverest rogue in modern fiction' and approached the English translation of his latest exploits with keenest anticipation. Now that the book is finished, although we read it with sustained interest, we wonder why the story was inflated to full novel length. The publisher is to be commended for the pleasing type page and the sturdiness of this light and attractive volume."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:91 Ag 29 '25 200w

HELLMAN, GEORGE SIDNEY. The true Stevenson. 253p il $3.50 Little

B or 92 Stevenson, Robert Louis 25-22672

Mr Hellman's biography, which he calls a "study in clarification," goes even further than John Alexander Steuart's "Robert Louis Stevenson" (Book Review Digest, 1924) in its frankness and unrestraint. In its effort to dispel what these later biographers have called the "Stevenson myth," the book discusses certain aspects of his life during the period of his early manhood in Edinburgh and of his marital relations which have been carefully safeguarded by his family. Mr Hellman maintains that Stevenson has thus been "dehumanized" and misrepresented.

"It has remained for those who never knew him personally to erect a man of straw, the Stevenson myth, for the pleasure of its destruction. It seems at best a sorry game. If in his letters, if in the pages which his intimates have consecrated to him, if in the many self-revelatory passages of his essays, if even in the documented and amiable biographies of Graham Balfour and Miss Masson Stevenson does not live, mere suppositions, more indiscreet than charitable, are not likely to bring him back to us, to create a 'true' Stevenson—which one lonely surviving friend refuses to recognize." W. H. Low

— Bookm 62:340 N '25 1200w

"In substance, manner and form, Mr. Hellman's book will be an addition to any Stevenson library." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 21 '25 1300w

"I have no quarrel with Mr. Hellman's desire to destroy superstition and enthroned truth. But something in most of us, something illogical and foolish and out of date, rebels at his exposure of the prenuptial relations of Stevenson and his wife. I do not like Mr. Hellman at all. His work is admirable, but it should have been done a hundred years hence. This attitude is one of complete prejudice and no logic whatever. I feel that he has done an unhappy thing very well."

Ind 115:650 D 5 '25 400w

"His book is shrewd, good-tempered, and eminently fair, even to those whom he has caught in the act of deceiving the public: a valuable work of literary research." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 115:714 D 19 '25 1050w

"The Hellman psychoanalysis, based on the Osbourne letters and the Bottle Imp, is wrong in conception; false from foundation; nasty in its imputation and worthless as literature. The rest of Mr. Hellman's book does shed some interesting light on the Henley quarrel and does give a very fair nutshell version of Stevenson's life." Paul Newman

— + Lit R p6 D 26 '25 2500w

"As one follows through the tangled skeins of the various relationships in Mr. Hellman's book and notes the various facts—gleaned from unpublished letters and investigations—which he has to offer, it becomes fairly positive that a new and more authentic Stevenson is being builded from the sugar of the old. There is more iron and pain and the lust of being in this new Stevenson." H. S. Gorman

N Y Times p1 N 29 '25 1850w

"The book is packed with contentions. It obfuscates more than it clarifies. It raises ten new questions for one that it answers. The other half of the truth is that Mr. Hellman's 'true Stevenson' interests and amuses precisely because it is a modish caricature, distorting the features, grotesquely reinterpreting known facts." Stuart Sherman

— + N Y Tribune p1 D 20 '25 3300w

"For the unmincing literal truth we have had to wait until practically all those intimately connected with R. L. S. had died, but it has been worth waiting. 'The True Stevenson' is admirable in candor and rich in revelations."

+ N Y World p6m N 22 '25 470w

"Defective in taste and temper as Mr. Hellman's book is, it deserves to be considered seriously by the Stevenson specialists and will doubtless contribute something, though much less than he supposes, to the upbuilding of a psychologically sounder conception of Stevenson's character."

— + Springf'd Republican p14 Ja 1 '26 520w

HELLMAN, GEORGE SIDNEY. Washington Irving, esquire, ambassador at large from the new world to the old. 355p il $4 Knopf

B or 92 Irving, Washington 25-9162

"'Washington Irving,' remarks his latest biographer, 'is no longer very much read. His is too quiet a flavor for the palate of our generation. His fame is accepted; a set of his works stands in the best-selected libraries; but he is not much read.' In spite of its recognition of our contemporary neglect of Irving's writings, Mr. Hellman's admirable biography is likely to revive our interest in the personality of the man. Mr. Hellman's extensive research has produced considerable new material, bearing importantly upon Irving's private life as well as upon his public career, in the light of which some of our traditional ideas about Irving are subject to revision. But his service as a biographer exceeds the bounds of mere scholarship; in his book we have, perhaps for the first time, a portrait of Irving which makes clear why his own day regarded him as the most distinguished citizen of the United States."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:379 J1 '25

"He has given a delightful portrait of 'that talented, pleasure-loving, charming man who was not only the first American author of international reputation, but also the best beloved American during the seventy-five years of our Republic.' The book is attractively illustrated with portraits and representations of scenes, and an index makes its pages easily available for reference." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 25 '25 1900w

"A genial and interesting book, written in the spirit and atmosphere of Washington Irving." W: R. Langfeld

+ Int Bk R p443 Je '25 2100w

Int Bk R p583 Ag '25 600w

"Because of the many new documents which it contains, this study of Irving the lover, the ambassador, and the gentleman is of unquestionable value; but between its handsome covers is stuffed a great deal of fatuous writing."

+ — Nation 120:723 Je 24 '25 30w

"Mr. Hellman in his book has left no stone or note-book unturned. The ingredients are much industry, agreeable sentiment, some new material, good printing, and attractive illustrations. But he has failed to throw over the facts 'a certain colouring of the imagination, and his style is an ill-fitting cloak, sometimes assumed, sometimes cast aside.'"

+ — Nation and Ath 38:156 O 24 '25 700w

"Not the least of Mr. Hellman's services to Irving is that, without diminishing the values of Irving's varied public career, he has restored the delightfully human qualities of Irving's private character. In so doing Mr. Hellman has produced a biography of unusual interest, as entertaining as it is informative." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 26 '25 3200w

"The obvious criticism of Mr. Hellman's study of Washington Irving is that throughout it is dominated by its title. The book is Washington Irving with the veneer. In emphasizing the 'Esquire' and the Ambassador-at-Large, Mr. Hellman continually loses sight of the man. He writes at arm's length." A. B. Maurice

— N Y Tribune p4 My 10 '25 1150w

Reviewed by W. P. Bezell

N Y World p6m My 3 '25 1050w

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Outlook 140:156 My 27 '25 1300w

Pratt p36 autumn '25

R of Rs 71:671 Je '25 200w

Reviewed by Stanley Williams

Sat R of Lit 1:756 My 16 '25 950w

"Irving seems to have been completely happy and completely successful all his days. It would be thought that such a man must be an ill subject for biography: yet it cannot be said that Mr. Hellman's narrative is dull. It is not stirring, far from it, but it is placid and pleasant. Nothing emerges clear; but that is simply because nothing was salient in Irving's life."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p653 O 8 '25 1400w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

"Nobody can leave this volume without new love for Washington Irving—gentle, high-minded, unfailingly courteous spirit, unsurpassed apostle of the sweetness of life." E: Wagenknecht

+ Yale R n s 15:1411 Ja '26 320w

HELTON, ROY ADDISON. Early adventures of Peacham Grew. 117p il $1.50 Penn

25-6854

"The book professes to present the experiences, partly real and partly fanciful, of a sensitive, imaginative little boy, as told by himself. Peacham Grew's father and mother were very poor, and the rich little girl named Margry, who played with him sometimes, didn't invite him to her party because his clothes were shabby. But Peacham, like his sick father, was a dreamer of beautiful dreams. It was after Margry had told him she couldn't ask him to her party, and he had heard about fern seed, that Peacham first saw Borlacks as 'a dark shadow about as tall as I am, standing against the window.' Borlacks was a great comfort to him."—N Y Times

"Peacham Grew is a real boy, and the story is a real story of childhood. But like so many books about children we doubt if a child will like it any too well. Grown-ups who like the whimsey of A. A. Milne will see much in it, however."

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 28 '25 160w

"A sympathetic, understanding, charming portrayal of the thoughts and imaginings and realities of a little boy. The more I think about the book the better I like it and the stronger become its good points, while its faults (for it has faults) dwindle." M. G. Bonner

+ — Int Bk R p490 Je '25 600w

"In 'The Early Adventures of Peacham Grew' Roy Helton does fairly well something which needs to be done very well indeed, if it is to be any good at all."

— + N Y Times p9 Mr 1 '25 300w

HELTON, ROY ADDISON—Continued

"About this book hovers a wistful and lovable quality which is insufficiently fanned by the very breath of imagination. Rather it is intruded upon by episodes."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:694 Ap 18 '25 300w

HEMINGWAY, ARTHUR HENRY HOWARD. Living forest. 268p il $2 Doubleday

25-19825

The plot of the story, tho slight, will nevertheless hold the attention of the boy, for it concerns a gold mine, a gang of ruffians, the two boys and an old half breed hunter who wander thru the Canadian woods for nearly a year and finally see the outlaws captured and their loot recovered by the mounted police. But it is the woodcraft and woodlore taught the boys by old Bill Hill in their year of wanderings with only a knife for a tool or a weapon that may interest the young reader most. The illustrations by the author are unusually fine.

"The great panorama of woods life is compressed into a series of sharply defined pictures; and any one who has any love for the outdoors must be delighted with the intimacy of knowledge which the author lavishes generously on every page." W: A. Deacon

+ Int Bk R p779 N '25 900w

"A book of the forests and of primeval life that will at once fascinate and inform readers who are in love with the wilderness and enjoy plunging into its depths and leaving civilization and all her ways far behind them. Especially will boys in their teens delight in the volume."

+ N Y Times p12 O 18 '25 450w

"'The Living Forest' is woodlore rather than story, but no man who loves the woods, no boy who dreams of going hunting in Canada, will complain of that." H. C. Forbes

+ N Y Tribune p6 N 29 '25 200w

HEMINGWAY, ERNEST. In our time. 215p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-20973

With a striking economy of words Mr Hemingway secures his most telling effects. Several of these "stories" picture episodes in the life of a growing boy in the timber country of the Middle west. Some of them have previously appeared in The Little Review, The Transatlantic Review and This Quarter. Contents: Indian camp; The doctor and the doctor's wife; The end of something; The three day blow; The battler; A very short story; Soldier's home; The revolutionist; Mr and Mrs Elliot; Cat in the rain; Out of reason; Cross country snow; My old man; Big two-hearted river; L'envoi.

"Of 'stories' in the commonly accepted sense of the word there are few; the best of the lot a beautifully executed tale of the racetracks which Mr. Anderson himself could not have bettered. Most of the others are psychological episodes, incidents, sketches . . . call them what you will. They are soundly and movingly done; Mr. Hemingway uses the vernacular with skill. In the curious brief pieces scattered through his pages he does remarkable things with a mere handful of words." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 O 17 '25 250w

"Hemingway's spoken prose is characteristically iron with a lyricism, aliveness and energy tremendously held in check." Paul Rosenfeld

+ New Repub 45:22 N 25 '25 850w

"Ernest Hemingway has a lean, pleasing, tough resilience. His language is fibrous and athletic, colloquial and fresh, hard and clean; his very prose seems to have an organic being of its own. Every syllable counts toward a stimulating, entrancing experience of magic. He looks out upon the world without prejudice or preconception and records with precision and economy, and an almost terrifying immediacy, exactly what he sees. His short stories, sketches, anecdotes and epigrams are triumphs of sheer objectivity."

+ N Y Times p8 O 18 '25 600w

"These plotless sketches and stabbing bits of interwoven prose which achieve in their ensemble a clarified unity are written in what might be called a sort of fundamental language. The sentences drive to the crux of the matter with a merciless bareness and yet at the same time they fairly quiver with a packed quality of meaning. One may not like this prose but it would be impossible to deny it a vigor and actuality that is unusual." H. S. Gorman

N Y World p7m O 18 '25 460w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 3 '26 80w

HEMON, LOUIS. Blind man's buff; tr. by Arthur Richmond. 244p $2 (7s 6d) Macmillan

25-2968

Life was a game of blind man's buff to Mike O'Brady. He grasped at it with both hands but it always eluded him. A strong, healthy young Irishman, he left his native country to avoid a little misunderstanding with the Dublin police and found a job on the London docks. In his spare hours he roamed the streets in search of adventure and one cause, one person, after another engaged his errant fancy: a beautiful young Jewess whom he had not the resolution to woo; socialism, which for a time satisfied his sense of the world's injustice, but left him cold; the "Limehouse Christian Institute" which he joined for the love of one of its workers, a beautiful lady from the West End. But they were nothing more than passing desires and finally escaped him. Mike was a natural rebel against law and order, like "every O'Brady of County Roscommon"—a fighter and a drinker—and before long he became the tragic victim of his natural passions.

Booklist 21:275 Ap '25

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Bookm 61:222 Ap '25 180w

Boston Transcript p6 F 11 '25 1350w

Cleveland p81 Jl '25

"The author gives a deft and vivid picture of the well-meant influences with which charity tries to make the life of the labourer 'praise the Lord.' Although not comparable with Maria Chapdelaine, this is a discerning study of life in London's East End."

+ Dial 79:259 S '25 100w

Ind 114:303 Mr 14 '25 50w

"'Blind Man's Buff' seems to have been exhumed from deep down in the manuscript box. It cannot well have been written after 'Maria Chapdelaine.'" A. P. Terhune

— Lit R p4 F 21 '25 600w

"In spite of its unrelieved bleakness, finely balanced fiction."

+ — Nation 120:498 Ap 29 '25 10w

"It is a footling book, with all the issues confused and long, tiresome dissertations on socialism, and religion of the soap box sort. Much is sentimental, some absurd, while the rather facetious style is out of tone with the violence of the dénouement. This style, as a rule, is almost faultless." Katherine Keith

+ — New Repub 40:184 O 15 '24 530w

"A very able psychological study."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 30 '24 350w

"The ending is unusual and unlikely, and is somehow out of key in a story that is to be interpreted as representing the usual and likely experiences not of one man but of hosts of whom that man is no more than a type. On the whole, however, the author has written skillfully, convincingly and appealingly; he has depicted his central character sympathetically and with shrewd understanding, and has sketched the minor characters in telling strokes, and he has told his story in a precise and yet beautiful style that has been excellently translated by Arthur Richmond."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 8 '25 950w

"It is just stodgy. Perhaps the translation should bear some of the fault. Even then, gleams from the original would occasionally break through, if there had been any." L. L. Hess

+ — N Y Tribune p11 My 3 '25 450w

"It took a Frenchman and an able translator to produce one of the most authentic novels of English life in London. In his ability to combine style, subject matter and characters, Louis Hémon has done what many English writers have failed to do. His 'Blind Man's Buff' is more of an English novel than many that have come through the press in the last years." F. V. Roman

+ N Y World p7m F 15 '25 480w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"The final fight would be more impressive if only one could prevent oneself from suspecting that it is meant to be a racial symptom rather than a personal expression. The whole book, however, is more than a tour de force; it is an exceptionally able and original study." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:35 Ja 10 '25 480w

"Distributed as a pamphlet, this work would be worth a professional organization in any famine relief campaign; viewed as a work of art, it is sufficient in itself." G. D. Eaton

+ Sat R of Lit 1:627 Mr 28 '25 500w

"Blind Man's Buff will be enjoyed best by solemn people. M. Louis Hémon is evidently well acquainted with London and qualified to teach us all the atmosphere of free libraries, the docks, mission centres, Hyde Park Corner, the Salvation Army, and Whitechapel. He does it well." Andrew Carey

Spec 133:954 D 13 '24 150w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 3 '25 520w

"Mike is too dumb, too rough-hewn perhaps; he fails to move us. But the scene he lives in is so vivid and so detailed that from any pen it would be admirable. Coming from a French pen it is a tour de force."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p846 D 11 '24 420w

"The novel portrays a type of 'problem' individual, without sentimentalism but with intimate and sympathetic comprehension."

World Tomorrow 8:158 My '25 200w

HEMON, LOUIS. Journal of Louis Hémon; tr. by William Aspenwall Bradley. 67p il $2.50 Macmillan

917.14 Quebec (province) 24-29412

Louis Hémon went to Quebec to gather material for his novel "Maria Chapdelaine." In this little book are recorded his experiences and impressions. He describes the steamer trip from Liverpool to Quebec, the city itself, and his journey on to Montreal.

Booklist 21:298 My '25

"The Journal is as strongly individual as it is clear, but its distinctiveness is intellectual rather than personal. M. Hémon is not taking a holiday to rejoice in mere sights and sounds. His conclusions, which are fresh, original and convincing, are set down in the manner with which one sets about proving a thesis. It is this quality which makes the whole journal so flawless in execution."

+ N Y Times p12 Ja 4 '25 880w

Springf'd Republican p10 F 6 '25 700w

HEMON, LOUIS. Monsieur Ripois and Nemesis; tr. by William Aspenwall Bradley. 359p $2 Macmillan

25-8732

Here is an intimate glimpse into the gross mind of a little Frenchman pursuing his amorous adventures in London. Merciless and greedy in his amours, M. Ripois preys upon women, turning their generosity to his advantage, and taking refuge in flight when the situation palls. When a fresh pure young love is offered to him it is to Ripois what all the others have been, no more, no less. Only after he has lost it does he realize that something exquisitely precious has passed beyond his reach. Realization and regret come to taunt him, and his expiation begins in remorse.

"So gripping is it, so repellent, so finely wrought, that its appraisal should really be in paradox. Only French psychoanalysis, French candor and French literary craftsmanship could have created Monsieur Amédée Ripois. Filled with loathing as one must be by these starkly analyzed adventures in seduction, one cannot but feel that in this unpleasant story the objective descriptive powers of Louis Hémon reach their highest eminence." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 9 '25 950w

Ind 114:619 My 30 '25 40w

"It sounds amateurish and unhemonish to me. Somehow, the whole book falls flat." G. D. Eaton

+ Int Bk R p581 Ag '25 1000w

"The translator has done his work excellently well. The text reads as though it had been originally written in English, and there is none of that awkwardness of construction or that trace of French phrasing that mars the smoothness of so many translations." Alice Ziska

+ Lit R p3 Je 20 '25 580w

"While not in a class with Maria Chapdelaine, Monsieur Ripois and Nemesis is, in its special way, a masterly piece of writing, an able product of imaginative realism, in which both the imagination and the realism are calculated, harsh, cold, but the sum of them somehow memorably warm." J. Eversharp

+ New Repub 43:352 Ag 19 '25 250w

"The first half of the story is remarkable for its power: the second leaves one dissatisfied." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:396 Jl 18 '25 300w

"The story is handled too lightly to be sordid. Nemesis is but an ironically solemn overstatement, typical of others in the book, which keep it from being something too serious or harsh. It is simple and episodic, with the central character rising toward success and then falling, but by no means forever, toward defeat. Shrewd and entertaining, in a neat translation of doubtless crystalline French, and thoroughly Gallic in spirit, subject-matter and treatment, 'M. Ripois' is a good and often individual novel."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 5 '25 850w

Reviewed by Francis Loretz

N Y Tribune p8 Jl 5 '25 580w

"A very clever, very unpleasant tale. To say that the book leaves a nasty taste in the mouth would be inaccurate. Louis Hémon is far more moral in his effect than some other castigators of vice that I could mention. He portrays M. Ripois, the complete sensualist, with cruel precision, and exhibits the portrait, without comment, for our detestation." Gerald Bullett

Sat R 139:646 Je 13 '25 200w

"Louis Hémon never fails to treat a story from the point of view of the character, so that we live with M. Ripois rather than merely view his episodes from our own highly moral standpoint. He is not a heroic figure, even in his final sorrow, but he lives, and that is all we can ask of any fiction figure." Wilbur Needham

+ Sat R of Lit 1:851 Je 27 '25 620w

"'Monsieur Ripois' is perhaps the most vivid and astonishing of all Louis Hémon's astonishing creations. An unpleasant person truly, but how he does leap from the printed page and live and move and breathe before us, an actual vital personality of flesh and blood! He carries on his amorous adventures and meets his nemesis, a real fellow creature, the workings of whose mind are laid bare by the magic of an author's pen." E. M. J.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 29 '25 680w

"There is a wealth of detail and intimate knowledge of London scenes in the book which shows that this writer saw life on all sides. But it is the figure of the hero, a mean scamp if there ever was one, which stands out with a kind of glory and compels the reader's admiration."

HEMON, LOUIS—Continued

The Times [London] Lit Sup p366 My 28 '25 500w

HENDEL, CHARLES WILLIAM, Jr. Studies in the philosophy of David Hume. 421p $4 Princeton univ. press [18s Milford]

192 Hume, David 25-6332

"These studies constitute an attempt at a more adequate reconstruction of Hume's intellectual development with respect to his main metaphysical problems. Professor Hendel's thesis is that the key to this reconstruction is Hume's persistent interest in religion, coupled with his early sense of the invalidity of the current efforts to justify the prevailing conception of God as First Cause. The book is expository rather than creative, yet the reader will find some chapters, notably those on the 'Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion,' suggestive contributions to Hume literature."—Int J Ethics

"A fairly complete and skilfully critical survey." E. N.

Boston Transcript p2 My 2 '25 650w

"Exact scholarship and a printer's task well done add to the pleasure with which one peruses the volume." E. A. Burt

Int J Ethics 35:447 Jl '25 150w

"Perhaps the significance of Hume's contribution to ethics is not adequately recognized: at least in this field more than anywhere else Professor Hendel has left unsaid what a comprehensive work on Hume would have to contain. But the epistemological, metaphysical, and theological parts of Hume's writings have been covered with considerable care and with a large measure of success, and all students of the eighteenth century will here find valuable material." S. P. Lamprecht

+ — J Philos 22:411 Jl 16 '25 3900w

HENDERSON, JUNIUS. Geology in its relation to landscape. 152p il $2.50 Stratford

551 Geology. Landscape 25-8605

"Rivers and trees and cattle and all, Over the countryside."

Most of us know the charm of such a scene, but few, perhaps, know its history. This book by the professor of natural history in the University of Colorado tells the story of each of the changing features that make a landscape. Rivers, lakes, mountains, glaciers, and the sea pass under review in a shifting panorama of geological cause and effect.

"Studies in geology seem of all scientific pre-occupations the most prosaic, yet Professor Henderson here contrives to put into them the importance that makes for interest and the charm which delights the imagination." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 27 '25 650w

"A pleasantly pedantic book which is really a popular treatise on geology."

+ Ind 115:424 O 10 '25 40w

HENDRICK, BURTON JESSE. Life and letters of Walter H. Page. v 3 440p il $5 Doubleday

B or 92 Page, Walter Hines. European war, 1914-1918—United States

The third volume of Walter H. Page's letters consists almost entirely of his letters to Woodrow Wilson, which were not available till Mr Wilson's death released them for publication. The President's parting advice to the ambassador when he left for England was "Go, and be yourself!" His letters show how completely himself he was and in that fact lay the secret of his power. Thru the five years from 1913 to 1918 he sent to the President his full and frank opinions on the great events that made up his daily life. Some of his war-time telegrams are also included.

Booklist 22:159 Ja '26

"The title is something of a misnomer. It is really an appendix to the completed work. The original two volumes were published before access could be had to certain letters, but the narrative was a complete one and this volume traverses exactly the same ground as that detailed in the original volumes from 1913 to 1918. The present volume but supports the first." S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p2 N 14 '25 1900w

Reviewed by J. E. Chamberlin

Boston Transcript p7 N 25 '25 90w

Boston Transcript p7 D 16 '25 300w

"That the letters were written amid the shifting scenes of what he aptly called a 'quickly changing drama' and that they issued hot from the furnace of his ardent spirit only adds to their interest and will give them, we believe, an assured place in that select group of contemporary chronicles of permanent value." R. S. Morris

+ Lit R p6 D 19 '25 950w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 45:21 N 25 '25 1350w

"These letters, which are always at least respectful in tone, do not reveal so clearly as the earlier volumes the change in the Ambassador's attitude from devotion to distrust toward his chief, but they have quite the same spirited charm and they throw new light on important events of the period." Silas Bent

+ N Y Times p7 N 29 '25 1900w

"Chronologically, the volume overlaps its predecessors, but Mr. Hendrick, in the narrative which he supplies to bind the documents together, has skillfully avoided repetition, while at the same time indicating the points at which the two parts of the work join." W. MacDonald

N Y Tribune p1 N 8 '25 1850w

"The letters are charming; Page was a delightful personality, a real, emotional, resolute, wilful leader of the younger element of the South. Few men ever wrote better letters, as few men ever talked more entertainingly. Hence Burton J. Hendrick, editor of these volumes, has rendered literature a distinguished service. As to the service rendered in that more difficult field called history, I must speak with doubt. Only one thing is certain, the place and rating of Walter Page among his contemporaries suffer greatly from the appearance of these intimate documents." W. E. Dodd

+ — N Y World p6m N 29 '25 760w

"Like the earlier volumes, this is an important and lively contribution to history. These letters are not helpful to the historical reputation of Mr. Wilson, and his admirers have been quick to see it. We think that the verdict of history and of common sense has already been given, and that it is in favor of Ambassador Page."

+ Outlook 141:642 D 23 '25 400w

"The letters have the discursiveness, the vivid personal quality, the constant and shifting interest which the reading public now associates with the work of Mr. Page. He could write. There is no question of that and he had that combination of journalistic sense and literary flavor which is found in the best periodical literature. The question which now looms upon the horizon in estimating this important work is how it will be judged from the standpoint of history." Bainbridge Colby

+ Sat R of Lit 2:365 D 5 '25 1350w

"Page was beyond question one of the great men of the generation: great chiefly by the translucent goodness of his nature. Intellect he had, and an extraordinary capacity for clear thinking and for lucid and vigorous expression. With these went as kindly a heart as was ever put into a man, and not merely a sense of humor but a love of it and a love of play; but more than all, his life was a triumph of what we know as character. For the Editor's part, Mr. Hendrick showed his competence in the earlier volumes, and if an English reader cannot always see eye to eye with him, he has done more than creditably a not too easy task."

+ Spec 135:985 N 28 '25 2250w

"These letters are of great importance, both personally and historically. Their effect is all the greater because of their isolation from the mass of Page's correspondence."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p820 D 3 '25 1400w

HENDRICK, ELLWOOD. Lewis Miller; a biographical essay. 208p fl $3 Putnam

B or 92 Miller, Lewis 25-12988

Lewis Miller, 1829-1899, was an Ohio manufacturer and inventor who did much for the cause of popular education and had a large part in founding and developing the Chautauqua assembly. Thomas A. Edison, who married Miller's daughter, has written the introduction.

"We agree with Mr. Edison when he says: 'I am sure this book will prove an inspiration to all young men who read it; as it is a concrete example of what may be done by anyone who has the will to do that which he sets out to accomplish.'" F. W. Collier

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 15 '25 1550w

Reviewed by Silas Bent

N Y Times p3 O 11 '25 500w

"This intimate study of a famous inventor provides, along with more personal material, an account of the development of labor-saving farm machinery during the middle and later years of the nineteenth century."

N Y Tribune p10 O 4 '25 100w

"This book conveys a pleasant picture of family life in America between 1829 and 1899; but only in passing; for the author is chiefly concerned in paying a tribute to a worthy man. Like most 'tributes' with all the care and pains that have been taken, it only succeeds in creating a prosy figure that is apt to repel the stranger."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:161 S 26 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p699 O 22 '25 80w

HENDRYX, JAMES BEARDSLEY. Oak and iron, of these be the breed of the North. 369p $2 Putnam

25-8272

"A story of the Canadian northland with only a touch of the 'strong cold' and with no gunplay. Its plot centers around the shrewd intrigues and counter-intrigues of timber and oil speculators. The chapters are also linked by a mysterious tie between hero and heroine. At the climax, a disclosure is made which seems to stamp them as brother and sister, and thus prevent marriage. Another identification speedily follows, and there is no more suspense in a very mixed up tale."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 160w

"Mr. Hendryx has written a number of books on life in the Far North, but this volume is something more than just another story. David Gavant who to the traders and Indians was a man of oak and iron, is made so vivid in the pages of this book it would seem the author must have known his prototype in the flesh." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p9 Je 20 '25 150w

Nation and Ath 37:406 Je 27 '25 180w

"A yarn which is spun without pretension to artistry but with the sure hand of a capable craftsman."

+ N Y Times p19 Je 7 '25 470w

"Mr. Hendryx is a skillful delineator of the scenery and customs of the frozen regions."

+ N Y Tribune p16 My 24 '25 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 13 '25 60w

HENSCHKE, ALFRED (KLABUND, pseud.). Peter the czar; tr. from the German by Herman George Scheffauer. 152p $2 Putnam

Peter I, the Great, emperor of Russia—Fiction 25-23115

From this short, powerfully written book, there emerges a figure of ruthless barbarianism. There is Peter the sickly infant, turned wolfing and struggling to tear the throat from his wolfing pet; there is Peter the youth, escapading in disguise among his people, subduing to his will duchess and charcoal burner's daughter alike; there is Peter the man, vigorously attacking the affairs of state, thwarting his sister's treacherous designs, conquering his enemies to the wild huzzas of his people, and lifting to the throne his peasant mate

"It is a dramatic recital, full of exciting incidents, and Peter loses nothing at the hands of his biographer. The story moves rapidly." J. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 19 '25 350w

"A forceful, brutal book which describes in a style at times lurid and at times brilliant the lurid, brilliant life of Peter the Great."

+ Ind 115:652 D 5 '25 60w

"It is a dreamlike life and a scroll-like history; and it has an extraordinary vividness and power, overwhelming in its beauty, shot through with all the lust and terrors and battles and orgies of the times. . . . In the short compass of its pages it seems to give the whole of Russia." Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p17 D '25 800w

"This is a small book. The sentences come short and explosive. Staccato words rap out in mounting intensity. Yet the picture is large; the intimations extensive and pregnant. There is a whole Russia of meaning in this little book—and the living, tortured heart of a man, an ape-man struggling out of ancestral mire." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p6 O 31 '25 250w

"Brilliant and impressive masterpiece. It is a unique and miraculous work drawing to its heart all the lust and splendor of the great czar and all the frantic terrors and the dark sadism and the mystical tenderness of Russia."

+ Nation 122:39 Ja 13 '26 100w

"The book is no better fiction than it is history. The style is idiosyncratic, image-ridden, incoherent, swinging between the extremes of hysteria and baldness, of sophistication and naïveté. Indeed, Alfred Henschke, who goes by the pseudonym of Klabund, is a prolific writer in this vein, and as a poet has achieved distinction. His application of the expressionistic technic to the stuff of history cannot, however, be said to be successful in this instance." Babette Deutsch

— New Repub 45:64 D 2 '25 200w

N Y Times p8 D 20 '25 220w

"It is a mixture of violent virtues and gross defects. The style is often vulgar and sometimes tiresome. The confusion of historical events does not always increase their literary interest. And still the book reads well. Either because of the material itself or because of Klabund's brutal handling of the story. 'Peter the Czar' is a fascinating book." Malcolm Cowley

+ N Y Tribune p7 D 6 '25 350w

"Klabund's 'Peter the Czar' is like a piece of massive metal hammered into shape with clean hard blows. It is all core, all drama and poetry, rather than narrative advanced with dramatic strokes and embellished with poetic touches. In the brevity of a hundred and fifty pages this German poet, working in prose, has set down his version of Russia's barbaric Czar as it pours hot and vital from his brain. In Mr. Scheffauer, Klabund has a sympathetic translator who does not drain the original of its blood, but makes plain the peculiar quality of its achievement." L: Kronenberger

HENSCHKE, ALFRED—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 2:362 D 5 '25 500w

Springf'd Republican p5a Ja 10 '26 180w

HERBERT, ALAN PATRICK. Old flame. 222p $1.75 Doubleday [3s 6d Methuen]

25-8054

"The story is of a young married couple who agree to separate for a month under conditions which allow them both to philander. We are privileged to accompany the husband, Robin Moon, and to observe what elegant use he makes of his temporary freedom. As a wit, Robin Moon is well matched in Phyllis Fair, with whom, hindered by this and that, he conducts a series of diverting and innocent flirtations. All Mr. Herbert's people live in a convention faintly suggesting the world of 'The Dolly Dialogues,' a world of charming frivolity and sentimental banter, and populated exclusively by the idle rich, whatever may be pretended to the contrary."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The events make entertaining and sometimes hilarious reading." Winifred Katzin.

+ Int Bk R p551 J1 '25 450w

"It is no work of genius or of profound humor. But it is an inclusive book, one which turns a flashlight of wit on all the ordinary events that arise in man's allotted twenty-four hours." Madelin Leaf

+ Lit R p6 Je 27 '25 160w

Reviewed by J: Franklin

New Statesman 24:776 Ap 11 '25 170w

"A whimsical and amusing tale."

+ N Y Times p22 Mr 22 '25 400w

"Stories of this type are true fairy tales—one goes to them for neither wit nor wisdom, but to indulge an hour of sheer make-believe."

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 22 '25 400w

"After reading a number of his compositions one is bound to admit that though the American humorists are louder and funnier, Mr. Herbert is distinctly a diversion. 'The Old Flame' does not hiss and sputter, but its glow is genuine."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 5 '25 150w

"A new and diverting product, a departure, which is neither a novel nor a short story, but a Herbert compromise, snatched from the pure serene of his idle fancy. When Mr. Herbert writes like this, in a very flawless style, on a very improving theme (the holiday from married life), and with the very rare and artless humor so irrevocably English, there are no possible grounds for stricture." D: McCord

+ Sat R of Lit 1:740 My 9 '25 400w

"If the style is light, the substance of his invention is equally so. Like floating thistledown, it charms us for an hour and then is vanished out of sight and mind."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p170 Mr 12 '25 300w

HERBERT, AUBREY NIGEL HENRY MOLY.

NEUX. Ben Kendim, a record of eastern travel; ed. by Desmond MacCarthy. 380p $4.50 Putnam [21s Hutchinson]

914.96 Turkey—Description and travel. Arabia—Description and travel. Balkan peninsula—Description and travel [25-3434]

"Aubrey Herbert, second son of the fourth Earl of Carnarvon, M. P. for the Yeovil division of Somerset, traveler, linguist, and lover of the East, has left us a book which defies our categories. The jacket announces, 'A record of Eastern travel'; the introduction murmurs that it 'is, in a sense, an autobiography.' The book, however, is as its author named it—'Ben Kendim,' or in English, 'I, myself.' It is neither travel nor autobiography, neither sociology nor politics; it is all these and more. This is a clearly recorded bit of life itself, the life of the Near East as seen by an Englishman known and beloved from Zagreb to Basra."—Sat R of Lit

"It is a great pity the author could not have lived to finish his book. As it stands, it reveals the workings of a Nordic mind that will hearten the man who believes the Nordics are the destined rulers of the world." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p8 Je 13 '25 560w

"The chivalrous crusading spirit, the humour, humanity, and idealism characteristic of the man permeate the book." Edmund Candler

+ Nation and Ath 36:118 O 18 '24 560w

"Most delightful and vivid relation of his wanderings into various unknown and little known places of the Near East." Karlene Kent

+ N Y Tribune p12 Je 14 '25 320w

"A remarkable gift of portraiture is here in evidence. The portrait of Riza, Herbert's Albanian servant, deserves immortality. There breathes from the entire book a puissant and delightful personality. Aubrey Herbert is of the noble company of 'inheritors of unfulfilled renown.'"

+ Outlook 140:500 Ag 5 '25 250w

"The author discourses on political problems in a manner which may prevent many from accepting his conclusions; but he is always himself in his views, and the personality that he reveals was certainly one which England in its present difficulties in the matter of foreign policy can ill spare. When we turn to the author's pictures of travel the book becomes a pure delight."

+ Sat R 138:396 O 18 '24 450w

Reviewed by R. W. Lane

Sat R of Lit 1:821 Je 13 '25 1400w

"The chapters of 'Ben Kendim' are a poet's epitome of the recent history of the Near East. Amazingly vivid and arresting are his descriptions of Constantinople in the days when Abdul Hamid was still 'the Master.' One cannot help feeling that Aubrey Herbert's affection for the Turkish peasant blinded him to the shortcomings of the Turkish governing class, within whose hands the Turkish peasant has always been as clay, and to the political weakness of a creed which draws so sharp and rigid a distinction between believer and unbeliever. But his point of view, even though in his preface he has made 'no claim to be impartial,' deserves careful consideration."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p589 S 25 '24 1250w

HERRICK, ROBERT. Wanderings. 317p $2 Harcourt

25-16720

"New Mexico, the tropics and Maine provide the physical backgrounds for the four short novels in Robert Herrick's 'Wanderings.' Mr. Herrick is chiefly concerned with the spiritual adventures of his characters. His theme is, in each instance, love in maturity, with a haunting undercurrent of remembered youthful devotion and disappointment." (N Y Times) Contents: Magic; The stations of the cross; The adventures of Ti Chatte; The passions of Trotsky.

"'Wanderings' is an example of some of Mr. Herrick's best and most superficial work. By far the best story, from a talemaker's point of view, is 'The Passions of Trotsky.' The sorrow, the failure of life, the philosophy of love in its full gamut is assembled here in the matter-of-fact history of a dog." W. E. H.

Boston Transcript p7 S 9 '25 450w

"Mr. Herrick's method is a trifle banal at times, and his style every now and then gives the effect of a lady wearing an overcharge of cosmetics, none too skillfully applied. But it is 'The Passions of Trotsky,' which will endear Mr. Herrick to us for many a day. I endeavor to avoid wild statements, and it is only after deep deliberation that I announce my conviction that this is the best canine tale I have ever read." J: V. A. Weaver

+ — Int Bk R p729 O '25 500w

"The four tales in 'Wanderings' are quite long and full-bodied enough to keep them from being regarded as short stories. Certainly the first two might easily have been expanded into novels. They exhibit the good qualities in rich measure that have made Mr. Herrick an outstanding figure in present-day American fiction." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p2 Ag 22 '25 320w

"'Wanderings' is for him a new departure because it is the first of his major works in which his theme is not primarily sociological; in it he turns his back upon society and its problems, gives up, as it were, any hope of finding an adequate explanation of life's acrid flavor in the study of institutions and traditions, and gives himself to the analysis of characters and emotions which are operating in a social void. If Mr. Herrick has failed of the absolute greatness which he seemed as a young man to promise it is because, I fancy, he has not been completely frank nor told quite all he had to tell. His books, always interesting, seem always not quite complete expressions of the mood which produced them." J. W. Krutch

Nation 121:388 O 7 '25 950w

"The more thoroughly to work out his theme, Mr. Herrick supplements his studies of the human race with a study of the race canine: an extremely good and discerning dog-story rounds out the volume and accomplishes itself quite as effectively as any of the preceding pieces, and rather less laboriously. It also conveys the author's views on world politics and the Russian problem." H: B. Fuller

New Repub 44:236 O 21 '25 420w

"Some of the stories are slowed up at critical periods by a somewhat excessive wordiness. Mr. Herrick, further, tends to blur his definition in his anxiety to concentrate interest upon states of mind. The characters seldom stand forth in clear-cut, objective precision. Unless the speaker is specifically indicated, it is difficult to determine who is talking at any given time. Very little of the situation, in any of the stories, survives reading, and almost as little leaps out to grip the attention during reading. . . It is all eminently intelligent, yet it leaves the reader cold."

+ — N Y Times p22 Ag 30 '25 800w

"The people in these stories, spinning their fears out of themselves and their hopes out of their fears, seem shadowy and unimportant, though their backgrounds are often gorgeous, their ways fastidious. This is a book without either a faith in life or the courage to face the possibility that no faith may be justified." Mary Ross

+ — N Y Tribune p5 N 1 '25 500w

"Within his range, he is an artist of assured quality. His manner keeps alive the best tradition of the American '90's. . . There are old-fashioned people left to enjoy it; but unluckily for old-fashioned people, Herrick's matter does not match his manner; nor is it, on the other hand, pronounced and emphatic enough to please the new-fashioned people. His realistic treatment of sex is the commonplace of today, and gains nothing from being dressed in the demodé raiment of the literary gentleman and scholar." H. W. Boynton

— Sat R of Lit 2:135 S 19 '25 600w

"Possibly Mr. Herrick's work is a little too detached, objective, intellectual, in its delivery, to develop warmth."

Springf'd Republican p7a N 29 '25 240w

HERVEY, HARRY. Ethan Quest; his saga. 334p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

25-9753

A psychological tale of a romantic boy, born with a passion for travel and adventure, and growing up in a place and under circumstances that could not satisfy his craving. When Ethan Quest was still a lad an old sailor gave him a gayly colored Japanese sarong, and by this strip of cloth the boy patterns his future. Ethan realizes the mistake of his impulsive early marriage, for between him and Leila there is always the call of the sarong to romance and adventure. Then suddenly Ethan leaves his prosaic surroundings and begins his search for romance and beauty in the Far East where his dreams come to fulfillment.

"Nothing could make 'Ethan Quest' a great book. It is mushy. Once you have overcome your dislike of his lush phrases and his curiously maudlin psychology, you read his book with much interest." J. F.

— + Bookm 61:587 J1 '25 200w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 20 '25 250w
Cleveland p81 J1 '25

"Mr. Hervey's own love for far places has given him a fine background for the romantic novel; he has rare ability as a story-teller. But his latest novel is not the stride forward that one had reason to expect." Herschel Brickell

Lit R p3 Ag 1 '25 650w

"Something more than the empty gesture of romance has gone into this novel. Glamor of the expected sort it has, but beyond that is a thoughtful depth, in which the theme of the story is submerged without effort. One looks into it as into a crystal pool; Mr. Hervey is no paddler in the shallows of fiction. 'Ethan Quest' is done with feeling and aesthetic restraint; it belongs in the category of civilized fiction."

+ Nation 121:337 S 23 '25 80w

"'Ethan Quest' is written with grace and charm. Its background is a riot of gay color and observed with felicity. Its repetition of theme and reverberation of ideas sustain an interest that is curiously like the beat of the sea on shore, lulling, but fascinating. You will find escape from the everyday world and upon concluding you may be glad to find that you have not lost it."

+ N Y Times p8 My 17 '25 700w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

— N Y Tribune p13 My 17 '25 850w

"The first half of the novel carries Ethan Quest from boyhood to his revolt and escape. For all that it is done always competently, frequently beautifully and occasionally with rare artistry, this half is little more than ordinary. The second half is a masterful study of disillusionment and disintegration of a mind and a spirit that were out of luck." Van Vechton Hostetter

+ — N Y World p10s My 31 '25 350w

Outlook 140:115 My 20 '25 20w

"This is the sort of book which will be begun by many readers and abandoned midway by perhaps fifty per cent of those who start it. But those who abandon the book will miss an interesting development in the conclusion. 'Ethan Quest' is not an achievement, but it is a better story than you will realize while you are feeling your way through Mr. Hervey's purple twilights and gossamer dawns."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:227 O 17 '25 320w

"The plot, which is far from original, seems to exist mainly as a means of allowing the author a chance to soliloquize or rhapsodize on any one of a number of subjects. The book does not finish—it simply stops and one expects that there will be a sequel."

— Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 3 '26 280w

HEXT, HARRINGTON, pseud. The mon-ster. 328p $2 Macmillan

25-7201

An abandoned old storehouse having several secret passageways and an underground tunnel leading to 'Monks Farm' is the setting of this mystery story. To this storehouse come two men of the village to complete a bargain. Both of them are found murdered within its crumbling ruins. Prescott, a skilful detective, on the verge of making an amazing discovery, suddenly disappears. A search party headed by a well-known detective ferrets out every hiding place of the old storehouse and finds the criminal, a sort of Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde person, which clears the mystery.

HEXT, HARRINGTON, pseud.—Continued

Reviewed by L: Moore
Int Bk R p471 Je '25 40w

"The author has swathed his story in a weird and mystic atmosphere, greatly heightening its effect. Few mystery tales so successfully hide the identity of the villain as this one."

+ Lit R p9 J1 3 '25 180w

"Mr. Hext's characters are fair, and his plot is ingenious; but what is more, he does not get beyond his depth in the jumble of incidents related."

+ N Y Times p19 Je 7 '25 150w

"The 'Monster' will not appeal to homeopathic followers of mystery, but no doubt there are many others whose spines no longer respond to gentle massage. Nevertheless, the publishers overlooked a practical service to the reader by not supplying a sleeping powder with each copy."

N Y Tribune p10 My 17 '25 170w

"The trouble with 'The Monster' is that its period of suspense is overdrawn."

— N Y World p1m Ap 5 '25 70w

Outlook 140:304 Je 24 '25 20w

Sat R of Lit 2:127 S 12 '25 160w

HEXTER, MAURICE BECK. Social consequences of business cycles; with an introd. by Allyn A. Young. (Pollak foundation for economic research) 206p $4 Houghton

312 Business cycles. Vital statistics, Economic conditions 25-5661

That there is a direct relation between economic conditions and the marriage, divorce, birth and death rates has long been a recognized fact. Closely following the fluctuations in the employment and prosperity of wage earners there are found fluctuations in crime, prostitution, marriages, divorces, births, and deaths. The present study of this relationship between social phenomena and business cycles is based upon statistical data pertaining to Boston and Suffolk County, and examines in detail the monthly birth and death-rate and the number of marriages, and divorce cases monthly.

"The application of the formal methods of analysis of the Harvard Committee to these five series of vital phenomena has meant a great deal of labor for Dr. Hexter, and the results in the form of measures of seasonal and cyclical variation in these series have justified these labors. It is not to be expected, and the author has not assumed, that his results were any more than the beginning of the study of social phenomena by the higher statistical analysis." B. D. Mudgett

+ Am Econ R 15:555 S '25 560w

"A book of permanent reference value."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 11 '25 70w

"Mr. Hexter's work deserves high commendation, although of limited appeal and only blazing and headlighting the trail for additional studies which may have more practical application to business and sociological amelioration."

+ Eng N 94:698 Ap 23 '25 170w

"Dr. Hexter's bafflingly inconclusive study is typical of the labors that must be undertaken before we shall possess the tested information necessary to what Graham Wallas called a science of politics."

— N Y Times p11 Mr 8 '25 980w

"Dr. Hexter's study is a valuable contribution within a field where much needed tillage has only begun. It deserves emulation in other communities where consistent local data over a period of years may be available." S. A. Rice

+ Pol Sci Q 40:632 D '25 1150w

St Louis p335 S '25

HEYDRICK, BENJAMIN ALEXANDER, ed.
Forum papers; first series. 235p $2 Duffield
814 24-23609

The chairman of the English department of the High school of commerce, New York, has made this collection of essays from the Forum for the use of college students. Each essay is accompanied by notes and questions and a list of suggestive theme subjects.

Booklist 21:268 Ap '25

"There are few collections of essays which offer such an excellent compromise between the struggling forces of students and professors of English literature as does 'Forum Papers, First Series.' It is certain that the style, the matter and the brevity of the essays selected will subtly and decidedly gain the interest of the freshman at college."

+ Bookm 60:643 Ja '25 230w

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 4 '25 430w

"These little volumes are not only attractive for English classes, but are of the sort you want handy when you have a few moments for solacing your mind. The compilers have picked pearls out of an abundance of valuables." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:162 O '25 150w

"These papers embrace a wide scope of interesting topics and are thoughtfully selected." E. S. A.

+ Lit R p11 Ja 3 '25 270w

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

N Y Times p7 N 30 '24 260w

"Despite an occasional fault the papers—all frankly personal and at times even partisan—are well written, thoughtful, and provocative of thought—an element of college life that cannot be over stimulated."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:563 F 28 '25 420w

HEYER, GEORGETTE. Simon the coldheart. 374p $2 Small

25-10061

"How Simon Malvallet, a lad of fourteen, by 'toil skill and valour,' rose from page to knight; how as Lord of Malvallet he besieged the fair city of Belrém and won great honor, and how Lady Margaret the Amazon melted his cold heart. A tale of chivalry and adventure in 15th century England and Normandy which older boys as well as lovers of romance will enjoy."—Cleveland

"The period of the French wars has been little used on the English side, and Miss Heyer has a fresh field for endeavor. She knows her history thoroughly and seldom takes liberties with it. She makes the knightly days live again, but, better, she makes Simon and Margaret live, who never lived before." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 23 '25 1000w

Cleveland p83 J1 '25

"In spite of the occasional annoyance of attempted archaic diction the writer's manner is good and the story interesting."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:810 Je 6 '25 220w

"The historical novel has an appeal to two classes of readers: those who like a stirring tale of adventure, heightened by an infusion of 'atmosphere,' and those who are interested by a reconstruction of past times. Occasionally, but not very often, both are catered for by the same book. Of Miss Georgette Heyer's Simon the Coldheart one can only say that it is above the average of the former class of romance, and that it does make an attempt, not completely successful, to enter the latter."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p770 N 19 '25 330w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

HEYWARD, DU BOSE. Porgy. 196p $2 Doran
25-17940

This is first the story of Porgy, and then the story of Bess. Porgy was a black cripple who sat all day in the sunshine, wrapped in meditation, unheeding the occasional clink of a coin in his cup. Except when he gambled by night what he had been given by day, he lived silent, removed from his fellows, neither young nor old, but ageless, until Crown's Bess brought him love. Crown's Bess made Porgy young. They were happier than either of them had ever been before until Bess got hold of the "happy-dus" again and until Crown stretched out his hot hand to draw her back to him.

Booklist 22:117 D '25

"DuBose Heyward has already made a reputation with his poetry. This, his first prose book, is as lovely a piece of descriptive and dramatic writing, it seems to me, as has been published by a young American this year." J. R.

+ Bookm 62:333 N '25 180w

Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 550w

Cleveland p106 N '25

"The best work that has come out of the South in a long time. Mr. Heyward has written a story of negro life in Charleston which has truth, observation, and insight. More than that, it is written with tenderness and sympathy and emotional intensity."

+ Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 80w

"'Porgy' is a finished performance by a novice at the art of fiction." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 O 3 '25 380w

"As a racial observer who for all his candor and sympathy stands inescapably apart from his subject, Mr. Heyward still writes with an unerring certitude, an assured intimacy." L. G. Marshall

+ Nation 121:711 D 16 '25 300w

"Porgy is another book of a beauty so rare and perfect that it may be called classic."

+ New Repub 45:148 D 23 '25 150w

"Although it is matter for wonder that Mr. Heyward has seemed to have gotten inside his characters and their surroundings, it is cause for rejoicing that he has communicated these things he has found to the reader. Porgy is at no time an alien being; his author has magically insinuated him into the very quick of attention."

+ N Y Times p10 S 27 '25 850w

"Du Bosc Heyward, previously known as a poet, has exploited a neglected area of American life in 'Porgy.' This novel, dealing felicitously with the indolent, casual, swarming life of the negro quarter of a Southern city, lifts its subjects to the level of art and yields the true national effect of tragedy." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 50w

"I cannot help feeling that Mr. Heyward's book would be even more admirable if he had preferred quicker allusions to the landscape poet's tendency to try for exact descriptions and if he had made his effects without pointing them quite so definitely. But none of these little matters of technique affects the book's fine feeling and none of them touches its real quality. It is undoubtedly the most admirable book about Southern Negroes that I have ever read, and it is the only one I remember which substitutes beautifully rich orchestration for a thin line of melody." Frances Newman

+ — N Y Tribune p5 O 18 '25 600w

"That the author has penetrated rather deeply into some of the recesses of the negro consciousness, that he is right in treating his characters seriously and unpatronizingly as human beings, and that the story evokes a legitimate sympathy, cannot truthfully be denied. This attempt to make vivid use of strictly American material results in American fiction of not quite the best quality." C. H. Gaines

+ — No Am 222:360 D '25 620w

"The book is a Negro classic; it has fine moral tone and its highly individualized characters are creations. It ends on a high emotional plane with a single impression—the bent solitary figure of Porgy ironically surveying the universe."

+ Outlook 141:528 D 2 '25 180w

"Much of the beauty of Mr. Heyward's novel derives from an unusual felicity of expression.

Here his poetic endowment serves him well, for it is a poet rather than a narrator that he has perceived and expressed the material world in which his drama is played." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 2:312 N 21 '25 240w

HIBBARD, BENJAMIN HORACE. History of the public land policies. (Land economics ser.) 591p $4.50 (20s) Macmillan

336.1 United States—Public lands 24-28692

The professor of agricultural economics in the University of Wisconsin presents this account of the historical development and operations of our federal land policies. He shows how the public domain was acquired, describes the early plans for land disposal and the cession of lands to the states, the various land grants and land acts and the attempts at classifying the public lands. The concluding chapter is a review and criticism of federal land policies. Bibliography. Index.

"The middle part of this book can not be entrusted to students nor serve as a basis for further investigation because of the many errors of fact and conclusion. In addition to the many errors there are important omissions."

Stephenson furnishes significant material which should have been included in this book. Hibbard cultivates a virgin field in his treatment of the public land policy since 1862. . . This is a real contribution to knowledge. . . A topical table of contents, an index, chapter summaries, and numerous tables are helpful." R. G. Wellington

+ — + Am Hist R 30:837 J1 '25 620w

"So pressing has been the need for condensation and so difficult has been the task of selection from voluminous original sources, that a steadfast adherence to the rigid plan has necessarily been attained at the expense of smooth transitions, vivacity of style, and the formulation of a readily-grasped general impression." B. G. Whitmore

Am Pol Sci R 19:412 My '25 520w

Booklist 21:290 My '25

"The book is distinctly valuable for reference. It is equipped for the student with bibliography and index, tabulations, charts and maps, and an analytical table of contents." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 27 '24 520w

R of Rs 71:110 Ja '25 100w

The Times [London] Sup p139 F 26 '25 30w

"A book for students, needed only in larger libraries."

Wis Lib Bul 21:53 F '25

HICKEY-FREEMAN COMPANY. Story of cloth; comp. as a practical handbook for men who sell men's clothing. 37p il $1 The company, box 1000, Rochester, N.Y.

677 Textile industry and fabrics. Woolen and worsted manufacture

Written primarily for the instruction of clothing salesmen, this book tells very briefly and clearly the main facts about cloth—the spinning, weaving and finishing of woolsens and worsteds—and describes the principal kinds of suitings. Samples of the different fabrics are included.

HICKS, AMI MALI. Everyday art. 241p il $3 Dutton

747 Art. Clothing and dress. House decoration 25-6623

"Miss Hicks has made the use of color her profession. So one finds in her book the expected chapter on why certain colors should be worn or not worn by specified complexions, how and why certain colors harmonize and others do not, and similar matters. She turns her attention to all phases of our surroundings—furniture, home decoration, houses, the kitchen, the garden, and briefly advises as to forms, colors, designs that will be artistic, beautiful, satisfactory to live with. In her discussions of color, for all uses, her argument is always founded on scientific knowledge of the nature and reciprocal influences of color, and she is careful to explain the reasons for her advice."—N Y Times

HICKS, AMI MALI—Continued

Booklist 22:19 O '25

Boston Transcript p2 J1 11 '25 150w

"The book is informally written, with its esthetic doctrines pleasantly flavored by a fluent and often humorous style, and thoroughly mixed with discussion of practical situations. It is a relief to find its general tone more honest than in some similar volumes, avoiding pseudo-smartness on the one hand and sentimentality on the other."

+ J Home Econ 17:404 J1 '25 350w

"She does much talking on a great variety of subjects more or less related to her original theme, quite frequently saying something worth while or striking, but rarely giving practical help or suggestion about specific matters."

— + N Y Times p23 Mr 22 '25 450w

Reviewed by Lettie Gay

N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 400w

"Done with the ease and grace of one familiar with the subject."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 60w

"Miss Hicks's book is written in a style which we are unable, at times, to classify as either certainly serious or ironical. Many of the writer's dicta are so sensible that we can hardly think that she would seriously stand sponsor for some of the reforms she advocates. Varying in content from the significant to the trivial and at times even to the frivolous, her volume is clever enough, at any rate, to stimulate the mind and arouse the interest. It is illustrated by photographs and by many amusing little sketches, evidently the work of the author, which enliven, if they do not clarify, the text."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:161 S 26 '25 250w

HIGH, STANLEY. Europe turns the corner; introd. by Col. Edward M. House. 308p $2 Abingdon press

940.5 Reconstruction (European war.) Europe—Politics. Europe—Economic conditions. League of nations 25-18472

"Mr. Stanley High does not blink facts nor does he try to bend facts to preconceived theory. But he finds in Europe at the present moment a new determination to achieve permanent peace. He sees this determination in the downfall of Poincaré in France, the working of the Dawes plan, the constructive activities of the Little Entente of Central Europe, and the promulgation of the Protocol of the League of Nations. As to Russia, this author holds that 'isolation more than any other factor in the last five years has served to strengthen the extremists of the Communist party.'"—R of Rs

"Writing with great freshness and vigor, he has approached his problem not with the tired cynicism of a disillusioned critic, but with a spirit of faith and hope. At the same time, his chronicling of facts gives the impression of complete impartiality and constitutes an excellent historical narrative for those who wish to recapture the chief events of this important period."

+ Ind 115:110 J1 25 '25 120w

"The book is one of the most illuminating that have been written on the situation in Europe and will give the reader an entirely new point of view. No student of contemporary history can afford to ignore it." E. B. Smith

+ Lit R p5 S 26 '25 300w

Reviewed by J. R. Ellingston

N Y Times p1 J1 19 '25 1450w

R of Rs 72:335 S '25 180w

"Mr. High has written a book that is good, but not very good. It is more than journalism but less than history or political science."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:263 O 31 '25 300w

HIGHAM, SIR CHARLES FREDERICK. Advertising, its use and abuse. (Home univ. lib. of modern knowledge) 256p $1 Holt [2s 6d Williams & N.]

659 Advertising

25-15126

The author surveys advertising as a business, an art, a science, and as a method for the spreading of ideas of any sort. In his enlightened book he argues that here is a force of unlimited power and usefulness, which to be properly employed is to be carefully understood.

Booklist 22:105 D '25

"His little book is a triumph of compression, full of facts without 'factiness,' and its readers will have a working knowledge of the psychology as well as the history of advertising in all its phases."

+ Living Age 326:169 J1 18 '25 450w (Reprinted from Morning Post)

"It is an English book, describing English advertising, which is about twenty years behind our own, despite the gallant efforts of Sir Charles to introduce the real Yankee stuff. His book does not subtract anything from the sum total of knowledge about advertising, but it adds very little to it."

— Sat R of Lit 2:408 D 12 '25 130w

"On the whole, he succeeds in showing that advertisements may fairly be acquitted of generating unnecessary demands or creating fictitious prices. But there is another side to which Sir Charles does not do justice. Advertisements are not the only means of educating the public, and its intelligence would certainly be lowered if its journalistic reading were confined, as apparently he would like, to facts and advertisements."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p402 Je 11 '25 450w

HILL, MRS IDA CARLETON (THALLON). Rome of the kings. 255p $3 Dutton

913.37 Rome—Antiquities

25-21600

The sub-title describes the book as an "archaeological setting for Livy and Vergil." From literary evidence, traditions and archeological discoveries the author reconstructs a picture of Rome in its earliest days, of Etruria and its early inhabitants and of the early temples of Latium. The concluding chapter is given to materials belonging to the prehistoric periods which are to be found in the various Italian museums.

"This somewhat prosy compilation of archaeological data, bearing on the narratives of Livy and Vergil, has not enough zest to attract the general reader, nor enough originality to interest the serious scholar."

— Sat R of Lit 2:348 N 28 '25 160w

"Many years of the most careful reading and study go before a book like this, and it is a matter for regret that the actual preparation of the text should have been done in haste, as Prof Hill herself admits was the case. More leisurely revision would have made many small improvements in English and in structure. But whatever might have been done to make it better, the book as it stands will be of much value to a few scholarly travelers and to a large number of students and teachers of the Latin classics and the early history of Rome."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 N 10 '25 200w

HILL, LEONARD ERSKINE, and CAMPBELL, ARGYLL. Health and environment. 208p il $4.20 Longmans

614 Hygiene

25-18684

Two British experts, a physiologist and a physician, deal with the effect of environment on health. Chief attention is given to atmospheric conditions—air pollution by smoke, dust and other impurities—and the effect of sunlight, food, etc. The use of the kata-thermometer is explained and its value in detecting failures in ventilation and heating.

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 22 '25 520w

HILLEBRAND, HAROLD NEWCOMB. Writing the one-act play; a manual for beginners. 244p trade ed $2; text ed $1.75 Knopf

808.2 Drama—Technique 25-16599

"Mr. Hillebrand's little book is the outgrowth of his work with classes in the writing of one-act plays in the English department of the University of Illinois. The author in his foreword explains that he has added another to the list of books on play craftsmanship because he has found that all of the excellent ones already existing are too detailed in their treatment for the beginner. There is constant reference to the work and methods of successful playwrights, and extracts from their plays are used to illustrate and emphasize important points. And there is an excellent bibliography of short plays and of volumes of dramatic craftsmanship."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:64 N '25

"A wise and practical guide for a beginner who feels the urge of dramatic composition." + N Y Times p16 S 27 '25 300w

"Students of the one-act play could find no better statement of the theory and possibilities of this, until recently neglected play form, than in Professor Hillebrand's small, compact volume." + Sat R of Lit 2:199 O 10 '25 80w

HIND, CHARLES LEWIS. Landscape painting from Giotto to the present day; v 1, From Giotto to Turner; v 2, From Constable to the present day. (Universal art ser.) 314;391p il ea $8.50 Scribner [ea 25s Chapman & H.]

758 Landscape painting (24-26190)

This account of the development of landscape painting thruout the world is a running commentary on some 700 modern landscape painters, including many recent and obscure ones and a fair representation of American artists. The arrangement is chronological. A list of "important landscape dates" is given at the end of each volume. Illustrated with many reproductions in monochrome.

"A valuable and comprehensive résumé. It is excellent in arrangement and content."

+ Booklist 21:265 Ap '25 (Review of v 2)

Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '25 1000w

"For what it is, a scamper through modern landscape painting, a gallant attempt to consolidate hundreds of admirations, the book is entirely successful. It grows out of a skillful sort of journalism, and nothing more than that usually implies can or should be expected of it." F. J. Mather, jr.

+ N Y Tribune p10 My 3 '25 220w (Review of v 2)

Sat R 138:656, D 27 '24 130w (Review of v 2)

"As a guide post book every good thing may be said of this. Mr. Hind is diligent and fastidious in choosing his artists and adroit in catching their more interesting aspects, skilful in the selection of illustrations. For the first time in a general survey he includes a fair representation of American artists."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:633 Mr 28 '25 450w (Review of v 2)

"The book is as methodical in arrangement as it is comprehensive in scope. Here and there one may differ from Mr. Hind in his distinction of 'Leaders' from 'Others' in his table of contents; but the table itself is clear and useful, and so is the list of 'Important Landscape Dates' at the end of each volume. Often, too, he makes a brilliant comparison or generalization in a phrase."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p817 D 4 '24 1100w

HINSDALL, OLIVER. Making the little theater pay; a practical handbook. 122p il $1.60 French, S.

792 Theater—Little theater movement 25-23609

The director of the conspicuously successful Little theater of Dallas, outlines the necessary steps in the organization and management of the little theater. From the experience of the Dallas group he offers a chapter of helpful hints on scenery makeshifts, a suitable repertory and the balanced program. An appendix contains the by-laws of the Little theater of Dallas.

"He gives us common-sense ideas coupled with artistic suggestions that are truly workable. He puts the little theater on a sound footing. The constructive help for organization, production, financing and advertising gives one the idea, after reading it, that he, too, could make the little theater pay."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 19 '25 70w

"A book destined to years of usefulness." F. M.

+ Lit R p11 D 5 '25 160w

HOCKETT, HOMER C. Political and social history of the United States, 1492-1828. 438p $3 Macmillan

973 United States—History. United States —Politics and government 25-10817

This book, with its companion volume covering the years 1829 to 1925, by Arthur M. Schlesinger, forms a continuous history of the United States in its political, social and economic aspects. The history is intended primarily for college students and each chapter is provided with bibliographical notes.

"A volume which students of government will find extremely helpful and interesting."

+ Am Pol Sci R 17:856 N '25 150w

"An authoritative work marked by breadth and thoroughness of knowledge which give it encyclopedic value."

+ Bookm 62:221 O '25 90w

"Excellent not only as a textbook, but for the shelves of a small and carefully selected library."

+ Boston Transcript p5 J1 18 '25 180w

"In his volume, Professor Hockett has devoted his first six chapters to the Colonial period, and his plan is highly to be commended. The great mass of the detail so often involved in the traditional relation of the history of each of the thirteen colonies is omitted, and in its stead appears an excellent description of the process of colonization and a notable chapter on economic and social development during the period. The clarity of the exposition of the difficult political situation between 1817 and 1825 should make that rather obscure period much easier for student and teacher alike. This latter part of the volume, however, fails to realize the 'social' promise of the title." R. F. Nichols

+ Hist Outlook 17:36 Ja '26 400w

"The author has accomplished what he set out to do. Undoubtedly, the present author, in covering so large and so complex a record in such restricted limits, has been obliged to omit a good deal and to pass over with very brief comment important developments in American life and history." W. M.

+ Ind 115:79 J1 18 '25 190w

"An excellent history of the United States."

C: A. Beard

+ New Repub 44:311 N 11 '25 80w

"Professor Hockett has inclined, on the whole, to the suppression of the personal or local incidents which, if not of great substantive importance, have nevertheless done much to make the national past seem real and even vivid." W: MacDona'd

N Y Times p14 J1 26 '25 720w

HOCKETT, HOMER C.—Continued

"Parts of Dr. Hockett's volume, stretched, as it is, over so large a part of our history, seem sketchy for college use. But in general the work is subject to little criticism. The bibliography is full and pointed, and distinguished by numerous and well planned maps." A. N.

+ — N Y Tribune p3 S 27 '25 550w

Reviewed by W. F. Johnson
No Am 222:179 S '25 350w

"Eminently suitable for use as a text-book in the higher schools and in colleges. Scholarly and for the most part clear."

+ Outlook 141:128 S 23 '25 40w

"The text is not documented even in the case of quotations from sources, but there is brief statement of the principal easily accessible works bearing on the particular subjects in hand at the end of each chapter. Professor Hockett has a swinging, popular style which should make him a favorite with his readers." E. P. Oberholtzer

+ Sat R of Lit 2:61 Ag 22 '25 600w

HODGEN, MARGARET T. Workers' education in England and the United States. 312p $5 Dutton [12s 6d K. Paul]

374.8 Education of workers 25-26991

In this comprehensive survey, the author traces the growth of workers' education in England from the early 18th century charity schools for training apprentices or teaching religious doctrine, to the present day labour colleges, and the advance of the movement under trade Union organization and control. The second half of the book treats in the same way of the movement in the United States, noting likenesses and contrasts in its development in the two countries. There is an extensive bibliography at the end of the book.

"A careful, painstaking, comprehensive tabulation and analysis. The book probably contains more historical facts on the subject than can be found elsewhere, and its value will be largely historical since conditions are changing so fast that it is even now hardly up to date. Its lack of an index impairs its use as a reference book. Excellent bibliography."

+ — Booklist 22:102 D '25

"In many respects it is a masterly production. The writer is genuinely interested in the whole matter. She has read far and wide, but unfortunately she has missed, or not used, much. Moreover, she appears to be quite unable to value, or to estimate rightly, the comparative importance of the authorities which she quotes. The Bibliography provided is comprehensive, perhaps too much so. In it the names of authors are correctly given, which is not the rule in the text and appended notes. The number of errors is surprising." Albert Mansbridge

+ — Nation and Ath 37:463 Jl 11 '25 720w

"Her book is painstaking, and is far from being a mere chronicle; but the English section at any rate has the air of being written by an outsider, and contains some rather serious misunderstandings. It has, moreover, been put together over a number of years, and some of the material, given as contemporary is already out-of-date."

+ — New Statesman 25:350 Jl 4 '25 260w

"The compilation of this excellent book must have been a matter of great labour, but it has been executed with care and precision. The bibliography bears witness to the extent of ground which had to be covered. Moreover, the author's style is sound and her book reads pleasantly."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p424 Je 25 '25 920w

HODGSON, GERALDINE EMMA. Life of James Elroy Flecker. 288p il $4 Houghton [12s 6d Blackwell]

B or 92 Flecker, James Elroy [25-5016]

"Dr. Hodgson's is the official, or at all events the authorized, biography of Flecker, compiled 'from letters and materials provided by his mother.' To the biography of the parent by the child we are accustomed; the biography of the child by the parent is a rarer matter, and here the guiding hand, there is little doubt, has been that of the poet's mother, although the task of the scribe has been deputed to Dr. Hodgson. . . The best part of Dr. Hodgson's work has gone into the epilogue, a purely critical estimate of Flecker's literary achievement."—Nation and Ath

"Uncommonly searching, balanced, concise, yet affectionate biography of an uncommonly human genius masquerading at times a bit in-sufferably perhaps, but most of the time shyly, austere, spontaneously himself."

+ Bookm 61:712 Ag '25 150w

"A dull but conscientious piece of work. There is much valuable material in it, but not the breath of life." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 1400w

"This enlightening and capable book is very clearly a labor of love. As a bit of biography, it is singularly full, vital and revelatory, and if in its critical passages it sometimes reveals more of the fervent admirer than of the coolly analytical and unbiased judge, it is written with a sincerity of which there can be no question. And it may be added, incidentally, that the author displays a literary ability entirely worthy of the subject with which she is dealing." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p4 Je 27 '25 1000w

"It cannot be pretended that she has succeeded in drawing any sharp, convincing, or definite portrait of Flecker. Merely a smudge results from these 232 pages; no real man appears at all, save once in a letter from the pen of a contributor. . . Dr. Hodgson has failed because she was either compelled to leave out, or elected to leave out, or was incapable of discerning, all that was important to Flecker. . . . It is difficult for the uninitiated to tell what delicacies or what prohibitions stood in her way; one can only record the fact that one is conscious in reading the book that its author was not writing with a free hand." V. Sackville-West

Nation and Ath 36:650 F 7 '25 820w

"Of the Flecker who seems real enough flesh and blood in his poetry, little survives here; either he had not a great deal of personality outside his writing, or it has escaped this portrait of him. In his poems, for the present, we must be content to look for him; as a human being it may be that he really was something of a bore; as a poet, though I doubt if many read him now, he remains a pathetic, but a sympathetic figure still." F. L. Lucas

+ — New Statesman 24:692 Mr 21 '25 1500w

"Geraldine Hodgson tries to belittle any stray fact that may be conceived as not showing Flecker in a neat and antiseptic light, and in so doing the personality of the writer is injured. And yet there is much of interest and much that is important in this biography."

+ — N Y Times p15 Je 14 '25 1700w

"A faithful, scholarly rather than critical narrative of the poet's days and works." G. F. Whicher

+ N Y Tribune p15 N 1 '25 850w

Pratt p36 autumn '25

"The reading of this bulky volume has the dismal effect of making you dislike the person it attempts to portray. Poor Flecker was unlucky in life as in art, but a biography of this sort, complete with photograph taken from his nursery window, is the unkindest cut of all." A. E. Coppard

+ — Sat R 139:82 Ja 24 '25 450w

"Not a particularly good biography, but it will serve for the time being."

+ — Spec 134:81 Ja 17 '25 120w

"Dr. Hodgson's biography is painstaking, moderately impartial, and eminently readable. It is not particularly illuminating, however; it tells us very little of the poet's intimate thoughts and experiences and practically nothing of the mood and purpose of his poetry."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p36 Ja 15 '25 820w

HODGSON, J. E. History of aeronautics in Great Britain, from the earliest times to the latter half of the nineteenth century. 436p il $28 Oxford [84s Milford]

629.1 Aeronautics—History 25-1474

"Includes mythological and legendary lore and carefully traces the history of development in Great Britain, though not restricted to the work of British aeronauts. Is concerned chiefly with ballooning, but deals briefly with parachutes, kites, and mechanical flight."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:406 J1 '25

HODGSON, MRS JOSEPH WILLOUGHBY. Quest of the antique. 255p il $7.50 Dodd

749 Antiques [25-21811]

Mrs Hodgson writes not so much to guide the collector as to encourage the quest of old and beautiful things for the enjoyment they give and the interest they stimulate in the life and customs of the past. Her search leads her into many byways of the antique—wigs, shoes, corsets and fans, toys and dolls' clothing, Victorian jewelry, teapots and tea-drinking. One whole chapter is devoted to a marvelous dolls' house, completely equipped, presented by Queen Anne to her goddaughter, Ann Sharp. Illustrated with sixty-three full-page plates.

Reviewed by Moran Tudury
Bookm 62:347 N '25 80w

"Mrs. Willoughby Hodgson seems to know her subjects, although her writing is spoilt by over-picturesqueness. It is a curious mixture, but not the less entertaining for that." Angus Davidson

+ — Nation and Ath 36:688 F 14 '25 180w

"Mrs. Hodgson's book is pleasant and discursive, and she is able, because of the very antiquity of England and its prolonged interest in its own past, to write of many fascinating things Americans are quite unable to collect." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p22 O 25 '25 800w

HODKIN, FREDERICK WILLIAM, and COUS-EN, ARNOLD. Textbook of glass technology; with a foreword by W. E. Turner. 551p $12 Van Nostrand

666.1 Glass [25-13221]

"Represents, we believe, the first systematic attempt in the English language. . . The authors believe that it will be of use to all ranks of those engaged in the production of glassware, to masters who desire factories run on up-to-date principles and to workmen who wish to know something of the theory involved in the processes in which they are day by day engaged."—Preface

"This publication, which was eight years in preparation, is the best on glass that has yet appeared in English." Alexander Silverman

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:875 Ag '25 360w

"All interested in glass will welcome the compilation of these two authors, and the industry owes them a debt of gratitude for such a masterly exposition of their subject, which covers the whole field of glass manufacture. Throughout the work they have adhered to their determination as stated in the preface: to attempt no encyclopaedic survey, but to allow the book to take the simpler form of a general introduction to the study of glass technology. In this they are to be commended, because the book becomes as valuable to the beginner as to the expert."

+ Nature 116:347 S 5 '25 1150w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:21 Ap '25

HOFFMANN, MAX. War of lost opportunities. 246p $3.50 International pub.

940.41 European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns —Eastern. European war, 1914-1918—Germany [24-6131]

The chief of the German general staff on the eastern front analyzes the military operations in this theater of the war and points out the mistakes as he sees them, in German strategy.

"The translation of the book is poor, the proof-reading and editing equally so. Sentences sometimes do not end. This is a great pity because of the intrinsic value of the book, especially for the light it throws on Russian military blunders in 1914 and 1915." O. G. Villard

+ — Nation 121:546 N 11 '25 800w

"It is undoubtedly of great academic interest to know the inside story of Germany's lost opportunities. But it is the most futile thing in the world to delude a defeated people—or a victorious people, for that matter—into a belief that the great German Army might have won the war 'if opportunities had not been lost. It is, lastly, useless to think that this retrospection can have military value." T. J. C. Martyn

+ N Y Tribune p13 O 18 '25 750w

Reviewed by T. H. Thomas
Sat R of Lit 2:366 D 5 '25 800w

HOLLAND, CLIVE. Flanders & Hainault. (Picture guides) 146p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Medici soc.

914.93 Belgium—Description and travel

The latest of the Picture guides series is a descriptive and historical account of the cities and towns of western Belgium: the seacoast and its towns—Ostend, Blankenberghe and Zeebrugge; the ancient cities of Bruges, Ghent and Brussels; the historic towns of West Flanders and Hainault—Dixmude, Ypres, Courtrai, Tournai, Mons and Charleroi. As in the other volume of the series the illustrations are in photogravure.

"The little book recommends itself first of all as a book of pictures. It is profusely and beautifully illustrated."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '25 180w

"Mr. Holland knows every inch of the western section of Belgium and he writes about it intimately and delightfully. No aspect of the country is neglected from its home life to its art galleries and everywhere the beauty of the splendidly reproduced illustrations contributes to the pleasure which may be had from a book equally as good for the traveler in search of a guide as for the stay-at-home." H. B.

+ Lit R p13 N 14 '25 120w

"Not only are these pictures charmingly reproduced, but they are selected with knowledge and taste. They represent the picturesque and the characteristic, rather than the obvious."

+ New Statesman 26:316 D 19 '25 850w

N Y Tribune p13 D 20 '25 130w

R of Rs 72:664 D '25 50w

"It was worth doing. All lovers of Belgium will appreciate those charming glimpses of brick architecture and quiet waterways. A reference to Pirenne's Belgian Democracy would have saved the author from numerous pitfalls. As it is, the work is, historically, unreliable."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p759 N 12 '25 250w

HOLLIDAY, ROBERT CORTES. Literary lanes and other byways. 219p $2 Doran

814 25-17843

Among the literary lanes and byways pursued by Mr Holliday are the vamp in literature, bons mots here and there, best books for the desert island, books as commencement gifts and the field of the textbook in the publishing business.

HOLLIDAY, R. C.—Continued

Booklist 22:150 Ja '26

"Few men writing today know so much about what may be called the practical side of authorship, and here he has many interesting facts concerning advertising, the making of textbooks, book illustration, and books as gifts, mingled with amusing theories on nightgowns, humor, vamps, and cook books, along with pleasing reminiscences of such authors as Robert Frost, Robert Nathan, and George Sterling. One could wish that his English were not so often careless—not merely informal, but careless." R. M. Gay

+ — Book 62:336 N '25 110w

"There is only one R. C. H. Neither time nor familiarity alter that belief. We are brought back to that conclusion each time we try to solve the riddle of his attraction. You think as you begin an essay, 'Well, this starts ordinarily enough. Of course one can't expect a man to keep it up all the time. An occasional nod is only human!' But, the point is here, R. C. H. does not nod. He only tricks you into thinking that maybe this time he will. Then when you are all prepared to be disappointed and magnanimously to forgive him for disappointing you once, you discover what he's done. He has just lured you on in one of those unexpected ways of his, and because you feared you were about to be disappointed, your delight in his work is more than usually spontaneous and whole-hearted." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 7 '25 700w

"He has a pretty, confident style and a store of bright conceits. Over him hangs, however, the slight but distinct curse of literary quaintness. His humors are much appreciated by ripe Chaucerians, but to the general public they have that flavor of unreality that smacks of affectation."

+ — Ind 115:479 O 24 '25 100w

Sat R of Lit 2:380 D 5 '25 150w

HOLMES, JOHN HAYNES. Patriotism is not enough. 209p $2 Greenberg

172 Patriotism

25-9071

"A plea for a broader conception of patriotism. A true patriot, the author holds, would look on his country as one part, especially dear to him, of a larger whole. 'Love of country in this sense means finally love of human kind.'"—Wis Lib Bul

"The book deserves careful reading by humanitarians and those interested in internationalism."

+ Booklist 22:6 O '25

"Dr. Holmes doubtless is sincere in his presentation of the cure-all remedy which, he believes, will 'win the assent of those who comprise the brotherhood of the free spirits of the world.' But it is evident that he has written his book in the clouds, with his feet not quite firmly planted on the surface of the war-torn but nevertheless still quite durable earth." R. H.

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 11 '25 650w

"Very stimulating volume. Deserves careful reading by ministers, teachers, and all others who have any responsibility for our educational processes." Kirby Page

+ Nation 120:632 Je 3 '25 520w

Springf'd Republican p8 Je 30 '25 300w

"By an author who always writes eloquently."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:165 Je '25

"With eloquence he indicates the emotions, ideas and ideals available for pure patriotism, aloof from the selfish claims of the modern capitalistic state, the unreasoning and sinful devotion to its untoward policies, the narrow and hostile tendencies of its new and almost religious cult. The book is therefore instructive as well as analytical. It is redolent of wider loyalties. It is eloquent of higher passions." H. J. Cadbury

+ World Tomorrow 8:317 O '25 620w

HOLMYARD, ERIC JOHN. Chemistry to the time of Dalton. (World's manuals) 128p il $1 Oxford [2s 6d Milford]

540.9 Chemistry—History 25-17439

"In this, the third volume of 'Chapters in the History of Science,' the development of chemical science is traced from antiquity to the establishment of the atomic theory by John Dalton. As far as possible, original sources have been used, and these include extracts and illustrations not generally known to readers of other works on chemical history."—Chem & Met Eng

"For so small a book, this one covers a great deal of ground. The account is brief, but not superficial."

Booklist 22:58 N '25

Chem & Met Eng 32:815 O '25 60w

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 29:1486 N '25 1300w

"The best introduction to the history of chemistry that we have ever read, but beyond that it contains more new facts about its early period than any other."

+ Sat R 139:562 My 23 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p371 My 28 '25 160w

HOLT, ISABELLA. Low road. 271p $2.50 Macmillan

25-4858

Of the three Glenn sisters, Caroline the dependable, Juliana the adventurous, and the lovely seventeen-year-old Elise, it is the spirited Juliana who occupies the center of attention in the story. In the midst of a brilliant career, she flies simultaneously from college and from the attentions of a middle aged, married suitor. Acting on impulse she joins an archeological expedition to the Andes and comes home trailing the inevitable admirer. It is impossible for young men to do other than trail Juliana, impetuous, daring, stimulating as mountain air. She goes to Willy Trescott's head, even, slow moving, heavy minded Willy Trescott, who has grown up under his mother's thumb and at thirty seems used to the pressure. There is romance for all three girls, and surprise for everybody when Juliana gives up the high road of adventure to marry and settle down.

Booklist 21:340 Je '25

"In the period which has passed since the publication of 'The Marriotts and the Powells,' Isabella Holt has gained immensely in her technique. She manages her story with an ease and efficiency which she did not possess when she wrote the earlier book. With this gain she has kept her same engaging interest in people." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 21 '25 680w

"The story is told almost entirely in dialogue, some of it witty and wise, but rather too much of it."

+ — Ind 114:419 Ap 11 '25 40w

Reviewed by Virginia Nirdlinger

Lit R p10 Mr 7 '25 300w

Nation and Ath 37:466 Jl 11 '25 200w

"Such a book as 'The Low Road' is somewhat too near a chemical formula to rank as good fiction, and a bit too far from the genuine picaresque to permit a critical study of the course of feminine roguery. As it stands, it is a fair enough novel, with a single idea, well, if rather too obviously, handled."

+ — N Y Times p8 Mr 15 '25 920w

N Y Tribune p12 My 24 '25 160w

"A novel of unpretentious but excellent literary workmanship which is at once conservative without stodginess, and modern without self-consciousness."

+ Outlook 139:543 Ap 8 '25 90w

"The opening of the novel is strangely lacking in facility, and there are occasional halts and losses of momentum throughout the book. There is much of the familiar stuff of living here, set forth without cant or distortion. The better passages are often amusing, penetrating well below the surface of their problems."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:713 Ap 25 '25 250w

"The book is written with much humour and the characterization is admirable."

+ Spec 135:242 Ag 8 '25 40w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 360w

"Her racy, vivid manner of writing makes a constant appeal to the imagination. The first half of the story, which gives us the material for the subsequent compromise and active resignation suggested in the 'postlude,' is far more satisfying than the later part."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p430 Je 25 '25 450w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

HOLT, ROLAND. List of music for plays and pageants; with practical suggestions. 93p $1 Appleton

016.78 Music—Bibliography. Music, Incidental 25-7657

Intended for directors of pageants and theatrical entertainments, this book gives practical suggestions for the musical program to accompany plays and pageants and lists of music for all kinds of dramatic productions. The music is classified according to its character—marches, pastoral, dances, somber, dreamy, fairy, etc.

"Harassed directors of plays and pageants will doubtless find the many and varied practical suggestions Mr. Holt makes quite as useful and comforting as the more outstanding music lists of his book."

+ N Y Times p26 Ap 12 '25 260w

"Altogether, a useful addition to the literature of community entertainment, in brief compass."

+ N Y Tribune p10 My 31 '25 100w

HOOPINGARNER, DWIGHT LOWELL. Labor relations in industry. 553p il $6 Shaw, A.W. 331 Labor and laboring classes. Industrial relations 25-17559

"Treats labor relations in industry as a whole. Analyses the problems involved, shows the trend of developments in policy and organization, and gives suggestions for handling administrative problems in labor relations. No standardization of methods or mechanisms is believed possible nor desirable but principles of equity can and should be followed. In 8 parts: 1—A point of view in labor relations; 2—Control of labor relations; 3—The division of earnings; 4—Working periods and labor supply; 5—Health conservation; 6—Special social considerations; 7—Local plant relations; 8—World scope and trends. Appendix is made up of case problems to crystallize and show the practical application of material presented."—Management and Adm

Boston Transcript p8 N 21 '25 920w

"Those engineers and contractors who seek a philosophy of labor relations will find Mr. Hoopingarners book of noteworthy interest."

+ Eng N 95:642 O 15 '25 250w

Management and Adm 10:291 N '25 120w

HOPE, ANTHONY, pseud. See Hawkins, A. H.

HOPE, STANTON. Rolling round the world—² for fun. 323p il $5 Doran

910 Voyages and travels

"It is the author's own opinion that "the best time to see the world is while the wine of Youth runs richly in the veins, the fetters of responsibility rest lightly about the ankles, and the twin fires of Energy and Enthusiasm flame high on the altar of the soul." Accordingly he set out to follow his fancy and see the world, with nothing in his pockets but what his hands could earn along the way. He took any kind of job that offered, from the most severe back-breaking labor to a temporary sinecure as assistant to a phrenologist, and knocked about from place to place as the spirit moved, visiting western Canada, Alaska, the United States and China, Japan, Australia, India and Arabia in turn.

"The author follows the Victorian method of carefully leaving out of his narrative any unpleasant details. We are thankful for such discretion. It makes the volume as a whole a hearty discursive account of a healthy young Englishman who saw the world when he was young, and had a splendid time thinking about it afterwards."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 28 '25 460w

Reviewed by Janet Ramsay

N Y Tribune p11 D 27 '25 180w

HOPKINS, R. THURSTON. Kipling country. 263p il $3.50 Appleton [12s 6d C. Palmer]

914.225 Kipling, Rudyard. Sussex, England 25-26595

This is the record of the author's second series of rambles in the villages and downs of Sussex which are mentioned in the writings of Rudyard Kipling and other authors. In his explorations Mr Hopkins throws light upon the history and archeology of the places visited and he has something to say of the character of the Sussex people. There is a literary note on Kipling's poetry and a glossary of Sussex provincialisms.

"Mr. Hopkins tells many things about this region and its people that help to illuminate the general theme. His description of many characteristic inns and old churches also adds much of value. It is impossible to read this book without a fresh burst of enthusiasm for Kipling and a desire to reread the stories with 'The Kipling Country' at elbow to point out hitherto unsuspected realities beneath the magic tales." Florence Milner

+ Lit R p6 Mr 28 '25 680w

"Mr. Hopkins has explored this country with a quick eye and a curious mind. Numerous drawings and photographs are scattered through the book, and contribute in no small measure to its attractiveness."

+ N Y Tribune p16 Ap 5 '25 250w

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN. Tumbleberry and Chick. 285p il $2 Houghton

25-4214

There was no more familiar sight in the little New England fishing village, than the long and lazy Tumbleberry and his roly poly henchman Chick. Tumbleberry toiled not, but he spun—fine excuses for his idleness, and very good reasons why Chick should carry the clams. It was the lot of the good natured Chick to grumble and succumb. But while the village looked askance at the idler, there were kinder glances and sighs reserved for his friend. So there is romance as well as humor in the book.

"It is no injustice to 'Tumbleberry and Chick' to say that it is the comic supplement novelized, and that it is infinitely bettered in the drawing."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 28 '25 350w

"It is as standardized as a Ford, as machine made as a current movie offering. You can read it and not remember a thing in it afterwards. But you may have enjoyed it. It is a clean book, a rare thing in these days."

+ — Lit R p9 Ap 11 '25 250w

"There can be no doubt that the author knows his background and his characters and that he is able to convey them realistically to the reader. The novel, although light in theme and not attempting any significant portraiture, will doubtless prove of interest to a considerable audience, not only because of the distinctive atmosphere it portrays, but because of the entertaining and even amusing presentation of the characters."

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN—Continued

+ N Y Times p24 Je 7 '25 250w

N Y Tribune p8 Ap 26 '25 150w

"Leisurely, pleasant, and humorous is the calm current of this almost plotless story upon which the reader drifts willingly, smiling often and never bored."

+ Outlook 139:382 Mr 11 '25 130w

"Dull, stodgy, and so slow as to be almost motionless."

— Sat R of Lit 1:601 Mr 14 '25 150w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

HOPPE, WILLIE. Thirty years of billiards; ed. by Thomas Emmett Crozier. 255p il $2.50 (12s 6d) Putnam

794 Billiards

25-4178

Mr Hoppe writes in an informal way of his career in billiards from the day he made his first experiment with a cue, at the age of six—standing on a chair—on the battle-scarred old billiard table in his father's barber-shop at Cornwall Landing. This was followed by exhibitions in neighboring towns and subsequently a trip to New York. He relates further his experiences abroad, the winning of his first world's championship, and gives interesting glimpses of several great tournaments and matches wherein he defeated champions of different nationalities. The biographical sketch is supplemented by thirty lessons in billiards with charts and diagrams.

Booklist 21:295 My '25

Reviewed by A. C. Bierce

Lit R p12 F 21 '25 750w

"Following the biographical chapters Hoppe has contributed thirty lessons on the game, with charts and diagrams. These will interest the player, but the remainder of the book is put together so skillfully and informally that the most complete layman should enjoy it."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 1 '25 200w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p6m Mr 1 '25 400w

"It demands no knowledge of the particular art in which Mr. Hoppe excels to be interested in his progress to mastery; the struggle itself, the risks taken, the American arena, all are vividly described."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p243 Ap 2 '25 350w

HORNADAY, WILLIAM TEMPLE. Wild-animal round-up; stories and pictures from the passing show. 372p il $5 Scribner

599 Animals. Hunting

25-23706

The wild animal is passing, has almost passed from the American scene. For a generation that may never know wild animal life save in museums or in books, Dr Hornaday preserves a record of his experiences among the big game of the world. These experiences were met, in part, while securing specimens for the New York zoological society. The third section of the book pays tribute to the work of the society and to the skill and enthusiasm of American taxidermists whose splendid work may be seen in the museums of the country.

"It makes interesting reading for those who read for amusement and furnishes a fund of information to those who seek instruction."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 16 '25 380w

"A series of exciting and interesting sketches."

+ Ind 115:689 D 12 '25 80w

"The irresistible charm of the wilderness and its citizens in plumage, hide and scale, lives in every page of Mr. Hornaday's tale," Ernest Hackett

+ Lit R p5 D 26 '25 200w

"The photographs are numerous and good. Although written for an American audience, this is on the whole an uncommonly interesting animal book, and no one has a better knowledge than Dr. Hornaday of the subjects on which he writes."

+ New Statesman 26:284 D 12 '25 360w

"For the nature lover it would be difficult to find a more welcome addition to the library than 'A Wild Animal Round-Up.'"

+ N Y Times p7 D 6 '25 100w

"Anything that the distinguished director of the New York Zoological Park has to say about animals, either in the bush or the cage, is likely to be both interesting and profitable. His round-up is illustrated with more than 100 photographs, some of them the best in existence dealing with animal subjects." Stanley Walker

+ N Y Times p10 Ja 3 '26 1600w

"Readable on every one of its pages, and well illustrated."

+ Outlook 141:642 D 23 '25 60w

"Every animal-lover will find something to interest him in Dr. Hornaday's reminiscences of hunting beasts and birds. A few of the scientific names are misspelt, and the author's exclusion of the 'Latin race' from 'the Aryans' shows him a better zoologist than ethnologist."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p805 N 26 '25 400w

HOTSON, J. LESLIE. Death of Christopher Marlowe. 76p $3 Harvard univ. press [7s 6d Nonesuch press]

B or 92 Marlowe, Christopher

25-15083

"Dr. Hotson, an American scholar from Harvard, here describes a remarkable piece of research at the Public Record Office in London whereby he has succeeded both in clearing up the mystery of Marlowe's death and in throwing fresh light on his career."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"As Professor Kittredge, remarks in his preface, 'seldom is it the good fortune of any scholar . . . to make so remarkable a find' as that which Dr. Hotson now sets on record; while the acumen and diligence with which he followed up his first clue put his discoveries beyond the range of mere happy accidents." S: C. Chew

+ Nation 121:194 Ag 12 '25 200w

"You can read it through in half an hour, and you will get thirty fascinating minutes, for the story that Dr. Hotson has to tell combines romance, scholarship, and the thrill of a good detective story." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 37:238 My 23 '25 1100w

"Dr. Hotson will be envied and thanked by all students of the Elizabethan drama. Following what scholars call a presentiment, and the profane vulgar a hunch, he has chased the unknown slayer of Christopher Marlowe through the vast and dusty Elizabethan documents in the British Record Office and has finally landed him. Only those who have engaged in similar chases can appreciate the difficulties he overcame or know the eagerness with which he searched every untried jungle and the crowning joy of success." J: M. Manly

+ New Repub 45:57 D 2 '25 800w

New Statesman 25:256 Je 18 '25 1000w

Reviewed by J: Bakeless

N Y Times p2 My 24 '25 1150w

"The questions which may be asked are endless. Though the old legend is laid, a better story than ever has taken its place." Carl Van Doren

+ N Y Tribune p3 O 11 '25 1400w

St Louis 23:438 D '25

"Dr. Hotson is to be congratulated warmly on the fortunate result of one of those clues which are always opening out before the scholar, but which so rarely lead to any result. It is a fine piece of work, well presented and well-printed."

+ Sat R 139:624 Je 6 '25 200w

"It is a pretty and enviable thing to make a discovery such as Dr. Hotson here announces concerning the death of Marlowe. For all the demure taste of the brown buckram binding and neat fastidiousness of paper and type, the little book evokes some very romantic thrills; and Dr. Hotson's modest scholarly precision detracts nothing from the inherent excitement of the tale he has to unfold." Tucker Brooke

+ Sat R of Lit 1:852 Je 27 '25 700w

Spec 134:892 My 30 '25 1200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p329 My 14 '25 650w

HOUGH, EMERSON. Ship of souls. 292p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

25-4862

Fort McTavish, an isolated fur trading post in northern Canada, is the scene of action in Mr Hough's latest book. To this bleak spot comes a stranger, and man of the world, Langley Barnes, to escape from the mockery of his marriage. At Fort McTavish Barnes meets the grizzled old factor, Angus Garth, and his two daughters—Annette, a beautiful half-breed, and Christine, the only white girl within five hundred miles, whose beauty and dignity mark her a being apart in these surroundings. Garth urges the stranger to marry Christine, but Barnes is mindful of a wife in the city—and there is Annette who flaunts her love in his eyes. The sudden arrival of Major Churchill and his introduction of the first radio phone in the Mackenzie River basin brings the story to a tense climax and a happy ending.

Booklist 21:302 My '25

Reviewed by W. E. Harris

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 21 '25 1400w

"The style is simple. The whole is a better tale than 'North of 36,' a more stirring originality than 'The Covered Wagon.'" Frank Wilkinson

+ Int Bk R p483 Je '25 500w

"A bonnie though somewhat tragic tale. One of the sound, fine stories of the year is this 'The Ship of Souls.'" C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p4 Mr 28 '25 420w

N Y Times p24 My 17 '25 520w

"So long as the people in this novel are not called upon to talk, they manage to give a fairly credible impression of reality. But when the characters talk, their speech is likely to be as remote from reality as the trading post is from civilization."

— N Y Tribune p12 Mr 22 '25 230w

"This book reveals Mr. Hough strikingly changed. 'The Ship of Souls' lacks the style and the breadth of 'The Covered Wagon.' It is a tale of the far Canadian North, fairly well told, but when it has been read it leaves no impress."

— N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 300w

Sat R of Lit 1:748 My 9 '25 380w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 23 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE. Trimblerrigg; a book of revelation. 320p $2.50 A. & C. Boni [9s J. Cape]

25-4342

The central figure of this satirical novel is a prominent British politician whose identity is concealed under a thin mask. "Mr. Housman has done more than merely to produce a tract for the times in this extraordinary 'revelation.' . . . It also goes deeper and holds a certain timeless verity in its merciless probing into a selected type of human being that finds incarnation in all ages. It is far more than a skinning alive of Mr. Lloyd George and other British politicians. It is possible to analyze it so as to resolve it into three chief elements: first and most obviously a sardonic display of British and international statesmanship, or politics, during the past ten years or more; secondly, a devastating criticism of the Church and what passes for religion among most English-speaking people to-day; and finally, a minute psychological study of a not uncommon type of human animal." (Int Bk R)

"If it were funny—well, then it would be funny. As it is, I found it pretty heavy going." Isabel Paterson

— Bookm 61:347 My '25 200w

"The humor is weighty and impressive. It is almost malignant in its slow procedure. Many reviewers will shamefacedly acclaim the book because they think it is a great work. Others will praise it because they are trying to impress the editors who employ them. Good workmanship there is in plenty, excellent writing. The author has done his best. But it is not for America, this little book. Still an excellent book for any library." D. F. G. Boston Transcript p6 F 11 '25 370w

"Surely, in all history, never has a political leader been more completely, devastatingly turned inside out and held up to the examination of his people than is the chief subject of this unsparing satire. It is done quietly, with no exuberance of rhetorical denunciation; more in the manner of a dispassionate scientist exhibiting a specimen beautifully impaled upon a pin than with any show of anger. But as a criticism, not merely of the man but of the nations and peoples that can be led by such a prophet, the book is tremendous." H. L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p245 Mr '25 1050w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

Lit R p6 Mr 21 '25 1100w

"After a time the continuous display of incidents made up to reveal Mr. Trimblerrigg's hypocrisy and subtle expediency runs into monotony and repetition. It is a fable which does not become a great story like 'Gulliver's Travels' or 'Gargantua'; and Mr. Housman's irony, at first sly and malicious, takes on the smooth aspect of a bad habit."

— Nation 120:498 Ap 29 '25 100w

"We solemnly congratulate Mr. Housman on a notable contribution to the resources of fiction." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 42:134 Mr 25 '25 660w

"Mr. Trimblerrigg is a character subtly drawn. We like him a little even at his worst; we are dazzled by his swift leaps from point to point of vantage, half-hypnotised by his own self-delusion. Unkind critics, abetted by Mr. Edmund X. Kapp, who illustrates the book, have likened him to a certain statesman, whose actions some of the episodes are definitely meant to recall. It is so—and it is not. We get the piquancy of the likenesses without accepting the identification as a whole. But without this the book would lose little. It is fine satire in a time when even blunt satire is rare. Mr. Housman has done nothing better."

+ New Statesman 24:455 Ja 24 '25 450w

N Y Times p6 F 8 '25 2450w

"Mr. Housman's biography of the fictitious Mr. Trimblerrigg is more than a clever political skit; it is also a brilliant dissection of the mind and morals of a one-time British idol and of the people who alternately groveled, worshipped or acclaimed." W. Macdonald

N Y Tribune p3 F 8 '25 800w

"People will get 'wholesome' enjoyment out of 'Trimblerrigg.' They ought to read it, too, because, in a good way, it attacks that ugly selfishness in men which makes them indifferent to the ills now enjoyed by all men in common. Mr. Housman has given them something of their due in 'Trimblerrigg'; enough, anyway, definitely to put his book on the side of virtue." Savington Crampton

+ N Y World p6m F 8 '25 720w

"I fear he has a little bit overshot the mark. It is an odd thing to have to say of that graceful and sensitive writer, but his new book is heavy and too long. Still, I would strongly recommend it, for the sake of its opening chapters, which are not only extremely amusing but also diabolically discerning." Gerald Gould

HOUSMAN, LAURENCE—Continued
— + Sat R 138:551 N 29 '24 320w

"Even apart from its literary merits, its unerring eye for the details of its hero's stage properties, and its stabbing, Swiftian irony, it deserves to be widely read by Americans. For in these days when truth follows slow on the heels of broadcasted fiction, to make America see David Lloyd George as Britain sees him is good internationalism."

Sat R of Lit 1:491 Ja 31 '25 350w

"In detail the story is very good; but the accumulation of detail is too many for the theme. There is a stiffness and artfulness in Mr. Housman's style, too, that might well put a reader off; and the self-conscious airs of the preface are intolerable. It is a pity that so much excellent ridicule and absurdity are confined in so narrow a scene." Andrew Carey

— + Spec 133:790 N 22 '24 160w

"It is a racy and remarkable book, with no bad blood in it; for with all its audacity it gives the impression that Mr. Housman is being cruel to be kind."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p760 N 20 '24 550w

HOVELL, THOMAS MARK. Rats and how to destroy them; with an introd. by S. L. Ben-susan. 465p il $3.50 Stechert [10s 6d Bale] 648.7 Rats [25-9481]

"Dealing with rats in a house, shop, warehouse, outbuilding, yard, stable, cow-house, fowl-house, pig-sty, garden, greenhouse or viney; by a river, stream or ornamental water; on a ship, shooting estate, or farm; and in sewers." (Subtitle) "Treats of the habits of rats and of the many methods and devices employed for destroying them under all sorts of conditions; of their destructiveness, their danger to health as carriers of disease germs and germ bearing parasites, etc." (Pratt)

"The book should be well worth its price to all persons concerned in managing property." F. C. Turner

+ Am J Pub Health 15:551 Je '25 550w

"The book should have a wide field of usefulness."

+ Eng N 94:328 F 19 '25 300w

"Mr. Hovell is nothing if not practical. This book, which is bound to attract attention by reason of the masterly fashion in which the problem of rat infestation is surveyed and the common sense with which it is handled, will serve a useful purpose."

+ New Statesman 24:398 Ja 10 '25 700w

Pratt Technical Books p24 '24

HOWARD, MRS INEZ G. Chrysalis of romance; being whimsical essays. 142p $3 Times-mirror press, Los Angeles, Cal.

390 Manners and customs 25-15835

In this book of a hundred or more short essays the author traces the very un-American origin of many of our common customs, symbols, and superstitions. Back of every modern form and usage she finds a story, a legend, a symbol, and in every one of them, romance.

"The author writes in a pleasant, readable style, with a warm patriotism of the spiritual sort, and she has brought together in her handsomely made book an immense amount of unusual, quaint and interesting information."

+ N Y Times p16 J1 19 '25 220w

Outlook 141:168 S 30 '25 10w

HOWARD, JOHN RAYMOND. Remembrance of things past. 416p $3.25 Crowell

B or 92 25-10339

Mr Howard's autobiography is "a familiar chronicle of kinsfolk and friends worthwhile." He draws his memories from a life enriched by many and enduring friendships and from a long experience as editor and publisher. His narrative begins in Brooklyn, his birthplace, when it was a town of only fifteen thousand inhabitants and a place of friendly sociability. The Howards were bound to the Beecher family by the closest of ties, and Henry Ward Beecher and his sister and the affairs of Plymouth church fill many of his pages. Another prominent figure is John C. Fremont whose aide Mr Howard was during the Civil war and whose military reputation he loyally defends.

"There have been many illuminating recitals of this character, but none in late years of more charm than this." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 3 '25 580w

N Y Times p2 Je 28 '25 700w

N Y Tribune p3 J1 26 '25 120w

Outlook 140:342 J1 1 '25 30w

"One could wish that this otherwise pleasant narrative did not make such free use of superlatives in depicting men's characters. The constant repetition of such adjectives becomes tiresome in the extreme."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:917 J1 18 '25 320w

"The book is full of interesting episodes, some of them merely good stories worth telling from the family annals, and many with a wider literary or historical interest. . . The book has many points of interest as a whole. One can dip into it at random and be entertained."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 1100w

HOWE, FREDERIC CLEMSON. Confessions of a reformer. 352p $3 Scribner

B or 92 25-23619

In these confessions a fighting idealist passes frank judgment on his own career. His life really began, he says, not in 1867 as the birth records show, but in the early nineties at Johns Hopkins university, under the influence of Richard T. Ely, Woodrow Wilson, Albert Shaw and James Bryce. He entered politics in Cleveland as a follower of Tom Johnson, went to Columbus as state senator, and then to New York, where he became director of the People's Institute, and later, commissioner of immigration at the port of New York. Tho he has steadily pursued the way of the liberal and given his life to fighting and writing for what are popularly regarded as lost causes, he has apparently arrived at harmony within and there is no word of bitterness in this story.

"Not the least interesting part of this present volume is his opinion of the men with whom he came into contact and who influenced his conduct and his thinking. Altogether, this is a stimulating book, even at the points of greatest disagreement, perhaps most so." C. R. Woodruff

+ Lit R p4 Ja 2 '26 550w

"Social life is not mathematical calculation or a laboratory experiment; it is experience. To this experience Mr. Howe has made a notable contribution, not the least valuable part of which is his story of it." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 45:90 D 9 '25 1800w

"A valuable contribution to the history of liberal thought and action in the United States during the first quarter of the twentieth century. 'Confessions of a Reformer' is honest autobiography. He has dragged in no ten-mile canvases as a background for his personal record. If the spacious background is nevertheless there, the reason is that his personal experience was fortunate enough to touch on big men and big movements." Simeon Strunsky

+ N Y Times p4 N 15 '25 2200w

"It would be difficult to imagine a franker or more interesting book than this, nor do I know anywhere in print a more sympathetic and alluring picture of the life of a boy born in the late sixties in a little town west of the Alleghenies." N. D. Baker

+ N Y World p6m N 22 '25 1600w

Outlook 142:74 Ja 13 '26 450w

"He knows, and in this book he makes us see, that his was an interesting career to have had." R. G. Tugwell

+ Sat R of Lit 2:447 D 26 '25 480w

"It is a plain book, plainly written, with little adornment, but full of experience and suppressed suffering. So it is impossible to pick out the best—there are many bests." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 55:313 D 1 '25 2450w

HUBBARD, WILFRANC. Orvieto dust; with an introd. by R. B. Cunningham-Graham. 258p $2.50 Minton, Balch & co. [10s 6d Constable]

In the picturesque old mountain town of Orvieto two friends, Doctor Saturnino and Father Prudenzia, united by their common love for archeology and for the young scapegrace Romoletto whom they had adopted as their protégé, were wont to meet daily for a friendly argument. To help in Romoletto's upbringing and edification the monk gives the doctor two old manuscripts to read, one containing the saintly life of Humillimus written by a contemporary, the other the unsaintly life of Lygdus written by himself. These two stories are made to fit into the story of the modern Romoletto.

"With untroubled skill and intuition, Mr. Hubbard seems to lay bare the Italian mind, so different from the Spanish, in early and modern periods. By the classical spirit, yet pervasive colour, of his style, he recalls Pater, but his irony and the humour and wise tenderness of the setting are his own. The flavour of this book may be more easily tested than described, and may well please the discerning palate."

+ Nation and Ath 37:654 Ag 29 '25 250w

"For an appreciation of its nuances and inner harmonies, more than a passing knowledge of the classics is advisable. It is difficult to classify literature of this order, which runs so close to the antiquarian, which so narrowly parallels scholarship."

N Y Times p10 D 27 '25 900w

N Y World p7m D 6 '25 40w

"Mr. Hubbard delicately savours the absurdities of human existence, whether ancient or modern; his temper is bland; his style is lucid and straightforward; his ironical touch is exquisite. The scheme of the book is simple and attractive." Gerald Bulet

+ Sat R 140:135 Ag 1 '25 1450w

"Into the two stories [Humillimus and Lygdus] Mr. Hubbard has woven a finely imaginative picture of life in Orvieto in the first and sixth centuries. It is questionable whether these will appeal so strongly to the average reader as the opening pages, in which the modern friar and doctor, the small boy and housekeeper, are described with such exquisite sympathy and humor. But the whole book is one of rare charm."

+ Spec 135:340 Ag 29 '25 220w

"He has it all so well that one thinks he might let himself go more freely than he does; but restraint can be more convincing in the end than a too easy familiarity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p507 J1 30 '25 850w

HUCKEL, OLIVER. Secret of the East; observations and interpretations. 368p il $3.50 Crowell

915 Religions. East (Far East)—Religion. East (Far East)—Description and travel 24-24711

The secret of the East, in the words of the author, is "its rich and opulent sense of God." Religion has been its deepest interest since the dawn of history and it is this all-pervading spirit of the East, as it is revealed in customs, literature and art, in temple worship and daily devotions, that he tries to interpret. The book is Christian, but sees good in the other religious leaders of the world and stands for church unity. Between the accounts of Confucianism, Buddhism, Hinduism, and Mohammedanism are travel sketches and pictures.

"Dr. Huckel's book shows a thorough knowledge of Eastern customs, indicates keenness of observation and an understanding of political and geographical aspects. Insofar as it deals with matters ecclesiastic, it fulfills all that the reader might be led to expect." R. D. G.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 25 '25 900w

"A flatulent, commonplace book which annoys one quite as much by its cheerful omniscience as by its abrupt, jerky style of this staccato tourist-author."

— Ind 114:246 F 28 '25 70w

"There are many who will disagree sharply with his program. But there is power in the book, it shows earnest scholarship and it is brightened by felicity of language." J: J. McLaughlin

+ — Lit R p12 Mr 14 '25 600w

Reviewed by Lawton Mackall

Lit R p6 Je 27 '25 280w

"They were very good lectures indeed for their purposes—vivid, generous in attitude, conveying as much instruction as the audience would be likely to absorb; but precisely because they were good lectures they are not really good literature. The writer may achieve the same popularity as the lecturer with far less necessity of superficiality."

+ — Outlook 139:425 Mr 18 '25 100w

R of Rs 71:336 Mr '25 60w

"It is more of a book of comparative religion than a book of travel in spite of the fact that it describes a tour of the world. It lacks striking qualities but is intelligent in plan, and on its popular level may be found informing."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 29 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p175 Mr 12 '25 70w

HUDDLESTON, SISLEY. France and the French. 348p $3 Scribner

914.4 France—Social conditions. France—Economic conditions. National characteristics, French

The Paris correspondent of the London Times draws his portrait of France and the French people today—social and intellectual life and political and economic conditions. The book is an appreciative study of a people whom, in spite of many minor changes in thought and circumstance, Mr Huddleston finds essentially unchanged by the war. He devotes particular attention to the Frenchwoman of today, the French press and the newer literature, political forces and the question of finance.

Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '25 950w

"Mr. Huddleston is never severe. His sunny temperament makes the best of France, and his eyes avert themselves from doubt of human fate. However, Mr. Huddleston is doubtless seeking to promote a more cordial feeling between his own country and France and naturally attenuates facts to this end. With his main thesis that the French people are outrageously misled and misrepresented by their government we are in hearty agreement." R. M. Lovett

+ — New Repub 45:193 Ja 6 '26 1150w

"There are no flashes in the book, neither of theories or epigrams; nothing but British thoroughness and British fairness. With so much to commend, it matters little that half a dozen or more trifling inaccuracies should have found their way into the mass of facts. The main lines are firmly drawn, and practically all the details are right." Albert Guerard

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ja 3 '26 600w

HUDBLESTON, SISLEY—Continued

"France and the French" is an uncommonly competent and lucid presentation of the interests, manners and sentiments of a nation. It is a product of genuine observation and understanding. Its scope is such that it affords a really comprehensive survey of contemporary France. In its comprehensiveness lie, to be sure, its only limitations, for it may fairly be objected that the chapters on literature, the theater and the arts are little more than catalogs."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 3 '26 1900w

"There are minor blemishes upon a most useful book. A far more serious one, which, in fact, robs it of a great part of the value for reference it would otherwise have had, is the lack of an index."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p819 D 3 '25 900w

HUDSON, MANLEY OTTMER. Permanent court of international justice and the question of American participation; with a collection of documents. 389p $4 Harvard univ. press [17s Milford]

341.1 Hague. Permanent court of international justice. United States—Foreign relations 25-2997

"Professor Hudson may be regarded as one of the leading protagonists if not the leading protagonist, among American lawyers of the Permanent Court at The Hague. He has been militantly active in its advocacy, and now in this volume he shows himself industriously effective as a chronicler. He has brought together the sundry articles he has contributed to the magazines and professional publications like the American Bar Association Journal and woven them in an excellent narrative of the foundation, establishment and operations of the Court and has contributed an interesting and on the whole a striking brief for American participation. The volume is both a history and an argument."—Lit R

"The primary appeal which this volume makes is that of timeliness, for nowhere else is there so well organized or so thorough a discussion of the problems which are involved in the proposed entrance of the United States into the World Court. As is to be expected, the work is to a certain extent polemic, particularly in the consideration of the function of the court in giving advisory opinions, but even where controversial the author is reasonable, and his intimate acquaintance with all of the activities of the court, as well as of the League of Nations, enables him to write with authority. The book is in no sense the aperçu of an amateur."

+ Am Hist R 30:863 J1 '25 350w

"This is an exceedingly useful and timely book. A thoroughly scholarly production with ample annotations and a bibliography." Quincy Wright

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:622 Ag '25 600w

"[These articles] are based on the observation and careful research of a high authority, and together they constitute by far the most valuable contribution that has been made." J. W. Garner

Ann Am Acad 120:165 J1 '25 250w

Booklist 21:290 My '25

"The mental effort necessary to reconstruct a plan for the book is more than even the intelligent reader will care to give. The appendices are complete and it would seem advisable to read them before reading the more technical discussions of the book that the various documents may be clearly in mind. Though it is far from the best that Professor Hudson could do, it is a very valuable addition to the knowledge of the workings and possibilities of the court." J. B. A.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 F 28 '25 950w

"It presents the completest account thus far given, and it may be taken as authoritative because not only is Professor Hudson now identified with the Secretariat of the League of Nations but he was a member of the Legal Section of the Secretariat while the Statute of the Court was in the process of drafting and later while the judges were being elected in 1921 and 1923. He has seen the working of the machinery as well, and being one of the most learned American students of international law, we have a combination of learning and observation at once unusual and helpful." C. R. Woodruff

+ Lit R p12 Mr 21 '25 780w

Reviewed by L. S. Gannett

Nation 121:144 J1 29 '25 600w

"The first part of the book describing the establishment and the work of the Court is informative and useful. . . My main criticism of the second part of Mr. Hudson's book [is that] he deals with the World Court in vacuo, not in relation to the other factors of current international affairs." Edwin Borchard

+ — New Repub 44:128 S 23 '25 1700w

Reviewed by J. P. Chamberlain

Pol Sci Q 40:613 D '25 420w

"The book, despite inevitable repetition and overlapping, will prove of interest to all students of the Court, and will be especially valuable to editors and speakers next winter when on December 17th the great Court debate begins in the United States Senate." Hamilton Holt

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:880 J1 4 '25 550w

"It is a welcome addition to the current literature on the world problems to have his most important contributions collected in a single volume."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 My 1 '25 550w

"Refreshing example of realistic rather than oratorical approach to what will increasingly be a matter of domestic concern—the position of the United States in international affairs. The lawyer will find Prof Hudson's book one to ponder."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 7 '26 550w

Reviewed by J. P. Chamberlain

Survey 54:455 J1 15 '25 700w

Wis Lib Bul 21:194 J1 '25

HUDSON, STEPHEN. Myrtle. 218p $2 Knopf [6s Constable]

By an interesting device of the novelist, Myrtle Vendramin, who is to become the wife of Richard Kurt, already known to the reader thru previous volumes in the Kurt family annals, is revealed thru the eyes of nine persons who loved her. The personality of this radiant woman is reflected from different angles in a series of impressions or episodes as set down by her devoted nurse, her governess, her sister Sylvia, and six of her lovers.

Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 320w

"Mr. Hudson's use of the monologue is admirable. He does not use it, as so many writers, Conrad among them, have done, to indulge a psychological garrulity which would be unpardonable if it were indulged in any other way, but rather to secure the utmost economy, by stripping away explanation, description, chronology, all the tedious trappings of the prose character of our time. Stripped of these, Mr. Hudson's characters stand before us with a complete internal realism; we know what they look like because we know what they are. They provide us themselves with the essential outlines of their characters, and our imagination fills in the rest." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 37:51 Ap 11 '25 350w

"Mr. Hudson's scheme promises well. It promises the maximum of intensity and variety with the maximum of economy, and its driving-power is obviously an æsthetic intelligence aware that there is only one way to victory—the breaking down of the most refractory material by the most fully conscious control. Nor can serious fault be found with the execution; hardly once is there any blurring of the line." J. Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:719 Mr 28 '25 1000w

"Mr. Hudson's latest novel is far too good ever to have been handicapped by such an anaemic title as 'Myrtle.' It suffers still further under handicap that it is, in form at least, a stunt novel. But its success should be assured and increasing."

+ — N Y Times p16 My 3 '25 580w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

N Y Tribune p11 My 24 '25 380w

"Stephen Hudson's 'Myrtle' is one of the most exquisite novels issued by an American publisher in 1925." H. S.

+ N Y World p3m Ag 23 '25 400w

"The technical structure of 'Myrtle' is interesting. But a book must stand on its own isolated merit, and of this one I can make very little." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 139:363 Ap 4 '25 90w

"He has not given us 'a slice of life,' a raw representation of events, but a complete and beautifully articulated world: not a segment merely of the greater world of experience it portrays, but that world itself, clarified, simplified, and divested of its inessentialities. Mr. Hudson's work is impressive because he sets down nothing but what is to him permanently true. To do that is to belong to literature." Edwin Muir

+ Sat R of Lit 1:661 Ap 11 '25 1000w

"Myrtle will undoubtedly add to his fame. There is an Edwardian mannerliness and sweetness in it that gives a sober attractiveness to the writing."

+ Spec 134:510 Mr 28 '25 340w

"Mr. Hudson stages it all lightly and naturally, yet he leaves us faintly disappointed. Our various informants have shown Myrtle in attractive outline, but still so much in outline that her individuality verges on type."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p220 Mr 26 '25 500w

HUGHES, ADELAIDE MANOLA (MOULD)
(MRS RUPERT HUGHES) (ADELAIDE MANOLA, pseud.). 'Poems; with a memorial by Rupert Hughes. 185p $2 Harper

811

24-24257

"The Poems of Adelaide Manola' are a record of a woman's emotional life rather than a collection of significant poetry. That the book serves as a memorial rather than as an introduction to a new and timid poet is attested by the foreword by Rupert Hughes to the poet, his dead wife. Almost invariably free from rhythmic rules, the lines express sincere and feminine emotion, despair, disillusion and the yearning for complete relinquishment of self." —Springf'd Republican

"Adelaide Manola's free verse is evidently her native medium, and she uses it with such skill, so naturally, so elastically, that, as we read her, she seems hardly to be writing at all. We seem instead to be sitting at a play, a play in which we not only watch the characters working out their drama but can see what is going on in their hearts and minds as well." R. Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p5 Ja 18 '25 1050w

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 28 '25 100w

HUGHES, HATCHER. Ruin. (Harper's modern plays) 214p $1.50 Harper

812

25-9425

"A folk comedy in four acts, the scene of which, like Hell-bent fer heaven, is laid in the Carolina Mountains. The plot is concerned with the troubles of a young college man who comes down from the North to do mission work among the natives and in the general exuberance of springtime kisses Mary Jane Horton without serious intentions." —Cleveland

Cleveland p88 S '25

"Little more than a rather skillfully done skit. Its dramatic content is slight, and while its characters are drawn carefully and credibly and their dialect is impeccable, it is built upon so slight a plot that it slumps badly toward the end, and one is left with a definite feeling of dissatisfaction." H. B.

+ — Lit R p9 My 9 '25 300w

"With all due respect to Mr. Hughes, I don't believe it can be represented as farcical without violating a certain integrity of atmosphere which rightfully belongs to any play about these people. 'Ruin' seems to me false by being farcical—and not really funny enough, either, to make you forget that fact." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p16 Je 14 '25 450w
St Louis p351 S '25

HUGHES, RUPERT. Destiny. 385p $2 Harper
25-9752

"In 'Destiny' Rupert Hughes stirs up an American revolt of the angels. He opens the scene in heaven where angels scorn men for their human crimes. Two angels are commissioned by the great Overseer to take human form and see if they can retain their angelic natures. One becomes a young, spoiled girl, the other a feudal mountaineer. Mr. Hughes piles up multitudinous pages of adventure, science and sociology to demonstrate that the human being must complete the destiny allotted him by the forces of circumstance, heredity and environment." —N Y World

"In 'Destiny' he has minutely described the luxury surrounding his heroine, and the sensuous details of her physical appearance. The sex adventures are contributed by most of the characters and a few of their forbears. In addition to these usual effects, Mr. Hughes has borrowed from the classics the modus operandi of clothing minor gods in human form, an anachronism by which the story in nowise gains." S. L. R.

— Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 500w

"Melodramatic and very tiresome novel."

Int Bk R p550 J1 '25 400w

"The reason the author of 'Destiny' misses his goal—which was evidently to contrast the spirit with the matter to the advantage of the latter—is he can not bit and curb his imagination. He lets it run away with his plot with such speed and such flights in the realm of phantasy that the reader pauses for breath, and in the pause loses track of the action." Joseph Collins

— Lit R p3 J1 3 '25 1200w

N Y Times p17 My 24 '25 800w

"On the whole I should say that 'Destiny' is the best novel Rupert Hughes has yet achieved." G. W. Wynne

+ N Y Tribune p13 Je 21 '25 580w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 160w

Sat R of Lit 1:920 J1 18 '25 320w

"It is difficult to understand why the angels were brought in. The story would have been as good without the invasion of heaven, and certainly more probable. Neither the plot nor the narrative is convincing, but there are vivid and dramatic incidents in the mountaineer's native haunts. The story adds nothing to Mr Hughes's literary laurels."

— + Springf'd Republican p7a J1 26 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p585 S 10 '25 180w

HULL, MRS EDITH MAUDE. Sons of the sheik. 360p $2 Small

25-14510

"Fortunately for the reading public which likes 'desert stuff,' the Sheik is not lost to us. His tale is carried on into the next generation, when more stern sons of the desert come in contact with more frail, timid damsels. After sin and repentance on the part of the former, and suffering and forgiveness on the part of the latter, and much love and passion on the part of all, they are united and will doubtless live happily."—Ind

HULL, EDITH MAUDE—Continued

"The Sons of the Sheikh" is at best a pale sequel to a sensational story."

— Boston Transcript p4 Je 27 '25 300w
Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 100w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 130w

"Mrs. Hull has written the book with a great deal of skill; she has a fine knack of setting a scene, and seems to have a firmer grasp on her locale than she had in 'The Sheikh.' It's a novel that every one must read, whether as a well-told romance or, cum grano salis, for the sheer enjoyment of it. To me it was the most interesting story since 'Revolt of the Angels,' though not for the same reason. And how it will screen!" A. E. Werner

+ Lit R p7 Je 27 '25 500w

N Y Times p8 Je 21 '25 1050w

"She tells a good story, she entertains unfailingly, she produces thrills and often writes with a measure of grace. Almost always she achieves intelligibility, and sometimes attains to eloquence. As for her faults, they are no laughing matter, either. The joke has gone far enough. It does seem that if Mrs. Hull's emotional extravagance, the generally hypertrophic character of her universe, could be moderated a bit she might be a really good writer." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p11 Je 21 '25 1550w

N Y World p4m Je 28 '25 250w

Sat R of Lit 1:920 J1 18 '25 260w

HULL, HARRY BLAIR. Household refrigeration; a complete treatise on the principles, types, construction and operation of both ice and mechanically cooled domestic refrigerators, and the use of ice and refrigeration in the home. 328p $3.50 Nickerson & Collins co.

621.56 Refrigeration and refrigerating machinery 25-4748

"Should be useful to designers and manufacturers as well as to householders and those concerned with operation and installation."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:417 J1 '25

Pratt Technical Books p7 '24

HULL, HELEN R. Surry family. 333p $2 Macmillan

25-22756

While the children were very young, the Surry family moved from town to farm, in a small Middle Western community. The children, Paul and Marjy grew up in an atmosphere of constant bickering between their hard-working mother and their indolent, vaguely optimistic father. Paul escaped first, going to a nearby denominational college. His freshman year was hardly over before he was captured and married by a pretty, sensuous, whining woman tired of working for a living. The marriage was naturally not a happy one; Paul's ambition, his idealism was crushed by it. Marjy followed her brother to college, where she had her own difficulties, not however so tragic as his. When the story leaves them, Paul has accepted his lot and is trying to make the best of it, while for Marjy the future holds promise of quiet happiness.

"She apparently is lacking in all feeling for the dramatic and desires to give her readers a faithful representation of life. She wears blinders; she travels along the road seeing only the dreary and well meaning, only the exhausted and struggling. She believes in her people; that is why the story is pathetic." D. F. G.

— Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '25 580w

"The novel is sincere and honest, but the level of action is too same; there are no moments of relief; the clouds never shift. It does not, somehow, attain reality." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p9 D 12 '25 350w

"The Surry Family is freer in form and surer in handling than either of its predecessors, Quest or Labyrinth. Here the experience of life is shared by the family group and quite impartially exposed. The Surrys are all well drawn, but they are more interesting in their association. In their common environment and mingling of hereditary strains, than as individuals."

New Repub 45:143 D 23 '25 180w

"A commendable and vivid study of family fortunes." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 100w

"Readers, of course, will hardly expect the doings of this commonplace clan to bristle with excitement. They will not look in the conversation of such folk for sparkling epigrams. It is, after all, but a plain tale from the plains. But for all that it runs its course interestingly enough and boasts a definite sociological value for its detailed and accurate limning of the American provincial scene."

+ N Y Times p16 D 27 '25 680w

"It is always a pleasure to come upon a novel by an author who has shown promise, and find that progress has been made toward a finer technique and a larger sense of life. Happily, this is true of the latest novel by Helen Hull, who, using a narrower canvas than she did in 'Labyrinth,' because she has refrained from bending her characters to a theme, has given them a deeper intensity. It is a finely wrought study, rounded, true. Above all, it is sincere."

+ N Y Tribune p14 Ja 10 '26 800w

"A greater novelist, with more penetrating strokes, might in fewer words have told us more. But in terms of its own sober construction, 'The Surry Family' is put together with a good deal of skill, even of compactness. Its realism, apparently so typical, seems on second thought rather exceptional. No one else in just this way could have pictured family life on a Michigan farm with the same immediacy and point."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:453 D 26 '25 380w

HULL, JAMES HOWARD. Trail and pack-horse. 228p $1.75 Doubleday

25-8910

With a confidence born of inexperience Tom Welman begins his service as a substitute forest ranger. He must make good in the two months trial ahead of him before he can hope for a permanent appointment. At first he makes every mistake of the tenderfoot, but he never makes the same mistake twice. The old-timers, Goodwin and Clark, stand by to help Tom out of his many difficulties and when the two months are up the apprentice ranger wins from one of them the gratifying tribute, "He's the fire-fightiest, shootiest man I ever seen!"

"Here is a story of outdoor life, with many thrills and much information about forests. Mr. Hull was himself a ranger, and he therefore knows of the dangers of the forest and how it feels to hear the howling of the coyotes and other animals at night."

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 1 '25 100w

Cleveland p102 N '25

"An excellent story for boys. I like its freedom from forced conversations." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p558 J1 '25 150w

"It is clean, wholesome and particularly informing regarding the life of the fire scouts of America."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 17 '25 50w

HULLINGER, EDWIN WARE. Reforging of Russia. 402p $3 Dutton

914.7 Russia—Social conditions. Russia—Politics and government 25-2259

The aim of this book by an American press correspondent is to give a human picture of Russia since the inauguration of the new economic policy in 1921 which ushered in a new phase of the Russian revolutionary movement. He shows the slow rising of a new order and the struggle of a great people to get back upon their feet. The forces upon which the present government rests, the operation of the Tcheka, or espionage system, and of the Red army are described, also home and intellectual life in Moscow, marriage, divorce and morals. His study of Russia's conditions has not weakened his faith in the character and capacity of the Russian people and in their future.

"This is an excellent description of Russian life as seen by an American journalist in 1921. It is a first-class piece of reporting, containing much source material for sociology and social psychology." Dwight Sanderson

+ Am J Soc 31:400 N '25 180w

Am Pol Sci R 19:423 My '25 30w

"The style of the newspaper man with his objectivity and energy results in a book that can scarcely be called scientific, and makes the reader doubt sometimes the validity of some generalizations, but with regard to Russia everyone's generalizations are questioned." H. A. Miller

— Ann Am Acad 119:151 My '25 250w

Booklist 21:297 My '25

Bookm 61:234 Ap '25 150w

Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '25 800w

Cleveland p40 Ap '25

"Mr. Hullinger is primarily a newspaper man. His senses are keen, alert and active. He has a myriad of valuable facts at his finger tips and he knows how to tell an anecdote pertly and interestingly. He has a clear head and a calm pen and knows well that there are two sides to every question." M. L.

+ Lit R p9 Je 27 '25 200w

"Mr. Hullinger has had adventures in Russia. He is a journalist, and has made the most of his opportunities. His passage of arms with the Cheka is an excellent illustration of its methods." Kingsley Martin

+ Nation and Ath 38:408 D 12 '25 80w

"The present collection is decidedly above the average. The book is interesting; there are flashes which light up Allied policy, too." Jerome Davis

+ New Repub 43:213 J1 15 '25 220w

"Mr. Hullinger's book merits the closest attention. Reading it, nobody can doubt that it was written with an open mind. . . . More than any volume now available on this subject, 'The Reforging of Russia' answers the question: 'What about the Russian people themselves?' As one sees them here they are beginning to smile again, to find an incentive for life, to hope that their years of unbottomed misery may not have been wholly in vain." J. D. Adams

N Y Times p10 F 1 '25 2050w

"This is the kind of book on Russia one welcomes. It might well be placed on the shelves as a supplement to the three volumes in which Professor Ross outlined the story of the revolution from its inception down to the end of 1922. Being written by a journalist, it has the warmth of intimate contact and personal emotion which is suppressed in the professorial attempt to gain a detached viewpoint. It is therefore infinitely more readable and will have a far wider appeal." H: K. Norton

+ N Y Tribune p14 Ap 19 '25 750w

"He has written an authentic, realistic book, unmarred by too persistent an expression of personal opinions. One unacquainted with New Russia will be able to form a clear conception of it from 'The Reforging of Russia.'" F. V. Roman

+ N Y World p5m F 1 '25 170w

"The chief value of Mr. Hullinger's book lies in the explicit information that it gives concerning the life of the people under Bolshevik rule."

R of Rs 71:333 Mr '25 80w

Sat R 140:632 N 28 '25 180w

"Among many books written by the foreigners about Soviet Russia the book of E. W. Hullinger is one of the few free from the nonsense and great mistakes usual in such books. In twenty-six chapters the author gives a vivid and—in general—an accurate characterization of the political, moral, economic, social, and spiritual life of Russia in 1921-1923. Notwithstanding misstatements almost inevitable in this kind of book, the volume is valuable, sincere, and reliable." Pitirim Sorokin

+ Sat R of Lit 1:915 J1 18 '25 550w

"His book is a book of reference and an admirable one—concise, comprehensive and clearly expressed—written with knowledge and without bias."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p648 O 8 '25 620w

HULME, EDWARD MASLIN. History of the British people. 717p $4 Century [18s Allen & U.]

942 Great Britain—History. Great Britain—Economic conditions 24-12847

"Professor Hulme has written a history of the British people from a particular point of view. He is, so the preface says, a social idealist. This term, it would seem, describes one who is half poet and literary critic, a bit of a philosopher, a sympathetic spectator of the industrial poor—and on all three counts is fervidly and abstractly preoccupied with the idea of the state. With the usual history of the British Isles his work combines a manual of authors, and an occasional excursion among speculative thinkers, enough to make up an outline of philosophy. At first glance the unity of a history might appear to be lost by this method; but Professor Hulme is able to treat both literature and philosophy as a criticism of politics and to draw from each its political implications. The trend of politics and the changing idea of the state he thus shows through the minds of authors and speculative thinkers as well as of statesmen."—Am Hist R

"The effect is, or should be, to broaden the political horizon of the student—for the book is written down to the comprehension of a junior college class. The apparent gain is reached, it is to be feared, at the expense of confusion and blurring of perspectives. Careful revision would make the book more suitable as a students' history." C. E. Fryer

— Am Hist R 30:339 Ja '25 600w

"Mr. Hulme's method of historical analysis is admirable. One cannot too earnestly express appreciation of this gratefully clear method."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '24 680w

"Professor Hulme's scholarship is not always flawless and his attitude towards controverted questions is often more dogmatic than the facts warrant. And sometimes, when he has his facts straight, he succeeds in producing a distorted effect by his choice and arrangement of them. This is notably true of his treatment of the English Reformation. Nevertheless, Professor Hulme has produced a remarkably interesting book. Its easy, pleasant style ought to commend it heartily to the larger reading world outside the classroom." Conyers Read

+ — Hist Outlook 16:178 Ap '25 350w

Springf'd Republican p12 Ag 15 '24 620w

"We cannot recommend the book as the most comprehensive or illuminating work on its subject; but there are few who will not find a curious piquancy in this American observer's comments. The author speaks not as one having authority, but as a learner rehearsing a well-learned lesson and passing on well-authenticated facts. Grace of style is not attempted, but the presentation is systematic."

HULME, E. M.—Continued

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p164 Mr 12 '25 1150w

HUME, CYRIL. Cruel fellowship. 306p $2.50 Doran

25-10305

Claude Fisher whose character is searchingly studied in this story is seen thru the eyes of a brilliant man of the world who tells his story to a young author as material for a novel. Fisher's portrait as drawn by this somewhat cynical but not unfriendly observer is that of a human being helpless in the grip of circumstance. Unfortunate in his birth and upbringing, lonely and unpopular, he never has a normal life. The only life he has he finds in his books. His love of books leads him to a position in a bookshop that runs an upstairs department of "rare editions," in reality a collection of pornographic literature which suits Fisher's taste for the erotic. He is unfortunate in all his relations. His one friendship proves a cheap joke, his first love no better. His best friend, a dog, is killed by a truck. Tho much of his suffering seems both needless and useless, it is none the less real.

"In his second novel Cyril Hume has written a far better book than his 'Wife of the Centaur.' 'Cruel Fellowship' was a difficult book for anyone to write; particularly, perhaps, for a young man. Yet he has taken the story of Claude Fisher and made it dramatic, moving, and profound." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:585 J1 '25 250w

"The novel is not a pleasant one, but despite some obvious faults, it is keen in its analysis of a man who never amounted to anything. It is a novel to be read by all who are not afraid of themselves, or of their dreams. Mr. Hume has put on paper a character as human as Babbalanza, as unforgettable, yes, as Jude the Obscure. One may claim that it is wrapped in the tissue paper of clever superficiality. Perhaps it is. But inside the wrapping is something of real worth." K. Schriftgiesser

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 950w

"One cannot express any other sentiment than regret that a gifted Catholic writer like Mr. Hume should have devoted his literary powers to the description of a diseased and sexually morbid character like that of the 'hero' of Cruel Fellowship." G. D. M.

— Cath World 121:560 J1 '25 660w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"In 'Cruel Fellowship' Mr. Hume demonstrates that he is not yet sufficiently grown up to be immune to the prevailing virus of our day. His second novel is filled with sordid details and sordid people. It would be well told, perhaps, if it were worth the telling."

— Ind 114:675 Je 13 '25 150w

Int Bk R p618 Ag '25 450w

"A shoddy, morbid hero, his vices as unattractive as his virtues, and his end no satisfaction to the reader, Fisher lives. Mr. Hume gives us one arresting figure whole; not in a very pleasant story, but in a story, praise be! A keen and vibrant story. For this, weary of sociologists and psychologists, masquerading as novelists, sugar-coating theories, we are grateful. He whips us into a fever of interest, and when we are interested we have a notion that we, at least, live." Walter Yust

+ — Lit R p3 Je 6 '25 850w

"He has chosen a sentimental, commonplace theme, and decked it out in tastelessly florid language. 'Cruel Fellowship,' in its substance, and in Mr. Hume's instructive interpolations, indicates his intention of constituting himself the Bertha M. Clay of his generation, without Mrs. Clay's honest conviction."

— N Y Times p8 My 31 '25 820w

"There will be many who will utter that old complaint against the author's choice of subject. But that is Mr. Hume's business; he wanted to dissect a certain specimen of American manhood and if there clings to his novel a slight odor of the sewer it will at least suffice to warn 'nice folk' away. For those who have less discrimination and more curiosity the sunshine and wind of a spring day can be recommended as a perfect disinfectant. 'Cruel Fellowship' is heartily recommended to fully grown and sophisticated adults who are not particularly interested in retaining unsmirched by few illusions that may cling to them." Harrison Smith

N Y Tribune p4 My 31 '25 550w

"The same extravagant, ecstatic style that distinguished 'The Wife of the Centaur,' Mr. Hume's first novel, marks his second—the same wanton shoveling of words onto paper in clouds of metaphors and breathless rhetoric. There is no suggestion of fingers on the reins. And consequently there is nothing in reserve to invest in the crises. The story runs on a level—a high, delirious level, it is true—but a level no less, with never a change of pace." Morris Markey

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 250w

Outlook 140:340 J1 1 '25 220w

"The novel reeks of sex. It is the emotional Odyssey of a mediocre and unattractive character, written with so much attention to one aspect of life that, duly condensed, it might serve as a histoire sexuelle for the appendix to Havelock Ellis or Kraft-Ebbing." G. D. Meadows

— Sat R of Lit 1:819 Je 13 '25 680w

"The province of exploring such experiences lies rather in the careful study of psychology, where characters such as Claude are seen in their true light, rather than in the realm of fiction." D. G.

— Springf'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 300w

HUME, FERGUS. Blue talisman. 320p $2 Clode

25-4855

"A novel telling of a blue heart-shaped stone of magic qualities that found its way from the Congo to a back street in London. Known by the expressive title of 'It,' this talisman was held in great veneration by certain African tribes, who were not at all averse to giving it the bath of human blood required to set its powers to work. The stone was also desired by a villainous white man for the power it would give him in the Africa hinterland. In the struggle for possession of the stone a murder and various wild adventures take place."—Boston Transcript

"This is a lengthy and quite improbable yarn."

— Boston Transcript p4 Ap 15 '25 140w

Reviewed by L. Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 30w

"The Blue Talisman' makes good reading with its blending of London and the jungle, its black dwarfs, princes and boarding-house keepers." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p5 Ag 8 '25 100w

N Y Tribune p13 My 22 '25 150w

N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 60w

HUMMEL, GEORGE F. A good man. 317p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-11483

Theodore's three children were very proud of their father, very much in love with him. His wife, his friends, the many women who came and went with frequency in his life, all shared that same attitude of love and pride. "He is a good man," they said, and meant it. Some of the time Ted Goodrich accepted their opinion of himself and expanded in the glow of it. Some of the time he knew himself for what he was, a liar and a hypocrite, a shabby cheat. "I'm a dog," he cried bitterly, to himself, and meant it. There is a tense scene in Ted's office when Alice, his wife, on the brink of a complete revelation of her husband's character, shrinks back from the evidence. She is torn by her suspicions, yet dreads to know the truth that would wreck their life together. This is a consistent picture of a susceptible, likable Babbitt of the suburbs.

"The main fault in this book lies in the title: rather than 'A Good Man,' it should be called 'A Successful Man.' . . . There is good satire here and a deal of truth. Mr. Hummel has vividly portrayed the type frequently met with in private life and not infrequently encountered in the newsprint. The tale is racily told, and contains sufficient spice to satisfy the average modernist."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 1 '25 550w

"It might have been completely covered as a theme in a 5,000-word short story—to advantage." H: Walker

— Int Bk R p680 S '25 720w

"Barring a slip here and there, Mr. Hummel writes as behooves his theme, with a briskness of expression and movement that accords with the speed set by his principal character. His style may be a thousand miles removed from all classic ideals, but it is wonderfully effective." Edwin Bjorkman

+ — Lit R p2 J1 25 '25 520w

"What the novelist himself calls the 'level of light banter' is consistently and entertainingly maintained in this novel. Mr. Hummel is a swift, if somewhat superficial, observer; he is a smooth as well as a shrewd narrator. His study of the suburban Don Juan is an engaging piece of fiction."

+ Nation 121:337 S 23 '25 60w

"Mr. Goodrich is not a new character nor is his drama unusual, but he is singularly complete according to specifications—perhaps too complete for reality, and without the light touch which carries Babbitt into the realm of comedy." R. M. Lovett

+ — New Repub 43:212 J1 15 '25 220w

"The chief character, the situations and judicious use of homely, trite sayings and epithets give to Mr. Hummel's robust novel, 'A Good Man,' a quality that is very close to making his book a folk tale of the great American middle class."

+ N Y Times p8 Je 28 '25 1200w

"Mr. Hummel has succeeded in creating a character that it is not easy to forget. But beyond that one feels that he was intent on exposing a phase of American business and of ridiculing suburban and domestic life. He should have been satisfied with capturing Theodore, his absurd behavior, and his nonsensical business, and have left the moral aspects involved to those self-appointed guardians of our purity, whom a merciful Providence has created so illiterate that they cannot even write a novel." Harrison Smith

— + N Y Tribune p3 J1 12 '25 900w

"The characters have a good deal of vitality, and there is some fairly amusing depiction of big business, in a manner now much in vogue; but one must take a good deal of fatigue with one's amusement. Shallowness and vulgarity may be the theme of a great satirical novel, but 'A Good Man' falls a good deal short of being that."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:72 Ag 22 '25 160w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 160w

HUNGERFORD, EDWARD. Copy shop. 342p $2 Putnam

25-5772

"The hero of 'The Copy Shop' is a callow youngster named Wendell P. Groome of Uxdale, N.Y., whose only qualifications for his chosen profession are an invincible stubbornness and a trick of romanticizing himself. They enable him to get his job on The Tremont Republic, to jump from there to The New York Planet

(a thin disguise of The Sun of twenty years ago), to save himself from being fired by a new city editor, and finally to get the job of his life as editor-in-chief of The Republic."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '25 250w

Reviewed by A. C. Bierce

Lit R p9 Mr 28 '25 340w

"The Copy Shop" is not an especially successful treatment of the possibilities of the subject. The writer has not written what might have been a comedy of former newspaper manners, neither has he conveyed the glamour of journalism."

— N Y Times p9 Mr 22 '25 720w

"If 'The Copy Shop' does not reach the more rarified literary heights, it nevertheless contains a viable plot and much newspaper 'local color' of a veristic nature."

+ — N Y Tribune p11 Mr 15 '25 210w

Outlook 139:620 Ap 22 '25 80w

"Mr. Hungerford has known at what points to lay aside the sentimental livery decreed by custom as proper to the treatment of newspaper men, artists, and such-like Bohemians. But he has preserved the air of fascination that clung to newspaper life in its fine days. He has pictured one newspaper office, the old Sun shop, from the inside, and told much of the life of the news-getters of twenty years or more ago as it really was."

Sat R of Lit 1:635 Mr 28 '25 330w

"Enough like and enough unlike the usual story with a newspaper hero to please those who like the usual thing and those who like it varied somewhat."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 520w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p481 J1 16 '25 180w

HUNGERFORD, EDWARD. Story of the Waldorf-Astoria. 283p il $3.75 Putnam

917.471 Waldorf-Astoria hotel. New York (city)—Hotels, taverns, etc. 25-13987

Mr Hungerford tells the glittering story of the famous New York hotel, of the men chiefly identified with it—George C. Boldt who planned and long managed it and Oscar, maitre d'hotel—its famous guests and parties, and the features which have helped to make its success.

Booklist 22:113 D '25

"Mr. Hungerford tells its story in an intimate appreciative style, interlocked with frequent accounts of entertaining incidents which go to make up its tradition, which because they are told with an enthusiastic appreciation lift the book out of the semi-formal historical class."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 15 '25 220w

"It is sincere, it is genuine, but it seems somehow out of proportion."

+ — Ind 115:163 Ag 8 '25 100w

"The outstanding figure is Boldt. His personality survives in the hotel of today, despite his nine-year absence. Few hotels can boast as vital a figure and fewer still as fine a story as Mr. Hungerford has transcribed." R. M. Crouse

+ Lit R p6 S 19 '25 230w

"The trouble with Mr. Hungerford's narrative is that as he writes he stands a bit too close to the personalities of his history. He cannot curb his admiration for the genius and the 'great heart' of Boldt or restrain his lyric enthusiasm for all the marvels of the Waldorf equipment and management under Boldt and his successors since his death in 1916." H. I. Brock

N Y Times p5 J1 26 '25 2600w

"It is an entertaining book." Edmund Pearson

+ Outlook 141:26 S 2 '25 150w

HUNGERFORD, EDWARD—Continued

"Mr. Hungerford seems to have been too near his subject, for his enthusiasm spills over continually, and he gets lost in his admiration for the various people who have made the Waldorf-Astoria what it is today. One suspects a publicity aim in his narrative. The value which the work might have possessed as an economic and social study is missing."

—Spring'd Republican p14 S 25 '25 700w

"The fresh sense of values upon which his book is based is at least interesting, and perhaps important, and some of the chapters, such as that describing the once famous Bradley-Martin ball, throw a valuable light upon social changes in New York."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p677 O 15 '25 200w

HUNT, EDWARD EYRE. Conferences, committees, conventions, and how to run them. 218p il $2.50 Harper

360 Congresses and conventions 25-15897

"This book might be entitled 'What Every Secretary Ought to Know' because it covers a lot of the common sense phases of running conventions that are too often neglected by secretaries who are responsible for them. He emphasizes the necessity of outlining the problem, planning, organizing and directing the meeting, recording its transactions and measuring its results. Budgeting the expense and keeping within the budget, handling the publicity and other practical phases of the problem receive due attention. In a series of appendices the author gives practical examples of subjects discussed in the text."—Chem & Met Eng

Booklist 22:102 D '25

"If anyone is inclined to criticize the book on the score that it deals with self-evident matters, the reply can be pertinently made that those are the things most often neglected by people who are charged with conduct of conventions. The author covers the tactics and strategy of conferences remarkably well, drawing on an extensive experience in the government service."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:815 O '25 280w

"Business men accustomed to having their own way may feel that a manual of procedure is unnecessary for them, but if they ever attended a conference which was badly organized and did not have the benefits of a dictator, they would do well to read Mr. Hunt's book. In fact, it would be to the advantage of anyone planning a conference, even with a small number, to absorb the extremely useful knowledge which Mr. Hunt has so ably compiled."

+ Ind 115:424 O 10 '25 160w

"If the millions of Americans who daily clutter up tables and chairs in committees, conferences and conventions can only be induced to take to heart the message of this book, we shall be moving toward the ideal of 'fewer and better meetings.' While the emphasis of the book is on the organization and conduct of larger meetings, its suggestions will be of value even to the smallest." R: J. Walsh

+ N Y Tribune p10 O 11 '25 750w

"Those who have yawned their way through conferences will welcome this book, for if the suggestions made by Mr. Hunt are followed by conference secretaries, speakers and conference members themselves, there will be fewer tiresome meetings and less waste of valuable time." J: D. Kenderdine

+ Survey 55:254 N 15 '25 450w

HUNT, EDWARD EYRE, ed. Scientific management since Taylor. 263p $3 McGraw 658.5 Scientific management 24-29759

"For the purpose of presenting to the reader a comprehensive survey of the more recent aspects of scientific management, the author has gathered a collection of authoritative papers written by some of the most prominent men in the field. His particular aim has been to emphasize the importance of human relations and to show how and where the beginnings have been made in organizing these relations on fundamental lines. The advances in the management movement which have been made since the death of its founder, Frederick W. Taylor, are clearly evident from a study of the papers presented. The book contains 19 articles arranged in 4 parts under the following subjects: Nature and Achievements of Scientific Management; Scientific Management in General Management; Stabilizing Operations and Employment; Ownership; Management, and Workers."—Harvard Business R

Am Econ R 15:516 S '25 80w

"While practically all of the articles presented have been published previously, the manner in which they are grouped under the above headings gives them a new interest and meaning."

+ Harvard Business R 3:510 J1 '25 200w

"Important collection of authoritative articles on scientific management takes its place beside C. Bertram Thompson's earlier collection. Mr. Hunt is to be congratulated for bringing together articles which make a comprehensive and authoritative presentation of scientific management's logical and inevitable development and his book should be on the desk of every executive." P. S. Brown

+ Taylor Soc Bul 10:25 F '25 600w

HUNT, EDWARD EYRE; TRYON, FREDERICK GALE; and WILLITS, JOSEPH HENRY, eds. What the Coal commission found; an authoritative summary by the staff; with a foreword by John Hays Hammond. (Human relations ser.) 416 il $5 Williams & Wilkins

338.2 Coal industry 25-14952

"An effort on the part of three men who worked with the Commission to give its findings publicity." (Survey) "The point of view is very evidently that the government should exercise control over this type of private business. Divided into 4 sections, the first dealing with the coal problem as a whole; the second devoted to bituminous mining; the third to anthracite mining; and the fourth to the recommendations of the Commission." (Management and Adm)

"Gives in easily readable form much of the fact matter, conclusions and recommendations of the last U. S. Coal Commission."

+ Management and Adm 10:291 N '25 100w

"An admirable summary. It ought to be widely consulted every time coal is under discussion; in fact it will have to be consulted by those interested in the Commission's work, because for some unfathomable reason the original reports have never been published by the government and are not available even to members of Congress except in scarce mimeographed copies." G: Soule

+ New Repub 45:68 D 2 '25 100w

"Mr. Hunt and his colleagues have attempted to distill the essence of the coal industry and its problems out of thousands upon thousands of mimeographed pages of the Coal Commission's official reports to Congress. That this essence should turn out to be too heavy for the easy assimilation of minds unused to statistical fare is unfortunate; but the result is of the greatest value none the less." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 30 '25 1700w
St Louis p403 N '25

"The most useful of this year's books for the reader who wants a general and authoritative view of the coal industry is What The Coal Commission Found." R. W. Bruere

+ Survey 54:609 S 15 '25 80w

HUNT, FRAZIER. Sycamore Bend, population 1300. 293p $2 Harcourt

25-17418

"Mr. Hunt has wilfully reversed the usual formula, and evidently his main object is to lift from the small town the curse laid upon it by so many of its former children, now happily exiled. Will Hadley, owner of a weekly—the only weekly of course—in a town of 1300 souls, finds himself at thirty-nine almost past saving from the second-rate unsuccessful pettiness in which he has always lived. He falls in love with a young woman more charming than his own wife, but the usual thing does not occur, and, swallowing his romance he up-stakes, sells out, and moves to New York. Disillusionment, and so back, after two miserable years, to Sycamore Bend, where the people are after all honest, kindly, genuine."—New Repub

"The real hero of the thing, the real center of interest, is not the man but the country newspaper itself. Mr. Hunt manages to make that a curiously living entity in well-nigh unique fashion. As a novelist Mr. Hunt has much to learn—construction and the blending of numerous parts into an harmonious whole: but he has one qualification that many spectacular practitioners lack in that he understands 'human critters' and is capable of pity as well as amusement at their antics." H: Walker
+ — Int Bk R p829 N '25 700w

"The panorama of Sycamore Bend is photographically reproduced and heavily retouched. The harsh lines of small-town intolerance, backbiting, ignorance, hypocrisy and smugness are all smoothed away. The conversations and social doings, difficult as a stranger might find it to credit them, are undeniably true to the last wearisome detail. And the inhabitants of the town are all technically lifelike. We know they are just like that. Yet the characters never seem vivid or themselves: they are ghosts of people only half alive." Eva Goldbeck
+ — Lit R p2 N 14 '25 360w

"Mr. Hunt has something he is burning to say: that the small town is after all full of all kinds of people, all different, worth knowing, worth telling about. Unfortunately his zeal outruns his pen, and his people, buried under their creator's too manifest good-will, are the kind one would be glad to say 'hello' to, but otherwise not particularly alive or interesting." Moses Harper

— New Repub 44:105 S 16 '25 250w

"Mr. Hunt brings a not unkindly humor to the characterizations of this small town's 'Who's Who.'"

+ N Y Times p8 S 6 '25 720w

"This first novel gives little attention to plot; it is a study of small-town life and the tedious and uninteresting events that go to make up the routine of the years—not a very alluring picture, to be sure, but one that is handled with infinite sympathy and a sure touch." C: M. Purdy

+ N Y Tribune p13 O 11 '25 480w

"The atmosphere and depiction are true, but the story lingers too long in the telling."

+ — Outlook 141:289 O 21 '25 60w

"The story is written with full justice to its theme and materials, which, being what they are, may inflict boredom upon readers who have had enough of Main Streets."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:163 S 26 '25 180w

Spring'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 460w
Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

HUNTER, ALLAN A. Youth's adventure; foreword by Harry Emerson Fosdick. 154p $1.25 Appleton

170 Youth. Social problems 25-21080

Speaking for the younger generation Mr Hunter tells with simplicity and candor what the things are against which they most revolt. He explains the ideals of the youth movement, that vague term for the "yeast stirring all over the world," its impatience with conventionality and dogma, its hatred of war, its quest for a more vital religion.

"A very earnest, sincere and finely visioned little book. It is, indeed, a beautiful little book, beautiful with the glamour of unselfish youth's visions, hopes, faiths and trusts. But one could wish that he had a more seeing eye for the results that have been achieved by even that muddling parent generation that made such a mess of things generally. However, he does not misunderstand and misrepresent any more than is the custom, and the privilege, of youth."

+ N Y Times p18 N 1 '25 450w

"One could wish for more abandon in style; the twang of the Y. M. C. A. is not wholly absent; the author's sense of adventure is somewhat too easily satisfied. Nevertheless the work deserves recognition as a striking effort in the right direction. America has no Youth Movement, outside of athletics, and it sorely needs one. Anything that may possibly stimulate it is to be welcomed."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:319 N 21 '25 130w

HUNTER, IRENE LOUISE, comp. American mystical verse; an anthology; preface by Zona Gale. 308p $2 Appleton

811.08 American poetry—Collections. Mysticism 25-9161

"A selection of verse of mystical import from the works of American poets. Zona Gale writes an introduction telling something of the life of the compiler."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 22:64 N '25

"Altogether this volume is a choice and valuable collection."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 15 '25 200w

"Though there is unevenness of literary ability in this collection, still the book should be recommended to those interested in the trend of our American poets in things spiritual. But the book is a splendid endeavor in the right direction. Miss Hunter has done remarkably well when all things are considered." C. J. Q.

+ — Cath World 122:135 O '25 300w

"Mystical verse in America, if we except Emerson, does not appear to reach that peak that has been maintained for some centuries by England. We possessed no Traherne, no Donne, no Herbert, no Francis Thompson. But the average has been high and Miss Hunter appears to have read widely and made, on the whole, a series of wise and excellent choices. Her anthology is one that should be kept, for it concentrates in itself a volume of verse that is marked by a unity of urge and a high plane of achievement." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p14 Je 28 '25 180w

"Many readers will find a warm joy in this anthology. Life is contemplated through a stained glass window, transfused with purple light, its acute angles dimmed. Perhaps the best poetry is made of more violent and varied stuff. But there are few volumes in which are sustained so clear and constant a note, or such a true spirit of the beauty of fervor and faith." L. G. Marshall

+ N Y Tribune p12 Je 7 '25 400w

"This is an interesting attempt to follow the principle of the 'Oxford Book of English Mystical Verse.' But I cannot feel that it can be called the definitive selection of the best mystical poetry of America." W: R. Benét

Outlook 140:405 J1 15 '25 160w

"Miss Hunter's book is rightly and beautifully naive. Yet the selections are sufficiently various. A few, indeed, hardly belong. Miss Millay's 'God's World' is 'a feminine ecstasy,' as an early reviewer called it; and Angela Morgan's 'I Have Meat' is another of the same. . . . The book gives us a sense of a mystic and poetic spirit which, absorbing and reducing the recent over-emphasis on nature, is returning upon the old experiences of religion with fresh light and conviction. This is significant for the development of an important aspect of poetic taste in America." G. R. Elliott

HUNTER, I. L., comp.—Continued

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:154 S 26 '25 720w

"Miss Hunter showed a fine catholicity of taste, choosing, it might be said, all verse which has God for its subject—or, mystically considered, its object. Classification by some scheme of criticism and interpretation might have rendered the book more valuable for the student but not necessarily so for the reader who seeks in verse some form of communion with the spiritual forces in Nature or in man."

+ — Spring'd Republican p8 J1 22 '25 620w
Wis Lib Bul 21:197 J1 '25

HUNTINGTON, ELLSWORTH. Character of races as influenced by physical environment, natural selection and historical development.
393p $5 (25s) Scribner

572 Anthropogeography. Ethnology
24-24631

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"I have found the entire work fascinating and informing. I have learned a great deal, perhaps because I knew almost nothing about the subject. For the most part I find myself giving ready assent to the author's conclusions.
This is due no doubt in part to the fact that he writes well, with the minimum of technical jargon; but chiefly to the fact that he avoids dogmatism, not being one of those who think that everything can be explained by one thing." Carl Becker

+ Am Hist R 30:570 Ap '25 1100w

"An interesting and valuable treatise." C. A.
Kofoid

+ Am J Pub Health 15:349 Ap '25 500w

Reviewed by Robert Redfield

Am J Soc 30:483 Ja '25 1000w

Booklist 21:185 F '25

Bookm 61:99 Mr '25 160w

Cleveland p22 Mr '25

"All in all it is an admirable book, very interesting, and well written, striking into a hundred new and important fields, with sound sense and often significant statistics or maps."
S. C. Gilfillan

+ Hist Outlook 16:403 D '25 1350w

"Few of the anthropological books which have followed the war vie in interest with this one. It is a work with a thesis, and it is characterized by sweep of thought and by dramatic actuality of idea. The entire range of man's life on the earth is envisaged, roundly and with concern for the essentials." H. B.
Alexander

+ Nation 120:574 My 20 '25 1300w

Nation and Ath 36:476 D 27 '24 400w

"A great deal of thought and information has been packed into it with Dr. Huntington's usual clear style and interesting detail." J.
Langdon-Davies

+ — New Repub 42:288 F 4 '25 950w

"The problem of the mutual reactions of nature and man is still in process of solution, and it is to this problem that Dr. Huntington offers a further contribution which the layman as well as the specialist can understand." W.
MacDonald

+ N Y Times p13 F 15 '25 1150w

N Y World p7m F 8 '25 180w

HUNTINGTON, ELLSWORTH. West of the Pacific. 453p il $4.50 Scribner

915 Japan—Description and travel. China—
Description and travel. Australia—Description and travel 25-21599

Tho this book is on its surface the narrative of a traveller's impressions of Japan, China, Java and Australia, it is Professor Huntington's special interest in geography and racial characteristics which gives his impressions value.

This interest reveals itself in his observations on climate, population and health and on the effects of physical and social environment in the countries visited.

Booklist 22:156 Ja '26

"It does not seem conceivable that any one, even with preparatory knowledge akin to his could have gained in the short time allotted a broader or deeper grasp of these countries and their inhabitants than is here exercised by Professor Huntington." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p9 D 26 '25 250w

"The book is a strange mixture of scholarly observation and tourist impressionism. Those who enjoy the travel patter will find the sections on Javanese population and 'white Australia' heavy going. Those who look to the professional geographer for enlightenment on the buzzing problems of the Orient will perhaps regret the space given to amiable trifles." H: K. Norton

+ — N Y Tribune p18 O 25 '25 1150w

"Here we see the back of the world through a scientist's eyes. What he sees he describes in the rambling gossip style of a friend just returned from abroad. The book breathes the attitude and point of view of the scientist; not his erudite language, not his patient and exacting research. He goes through ancient cities and past old shrines with a tourist's hurried steps, pausing only to jot down impressions, or to note a curious fact." P. N. Youtz

Spring'd Republican p7a O 25 '25 1450w

"The writer's style prevents this lengthy book from becoming tedious and though he tumbles humorously into many a blunder he will be forgiven much because his pages are full of amusing incident. It is interesting to see Australia and her problems through the eyes of an American academician."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p899 D 24
'25 250w

HUNTINGTON, ELLSWORTH, and CUSH-
ING, SUMNER W. Modern business geography. 352p il $2 World bk. [8s 6d Harrap]

380 Geography, Commercial 25-2782

"Though written for grammar and high school students, the volume has suggestive interest for adult readers. It is grounded on the economic basis expressed in the four terms
Primary Production, Transportation, Manufacturing and Consumption. The various branches of industry are treated topically, with more detailed information in regard to the United States than to other countries. There is an abundance of illustrations."—Am Econ R

Am Econ R 15:305 Je '25 60w

"An unusual amount of space is given to questions, problems and exercises. Contains valuable tables and many excellent illustrations, maps and graphs."

Booklist 21:259 Ap '25

"The book is a fund of valuable information." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 21 '25 620w

HURLEY, FRANK. Argonauts of the south.
290p il $5 Putnam

919.9 Antarctic regions 25-18782

"Capt. Frank Hurley tells the stories of two of the world's great voyages of discovery. As official photographer of the expeditions he accompanied both Sir Ernest Shackleton and Sir Douglas Mawson on their voyages to the great Antarctic Continent, himself going through some of the most tragic and thrilling experiences endured by those hardy souls in their efforts to lift the veil hiding the great Southern mystery, the last of the earth's secrets."—N Y World

"One of the most impressive accounts of what polar exploration means that was ever written.
Captain Hurley is a master of effective literary expression and excels especially in his description of the nature setting which formed the background of the two expeditions." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 17 '25 1100w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p803 N '25 1600w

"Altogether a fascinating story from beginning to end, and Hurley tells it well, illustrated by the splendid photographs taken by the author as official photographer to the two expeditions and which he somehow managed to bring home despite all hardships. Perhaps no more striking pictures have come from the polar regions than those which he took of the Endurance, as a distant object amid sunlit ice, in storm, at night in the grip of the crushing pack." J. M. Thornton

+ Lit R p5 O 3 '25 350w

"Clear, straightforward, with adventure and tragedy so vividly described that pictures of the snowy Antarctic flash continuously before the mind of the reader." J. O. Swift

+ N Y World p7m O 18 '25 700w

"Polar explorers seem to be facile writers, as a rule, and Hurley, though a novice in such surroundings by comparison with his commanders is no exception. His book is none the less interesting because he is virtually a layman; it is certainly more valuable because he is an expert photographer."

+ Springfield Republican p10 N 3 '25 450w

"There should be an ample demand for Captain Hurley's book and its two tales of the adaptability of the human body and the strength of the human will; to most readers both tales will be fresh as well as invigorating and inspiring. No more thrilling stories of adventure are likely to be issued this Christmas nor stories with more attractive illustrations."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p749 N 12 '25 1100w

HUSTON, MCCREADY. Hulings' quest. 271p $2 Scribner

25-17341

Hulings was an architect in a small Pennsylvania town. He had ideals, and only wanted a chance to carry them out. But there were few commissions that did not demand a compromise between his ideals and his client's ideas. Joab Martin was the town's big man. Out of nothing at all he had made a vast fortune in coal, but his was a one man business and in a more precarious state than his townspeople guessed. Hulings liked the big blunt man, and was pleased when asked to design a bank building for him. His work absorbed the architect, but not to the exclusion of his friends—Judith, who puzzled and disappointed him, Wilda who flirted alternately with him and Storey Martin, and Sheila, who came at a moment of profound discouragement following the Martin collapse. She steadied him, gave him new impetus for his work, and a vague hope for the future.

Boston Transcript p5 O 17 '25 250w

"It would be giving Mr. Huston's story away to tell outright what is the end of Huling's quest. But this can be said, that the history of his hero is set down in a manner that holds interest from the beginning; which is but another way of saying that the author knows how to write a story. Indeed, Huling's Quest does not read like a first novel at all." C. P.

+ Cath World 122:426 D '25 280w

"McCready Huston creates human beings in his short stories and gives them longer life in his first novel. He is neither smart nor aphrodisiac, but is prosaic and true in presenting his story of quick riches, slow poverty and Huling's quest for beauty." Frank Wallace

+ Lit R p11 N 14 '25 150w

"He has brought from his experience with the short story a deftness of touch, an economy of effect and a smoothness in relating to each other and to the whole scheme of the novel each of his sundry episodes."

+ N Y Times p9 S 20 '25 1000w

N Y Tribune p16 O 4 '25 200w

"'Hulings' Quest' is one of that innumerable caravan of first novels which it is possible to regard with respect but not with much affection. A certain languor pervades the style; none of the characters seems to come to life, with the possible exception of two members of what now passes as the younger generation, Wilda and Storey Martin."

— + Outlook 142:74 Ja 13 '26 150w

Sat R of Lit 2:228 O 17 '25 130w

HUTCHINSON, ARTHUR STUART-MENTETH. One increasing purpose. 448p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-18579

Sim Paris came out of the wholesale carnage of the war convinced that his life had been spared for some special purpose. He must find the thing that he is meant to do. The search seemed sidetracked by several crises in family affairs. Disaster overshadowed Andrew, the black Paris, eldest of the three brothers, and his restless, brilliantly lovely Linda; grief and tragedy overtook Charles and his wife. Troubles gathered and multiplied. To each member of the family Sim was a tower of strength, and in seeking the way to solve their problems he found the answer to his own. The increasing purpose of his life was made plain.

"This is an exasperating book. To condemn it is impossible without appearing to condemn much that is fine and true. To praise it is difficult without appearing to admire much that is cheap and shabby. The author presents a great theme with perspiring zeal and inadequate artistry." G. B. Dutton

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '25 470w

Booklist 22:117 D '25

"Another novel that is certain to attract attention. Multitudes will read it, many of the spiritually and ethically minded will enjoy it and proclaim it widely as superior both to 'If Winter Comes' and 'This Freedom.' It will sell, perhaps by the half million. We hope it will, for it is a good book in many ways and good books deserve to be read and to sell. But for us, we prefer the A. S. M. Hutchinson of 'Once Aboard the Lugger' to the A. S. M. Hutchinson of 'One Increasing Purpose.'" E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 26 '25 1600w

Ind 115:650 D 5 '25 60w

"The new Hutchinson novel, 'One Increasing Purpose,' is not only a literary event of the first importance, but a religious portent of far-reaching import. In it two strands are braided together, an outer and an inner; a story of such graphic power that the author, as he writes, is more like an excited onlooker trying to find words to describe what he sees, and the record of a mystical experience of Christ so vivid and moving that it must surely touch, if only for a brief moment, even those to whom religion is a fable and a futility. Both elements will give it a wide vogue, as it deserves, alike for its real narrative art and its sincere moral purpose." J. F. Newton

+ Int Bk R p703 O '25 2400w

"His splendid new story, 'One Increasing Purpose'—the best after-the-war novel we have read—will duplicate the success of 'If Winter Comes.' To our way of thinking, it deserves to."

W. O. Tewson

+ Lit R p4 O 10 '25 1550w

"Mr. Hutchinson shows again those faults of style which drew down on him the anathema of the critical 'Bodyguard.' But one must judge art by its effect; and Mr. Hutchinson has the power to make an overwhelming impression. Little by little he lines in his picture until at the end one's emotions are tremendously stirred."

+ Living Age 327:123 O 10 '25 100w (Reprinted from Westminster Gazette)

Reviewed by E. B. Osborn

Living Age 327:123 O 10 '25 260w (Reprinted from Morning Post)

HUTCHINSON, A. S.—Continued

"Mr. Hutchinson, uncomfortable by just popularity, complains against the superior critic, but he, himself, is a 'highbrow.' Capable, obviously, as a trained journalist, of an efficient sensible style, Mr. Hutchinson labours emotionally to the heights of rhetoric. He is not merely content with passages of poetic inversion, in exact metrical form, but seems to have fused, into his astonishing style, Carlyle and all the other eminent Victorians. He has hitched his admirable wagon to a constellation."

Nation and Ath 37:737 S 19 '25 200w

"The only good things are occasional fine strokes in the portrayal of character. As in earlier novels, the style is a welter of bleating inversion, maudlin parenthesis, and imbecile repetition." H. S.

+ New Repub 45:171 D 30 '25 130w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 25:605 S 12 '25 1500w

Reviewed by H. L. Stuart

N Y Times p2 O 4 '25 1400w

"This book is written not by the author of 'If Winter Comes' but by the author of 'This Freedom'—more's the pity! The former is a collaborator in the work, for to him must be attributed a dramatic plot, vivid and distinctive characterizations, sentiment and sentimentality variously intermixed and an occasional thrill of narrative, all of which are unmistakable. But he has been overborne by the man who mounted the pulpit in 'This Freedom.'" J. H. Holmes

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 15 '25 750w

"Mr. Hutchinson's mode of writing is sufficiently irritating. His creature with the Messianic delusion, his Sim Paris, and the situation, the gradual discovery of Sim's 'purpose,' that precious 'Purpose,' are insufferable. It makes one wonder if goodness needfully is priggishness." J. W. C.

+ N Y World p4m O 4 '25 350w

"As a novelist, Mr. Hutchinson's chief idiosyncrasy is excessive reiteration—a point of style which impresses and enchains at first, but in the end becomes wearisome. A pertinent word or phrase is employed until it grows threadbare. Each incident, in carefully chosen phraseology, is repeated again and again, words of the original telling retained, as if a teacher were fixing them in the mind of a pupil expected to learn them by rote." C. B. Green

+ Outlook 141:318 O 28 '25 1100w

"I know of no other modern writer in whose work one can find, in such glaring contrast, the very good and the very bad, side by side. In 'One Increasing Purpose,' unfortunately, as in its predecessors, the bad stuff swamps the good." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 140:237 Ag 29 '25 1250w

"In a book like this, satire is only incidental. There is, as there always is in Hutchinson's books, a good fable; for he apparently believes with Thomas Hardy that a novel should be a story. There is an abundance of lively description; he has always been particularly good at describing crowds, and that faculty is here shiningly evident. His characters, of immense variety, are nearly all sharply individualized. Even Sim, who is the author's mouthpiece, is a real man on his own. Satire, story, characterization, description, make 'One Increasing Purpose,' notwithstanding frequent explosions in the style, a work of art rather than a tract; or rather it is a tract whose fervor blossoms in creative art."

W: L. Phelps

+ Sat R of Lit 2:151 S 26 '25 1100w

"He certainly does prove himself a very bad and pretentious writer of English indeed. He is even laughable. But style is not everything. Dickens, Meredith and Henry James have sometimes clumsy and absurd sentences, though never as bad as Mr. Hutchinson's 'much more worse.' It is easy to laugh at One Increasing Purpose: but it is not without virtues."

+ Spec 135:380 S 5 '25 560w

"'One Increasing Purpose,' outdistances 'If Winter Comes' in sentimentality and 'This Freedom' in ethical aim. But its sentimentality is so sodden and its ethical aim so much in the vein of orthodox religious platitude that even Mr Hutchinson's public may rebel against it."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 O 10 '25 1050w

"It would scarcely be fair to charge Mr Hutchinson with a cynical attempt to please his public. But if that is his aim he may have failed. 'If Winter Comes' had some character. 'This Freedom' had a thesis and the narrative had design and a cumulative effect. 'One Increasing Purpose' has neither character nor structure. It is unbelievably vapid in conception, and the language, where it is coherent, is as artificial as the baby talk in which growing girls sometimes engage for the amusement of their friends. Intellectually, too, it is of the same caliber."

+ Spring'd Republican p5a O 11 '25 320w

"Superficial, though honest, thought and turgid language limit the effectiveness both of a real narrative talent and of a deep moral purpose."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Ag 27 '25 600w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

HUTCHINSON, HORATIO GORDON. Fellowship of anglers. 211p Il $3.50 (10s 6d) Longmans

799 Fishing

25-8835

Trout fishing along the river Test near Stockbridge, England is the theme of the book but there are many little brookside anecdotes and observations which, primarily, have nothing to do with the anglers' art. The members of the Houghton fishing club wander thru the pages and appear in the attractive illustrations of the countryside.

"The author is a thorough out-doors man and shares his love for nature with you. He is a good fisherman and a fine story teller and one would like to sit and listen to some more yarns and observations in that trout country."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 22 '25 180w

"The book does not pretend to give instruction to the tyro in the art, but to the fly-fisher who has mastered the elements of casting and trout-lore it will be a liberal education; for Mr. Hutchinson discusses just those vexed questions of procedure on which even the masters differ. It is a book written by an angler for anglers, yet though the reader never casts a fly or handles a rod, though he be even among the rabble who mock, he will find the nature studies into which Mr. Hutchinson continually digresses a delight in themselves."

+ New Statesman 25:176 My 23 '25 500w

Spec 135:165 J1 25 '25 200w

"Mr Hutchinson's book, although in parts rambling and tenuous in the manner of the British meditative sporting essay, is a contribution to fishing lore."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a J1 12 '25 800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p393 Je 11 '25 520w

HUTCHINSON, VERE. Naked man. 350p $2 Century [7s 6d J. Cape]

25-17661

Imprisoned in the mine with the injured son of the man he despised beside him, Luke's mind turned back over the painful years since his boyhood—the squalid ugly scenes in the home of his parents, the brief respite of beauty on an uncle's farm when in the flush of a new-born passion for the land he resolved never to go back to the mines, the angry summons from his mother at his father's death, the sullen acceptance of the mines as his fate, his mother's death, his placid marriage, and now this awful entombment. He swore to go straight to the farm if released. Luke lived, but the boy beside him died, and the curse of his half-crazed father followed Luke to the farm where it met apparent fulfillment in the tragic train of disaster. Thru the self-immolation of a woman he reached at last the tranquil harbor of middle years.

Booklist 22:117 D '25

"The Naked Man" is an impressive, if not a likable, novel." K. S.

Boston Transcript p6 O 17 '25 960w

"The sister of A. S. M. Hutchinson need take no lessons from her brother. She lacks his sense of burlesque, his ability to choose a theme so universal in appeal, but she owns a vigor in narration and a talent for characterization that equal, and often surpass, his. She never tangles the reader in verbal circumlocutions; she writes to the point, and her stories move swiftly and forcefully." Merton Winship

+ Lit R p3 O 10 '25 420w

Living Age 327:339 N 7 '25 80w

"The Naked Man" is in some ways a remarkable novel. Miss Hutchinson has imagination, and this redeems the looseness of her treatment and the awkwardness of her style." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 37:600 Ag 15 '25 200w

"Miss Vere Hutchinson has no superficial graces or brilliancy to tempt or distract her: her line is Primitive Grandeur or nothing. It is remarkable how nearly she succeeds. I am not quite convinced by the happyish ending, and the dialogue is bad; but all the same this is a book which comes within reasonable distance of achieving its ambitions—of achieving greatness." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 25:552 Ag 29 '25 200w

"Miss Hutchinson's style has none of her best-seller brother's mannerisms. She lacks his often tantalizing criss-cross method. Instead she tells her story with an almost breathless directness and with an almost Biblical simplicity. Inevitable incident follows inevitable incident with an onrushing unimpeded sweep. The vocabulary throughout has an earthly tang about it. It has pithiness and forcefulness."

+ N Y Times p20 S 27 '25 830w

"Vere Hutchinson has by this novel at least, earned the right to identification in her own name. Here is power, though not in the barefaced, throat-clutching manner of some of the realistic moderns. It is the power of outward restraint, while underneath the narrative steadily gathers momentum until it swings into the full stride of Luke's long-delayed manhood at Riddings." Ruth Seifel

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 8 '25 650w

"Miss Hutchinson is a very, very serious writer—a profound writer. There is nothing light in her book, nothing to laugh at. There is much to feel pity for if one is willing to experience pity. There is no beauty in it except for those who can find beauty in a great heart's sympathy for poor victims of the circumstances of life. The book is great for those who are big enough for it."

N Y World p7m N 22 '25 330w

"A strong and somber tale, at times an impressive one, marred only by the relation of the wife to the wanton."

+ — Outlook 141:356 N 4 '25 200w

"Miss Hutchinson writes with power and restraint; her characterization is shrewd, though not subtle; and her construction is admirable." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 140:214 Ag 22 '25 420w

"Baddock, the central figure, is well and sympathetically conceived and Miss Hutchinson uses the mingled harshness and tenderness of his character to fine effect. Her women are less convincing because of the extreme improbability of the conflict between them. Nevertheless she has written an admirable book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:383 D 5 '25 380w

"The early struggle in Luke's temperament and the later degradation of his character through the hideous circumstances of his life as a miner are finely depicted. But the chapters which describe how at last, but too late, he becomes master of the small farm on which he had first realized his secret longings, do not ring quite true. The same may be said of the concluding scenes with his neglected wife, Maggie. The book, however, is a serious attempt at character drawing, and for that reason deserves attention."

— + Spec 135:844 N 7 '25 200w

"The story is constructed with an admirable craftsmanship and told in language that is forcible but never exaggerated."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p508 J1 30 '25 620w

HUTTEN ZUM STOLZENBERG, BETTINA (RIDDLE) freifrau von. Julia. 281p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

24-30856

"Julia" is a tragi-comedy of sadly mixed relationships, frustrated love, divorces, high life within an exclusive circle of English gentlefolk, spiritual self-sacrifice entailing ultimate futility, and disillusionment." (Sat R of Lit) Julia, the beautiful middle-aged heroine, married to a mild and unimportant gentleman, has secretly cherished a love for an unknown man whom she came across while traveling and whom she does not meet again till he turns up as the fiancé of her daughter. While loving her mother he marries Sandra and does all he can do to make her happy. Subsequently both Julia and Sandra are divorced, but Julia and her lover do not take advantage of their freedom to marry. Instead, they drift apart, and each finds another mate elsewhere.

Cleveland p66 Je '25

"It is an artificial affair, all of it a bit exaggeratedly out of drawing. But behind its pose is a core of deep-lying protest, and, although Julia is a trifle absurd, she does stand for something." H. L. Pangborn

— + Lit R p12 My 9 '25 200w

N Y Tribune p14 Je 7 '25 850w

"It is brilliantly told, despite a disjointed structure, which is rendered unavoidable by the method of its narration. The author, we think, has scored a noteworthy and well-earned, if modest, success."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:673 Ap 11 '25 450w

"All through the book one never gets quite away from the strain of remembering who everybody is and how he or she is related to everybody else: and the story is an exhaustive orgy of unhappy marriages, divorces, and casual love affairs."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p450 J1 17 '24 180w

HUXLEY, ALDOUS LEONARD. Along the road. 266p $2 Doran [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

824 Travel. Italy—Description and travel 25-17845

In these notes and essays of a tourist Aldous Huxley appears as an interested and sympathetic observer of life. In some opening chapters he writes of travel in general, of the curiosity that is necessary to the traveller, of guide-books and books for the journey. The next part is given to places and these are mostly in Italy. Then follow some chapters on works of art, these also in Italy chiefly.

Booklist 22:161 Ja '26

"Huxley is at his best, his most lucid in his essays. His use of character is strange and it takes from the lucidity of his novels. As an essayist he does not get close to his readers, but he does interest them. One feels his power. All of life, all the present and the past, flows through his strange, original mind and the result is curiously exciting." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 14 '25 550w

"His humor has a high, somewhat vicious quality; his understanding is deep; and—above all—he is far from dull. The various chapters appeared as essays before in certain Condé Nast periodicals."

+ Ind 115:508 O 31 '25 40w

HUXLEY, A. L.—Continued

"The subjects Mr. Huxley chooses it is true, are usually interesting; the sentiments and the moral reflections are admirable; all is intelligent and extremely just; every point is made plainly, and repeated so that it cannot be misunderstood . . . nothing, in fact, could be better. Yet it is not a book for the admirers of the novels."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:21 O 3 '25 760w

"There are a few genuine travelers, of whom Aldous Huxley is one, who really enjoy it. For him, it is a 'besetting vice.' He travels indiscriminately, greedily, 'loving what is unfamiliar for the sake of its unfamiliarity,' finding boredom 'rather agreeable than painful.' And the result, in this book of Notes and Essays, is seldom boring, nearly always lively, occasionally beautiful." Robert Littell

+ New Repub 44:334 N 18 '24 300w

"Mr. Huxley sees and feels clearly; he expresses himself extremely well; he is transparently honest; he is full of knowledge, and yet judicious in its dispensation. It is a p that the requirements of a graceless age have made of him a journalist rather than a poet."

+ New Statesman 26:82 O 31 '25 1000w

"If the author of 'Along the Road' has been reckoned as one of the most precocious of writers in a period when an avidity after what is different makes precocity something to be sought after, he has not been thrown off his mental balance. And the skepticism which was at the bottom of his railery when discussing the travel impulse will be found taking a more serious turn in his discussions of art."

+ N Y Times p9 S 27 '25 1500w

"A score of entertaining essays written during the interludes of tourist travel in Flanders and Italy. Mr. Huxley's humor is here of a playful nature. Wit flavors his wisdom, but a gentler wit than one might expect from the author of 'Crome Yellow.'"

+ Outlook 142:77 Ja 13 '26 220w

Sat R 140:291 S 12 '25 30w

"Mr. Huxley, describing himself in his subtitle as a tourist, appears to rattle on delightfully about just what inconsequent matters take his fancy, as any other tourist might; but if, in reality, he had either chosen less well, or judged less well or written less well, the touristic flavour would remain in the writing but not the delight."

+ Sat R 140:344 S 26 '25 850w

"His style is extraordinarily flexible; now cool and controlled, now colorful as Gautier, reflecting his mood like an expressive face. Now there is sheer beauty. Again there is strength, irony, intellect, humor. With Huxley the idea, the mood, the thing itself, is of first importance, the words secondary. But what gorgeous words the man knows!"

+ Sat R of Lit 2:484 Ja 9 '26 250w

"Mr. Huxley himself describes these enchanting essays as the records of a tour, but, as he himself very well knows, the tour that they represent is a tour de force. They are not an exercise in seeing Italy and parts of Holland through the eyes of Mr. Huxley, but of seeing Mr. Huxley through the eyes of Italy and Holland." Humbert Wolfe

Spec 135:663 O 17 '25 850w

"The amusing, pointed, classically phrased intellectually adorned and slightly rueful periods of this tourist have all that particular but elusive quality which endears the young men of his fiction to us, whom their actions or inactions frequently irritate."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p596 S 17 '25 1000w

HUXLEY, ALDOUS LEONARD. Those barren leaves. 400p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

25-2661

A book in which there is almost no action, but an enormous amount of talk. The socially ambitious Mrs Aldwinkle, an inveterate lion huntress, has gathered in her Italian palace a collection of the great, or near-great, which includes the elderly sensualist Cardan, the rich and popular Calamy, Falx the labor leader, Chelifer the poet, and Mary Thriplow, novelist. These are the mouthpieces thru which Aldous Huxley expresses his own restless speculations about life and its utilities. Two young innocents, Mrs Aldwinkle's niece Irene and her lover, Lord Hovendon, introduce a note of wholesomeness and reality.

"There is meat in these conversations, but also some heavy bread-pudding. It were better that the wit were airier and briefer, or that the fundamental satire of the book were expressed more often in theme and situation." C. R. Walker

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '25 520w

Booklist 21:303 My '25

"It would be irrelevant to complain that the whole book doesn't get anywhere. It isn't meant to. It is a gesture of disgust and contempt, toward a lunatic world which the author does not deem worth setting right. His book is not for dainty feeders; only those who relish their novels and their game 'high' will like it." Isabel Paterson

Bookm 61:85 Mr '25 280w

"As a novel the book has conspicuous faults; as a piece of writing it is so good that it is worth censuring severely. For instance, the author pays no attention to structure. There is no plot, there is no balance of parts, the digressions are frequent and lengthy. There is a vast amount of information about Italian art and history. No wonder the author has been called the most learned man in England, at the age of thirty-one."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ja 31 '25 950w

Ind 114:274 Mr 7 '25 250w

"As a whole the book is rather a group-study than a novel in the conventional sense. It has practically no plot, in the narrow technical dramatic use of that term. Yet it moves, and its construction is masterly, through an intricate series of movements: the effect may almost be said to be symphonic, a superb piece of literary artistry. It also has the high surface polish, the smooth texture of his previous writings." H. L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p280 Mr '25 1000w

"Mr. Huxley has never written a richer book or one in which clearer or more cogent thought lay behind the superficial extravagance of his manner . . . behind it all is clearly visible a desperately lucid mind which has sought in vain for some unmistakable reality, moral, philosophical, or scientific, but which has found nothing which could, with any assurance, be called more than appearance." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 120:190 F 18 '25 1050w

"It is brilliant and daring, admirably written, humorous, witty, clever, cultured. The characters have length and breadth; they are curious, sometimes interesting, people whose portraits are drawn distinctly, with assurance and firmness of line, upon the printed page; occasionally they even have a depth which is more than that of the printed page. These are the book's obvious merits; it has some equally obvious defects. Mr. Huxley tends to take his characters too literally and too photographically from the life." Leonard Woolf

+ — Nation and Ath 36:584 Ja 24 '25 1100w

"Mr. Aldous Huxley's work would be delightful, would provoke and deserve enthusiasm as minor literature, if he were a man of smaller powers. As it is, he always gives me the feeling that there has been some terrible mistake, a feeling that Those Barren Leaves brings to exasperation point. What he began to do in Chrome Yellow and did better in Antic Hay is here done perfectly. The characters are still mere pegs on which to hang dialectics, but they are more amusing, more individual and life-like, more shrewdly observed." J: Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:448 Ja 24 '25 1650w

"Clever, extremely clever, with the metallic brilliance that we have learned to associate with this author. . . 'Those Barren Leaves' is almost a description of itself; even as the autumnal glory of the falling leaf owes its chief beauty to dissolution, so we find here an iridescence akin to decay. The narrative staggers elaborately along, beautiful in its articulations, but invertebrate in its effect, without arriving anywhere."

— + N Y Times p9 Ja 25 '25 1100w

"It is a remarkably readable book; but it puts the prospect of a masterpiece further off instead of nearer. It is clever—O so clever!—just when one had hoped that Mr. Huxley was outgrowing cleverness. It is satirical—O so satirical!—but it employs the easiest devices of parody for its satire." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 139:108 Ja 31 '25 1100w

"It is all clever and amusing and well written—that is, suavely and somewhat ornately written. The performance is fully up to Mr. Huxley's reputation as a lavish entertainer, brilliant and sparkling; and even if some of the sparklers are not genuine stones, the stage effect is as good as ever. Mr. Huxley has never assembled a better cast of characters." T. K. Whipple

+ Sat R of Lit 1:576 Mr 7 '25 1050w

"Mr. Aldous Huxley has two failings which he has not yet thoroughly conquered; he is still much more a literary artist than a creative writer, and he suffers from a lack of direction and purpose. But we should be thankful that Mr. Huxley has grown so much. He can now, for the most part, avoid those two greatest temptations to the satirist: he can write without intolerance and he can use satire otherwise than as a loving castigation and cloak for personal shortcomings."

+ — Spec 134:166 Ja 31 '25 160w

"There can be no doubt that Aldous Huxley is something more than a poseur. Artistic sincerity is evident in much that he says—in perhaps most that he says—and so long as that is true, one looks forward to his next book, and his next, in the hope that he will eventually bring his followers to the Golden Fleece of his quest." S. A.

Spring'd Republican p7a F 22 '25 800w

"Mr. Aldous Huxley is forging ahead. We saw him very lately, in 'Antic Hay,' down in the trough of the misery and rage which seize on sensitive souls at odds with the reality that they know. In the new novel he is trying his course toward a more real reality. The sea is still pretty rough, but the ship is carrying sail and the steering gear is at work again. . . The many-toned wit of the book, the beauty and shrewdness of its descriptions, the learning, the thought, the richness of character, the intellectual and artistic honesty of it, show that Mr. Huxley is a very good, and very likely will be, a great novelist."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p53 Ja 22 '25 1000w

HUXLEY, ALDOUS LEONARD. Young Archimedes, and other stories (Eng title Little Mexican). 312p $2 Doran

24-22679

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"The attractive cover of the book opens on to an absolutely different world, where everything is clear-cut, where words are lucid, however subtle the thought they clothe, where towns, persons, events, grotesque or tragic or both, are displayed, revealed, unrolled before one's eyes in a manner at once leisurely, and economical, agreeable and satiric." E. B. C. Jones

+ Nation and Ath 35:358 Je 14 '24 260w

"Three of the stories do not greatly matter. Hubert and Minnie is well observed and, though slight, genuinely moving. Fard and The Portrait are magazine stories, a little more highly polished than usual. But the other three stories matter considerably. The best of them is the longest and the first one in the book—Uncle

Spencer. This is, I think, the best thing Mr. Huxley has done." Ralph Wright

+ — New Statesman 23:258 Je 7 '24 800w

"Mr. Huxley gets better and better, but still does not distinguish with sufficient precision between the good and the bad. Of the six stories in the present volume, two are rather feeble and obvious anecdotes, two are excellently sardonic studies, and two are, in their unassuming kind, masterpieces. The period of self-conscious youthful brilliance, which so many considerable artists have to go through and which some of the less considerable prolong for a life-time, is over. Here is solid stuff."

+ Sat R 137:566 My 31 '24 600w

"The stories everywhere show traces of restraint. The conflict between the intellect and the flesh and their mutual disgusts reappear, but softened and allayed. The vertiginous outlook, the discontent with life which embittered the wit and sapped the emotional power of Antic Hay survive, but only as one of many moods. Instead of the frustrated hedonism, the nervous exhaustion stimulated into frenzy satirized in the earlier book, we find, in the principal story of the present collection, an utterly different attitude." L. P. Hartley

+ Spec 132:926 Je 7 '24 400w

"In these cases, either Mr. Huxley is not sure of the worth of his story as a story, or he is so sure of it that he is resolved to indulge himself to the top of his bent in the writing. The result is in each case good enough to warrant him in doing what he pleases and us in pleasantly wondering what he is going to do next."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p318 My 22 '25 580w

I

ICONOCLAST, pseud. See Hamilton, M. A.

ILLICK, JOSEPH SIMON. Tree habits; how to know the hardwoods. 341p il $4 Am. nature assn., Washington, D.C.

582 Trees

25-1801

"Popularly written, but scientifically accurate. Describes American deciduous trees, telling of the peculiarities of the various species. Well illustrated for work in tree identification."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:160 Mr '25

IMMANUEL Kant; papers read at Northwestern university on the bicentenary of Kant's birth; [ed. by Edward L. Schaub]. 211p il $1 Open ct.

193 Kant, Immanuel

These papers read at the bicentenary commemoration are all concerned with Kant's thought and its influence in every field of philosophy.

"There is much illuminating thought in these papers, little as they were intended for student use or even for publication."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 3 '25 350w

Reviewed by R. M. Blake

J Philos 22:609 O 22 '25 900w

"Without ceasing to be popular papers, which (as Descartes would say) all men, including women, may understand, these addresses manage to live up to the ideal of critical exposition. And in philosophy any other form of exposition but the critical is well nigh useless." B: Ginzburg

+ N Y Tribune p14 N 29 '25 600w

IMMS, AUGUSTUS DANIEL. General textbook of entomology. 698p il $12 Dutton [36s Methuen]

595.7 Insects

Agr25-708

"The subject is dealt with in three sections, viz.—anatomy and physiology, development

IMMS, AUGUSTUS DANIEL—Continued
and classification. The present book covers more ground and gives more detailed information than any other work of a similar character published in the English language. It is intended especially for the teacher and the serious student, giving them the detailed information which they require by supplementing the many elementary books available."—Publisher's note

"Dr. Imms presents with remarkable skill and lucidity the rich material now available in entomological science. Titles of recent insect literature supplement each chapter, and at the close of the work there is an index of authors."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 14 '25 200w

INGERSOLL, LEONARD ROSE. Laboratory manual of experiments in physics. 220p $2 McGraw

530.7 Physics—Laboratory manuals 25-8680

"Prepared especially for students at the University of Wisconsin. The experiments vary from those suited to students without previous training in physics, to those suited to the average sophomore. Directions are very clearly given and should enable the student to conduct most of the experiments unaided."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:405 J1 '25

IRON, RALPH, pseud. See Schreiner, O.

IRVINE, LEIGH HADLEY. Follies of the courts; with apologies to judges and attorneys, who did not create the obsolete machinery with which they are compelled to work. 273p $2.50 Times-mirror

343 Criminal procedure. Courts—United States 25-17653

The book is an arraignment of the criminal law administration in America. The author points to the shocking prevalence of crime and lawlessness in the United States, the failure of the courts, the breakdown of criminal-law machinery and the indifference of the public to crime. He compares English criminal procedure with American showing the great superiority of the English system.

Boston Transcript p3 D 19 '25 280w

"The author presents a strong case perhaps a shade too strongly."

+ Ind 115:685 D 12 '25 60w

"Mr. Irvine has buttressed his case well with the opinions of authorities, from which he makes many long quotations, and he offers an extensive bibliography of magazine articles and books for further study."

+ N Y Times p10 N 1 '25 400w

"A sensible, vigorous, and greatly needed criticism of our methods of criminal justice."

+ Outlook 141:676 D 30 '25 60w

IRWIN, MRS INEZ (HAYNES). Gertrude Haviland's divorce. 389p $2 Harper

25-20827

At its seemingly most tranquil moment cataclysm swept Gertrude Haviland's life. Her husband asked her for a divorce. He wrote that for five years he had loved and lived with another woman, and now he wanted the chance to marry her. After the first devastating shock had passed, Gertrude faced the situation with a fortitude born of despair. She left her home and took the children to a distant farm house given her by her husband, there to make a fresh beginning. For a time she lost interest in everything and even let the children run wild. With the knowledge of the coming of another child, however, her whole outlook changed. With new born energy and an exultant sense of power, she revolutionized the dilapidated old farm house, brought the children into line again, plunged whole-heartedly into neighborhood affairs, and with the enthusiastic backing of Ira Forbes and his sister, became a community leader. With the pain of the past obliterated in the joy of the new life, Gertrude had no wish to leave, and when the chance was offered her she turned it down.

Booklist 22:162 Ja '26

"A very brilliant piece of work. It is carefully done, finished, and perfect, not a slapdash, two-a-year production, and reveals not only the workings of one woman's soul, but the sort of thing one should do to keep a husband."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 25 '25 350w

"A story of unusual power."

+ Ind 115:716 D 19 '25 50w

"One of those novels whose authors take their characters more or less gently but very firmly by the hand, leading them willy-nilly along the way mapped out for them to tread, 'Gertrude Haviland's Divorce' moves very slowly toward its appointed ending."

N Y Times p17 D 27 '25 420w

"The story is told with admirable straightforwardness. When combined with the subtler methods of suggestion and contrast, this straightforwardness might be mistaken for obviousness. But at no point does the story drop into the tawdry sentimental clamor which is the usual companion of the obvious manner."—Ruth Seinfeld

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 29 '25 850w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y World p7m N 29 '25 420w

IRWIN, VIOLET MARY (MRS COENRAAD VAN CUYK DE WAAL). Shaman's revenge; based on the Arctic diaries of Vilhjalmur Stefansson. 286p il $2 Macmillan

25-16606

Based on Vilhjalmur Stefansson's diary, the book tells the story of Omialik, an Arctic explorer who has won the friendship and respect of the uncivilized tribes of the Arctic. On one of his expeditions he has with him three Eskimo youths whose exploits form part of the story. One of the older Eskimos in the party—a shaman, or medicine man, plots a seditious enterprise with Omialik's chief officer. Thru the wit and pluck of two Eskimo boys and a girl the treacherous plan falls thru. The book is full or lively incident, yet furnishes real insight into Eskimo character and thought.

"It abounds in thrills, vivid descriptions, and humor. It is clean and wholesome throughout. The reader will also get a better understanding of the difficulties overcome and the work accomplished by the great explorer, Stefansson."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 160w

"The plot is a rousing one, the characters are all thoroughly alive, the Arctic background of the action is vividly and authentically presented, and the tale is told with spirit and literary skill." H: Boston

+ Ind 115:350 S 26 '25 220w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 6 '25 60w

IRWIN, WILL. Youth rides west. 284p $2 Knopf

25-4856

The scene of the story is a Colorado mining camp in the seventies. The hero and narrator is a young tenderfoot just graduated from Harvard who goes west in search of adventure. He finds it in plenty and romance also, in the love of a mysterious woman.

Booklist 21:303 My '25

"In 'Youth Rides West' Mr. Irwin shows how a 'western' novel can be written with intelligence. Though limited by a conventional and hackneyed plot, he has succeeded in accomplishing something besides his hero's marriage." E. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 7 '25 600w

"A good story and a dramatic one. It is only occasionally that Mr. Irwin allows himself to slip into the Bret Harte vocabulary of Dickens plus California."

+ Ind 114:246 F 28 '25 100w

"Most of the picturesque characters have been drawn from life. They are excellent portraits. It is a story for adults, but every American boy will appreciate its dash and vigor. It draws an unforgettable picture of life in the Western mining towns." Winifred Katzin

+ Int Bk R p428 My '25 400w

Nation and Ath 37:712 S 12 '25 220w

"In writing this story, Will Irwin shows no desire to depart from tradition. A roll-call at Hollywood would find few of the familiar figures missing. . . It is his little footnotes to frontier history which raise Mr. Irwin's novel somewhat above the ruck of merchantable Western fiction. They dignify a rather trite love story, garnished by twice and thrice told incidents."

+ N Y Times p8 F 8 '25 650w

"The really excellent material of this tale is presented in the raw. It has the merit of exactitude and moderation; the flavor of it is authentic; but it has not passed through the alembic of an artist's imagination. An honest, uninspired, quite readable novel."

+ N Y Tribune p9 F 15 '25 580w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

Sat R of Lit 1:635 Mr 28 '25 400w

Wis Lib Bul 21:90 Mr '25

IS unemployment inevitable? an analysis and a forecast; a continuation of the investigations embodied in The third winter of unemployment, published in 1923. 388p $3.50 (8s 6d) Macmillan

331.137 Unemployment [24-30514]

"The book falls into four parts. The first is the committee's survey of the present industrial situation and forecast of its development. The second part consists of a series of memoranda by economists of repute on the general questions raised by the inquiry. The third part is a series of surveys by authorities of the first rank of the more important British industries directed to answering in each case the question what are the prospects of a recovery of employment in the industry to its pre-war adequacy. The final part contains three short, but extremely important memoranda by Professor Bowley on the future employable population of Great Britain, the possibility of utilizing public work to compensate for variations in the demand for labour afforded by private work, and the effect on employment of adjusting rates of wages automatically by reference to index numbers."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"A number of the chapters contain excellent descriptions of conditions as they now exist in leading British industries, the salient facts being stated in lucid, interesting style." W. I. King

+ Am Econ R 15:126 Mr '25 720w

"This book is a most valuable piece of work; and if in any way it suffers in comparison with The Third Winter, this is due not to the quality of the work, but to the form which it had necessarily to take." N. B. Dearle

+ Econ J 34:602 D '24 1800w

N Y Times p12 N 30 '24 680w

"This volume is the best on the subject that has appeared in England for some time." H. Feldman

+ Pol Sci Q 40:317 Je '25 1100w

"Though a composite book by a dozen or so writers can hardly be attractive literature, this is an important collection of opinion."

Spec 133:846 N 29 '24 240w

"Thorough and illuminating."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p482 Ag 7 '24 1750w

ISHAM, JULIET CALHOUN. Winds and tides. 46p $1.50 Putnam

811

25-833

The note most often struck in this little book of lyrics is one of gentle melancholy.

Booklist 21:333 Je '25

"Winds and Tides is a book for quiet and rest. We are in sore need of quiet and rest in our poetry to-day." C. P.

+ Cath World 121:285 My '25 220w

"The winds of Juliet Calhoun Isham's poetry are gentle winds and the tides are ebb tides. In comparison with the roar of the gales and breakers that toss modern poetry they strike a quivering note. Only once does the poet rise to greater emotion and become stirred by the 'wilder cry of men.' The poem in this instance is 'Attack' and the theme is of war." Frances Hawkins

Lit R p13 Ja 31 '25 200w

"Lyrics written with no amateur hand. They are well formed, but they are not memorable. There is, however, a certain delicate surety in many of them." G. H. Busey

+ N Y Tribune p10 Mr 15 '25 160w

"Platitudes in undistinguished verse of a faintly Tennysonian flavor."

— Sat R of Lit 2:436 D 19 '25 40w

"The author surrenders herself to currents and eddies of gentle emotion and idealism. Her verse is consequently melodious and pleasing, but its harmony is superficial because it has entailed the resolution of no difficult discord."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p243 Ap 2 '25 200w

ISMAN, FELIX. Weber and Fields; their tribulations, triumphs and their associates. 345p il $3.50 Boni & Liveright

B or 92 Weber, Joseph M. Fields, Lewis Maurice. Actors and actresses 25-912

This book tells the story of two East Side boys, their rise as comedians, the entertainment they gave, which enlivened New York for many seasons, and the people who helped in the entertaining. In their early teens Joe Weber and Lew Fields began their career, playing in dime museums and variety theaters and coming at last to a theater of their own, the Weber and Fields music hall at Twenty-ninth street and Broadway where for eight years they gave an entertainment in which such comedy stars as Lillian Russell, Fay Templeton, De Wolfe Hopper, Peter Dailey, David Warfield and William Collier were the principals. The book is full of anecdotes of these and other actors.

Booklist 21:337 Je '25

Ind 114:246 F 28 '25 150w

"The work is a marvel in its accuracy and the extent of its information. I may add that it is well worthy the attention of those learned men who discuss the theater with more volubility than knowledge, and to whom the names, Weber and Fields, suggest merely a humorous entertainment suited less to collegiate taste than to that of the masses." J. L. Ford

+ Int Bk R p325 Ap '25 1350w

Reviewed by C. P. Sawyer

Lit R p6 Ja 31 '25 1300w

"This book, crammed with the quips and characters and melodies of forty years, is history." Elizabeth Vincent

+ New Repub 41:262 Ja 28 '25 1350w

Reviewed by H. J. Mankiewicz

+ N Y Times p7 Ja 18 '25 2150w

"It is vastly diverting." Frank Sullivan

+ N Y World p9e Ja 18 '25 550w

"If Mr. Isman errs, it is in unimportant details which he has perhaps made a little more bizarre and amusing than facts warranted. I give him credit for his attempt to make permanent the fame of an entertainment that delighted playgoers of every class and was entirely free from any taint of vulgarity or unclean suggestion." J. L. Ford

ISMAN, FELIX—Continued

+ — Outlook 139:148 Ja 28 '25 1450w

"Felix Isman has written their personal and professional history and very well he has written it, even when his style is somewhat suggestive of the imaginative press agent. But the remarkable story he has to tell, bearing all the marks of essential truth upon the face of it, is none the worse for an occasional clash of high coloring." J. R. Towse

+ Sat R of Lit 1:524 F 14 '25 1200w

"The famous 'team' of Weber and Fields, and their admirers as well, are fortunate in the biographer who has told their story. Mr Isman is himself of the profession and he has had a rich fund of anecdotes to draw from, and he has told his story with a breeziness and sympathy that are catching."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 F 11 '25 900w

"An absorbing story."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:419 Je '25 280w

Wis Lib Bul 21:140 My '25

IVES, FREDERICK WALTER. Home conveniences. (Harper's handbooks) 219p il $1.50 Harper

643 Domestic economy. Domestic engineering 24-22384

This little book in the Harper's handbooks series is intended to aid the householder in the selection of things that make for comfort about the house—heating, ventilation, cooking and laundry equipment, plumbing, lighting, refrigeration, etc.

Booklist 21:139 Ja '25

"The volume is well illustrated and indexed and is deserving a place on the householder's book shelf and also among reference books in home management." A. R. VanMeter

+ J Home Econ 17:166 Mr '25 250w

Pratt Technical Books p23 '24

"Concise and up to date book."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:86 Mr '25

J

JACKS, LAWRENCE PEARSALL. Challenge of life. 102p $1.25 Doran [2s 6d Hodder & S.] 170 Conduct of life 25-8459

Dr Jacks's Hibbert lectures for 1924 are a challenge to "an engagement very difficult"—a call to live on the heroic level, to tackle hard tasks and perplexing problems, to resist the life of ease and the "right to be happy."

Booklist 21:325 Je '25

"As virilely stimulating as they are humanely interesting. Their appeal is both wide and deep." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv Ap '25 90w

"The writer's message and views are excellent, even though there be nothing new about them." W. P. H. K.

+ — Cath World 122:137 O '25 220w

Cleveland p92 S '25

J Religion 5:448 J1 '25 60w

"It is a stimulating book, and the philosophy is a credit to the militant philosopher who produced it." E. A. Bradford

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 19 '25 920w

N Y World p6m Ap 5 '25 80w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

Sat R of Lit 1:852 Je 27 '25 220w

World Tomorrow 8:383 D '25 20w

JACKS, LAWRENCE PEARSALL. Faith of a worker. 122p $1.25 Doran

170 Religion. Conduct of life

In his new book, which is the sequel to an earlier one, "The challenge of life," Principal Jacks unfolds a faith which shall have power to lift the labor of the worker from a meaningless process of repetition with death at the end of the process, into something with spiritual meaning capable of meeting the challenge of death.

Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '25 220w

"Principal Jacks' writings have always dealt with ultimate problems and, for the most part, optimistically. On this occasion, however, one felt a little less of the vividness and of the intellectual aggressiveness which characterized his earlier work and correspondingly more of a mystical attitude, an approach mystical both in its calm assurance and in the fixedness with which its gaze was directed toward a higher realm."

Springf'd Republican p6 D 6 '25 480w

JACKS, LAWRENCE PEARSALL. Responsibility and culture. 86p $1.50 Yale univ. press 901 Civilization. Social ethics 24-31066

In his Yale lectures on the Responsibility of citizenship, Dr Jacks first answers the question "Is civilization sick?" His reply is hopeful. Civilization is half-grown, rather than sick, and in need of education rather than remedies. He believes that man is created not for happiness but for activity and that his responsibility consists in making his life, thru labor, productive of real value both for himself and for others. The last lecture, on International trusteeship is an argument for the League of nations which he regards as "the most difficult enterprise on which the good-will of the Christian nations has ever embarked. The most difficult, but the most promising, the most fruitful, the most splendid, the most worth while."

Booklist 21:228 Mr '25

"Dr. Jacks has given America, especially educated America, a challenge that is both searching and demanding."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 14 '25 270w

"Should have a very strong appeal to every American citizen. It is a book which every college man and woman would do well to read, for it presents a point of view that is elevating and ennobling and will prove an incentive and encouragement to the natural idealism of youth." J. G. Hibben

+ Sat R of Lit 1:724 My 2 '25 600w

"In these, the Yale Lectures on the Responsibility of Citizenship, Professor Jacks discusses, in his own lucid and charming style, the present state of civilization, and our attitude towards it. We think American idealism will respond to the clear and cogent appeal of this little book."

+ Spec 135:78 J1 11 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p143 F 26 '25 320w

JACKSON, SIR THOMAS GRAHAM, 1st² bart. Architecture. 366p $8 (25s) Macmillan 720.9 Architecture—History

This is a study of European architecture, its origins and the cross currents of influence in its development. The study is divided into two great periods, the first, from the fifth to the fifteenth century when architecture developed from within, unrestricted by rules, and the second, that of the Renaissance, when following the discovery of the Vitruvian manuscript with its minute directions, architects began to go by the book, and to follow traditions and rules. The book is illustrated and there is at the close a chronological table of the great architectural examples referred to in the text.

"Rarely have the realism and romance of architecture been so skilfully and vividly presented as in these pages." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 19 '25 820w

"It is often, of necessity, somewhat in outline or considerably condensed. But it is always interesting, for the author has in marked degree the knack of retaining in his subject its human values."

+ N Y Times p18 D 13 '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p783 N 26 '25 1550w

JACKSON, WILLIAM MARVIN. What men do. 297p $1.40 Macmillan

374.1 Business. Profession, Choice of 25-5411

"A book which has for its field the study of business as a whole. The purposes of the study may be stated briefly as follows: (1) to give young people generally a better understanding of the world of business, (2) to bring high-school pupils into closer touch with the business world about them, and (3) to aid young men and young women in choosing their vocations. The treatment may be characterized as being more concerned with supplying information about business structure than with providing vocational guidance. It is not planned as a textbook for class discussion but rather as reading material for pupils. Each chapter is brief and is followed by a set of instructions for observation and research. The observations made by the pupils in accordance with the instructions, rather than the text material, are recommended as the bases for class discussions."—School R

"Mr. Jackson has apparently written as simply and as plainly as he can; but with the whole business cycle covered and practically all industries mentioned. There are many points which are not treated in a manner adapted to the average mind of a child in the early 'teens. 'What Men Do' gives a very good bird's-eye view of modern business and the interrelation and interdependence of its various integral units; and it is written with an eye to the needs of the untrained and inexperienced mind, so that a general orientation may take place, and the path to a definite educational or business training may be cleared."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 6 '25 220w

"The book will be useful as a basic text for classes in occupations and can be used as a collateral text in social-history or economics classes. Probably it is best adapted for senior high school students, although it might profitably be employed in the last year of the junior high school." G. M. Hoyt

El School J 26:154 O '25 400w

"As a whole, the volume is a useful exposition written in a clear and illuminating style of the whole structure of business by which modern civilization is maintained and of its component parts."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 26 '25 320w

"Its chief value for use in high school is to supply reading material which will arouse interest and inculcate a desire for further study and observation." J. M. McCallister

School R 33:793 D '25 450w

JACOBI, MARY (PUTNAM) (MRS ABRAHAM JACOBI). Life and letters; ed. by Ruth Putnam; foreword by George Haven Putnam. 381p il $3.50 Putnam

B or 92 25-5667

"The 'Life and Letters of Mary Putnam Jacobi' is a workmanlike biography. The author has placed the emphasis correctly on the efforts made by Mary Putnam to obtain a medical education and her success in this struggle."—Springf'd Republican

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 22 '25 650w

Reviewed by L: C. Johnson, M.D.

N Y Tribune p9 My 3 '25 600w

"In this period when so many biographies are published, and many of them compiled by writers of psychological or other esoteric purpose, the work of Ruth Putnam in this book stands out for its normality. Miss Putnam does not belong to the iconoclastic or psychological school; instead she takes the attitude that most of Mary Jacobi's personal happiness and unhappiness were but her peculiar share of ordinary human experience and that the part of her which belongs to the public is her life of social service and her preparation for that life. Thus the biography is lifted out of the realm of popular writing into an enlightening chapter in the history of the intellectual advancement of women."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 220w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p385 Je 4 '25 180w

"The letters from France, covering the period of the Franco-Prussian war, are especially interesting."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:198 Jl '25

JACOBS, JOSEPH. Jesus as others saw Him. [new ed] 230p $2.50 B. G. Richards co., inc., 414 Madison av., N.Y.

Jesus Christ 25-4996

"A Jewish view of the life of the Nazarene is given in 'Jesus as Others Saw Him.' There is a preface by Israel Abrahams of Cambridge University and an introduction by Harry A. Wolfson of Harvard University. The life story of Jesus is in the form of a series of epistles purported to have been written in the year 54 A.D." (Bookm) The book was first published in the middle nineties, but attracted little attention and soon was out of print.

"If prejudice between Jew and Christian is ever to be supplanted by understanding, this book should help. There is imagination, scholarship, and literary genius in this book of a distinguished modern English critic and a leading Jewish literary figure." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv Je '25 100w

Boston Transcript p5 My 2 '25 280w

"Merely as a piece of historical fiction the book is extremely interesting. It presents a more appealing and authentic figure of Jesus than any other book of the last half century. There is also a powerful collateral interest, the essential purpose of the book, to fix the attention of the modern rationalist upon the conventional Jewish attitude toward Jesus and the Christian attitude toward the Jewish life out of which Jesus arose." Alvin Johnson

+ New Repub 42:244 Ap 22 '25 1700w

N Y Times p17 Jl 5 '25 860w

"The late Mr. Joseph Jacobs was one of those rare men whose erudition does not dull their brilliancy, whose scholarship does not blunt their grace. If at times he erred in his facts, it was always as intrepid genius errs—only to achieve greater truth. In 'Jesus as Others Saw Him' he errs more than once, but only to make his picture the more real and convincing."

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 12 '25 220w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 16 '25 750w

JACOBSON, C. ALFRED. Pronouncing chemical formula speller and contest guide. 279p $4 Williams & Wilkins

540.3 Chemistry—Nomenclature. Chemicals

"The present volume contains about 2850 names of inorganic chemical compounds together with their formulas, more than 1000 names and formulas of the more common organic compounds and 300 minerals. In addition to these three lists of compounds the volume contains 1554 questions and answers covering the typical chemical reactions of all the accredited chemically active elements."—Intro.

JACOBSON, C. ALFRED—Continued

"The book shows the experience and watchfulness of both author and publisher and must approach their ideal, 'Sans Tache.' It is attractive and well suited to its purpose." A. L. Smith

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:767 J1 '25 220w

JACQUELINE, and four other stories from the French. 277p $2 Minton, Balch, & co.

Short stories—Collections 25-24590

"The first of these stories, 'Jacqueline,' has been played in a dramatized version by the Guitrys. It is a strikingly dramatic story both in theme and in the manner of handling. It has the gruesomely cold-blooded realism of the French writer, who understands human nature and sees no reason for painting it other than it is. It begins with the murder of a woman by a woman, a murder which takes place at almost the hour when her husband and lover are awaiting the coming of the murdered woman to dinner. The story records the awakening of the spiritual nature of a man whom one would scarcely suspect of having a spiritual side at all." (Boston Transcript) Contents: Jacqueline, by Henri Duvernois; The field marshal, by Pierre Mille; Behind the veil, by J. Joseph-Renaud; Nénette, Alice and Marie, by André Warnod; The old maids, by Maurice Level.

"The most striking of the five stories is 'The Old Maids,' by Maurice Level. It is the best story of a distinctive collection."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 260w
Cleveland p87 S '25

"All of the stories are excellent of their kind. Three in particular are characterized by an intense experience of life and a plastic mastery of technique."

+ N Y Times p8 My 3 '25 700w

"'Jacqueline,' by M. Duvernois, discloses the most substantial qualities and the greatest of all the stories. The others are dominantly drab or exciting, depending upon one's mood."

+ — N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 130w

"The stories are all competent, some of them admirably finished, they have well-managed plots and well-understood characters. But they are for the most part disappointingly denotative; they suggest nothing further than they say, they are lacking in creative largeness. Their very competence seems to arise from a literature harassed by too much technical perfection."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:51 Ag 15 '25 260w

JAGENDORF, MORITZ ADOLPH, ed. One-act plays for young folks; stage settings and il. by James Shute. 220p $2 Brentano's

812 Children's plays 24-28252

"This is a group of thirteen one-act plays for children between the ages of six and fifteen. Mr. Jagendorf's book is the outcome of association with 'The Children's Playhouse,' a children's theatre at the Mohegan Modern School at Peekskill." (Sat R of Lit) Contents: Which is witch? by Alice Rostetter; The sing-a-song man, by Florence C. Comfort; The garden at the zoo, by J. Farrar; Five ghosts, by R. Wright; Bumbo and Scrumbo and Blinky, by M. Jagendorf; The password, by Helen C. Crew; In the kitchen of the king, by Lillian B. Lawler; Mother Goose drops in, by J. Shipley; The sandman's brother, by T. C. O'Donnell; The heritage, by Nina Purdy; The East Wind's revenge, by S. Janney; Mr Bunny's prize, by Frances Cavanagh; Once in a hundred years, by M. Jagendorf.

Booklist 21:200 F '25

Cleveland p5 Ja '25

"A collection of plays for children's amateur production is always welcomed by people interested in dramatics as entertainment. 'One-Act Plays for Young Folks' makes a delightful addition to that class of book." H. E.

+ Int Bk R p815 N '25 320w

"This book is not a perfect collection, but a very excellent one. Moreover, it possesses one virtue which marks it from most books of its kind. All the plays are actable plays." Joseph Schildkraut

+ Lit R p12 N 29 '24 600w

"A number of these plays are extremely brief; all are diverting, even though the charm at times runs rather thin. But the general idea of a children's theatre with children's fantasies enacted therein by children seems to us praiseworthy, and we wish Mr. Jagendorf's venture all success. It may yet produce a masterpiece."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:387 D 13 '24 200w

"This book will be welcome to those engaged in teaching or caring for the 'young idea.'"

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:139 F '25 100w

"It is plays like these—rare enough if their scarcity in so careful a collection is any indication—which raise a standard that children can respect and gain by studying." Adelaide Nichols

+ World Tomorrow 8:314 O '25 450w

JAMES, HERMAN GERLACH. Brazil after a century of independence. 587p il $4 Macmillan
918.1 Brazil 25-9569

"Professor Herman G. James has spent much time in South America and is the author of several books on the republics to the south of the United States. The first five chapters contain a historical survey of the country down to the present time. Then follows a chapter on the governmental system which, together with two later chapters devoted to the individual states, is naturally of greatest interest to the student of government. The remainder of the book deals with the natural resources, population, agriculture, industries, transportation and commerce of the country."—Am Pol Sci R

"A thorough and systematic account."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:846 N '25 300w

Booklist 22:69 N '25

"Mr. James's solid volume is to be welcomed as providing serious facts. It is a book for business men rather than for amateurs of travel." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 24 '25 1000w

"This is not a great book, but it is a good book, and good books on Brazil are scarce. It will form a useful handbook for general information, and it goes much beyond the scope of the usual handbook in that it gives a clear, clean, honest, and fair vision of the Brazilians in an account untouched alike by the golden glow of official propaganda and the venom of prejudice." J. F. O'H.

+ Cath World 121:857 S '25 350w

"An authoritative handbook on Brazil, complete in detail and general scope for the information of both student and traveler."

+ Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 20w

"A well-balanced volume, appreciative but yet critical, and written from the point of view of the student and not the globe-trotter or financier. It contains much of scientific interest, and has a useful physiographical introduction, which books of this nature too often lack."

+ Nature 116:672 N 7 '25 180w

"If I were going to Brazil I would no more think of going without Mr. James's book than I would think of leaving behind my passport. The book comes at a time when the Latin-American Union is pardonably indignant at brusque diplomacy. If there were more books written with the modesty and the friendliness of this author there would be less high-handed diplomacy." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p3 S 6 '25 300w

Outlook 140:342 J1 1 '25 10w

"A compact and readable account of Brazil from the pen of a wide-awake American who has had personal contacts with the land and people and is able to tell Americans the things that they are most eager to know about the greatest as well as the youngest of the South American republics."

+ R of Rs 72:111 J1 '25 200w

"He has had no great amount of space at his disposal and was bound to leave out many things—and then he has, as he explains in his preface, taken a liking to the country during a year's stay in it. But we feel convinced that Mr. James is candid in what he has elected to say, and we have noted nothing which is positively misleading."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p486 J1
23 '25 600w

JAMES, MONTAGUE RHODES. Warning to the curious; and other ghost stories. 200p $1.80 Longmans [5s E. Arnold]

Contents: The haunted doll's house; The uncommon prayerbook; A neighbor's landmark; A view from a hill; A warning to the curious; An evening's entertainment.

"The ingredients of Dr. James's ghost stories are promising, but he does little with them. He tells his anecdotes well, but they remain anecdotes." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:326 N 28 '25 20w

"These new stories are not so good as The Ghost Stories of an Antiquary, but they have one quality in common—they are charmingly written."

+ New Statesman 26:supxxiv D 12 '25 120w

"His book is indeed 'A Warning to the Curious'; however, no warning would hold back the readers from a James ghost story, so the parents of small boys are advised to allow the book to be finished at a sitting, preferably in the middle of the day."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 3 '26 820w

"Dr. James must be permitted an idiosyncrasy or two, and perhaps it is only fastidious taste that will account them as drawbacks. All the same it is a pleasure to record that the wondrous charm of the opening tale, 'The Haunted Doll's House,' is unaffected in this respect, thus assuring a flawless send-off to one of the most refreshing fireside books a jaded reader can wish for."

+ Spec 135:1107 D 12 '25 700w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p798 N
26 '25 300w

JAMES, WILL. Drifting cowboy. 241p il $3.50 Scribner

917.8 Cowboys 25-21273

Sketches of cowboy life, written in cowboy dialect and illustrated by the author. Among the exploits he describes are wrestling with bucking bronchos in the rodeo, acting in a cowboy picture for a big western movie, range-riding in the Northwest, and the making over of a Pilgrim into a cowboy.

"A notable successor to his 'Cowboys, North and South.' Mr. James tells his stories exceedingly well, his use of the vernacular being especially admirable, but it is in his drawings that he runs off with all the prizes. They are as chock full of action as an outlaw pony upon the touch of the hated spur; as vigorously alive as a young bronc on a frosty morning." Herschel Brickell

+ Bookm 62:611 Ja '26 420w

"As an artist of bronchos and of cowboys James has no superiors."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 21 '24 240w

"Himself a cowboy, he writes, by a miracle, as he and they talked. No attempt is made to conventionalize his style or glorify his subject. It is real 'Western stuff,' honest and hard working and humorous." D. R.

+ Ind 115:588 N 21 '25 100w

"Will James has produced, probably unconsciously, an amazing book. It has a subtle charm that I can not convey in words." Leslie Higginbotham

+ Int Bk R p40 D '25 1150w

"You take, for instance, a cowboy who has roped steers under red suns and rainy skies, over hot sands and on mountains and through snows, and in between red buttes and cactus plants; who has not only soaked in the essence and atmosphere, but is able to put it all down on paper with breath-taking convincingness and no apparent effort at all; and who, on top of all that, can draw pictures instinct with life and action and humor, which almost tear out of the page as one looks at them; who can give us a new saga of the new Pathfinder, written by Pathfinder himself. Impossible? But here he is." R. W. Thompson

+ Lit R p12 N 28 '25 330w

Reviewed by P. H. Boynton

New Repub 45:225 Ja 13 '26 20w

"James, first of all, is a cowboy. Next he is a remarkable black-and-white artist. And, to complete the combination, he has an unvarnished but singularly salty and effective style." Stanley Walker

+ N Y Times p15 D 20 '25 820w

Reviewed by J. E. Mitchell

N Y World p6m O 18 '25 550w

"Mr. James is an artist. He is, first and foremost, a graphic artist, with a command of the pencil and a knowledge of anatomy, and with a wealth of action in his pictures. Laurence Stallings, writing of his first book, 'Cowboys North and South,' says even further that Will James has a distinct literary style. He has all of that and more, and the Scribners have had the good judgment not to translate the book into English."

+ Outlook 141:486 N 25 '25 320w

"Everyone who has followed recent American literature with an eye for the unusual and the picturesque, is acquainted with 'Cowboys, North and South,' by Will James. The pictures, which are all original drawings by the author, may have been the original attraction, but if they have the qualities of individuality and fidelity to nature, the same is true of the text, which is as graphic a transcription of cowboy language as could possibly be put in print."

+ R of Rs 72:665 D '25 150w

"The book is very attractive in its makeup as well as in the author-artist's work."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a O 25 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p743 N 5
'25 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p800 N
26 '25 150w

JANES, GEORGE MILTON. Who should have wealth, and other papers. 170p $1.50 Morehouse

330.4 Economics 25-6418

"[The author is] professor of economics at Washington and Jefferson College. The title paper, prepared originally as a college class lecture, was later much more widely disseminated. The other essays in the volume deal with such subjects as 'Das Kapital,' 'The Non-Partizan League,' 'Increase in Land Values,' 'Method in the Social Sciences,' and 'Who Pays for War.'"—Bookm

Am Econ R 15:548 S '25 70w

"Studies of pertinent and timely questions. The paper from which the book takes its name is a particularly well reasoned economic treatise." J. G.

+ Bookm 61:adv Je '25 100w

J Religion 5:447 J1 '25 10w

"A pleasantly written and dispassionately critical collection of papers on economic and social subjects."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 Mr 31 '25 500w

JASSPON, ETHEL REED, and BECKER, BEATRICE. Ritual and dramatized folkways. 187p il $2.50 Century

793 Drama in education. Children's plays 25-11569

Dramatizations of Bible stories, folk literature and ritual for use in school, church, camp, club and settlement. Directions are given for costumes and stage settings and suggestions for incidental music.

Booklist 22:108 D '25

"All the little plays and rituals have been tried out and have proved themselves capable of being produced by young people with only the ordinary meager equipment. The music for the plays has been carefully chosen and is suggested in the front of the book. One especially interesting feature of these dramatizations is the emphasis laid on the value of pantomime, where a child works out suggestive action rather than being hampered by lines which he must learn."

+ Boston Transcript p5 J1 11 '25 250w

"The title of this book is against it. It smacks of the 'project method' and the trail of it is clearly marked in the content, notably in the association of uncredited outstanding quotations from literature and the free use of well known music with the dramatization of such ideas as are presented in the 'Friendship Ceremony.'" A. C. Moore

+ N Y Tribune p6 J1 26 '25 500w

"The amount of the material is, of course, not great, in such a small book; but the range is wide, and the reader is left with the feeling that here is a great field which will yield large harvests in the coming years."

+ Survey 55:251 N 15 '25 130w

Wis Lib Bul 21:229 O '25

JAYNE, WALTER ADDISON. Healing gods of 2 ancient civilizations. (Philip Hamilton McMillan memorial publication fund) 569p il $5 Yale univ. press [23s Milford]

290 Mythology. Medicine, Ancient 25-19059

From archeological studies, classical literature, and other sources, the author has gathered the voluminous material on ancient methods of religious healing and the pagan healing gods. Each chapter treats one of the ancient civilizations, describing its religious rites and ceremonies in general, and giving a brief sketch of the gods to whom healing powers were ascribed.

"A book that will engage the interest primarily of philological and archaeological students and physicians with an inclination to study the obscure origins of their profession."

Outlook 141:610 D 16 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p758 N 12 '25 100w

JEFFERS, ROBINSON. Roan stallion, Tamar and other poems. 253p $3 Boni & Liveright 811 25-24489

Some of these poems have appeared in an earlier printing. New ones are included with the earlier ones in the present edition. Many of the collection are long narrative poems of tremendous power and repellent theme.

"There is no question that Mr. Jeffers has amazing powers of expression. There are pages and lines of great strength and beauty. There is a fertile if somewhat febrile imagination. . . . 'Roan Stallion' is an unforgettable and thoroughly unpleasant performance. It is only fair to warn many readers that they will be horrified by its magnificent but perverse imagining." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:604 Ja '26 200w

"Mr. Jeffers's style is distinctly more prosaic than poetical. Often he seems to consciously employ a jagged, inverted order which tends to ruin the sense. With the exception of a few lines which achieve a grandeur of expression and a remarkable power to portray character, we may say that here is an extreme realist whose forthcoming work should be awaited with anticipation."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '26 280w

"The most rousing volume of verse I have seen in a long time. The neglect of the book is decidedly to the discredit of New York criticism, as the necessity of its being printed at the author's expense is a disgrace to American publishing. Few recent volumes of any sort have struck me with such force as this one has; few are as rich with the beauty and strength which belongs to genius alone." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 120:268 Mr 11 '25 650w (Review of Tamar and other poems)

"All that was said a few months ago about Robinson Jeffers will have to be said again with greater emphasis. For 'Roan Stallion, Tamar, and Other Poems' not only contains those poems which, given an opportunity to strike the critical world, struck then so hard; it marches forth with several important new poems, one of which I am sure is a masterpiece." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 121:599 N 25 '25 600w

"This reviewer, reading Jeffers, felt somewhat as Keat's professed to feel, on looking into Chapman's Homer. The opening poem, Tamar, is a powerful dramatic narrative on the stern Greek model, given a native setting and written in a free verse that has in it the long roll and swing of the elder seas. Jeffers has his own style, which is worthy of his high moods and gnarled thinking. For there is thinking in these lyrics, which lifts them out of the category attractive to Mr. Moore, and on to the plane of great writing. It is possible not to share the Oriental philosophy expressed in certain of his poems, but it is impossible to have strong poetry without the force of some equal conviction beating like a heart in its body." Babette Deutsch

+ New Repub 43:23 My 27 '25 550w (Review of Tamar and other poems)

"To us it seems that there are in this book pages, many, many pages, which are equaled only by the very great." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p14 Ja 3 '26 800w

"I am convinced that no poet of equal potential importance has appeared on the American scene since Robinson. The net effect of 'Tamar' is that of a magnificent tour de force. It is enough. Nothing as good of its kind has been written in America." James Rorty

+ N Y Tribune p1 Mr 1 '25 950w (Review of Tamar and other poems)

Reviewed by Joseph Auslander

N Y World p6m Ja 3 '26 550w

"Mr. Jeffers's book contains evidences of creative power of the first order. Mr. Jeffers will go his own way. We certainly cannot predict how far he will go." W. R. Benét

+ Outlook 141:674 D 30 '25 220w

"No one, I think, can forget the thrill of discovery that heightened as page after page of 'Tamar' revealed an overwhelmingly poetic imagination, a firm grasp of dramatic values, a profound seriousness, and a fecundity that danced at white heat through his 'mighty line.' Surer than 'Tamar,' more definite in line and more economical in conception, 'Roan Stallion' is a magnificent achievement." Edwin Seaver

+ Sat R of Lit 2:492 Ja 16 '26 550w

JEFFERY, JEFFERY E., pseud. (JEFFERY EARDLEY MARSTON). An octave. 312p $2 Little

25-15847

Tony Rixon, an easy-going, likable, upper middle-class Englishman, with a family and a business suited to his taste, a sufficient income and an attractive wife, comes upon a week when his comfortable existence is thoroughly shaken. He is beset by a succession of troubles which threaten the wreck of home and business. Having always followed the line of least resistance,

Tony nerves himself to "take arms against a sea of troubles," when an unexpected legacy provides an easy return to his old life of security and he is relieved of the necessity for making the effort which he knows would have been for the good of his soul. Defeated by good fortune, he falls back again into his easy, comfortable existence.

"A tale founded upon trite and hackneyed circumstances but told with delicate humor and excellent characterization."

+ — Booklist 22:73 N '25

"Sophisticated and intelligently playful, it imitates no school at present fashionable. In short, 'An Octave' has a manner of its own, and its material is worked with the fresh skill of a master-craftsman stimulated by his task." R. B. MacDougall

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 15 '25 1500w

"A well-written, agreeable, not too ambitious, dexterous novel."

+ Ind 115:276 S 5 '25 150w

"Like a taste for olives, for primitives or for Browning, a relish for the type of delicate humor that is in the latest novel of Mr. J. E. Jeffery is acquired rather than innate. Readers who can not appreciate the irony beneath his scenes will find the story well constructed, pleasantly told, possibly, but composed of tiresome, fiction-worn material. Those who are keener, however, will revel in the very situations which appear most conventional to others. For, under the novel's antiquated groupings, a delightfully stimulating mockery lies ready to be enjoyed." Sidney Shultz

+ Int Bk R p679 S '25 320w

"An amusing piece of virtuosity; amusing because here the bored middle-class can see their own life realistically represented, yet packed with incident, and dowered with what we all want—money and harmony—with the minimum of painful effort." J. Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:776 Ap 11 '25 150w

"From reading it comes much the same pleasant afterglow, much the same satisfied and reminiscient chuckle as follow attendance at a comedy mellowed by the art of Cyril Maude. And, indeed, Mr. Jeffery deals with a like well-groomed phase of life—life in a London of comfort and cultivation—to that which Mr. Maude has for years so agreeably depicted."

+ N Y Times p8 Ag 30 '25 900w

"It is a simple theme, and not a particularly new one, but Mr. Jeffery has made it engrossing. Every character is drawn firmly and surely, even those that are the merest sketches." Ruth Von Phul

+ N Y Tribune p8 S 6 '25 750w

Outlook 141:29 S 2 '25 70w

"Mr. Jeffery tells his story with such ease, truth, and humour; his people are so real, his incidents so convincing; the whole tone and texture of his work are so entirely right for what they are and have to do, that there is no suggestion of inadequacy, and the interest is lively from the first page to the last." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:413 Ap 18 '25 460w

"This book is, for what it assumes to be, entirely successful,—an entertaining novel slight in theme and treatment which really 'comes off.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 2:128 S 12 '25 220w

Spec 134:898 My 30 '25 160w

"Mr. Jeffery has succeeded in doing a small thing well. He has written a vivacious story of our own times without attempting to sound emotional depths or to suggest psychological subtleties. His plan is quite an attractive one."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p220 Mr 26 '25 350w

JEFFREY, EDWARD CHARLES. Coal and civilization. 178p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan 553.2 Coal 25-3328

In this age of coal "those nations which are not fortunate enough to live over seams of coal, are much at a disadvantage in the hurly-burly struggle for existence." The book explains the structure and origin of coal deposits, the organization of the various coals, their uses in the arts and the essential part played by coal and its products in modern civilization.

"Style stiff and uninteresting, but the text is packed with detailed information."

+ — Booklist 21:365 J1 '25

"In his work with extinct plants, Mr. Jeffery has developed original methods for the study of the origin, structure, nature, and best uses of various coals. This volume gives the results of this phase of his investigation."

Harvard Business R 4:125 O '25 80w

"One wishes he would expand his earlier chapters which are most interesting for the layman and all too short."

+ — Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 50w

"The treatment is one-sided and dogmatic. The author manifests a contemptuous tone toward views of others which, in itself, naturally engenders antagonism and disrespect. In the opinion of the reviewer, the author has contributed a great deal to the subject of coal in this extremely readable and well-illustrated book. But just how far he is to be followed in his conclusions is not so easy to say." R. T. C.

+ — J Geol 33:749 O '25 800w

"This work may be considered as consisting of two parts, namely, a description of coal, its origin and structure on one side, and the application of coal in the service of mankind on the other. The former is of great interest and contains much novel matter, as might be expected from so distinguished a botanist as Dr. Jeffery. The second theme is, however, very indifferently handled and forms a sad contrast to the former."

+ — Nature 116:93 J1 18 '25 320w

"This volume deserves a serious study not only by the sociological student but by the mentally curious."

+ N Y World p7m F 22 '25 120w

R of Rs 71:336 Mr '25 130w

St Louis p341 S '25

"Professor Jeffery has put into a valuable book the record of his original research in the structure and development of coal. But it is quite certain he has made a bad marriage between this primary data—the outgrowth of his work as a morphologist—and his observations on the Coal Age et al, which, however, true and significant, are popular science thickly and stodgily written, and a baser metal than the other." C. R. Walker

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:744 My 9 '25 580w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p339 My 14 '25 80w

JEFFREY, HARRY R. Wood-finishing. 177p il $1.50 Manual arts press

698.1 Wood finishing 25-3327

This textbook on wood finishing is intended primarily for use in the school shop. Beginning with instructions for preparing the wood it treats staining, filling, varnishing, polishing and enameling. Formulas are given for stains and fillers and directions for refinishing old furniture and treating floors. All the steps in the various processes are carefully described.

"Good for high school students and amateurs."

+ Booklist 21:365 J1 '25

"He has emphasized the creation of something beautiful as well as useful, partly because he believes the manual-training courses have overlooked the artistic side of the work. The book is organized in suitable textbook form and is illustrated."

+ El School J 26:158 O '25 80w

"Primarily a school text, but valuable to the amateur who does his own home work."

+ Pratt Technical Books p21 '24

JEFFRIES, ZAY, and ARCHER, ROBERT S.

Science of metals. 460p il $5 McGraw

669 Metals

24-21542

"The treatment of the subject can be gathered from the titles of the twelve chapters. The introduction covers definitions of structure, physical properties and methods of testing metals and alloys. Then follow Electrons, Atoms and Molecules; the Crystalline Structure of Metals; the Amorphous Metal Hypothesis; Grain Growth and Recrystallization; Mechanical Properties of Metals; Compounds of Metals; Metallic Solid Solutions; Constitution of Alloys; Structure and Properties of Aggregates; Hardness of Metals; the Hardening of Steel."—J Phys Chem

"They are to be congratulated on giving us something well worth-while; something quite new and along original lines, and yet always essentially practical. It will appeal to the engineer in a way which previous books on metallography have failed to do. This book is not a composite of previous books, padded here and there with more or less new material—it is absolutely original from beginning to end."—W. Campbell

+ J Phys Chem 29:616 My '25 2500w

"The chapter on the structure and properties of aggregates is a suggestive survey of this subject, while the discussion of the hardening of steel by quenching contained in the last chapter is worthy of its great importance. The book is well printed and illustrated, and if it reaches a second edition, as we hope it will do, it would be greatly improved by suitable editing and some diminution in the number of repetitions."—H. C. H. Carpenter

+ — Nature 115:793 My 23 '25 1050w

JENKINS, HESTER DONALDSON. Educational ambassador to the Near East. 314p il $2.50 Revell

B or 92 Patrick, Mary Mills. Constantinople woman's college 25-21036

"A colleague and admiring friend here gives a clear and sympathetic account of the work accomplished by Mary Mills Patrick as president of a distinguished educational institution in the Orient. Sent to Turkey as a missionary in 1870 by the American Mission Board, Miss Patrick became a teacher in the American High School at Constantinople, then president, in 1890, of the newly chartered American College for Girls, which developed into Constantinople Woman's College. She retired in 1924. Dr. Jenkins describes Miss Patrick's achievements as educator, organizer, internationalist worker for peace, feminist and religious leader."—N Y Tribune

"This is more than the story of an individual, it is the interpretation of an institution and the dawning of a new day for women in the Levant. Dr. Jenkins had excellent material to draw on and she has used it well. The story is as fascinating as a novel and enlightening both as to the development of womanhood and this investment of America's best in the service of others."

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 1 '25 300w

"Miss Jenkins, has told the story with discrimination, with a clear eye for whatever is humanly interesting and with an excellent sense of proportion."

+ N Y Times p1 J1 5 '25 500w

"The volume is full of interest for teachers everywhere and contains much for the general reader as well."

+ N Y Tribune p9 J1 12 '25 130w

Outlook 141:30 S 2 '25 20w

JENNINGS, HERBERT SPENCER. Prometheus; or, Biology and the advancement of man. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 86p $1 Dutton

575 Heredity. Environment

25-18775

This little book sketches briefly and simply man's biological background, the Mendelian rule of inheritance and the relation of heredity and environment.

Booklist 22:105 D '25

Reviewed by T. S. Knowlson

Lit R p2 N 14 '25 100w

"Professor Jennings gives us a lucid statement of what he conceives to be the present situation of knowledge in relation to genetic science."

+ Nation and Ath 38:296 N 21 '25 160w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 N 1 '25 820w

"This volume, by the Director of the Zoological Laboratory in the Johns Hopkins University is one of the most remarkable that has yet appeared in the 'To-day and To-morrow Series.' Certainly the information it contains will be new to most educated laymen."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p892 D 24 '25 900w

JEPSON, SELWYN. Rogues and diamonds. 290p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Harrap]

25-9297

"The hero is a young Englishman, destitute and out of work, whose trials are due largely to a misconceived belief that he has murdered the man responsible for them. A starving fugitive from justice, he is offered immediate work by a stranger, on condition that he observe certain pledges of obedience, secrecy, and integrity. That night the young man saves a desperate girl from suicide in the Thames, and it develops that they are both employed by the same sinister, mysterious individual. Villains, greed, violence, stark fiendishness, plain and fancy, are let loose upon the young couple, and in the conflicting chaos they escape with the legitimate rewards of their perilous exertions."—Sat R of Lit

"Both characters and incidents lack reality, but the plot is thrilling enough to interest the most blasé movie fan—or producer."

— + Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 40w

"The story is cleverly told, and proves Mr. Jepson to be a writer of much inventiveness and considerable skill in portraying people."—Ruth von Phul

+ N Y Tribune p12 My 31 '25 220w

"Here is as excellently fashioned and satisfying a piece of adventure romance as the connoisseur of such productions could desire. It is well written, thrilling, ingeniously designed, and achieves genuine novelty in its departure from the usual exhibitions on view in the mass of mystery fiction."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:919 J1 18 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p121 F 19 '25 150w

JEROME, HARRY. Statistical method. 395p $4 Harper

311 Statistics

24-25107

"While Mr. Jerome's text-book is written from the point of view which associates statistical analysis primarily with the study of economics and sociology, he devotes considerable attention to the methods and devices now used in business forecasting. Among the matters dealt with are long-time trend, seasonal variation, the construction of index numbers, correlation, and the use of averages, ratios, and measures of dispersion. No new methods are introduced and no unusual application of old ones is made, but a clear presentation is given of numerous devices for eliminating from figures the confusing elements which stand in the way of a correct analysis."—Harvard Business R

Reviewed by W. I. King

Am Econ R 15:370 Je '25 350w

"Anyone reading Professor Jerome's book is immediately impressed by two qualities which it possesses; the clearness and simplicity with which it is written and the emphasis given to statistics as an aid in the solution of economic problems." Robert Riegel

+ Ann Am Acad 118:184 Mr '25 760w

Harvard Business R 3:382 Ap '25 130w

"A point of interest in the arrangement is the introduction of graphic methods at the beginning of the book, while the part on sources and the collection of statistical data has been left for a later discussion. His treatment seems all too brief in many cases, but his aim has been to open up ways to those interested in further study. Short, well chosen lists of references at the end of each chapter are an additional aid to the student who wishes to make a more extensive search in a particular field."

+ Pol Sci Q 40:326 Je '25 320w

"Intended primarily as a textbook for students of economics and sociology, this work gives the social worker simply and comprehensively all he needs to know of statistical method—except in cases of particularly complicated problems when expert counsel is desirable anyhow."

+ Survey 53:610 F 15 '25 250w

JETT, DORA CHINN. In tidewater Virginia. 156p il $2.50 The author, 1015 Charles st., Fredericksburg, Va.

917.55 Virginia—Historic houses, etc. Rappahannock river 25-3227

In the attractive pages of this slim buff and brown book there are gathered together photographs, sketches and word pictures of the old Southern mansions along the Rappahannock. Each chapter describes one of these stately old homes and sketches briefly the history of the family to whom it belonged.

"The writer has not the viewpoint of the tourist, but that of the native. Consequently she makes the environment yield interesting local history, the characteristics of the creators of these fine estates, as well as contemporaries."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 11 '25 220w

"This attempt to evoke something of the past from the present substance of the historic homes of the banks and valley of the Rappahannock River is in line with a general literary and historic movement that has recently been showing a good deal of vitality. But it must be said that if the author had been less moved by sentiment concerning these historic homes and more interested in facts about them her little book would have been more valuable. It has over thirty illustrations from photographs and many interesting headpieces."

+ — N Y Times p20 F 22 '25 220w

JEWETT, SARAH ORNE. Best stories; selected and arranged, with a preface, by Willa Cather. Mayflower ed 2v 306;306p $4 Houghton

25-13439

The thirty-five stories in these two volumes have been selected by Willa Cather as representing the finest and most characteristic work of Sarah Orne Jewett. Contents: Volume I, The return; Mrs Todd; The schoolhouse; At the schoolhouse window; Captain Littlepage; The waiting place; The outer island; William; Where pennyroyal grew; The old singers; A strange sail; Poor Joanna; The hermitage; On shell-heap island; The great expedition; A country road; The Bowden reunion; The feast's end; Along shore; A Dunnet shepherdess; The queen's twin; William's wedding; The backward view. Volume II, A white heron; The flight of Betsey Lane; The Dulham ladies; Going to Shrewsbury; The only rose; Miss Tempy's watchers; Martha's lady; The guest of Mrs Timms; The town poor; The Hiltons' holiday; Aunt Cynthia Dallett.

"The art of Sarah Orne Jewett is not false because it is so limited. All art is selective, and each artist is free to govern his own selectivity by his own tastes and talents. Miss Jewett's success in the narrow field she cultivated was such that Miss Cather, who shows herself a fine and generous appreciator, makes bold to classify 'The Country of the Pointed Firs' with 'The Scarlet Letter' and 'Huckleberry Finn' as 'three American books which have the possibility of a long, long life' " G. H. Carson

+ Bookm 61:594 Jl '25 620w

"A splendid collection of New England sketches as true of Maine to-day as when they were written."

+ Dial 79:260 S '25 150w

"Miss Cather's selection of 'The Country of the Pointed Firs' and eleven shorter stories should—along with her preface—do much to rehabilitate this modest mistress of New England narrative."

Nation 121:123 Jl 22 '25 30w

"It is not necessary to insist that the farms painted by Miss Jewett are about as 'realistic' as the England of Alice in Wonderland or of Tennyson's Idylls. Yet these uniformly charming people, so pure of thought, so innocuous in action, so redolent in manner of lavender and lace, are true, although the theatre of their verity is the poetic fancy of Miss Jewett, and the audience which accepts and applauds them is at least in sympathy decrepit. We must all snatch from our coming days the nodding wish to turn from the rot of our world into a sweet-scented realm of senile wishes, in order to enjoy Miss Jewett." Waldo Frank

New Repub 44:204 O 14 '25 1150w

"Miss Jewett is a master of atmosphere, an indispensable quality of real imaginative writing, in which she is one with the masters of her craft. With all her firm characterization and the verisimilitude of her dialogue, it is perhaps the power of creating atmosphere that chiefly makes her work so alive and real. Her brief and lovely descriptions of Maine scenery, so firm and unrheterical, greatly contribute to this, and this scenery, too, is more than a mere background." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 19 '25 3100w

"She drew from reality everything it truly held of poetry and beauty, and set it forth in the sunlight of her own fineness and sweetness and delicate humor and deep and friendly understanding and flawless style. It is delightful to her old lovers, and should bring her many new ones, that so excellent a selection from her work in two such inviting volumes has been made by Miss Willa Cather, whose preface is an admirable miniature study and appreciation of Miss Jewett and her place in American literature."

+ Outlook 140:158 My 27 '25 280w

"Her humor is delicate and kindly. She has none of that lurking acerbity which lent a certain pungency to the early stories of Alice Brown. Her men and women are never 'material'; her sympathy with them is too deep ever to permit her to be tempted into such an attitude. It is a good sign that these two handsome volumes of Miss Jewett's best work are now published and that so artistic a hand as Miss Cather's has made the selection."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 O 12 '25 450w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

JOAD, CYRIL EDWIN MITCHINSON. Introduction to modern political theory. (World's manuals) 128p il $1 Oxford [2s 6d Milford]

320.1 Political science [25-5296]

"In this little book Mr. Joad presents in outline what he considers to be the more important aspects of modern political thought.

JOAD, C. E. M.—Continued

He attempts to discuss the various theories in such a way 'that no previous acquaintance with the subject shall be necessary for their comprehension.' After two chapters on 'The Idealist Theory of the State' and 'Modern Individualism' the rest of the book is devoted to Socialism and Collectivism, Syndicalism and Guild Socialism, Communism and Anarchism, and the general problems of Socialist theory. A short bibliography is added."

—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The author has sketched with admirable clarity and fairness the various subdivisions into which the followers of Marx have grouped themselves,—no small task, when one considers the fine shadings which separate the groups. The main strength of the presentation lies in the utterly dispassionate detachment with which the author sets forth and considers these various theories; he is neither a protagonist nor an antagonist, but he weighs every argument sympathetically." J. H. Leek

+ Ann Am Acad 121:193 S '25 200w

Booklist 21:328 Je '25

"The book will find appreciative readers among students of one of the live and irrepresible problems of the day."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 11 '25 180w

Hist Outlook 16:235 My '25 120w

Lit R p11 Mr 28 '25 70w

New Statesman 24:428 Ja 17 '25 200w

"Not since Lowes Dickinson's delightful 'Modern Symposium' has there appeared a more even-tempered and lucid thumb-nail chart of the winds of political doctrine than this little volume." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p10 F 15 '25 1500w

"A model manual on modern political theory. We warmly recommend this little book and its bibliography to anyone who wants to read about the vital, passionate world of political controversy to-day, but is bewildered in trying to find where to begin."

+ Spec 134:164 Ja 21 '25 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p875 D 18 '24 200w

JOHNSEN, JULIA E., comp. Selected articles on child labor. (Handbook ser.) 371p $2.40 Wilson, H.W.

331.3 Child labor 25-4195

This handbook contains some of the leading facts and discussions relating to child labor—its present status, physical, social and economic costs, educational bearings, legislative action and the international movement in behalf of child labor. Considerable space is given to the proposed Federal amendment, the material on this topic grouped under the general, affirmative and negative discussion. Briefs are included, summing up the leading arguments pro and con, and a bibliography.

"It has an excellent up-to-date bibliography which will be useful."

+ Booklist 21:290 My '25

St Louis p123 My '25

"One of the convenient Wilson handbooks offering up-to-date fact and argument, with brief and bibliography."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:85 Mr '25

JOHNSEN, JULIA E., comp. Selected articles on marriage and divorce. (Handbook ser.) 293p $2.40 Wilson, H.W.

347.6 Marriage. Divorce 25-18569

The need that has been felt for harmonizing our forty-eight divergent state laws on marriage and divorce has at various periods taken the form of agitation for a uniform law, either a Federal law, or uniform legislation for all the states. This Handbook summarizes the various aspects of marriage and divorce that have a bearing on this legislative problem, by means of up-to-date representative reprints, a selected bibliography, and briefs.

Booklist 22:103 D '25

J Home Econ 18:48 Ja '26 70w

JOHNSON, BUFORD JENNETTE. Mental growth of children in relation to rate of growth in bodily development. 160p $3.50 Dutton

136.7 Child study. Mental tests. Psychology, Physiological 25-8288

These are reports with illustrative graphs and tables, covering five years' work of the Bureau of educational experiments, New York city. The nature of the material here collected and analysed is scientific, technical, and therefore of more value to those interested in educational research than to the average parent.

"Dr. Johnson in her book does two things extremely well. She provides important data bearing on the vital relationship between physical growth and mental development, and she makes sound and careful appraisal of the value of such tests as are available for measuring mental capacity." Agnes deLima

+ New Repub 43:157 J1 1 '25 200w

"This report on the observations of children between the ages of two and eleven years is exceedingly valuable." Dr I. S. Will

+ N Y Tribune p8 J1 19 '25 500w

JOHNSON, JAMES WELDON, ed. Book of American Negro spirituals; ed. with an introd., musical arrangements by J. Rosamund Johnson; additional numbers by Lawrence Brown. 187p $3.50 Viking press

784.7 Negro songs 25-23072

A fine collection of those folksongs which are purely the creation of the American negro—the spirituals. Examples of every variety of spiritual are included. Assurance is given in the preface that "in the arrangements, Mr J. Rosamund Johnson and Mr Brown have been true not only to the best traditions of the melodies but also to form. No changes have been made in the form of songs. The only development has been in harmonizations, and these harmonizations have been kept true in character. And so an old-time Negro singer could sing any of the songs through without encountering any innovations that would interrupt him or throw him off."

Booklist 22:148 Ja '26

"Here are gorgeously interesting records of the vocal expressions of a gifted, imaginative, poetic race, dowered with the inestimably precious gift of song and ebullient resistance to material discomforts. No person can read it with any degree of understanding and still feel condescension toward this music, one of the very few gifts to the realm of art and beauty which America has made to the world." Walter White

+ Bookm 62:490 D '25 850w

"His introduction needs to be read by all those who have heard the spirituals sung only as humorous songs by white vaudevillians. The book is made for use on the piano—it is well-bound and opens flat. I do not know of another at the moment that can compare with it for those who are interested in the spirituals." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p2 O 10 '25 200w

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren

Nation 121:707 D 16 '25 520w

"While they quibble over the seeds from which it grew, music lovers will feast upon the fruit, a unique hymnology of richly flavored beauty." Janet Ramsay

+ New Repub 45:168 D 30 '25 550w

"Their preservation is a service to music, both historically and actually; and almost equally a service to poetry. Such intensity and such passion, such fervor of hope, such desperate weariness of body and spirit, and such serenity of assurance as these songs variously reveal, can hardly fail of their effect."

Muna Lee

+ N Y Times p7 O 18 '25 860w

"The compilers of this collection have been so successful in dealing with the manifold problems they have been compelled to face that it is earnestly to be hoped that they may feel encouraged by its reception presently to issue another volume and then another—an entire book might be devoted to Blues or work songs—until all the Negro folksongs that possess interest are assembled in this practical form." Carl Van Vechten

+ N Y Tribune p1 O 25 '25 1500w

"The Johnsons are educated musicians. Thus their book is one of solid dignity and value." H. L. Mencken

+ N Y World p6m N 15 '25 1000w

"The selection is a representative one and shows the Negro's creative musical genius to fine advantage." R. E. Kennedy

+ Sat R of Lit 2:409 D 12 '25 650w

World Tomorrow 8:543 N '25 100w

JOHNSON, STANLEY. Professor. 312p $2 Harcourt

25-8787

"The story of a red-haired professor of English at a small university in Vermont differs from the usual run of college stories because the author is not very much concerned with the students. He throws his spotlight on Dr. J. Tanksley Parkhurst of the faculty. Dr. Parkhurst, like Babbitt, is a baffled personality. He makes love to the co-eds at Thurston and becomes ridiculous. He is getting along in life and refuses to admit it to himself or to others. Finally he marries the daughter of a distinguished member of the faculty."—N Y World

"Just why Mr. Johnson feels it necessary to endow his leading character with all the sinister qualities of Mephistopheles he never explains. However that may be, he has created a very artificial and unconvincing figure who abounds in visions of the erotic. It gives every evidence of being a story told by one who would a story telling go, but finds the path rather unfamiliar."

— Boston Transcript p4 Ap 8 '25 130w

Cleveland p81 J1 '25

"A dreary story which might have been interesting if the author had used more discrimination and variety in the selection of his episodes."

— Ind 114:422 Ap 11 '25 70w

"Mr. Johnson's novel is a brilliant, rousing satire that, it seems to us, achieves almost as perfect a composite portrait of the professor species as Sinclair Lewis drew of the realtor breed in 'Babbitt.'" E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 Je 27 '25 420w

"Satirical in an academic sort of way, and yet tentatively sympathetic, Mr. Johnson in his novel fails to strike either note with authority. Touches of exaggeration creep into his serious moments; when he tries to be light he grows heavier. Possibly the feeble emotional character of the central figure has communicated itself to the narrative; it has about as much sparkle as the surface of a rain-barrel."

— Nation 121:241 Ag 26 '25 60w

N Y Times p22 My 10 '25 700w

"Mr. Johnson's attention shifts throughout from Parkhurst as a pure character to Parkhurst as innocent victim of an inhuman machine, and to the machine itself; and this shift involves him too often in satire obvious for its own downright strength, annoying in its carelessness of subtlety. Yet 'Professor,' as satire, is worth considerably more than most novels of 'pure art' that clutter the stalls."

Allen Tate

+ N Y Tribune p11 Ap 5 '25 880w

"A first novel and an unusually good one."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 220w

"It is written well, but not so calmly as to suggest that Mr. Johnson views the tiny struggle with detached pity, a wondering passer-by."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:780 My 23 '25 80w

"As a study of college life it has novelty, if not much point, and reveals readable qualities."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 280w

JOHNSTON, GEORGE ALEXANDER. International social progress. 263p $3.50 Macmillan [10s 6d Allen & U.]

338.9 International labor office. Labor laws and legislation [24-18648]

"This book, after an analysis of the conditions of social progress, endeavors to explain the part that is being played by the International Labour Organisation of the League of Nations in the general movement of social development throughout the world, and examines the contributions which the Organisation has been able to make to constructive social reform."—Am Econ R

Am Econ R 15:93 Mr '25 60w

Am Pol Sci R 19:422 My '25 150w

"The whole account is admirably clear and well presented." C. D. B.

+ Int J Ethics 35:210 Ja '25 220w

"Mr. G. A. Johnston is setting out avowedly to explain the part that is being played by the I. L. O. in the general movement of social development throughout the world—which is exactly what is wanted—but becoming enmeshed immediately in a network of technicalities about the constitution of that body, its procedure, and the precise agenda and recommendations of each of its Conferences and Commissions: all most useful for reference and interesting no doubt to the student of Labour Legislation, but obscuring the main issue."

+ — Nation and Ath 35:542 J1 26 '24 420w

"In his careful, methodical way Mr. Johnston covers his subject with scholarly thoroughness." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p10 O 19 '24 1700w

"This is a valuable book. Mr. Johnston has been connected from the start with the International Labour Office at Geneva, and out of his knowledge has been able to give a compendious account of the organization set up under Part XIII. of the Peace Treaty. Nothing so comprehensive has yet been attempted on so compact a scale. Mr. Johnston's book should certainly help to arouse that public sympathy without which, as he himself realizes, the work of the international labour organization cannot be effective."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p395 Je 26 '24 850w

JOHNSTON, SIR HARRY HAMILTON, and GUEST, LESLIE HADEN, eds. World of today; the marvels of nature and the creations of man. 4v v 3-4 501-778; 781-1088p il ea $5 Putnam [ea 16s Newnes]

910 Geography

24-15644

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:272 Ap '25

"An enterprise rivaling in its text the best of the 'outline' works and surpassing all of them by the sumptuousness of its illustrations." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 4 '25 550w

Nation 120:390 Ap 8 '25 10w

"In spite of its many insufficiencies, in spite even of occasional absurdities, the series succeeds on the whole in picturing the world today. Merely turning these pages, whose thousand photographs assemble the kaleidoscope of the world, cannot fail to stimulate an interest in something outside ourselves." Blair Niles

+ — N Y Tribune p10 My 24 '25 1200w

JOHNSTON, H. H., and GUEST, L. H., eds.

—Continued

"Principally remarkable for the many very good pictures in half tone and in color."

Outlook 139:350 Mr 4 '25 50w

JOHNSTON, WILLIAM ANDREW. These women. 247p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

173 Woman. Marriage 25-7901

A sensible book about women and marriage, treating subjects of such general concern as the wife's right to a definite share of her husband's income, the right of both to some freedom from each other in following out their individual tastes and amusements, the half-married state of the woman with a job, the loosening hold of the home, the failures of parents, why men will not marry, etc.

"Popularly written chapters in frankly colloquial phrase on family ethics and matters of chief concern to women. While sometimes obvious and commonplace, the book contains much shrewd common sense and will interest men as well as women."

+ — Booklist 21:361 J1 '25

Bookm 61:357 My '25 220w

"Mr. Johnston's protests are amusing, but there is a great deal of truth and a broad discussion of real problems mixed in with his comments." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 18 '25 620w

"For sheer philosophy and for deep-rooted common sense it is the author's best work. As the name implies, it deals with feminine traits and virtues and failings. Incidentally, it walks in safety the razor-edged bridge above cheap flippancy on one side and platitude on the other. It is more than clever. It is wise. It is more than wise. It is calm. With an unbiased brain, Johnston goes through his difficult task. Never out of humor, never excited, frequently epigrammatic, he takes up one phase after another of women's relations with the once stronger sex. He pleads woman's cause far more urgently than man's." A. P. Terhune

+ Lit R p12 Ap 25 '25 520w

"Mr. Johnston writes vigorously, with color and humor—he is sometimes unsparingly sarcastic toward his own sex—and he appreciates the value of a good story. His pages overflow with anecdotes, stories, bits of conversation that illustrate and help to emphasize his points."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 5 '25 500w

N Y World p4m My 17 '25 250w

"His book is a good natured, sometimes even playful, discussion of many matters that the middle aged folk find disquieting, but he is far from pessimism."

Sat R of Lit 2:74 Ag 22 '25 100w

"The book abounds in epigrams and deserves a double reading, first for amusement and again as a serious tract for the times."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 250w

JOLLEY, LEONARD BENJAMIN WILLIAM. Alternating current rectification; a mathematical and practical treatment from the engineering viewpoint. 352p $5 Wiley [25s Chapman & H.]

621.31 Electric current rectifiers. Electric currents, Alternating 25-6066

"A treatise giving a comprehensive survey of all methods of producing unidirectional from alternating currents. Describes various types of apparatus but does not go into details regarding design and manufacture."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:420 J1 '25

JONES, FREDERIC WOOD. Unscientific essays. 208p $2 Longmans [6s E. Arnold]

824

[25-26108]

"By an Australian Professor of Anatomy.

Many of these essays are about curious folklore and superstitions of the Pacific and East Indian islands." (Outlook) "While the essays concern 'things too trivial and too inexact to be reckoned as scientific,' that is nothing against Professor Wood's interesting remarks on cocoa-nuts and Providence, opals and sneezing, the devil and his works, the gibber plains of Australia and the confiding nature of seals and sea birds." (N Y Tribune)

Booklist 21:225 Mr '25

N Y Tribune p10 Ja 25 '25 160w

"Especially strange and entertaining."

+ Outlook 138:654 D 17 '24 30w

JONES, HENRY ARTHUR. Representative plays; ed., with historical, biographical and critical introd., by Clayton Hamilton. 4v ea $2.50; set $10 Little

822

25-729

"Mr. Hamilton's selection from the works of Henry Arthur Jones consists of four volumes and runs to a total of 17 plays. The opening piece is 'The Silver King,' written in collaboration with Henry Herman and produced by Wilson Barrett in November, 1882. The list closes with 'Grace Mary,' a one-act tragedy in the Cornish dialect. The last of the acted plays in the collection is 'Mary Goes First,' which was first produced in 1913 in London." (N Y Times) Contents: v 1, 'The silver king; The middleman; Judah; The dancing girl. v 2 The crusaders; The tempter; The masqueraders; The case of rebellious Susan. v 3, Michael and his lost angel; The liars; Mrs Dane's defence; The hypocrites. v 4, Dolly reforming herself; The divine gift; Mary goes first; The goal; Grace Mary.

Booklist 21:225 Mr '25

"Reading these plays over again in their collected edition enhances the feeling that here was a man who had mastered his craft. They are almost flawless theater. Having that rare gift of making his characters and situations come to life and fit snugly into a three dimensional art he used it for a social rather than an artistic end. It endures, and Mr. Hamilton has done a splendid thing in assembling its best examples, with a brilliant and illuminating commentary, for playgoers who, if they look beyond their noses, ought to look past our current footlights and examine the things that made possible the theatre of today." J: Anderson

+ Lit R p12 Mr 7 '25 750w

N Y Times p11 Ja 18 '25 2050w

"Edited by Mr. Clayton Hamilton with an urbane and cheerful commentary which is not constrained by the apparatus of scholarship. He has chosen the plays well, with the possible exception of 'The Dancing Girl,' so as to display the range of Mr. Jones's talents." H. N. Hillebrand

+ — N Y Tribune p1 Ja 25 '25 1250w

"To read them at successive sittings is a somewhat pudgy process. Taken sparingly, they are a neatly ordered meal, a selective combination of heavy food and light, virtually a dietetic requisite for a careful student of the drama." Wells Root

+ — N Y World p7m F 8 '25 1450w

"Extraordinarily interesting for any intelligent modern playgoer."

+ Outlook 139:276 F 18 '25 300w

"I ought not to call them the best plays; for they have been chosen not for their absolute merit, but for their representative and historical importance. Mr. Hamilton's prefaces are interesting and often illuminating; particularly good is his historical digest of the British drama." W: L. Phelps

+ Sat R of Lit 1:523 F 14 '25 1000w

Spring'd Republican p7a F 22 '25 800w
Wis Lib Bul 21:55 F '25

JONES, LLEWELLYN. First impressions; essays on poetry, criticism and prosody. 249p $2.50 Knopf 821 English poetry—History and criticism.

American poetry—History and criticism
25-17846

"Fifteen separate essays make up the contents of 'First Impressions.' The first seven are on American poets, the next four on English poets and the three concluding studies have to do with 'Criticism in General,' 'The Periphery of Poetry' and 'Free Verse and Its Propaganda.' The American poets of whom the author treats are Robinson, Frost, Sandburg, Masters, Lindsay and Adelaide Crapsey, with an essay to each, and grouped together in one essay, Edna Millay, Genevieve Taggard, Louise Bogan and Elinor Wylie. Mr. Jones's English poets are Walter de la Mare, Yeats, Abercrombie, T. Sturges Moore and Alice Meynell."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:110 D '25

"Llewellyn Jones is the greatest authority on metrics we have had since Sidney Lanier. In fact, he is the only critic I know of in this country since Lanier who has devoted himself extensively to the subject. At all events he is the only one who has brought his specialized knowledge in metrics to the sympathetic interpretation of such modern innovators as Carl Sandburg, Adelaide Crapsey, and Vachel Lindsay."—Burton Rascoe

Bookm 62:210 O '25 200w

"These essays by the literary editor of The Chicago Post have appeared in various American and English periodicals. Each has been welcomed appreciatively. In collected form, however, they will have a stronger as well as wider appeal. They possess a quality not common to critical essays—a high enthusiasm (it might seem prejudice at times!) which gives a vivid color to their analyses and interpretations."—F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '25 1400w

"Mr. Jones is so lacking in any style of his own that the reader gathers no clear single impression, either of the book as a whole or of any single part thereof. At the same time, the reader finds himself much impressed by many of the individual utterances of the author."

— N Y Times p10 O 18 '25 600w

"Among the critics who mold American literature to-day Mr. Jones holds a solid if not an exalted position. He has solid opinions and a genuine and almost too catholic appreciation of modern literature. If his enthusiasms seem sometimes indiscriminating, his tastes are almost always good and his ideas stimulating."—Marya Zaturenska

+ — N Y Tribune p12 D 27 '25 600w

JONES, LLEWELLYN RODWELL, and BRYAN, P. W. North America; an historical, economic and regional geography. 537p $5 Dial press

917 North America [25-7312]

The first part combines description with a running historical comment, showing the successive influence of each well-marked physiographic region upon the westward-moving peoples. The second section deals with general climate and the principal crops and mineral resources. The third part studies the geography of North America in its regional aspect—the relation of human activities to the physical characteristics of particular regions.

Booklist 22:28 O '25

"On the whole, the work has probably been worth doing because it includes the middle section and some very good material in the other sections on geographic features. The greatest caution will be necessary in the use of the remainder."—H. A. Innis

+ — Canadian Hist R 6:175 Je '25 650w

"The authors admirably present their field of interest in a work which is at once thorough and non-technical."

+ Dial 78:339 Ap '25 120w

"Primarily for those who study geography as a separate science, parts of it will afford a useful geographical background for students of history. Unfortunately the section devoted to historical geography is too loose and sketchy to serve either class of students."—S. E. M.

+ — Eng Hist R 40:640 O '25 360w

"On the whole the authors have been thorough in their search for authentic sources of information, and have fallen into surprisingly few errors. Their work is sound and competent, if incomplete, and in many directions without a rival in its field."—C. R. Dryer

+ — Geog R 15:503 Jl '25 1750w

"Above all a warm and inquisitive subjectiveness permeates every one of the eight hundred pages of his impressive book. One is being personally conducted on a delightful journey."

+ Nation 121:468 O 21 '25 100w

Reviewed by Alvin Johnson

New Repub 42:25 F '25 '25 310w

"The book is well written and will be read with interest. The number of illustrations, all of which are text figures, is somewhat less than usually found in recent geographies."

+ — N Y Tribune p13 My 10 '25 300w

Outlook 139:118 Ja 21 '25 20w

"In a book on so large an area and on which such elaborate masses of statistical information have already been compiled, it would be easy to overload the main lines of the subject with confusing detail. On the whole this has been ably avoided, and by judicious arrangement the relation of physical environment to past and present human activities is kept clearly before the view of the reader."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p853 D 11 '24 350w

JONES, RUFUS MATTHEW. Church's debt to heretics. (Living church ser.) 256p $2 Doran [6s J. Clarke]

273 Heresy

The author describes the heretic as one who deviates from a larger group in the overwhelming conviction that he is right and they are wrong. The heretics of the church, of whom he writes were "men and women who believed in their inmost soul that they had a heavenly vision, a divine revelation of the way forward, and that it was given to them to be the bearers of the truth."

Bookm 62:1xxiv D '25 180w

"A somewhat misleading title. Dr. Jones is really concerned to depict the great theological discussions in the history of the church as vital chapters in the evolution of a vital religion. The church is indebted to the vigor of these discussions rather than to the heretics as such."

J Religion 5:662 N '25 40w

"The title and scope of his books afford Dr. Jones little opportunity for appraising the work of the orthodox, even when it approximates to that of heretics, but he seems to do them injustice by detaching from them some good men who can hardly claim the qualification of heresy as defined by him. . . He does not seem to be altogether at home in the history of institutional Christianity."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p516 Ag 6 '25 800w

World Tomorrow 8:383 D '25 80w

JONES, THOMAS EDWARD. Track and field. 214p il $2 (6s) Scribner

796 Track athletics 25-5470

A practical manual on track and field athletics by the physical director of the University of Wisconsin. The book briefly describes the various events and outlines the best methods, technique and training for each.

Booklist 21:332 Je '25

"An excellent handbook by an expert."—T. R. Coward

+ Bookm 61:707 Ag '25 100w

JONES, THOMAS EDWARD—Continued
Boston Transcript p4 My 2 '25 400w

"A small but most compact book containing the boiled-down wisdom of a great physical director. Written primarily for beginners and for coaches in the secondary schools, there is meat in it for any performer, coach or conditioner of athletes." C. M. M.
+ Lit R p11 F 28 '25 160w

"This is a valuable manual containing numerous charts and diagrams and compactly arranged."

+ N Y Tribune p12 Ap 12 '25 160w
Outlook 140:71 My 13 '25 20w
Pratt p25 autumn '25

"A compact, thoroughly practical volume, a straight to the point, bone and sinew treatise on the principles and details of training and practice for the various events of track and field sports. It is improved by at least a hundred photographs of important performers in their respective fields, illustrating form and its variations; and has handy tables, and numerous valuable diagrams which detail training procedure in the relays, hurdles, vaulting, the 'throws' etc."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:716 Ap 25 '25 130w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p207 Mr 19 '25 40w
Wis Lib Bul 21:110 Ap '25

JONES, W. S. Timbers; their structure & identification. 143p il $5 Oxford [15s Milford] 634.9 Timber. Trees

The book, while intended primarily for forestry students, will be of interest to botanists as well. The first part treats the general characteristics of timbers. The second part gives a detailed description of the more important timbers. There are appendices on methods of preparing sections and micro-photographs. 165 illustrations.

"Without some general view of the distinguishing characters of numerous species of woods, the palaeobotanist, the archaeologist, the timber merchant and the furniture dealer are put to great inconvenience in determining with accuracy unknown specimens of woods. This handbook, nevertheless, may be recommended to students who are interested in the structure of timbers."

+ Nature 115:601 Ap 25 '25 280w

"This important work is intended primarily for students of forestry, but will be of interest also to pure botanists."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p711 N 6 '24 70w

JOPLING-ROWE, LOUISE (GOODE) (MRS GEORGE W. ROWE). Twenty years of my life, 1867-1887. 343p il $5 Dodd [16s Lane]

B or 92

A noted English portrait painter and Royal academician writes of the busy years of her life and of the persons of literary and artistic fame who were her friends. The book is filled with interesting reminiscences of such different personalities as Whistler, Ouida, Henry Irving, Wilde, Watts, Madame Modjeska and Millais.

Nation and Ath 38:126 O 17 '25 320w

"She gives us a sparkling picture of the art-world of the 'seventies and 'eighties and shows us herself as a lively, attractive woman."

+ New Statesman 25:supxii O 10 '25 280w

"It is hard to state whether one is attracted more by the social scene here depicted, or by the personality emerging from this background. Mrs. Jopling is so engaging, so vital, so human. All charge of egotism falls to the ground; she is describing as it were the life-adventures of someone else. Hers are full years cast in a period that becomes of the more interest as it further recedes from us."

+ Sat R 140:348 S 26 '25 450w

"Mrs. Jopling has compiled, with obvious zest, as piquant a book of artistic and literary recollections as one could ask for, to beguile a leisure evening. The manner is subjective, feminine, full of charm, spiced with personalities."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:449 Ja 16 '26 150w

"Her book is scrappy but very entertaining."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p611 S 24 '25 700w

JORDAN, EDWIN OAKES; WHIPPLE, GEORGE CHANDLER; and WINSLOW, CHARLES EDWARD AMORY. Pioneer of public health: William Thompson Sedgwick; with an introd. by Mary K. Sedgwick. (Yale univ. Williams memorial publication fund) 193p il $2 Yale univ. press

B or 92 Sedgwick, William Thompson

24-22926

"Hundreds of students of the late Professor Sedgwick at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and other hundreds who came under the influence of his spoken or written word will welcome this brief but sufficient sketch of his life, work and personality. After an Introduction there is a brief review of the public health movement in the seventies. This is followed by a sketch of Sedgwick's school and college training in the high school of Hartford, Conn., at Yale and at Johns Hopkins. The next two sections deal with the Department of Biology and Public Health at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the contribution of the Institute to the public health movement in America. Other chapters treat of Sedgwick as a teacher and in public service in various civic capacities. The final chapter, As a Man Thinketh, deals with Sedgwick as a man."—Eng N

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 29 '25 520w
Eng N 94:327 F 19 '25 200w

JORDAN, ELIZABETH GARVER. Red Riding Hood. 356p $2 Century

25-6700

Mrs Morgan Schuyler, social leader and philanthropist, engages a young and charming woman as her secretary. This newcomer, altho obviously a lady, can furnish no references or even give a name, so Mrs Schuyler calls her Hope Emerson. One day Hope answers the telephone and hears the familiar howl of the "wolf." Thereafter her associations with an unconventional group of foreigners increases the mystery of the situation. Even members of the Schuyler family are involved in the startling events which follow. The real identity of Hope Emerson and the final banishment of the "wolf" bring the book to an end.

"In attempting to make the plot intricate and mysterious, the author verges slightly into the melodramatic. [But she] unravels the intricacies of the plot in an artful fashion and cleverly leads us into the realms of the unreal."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 1 '25 380w
Cleveland p84 Jl '25

"An improbable but amusing tale." L: Moore
Int Bk R p471 Je '25 40w

"Miss Jordan's secret doesn't leak out much before she intends it to. In some part this is due to the reader's interest in characterization and conversation as aside from the plot as such. In the main, Miss Jordan tells her story with a deftness of phrasing and a deal of understanding and insight, particularly into feminine mental and sentimental workings."

+ N Y Times p22 My 24 '25 520w

Wis Lib Bul 21:200 Jl '25

JOSEPH, OSCAR L. Historical development of Christianity. (Life and religion ser.) 189p $1.50 Scribner

270 Church history

25-10933

This little volume follows the development of Christianity thru the church, making a rapid survey of the various movements within and without which helped or hindered its progress, the problems that were faced by its leaders and the difficulties overcome in its work for peoples and nations.

"A most important little volume." W. J. C.
+ Bookm 61:xxx J1 '25 50w

"The non-essentials are left out. The history is written for the average man and not for the expert. It is well adapted for class work—both research and discussion. It has a fine bibliography and excellent questions." F. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 150w

N Y Tribune p7 S 6 '25 150w

JUAN MANUEL, prince of Castile. Count Lucanor; or, The fifty pleasant tales of Patronio; tr. by James York. (Broadway translations) 260p il $3 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

"The Infante Don Juan Manuel was born in 1282, and died before 1349. Count Lucanor is a collection of fables, anecdotes and parables to illustrate practical pieces of advice." (Spec)
"Many of the stories have long since been incorporated into our own literature, after having reached us by devious ways. The first story of the first edition contains the germ of the Christopher Sly episode in 'The Taming of the Shrew,' and the plot of the play itself is given, practically in its entirety, in the pleasant account 'Of What Happened to a Young Man on His Wedding Day.' Tirso de Molina, Lope de Vega, and Calderón drew upon this collection for plots and situations, and La Fontaine, Malherbe and Molière were not ashamed to borrow from it." (Lit R)

Boston Transcript p7 D 20 '24 580w

"Because of his feeling for dramatic values, his economy of means, his rich resources of experience and imagination and his strict adherence to his own pithy injunction 'to use as few words as possible,' Don Juan Manuel perfected a narrative style which causes him to share with Boccaccio the responsibility of being 'inventors' of the craft of fiction in modern Europe." Muna Lee
+ Lit R p3 D 6 '24 700w

"The stories, as they so well might have been, are not dull or insipid in the least. They are compressed in the neatest fashion into a small space, so that weariness has never time to seize one before one finds oneself starting the next story."
+ New Statesman 24:304 D 13 '24 600w

"Perhaps there is something rigid in it, a sort of mail-clad simplicity but it is free from the later mediaeval vices of diffusion, absurdity and puerile piety." R: Aldington
+ — Spec 133:sup553 O 18 '24 350w

JUDSON, HARRY PRATT. Our federal republic. 277p $3 Macmillan

342.73 United States—Politics and government. United States—Constitution 25-17824

The president emeritus of Chicago university writes this book on the federal union of states, under the conviction that the steady drift toward centralization is destroying the balance between federal and state powers which is the essence of the Constitution. He considers the various amendments that have taken from the power of the states, in particular the eighteenth, and the same tendency as shown in two lines of congressional legislation—certain pension acts and some attempts toward federal control of education in the states.

R of Rs 72:558 N '25 100w

"The historical background of each analysis is interestingly sketched. If the author had concentrated more on constitutional questions, and omitted the attack on the federal military pension system and the discussion of matters more congressional than constitutional, the main argument of the book would have been more effective."

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 N 5 '25 250w

JUNIOR SUB, pseud. See Beith, J: H.

JUSSERAND, JEAN ADRIEN ANTOINE JULES. School for ambassadors, and other essays. 355p $3.50 Putnam [21s Unwin]

804 Literature—History and criticism 25-8466

"The School for Ambassadors and Other Essays by the former ambassador of France to the United States, is made up largely of writings on literary subjects. The essay, however, which gives the title to the book is a brilliant and suggestive account of the history of the ambassadorial function from the earliest times to the present." (Am Pol Sci R) Contents: The school for ambassadors; At the tomb of Petrarch; "Saint Treigney ou pais de Gales"; A duke and his city; Vespasiano Gonzaga, duke of Sabbioneta; Ronsard and his Vendômois; "Tennis"; Winter's tale; Ben Jonson's views on Shakespeare's art; What to expect of Shakespeare; Appendix: On the possible meeting of Chaucer and Petrarch.

Am Pol Sci R 19:643 Ag '25 420w

Booklist 22:23 O '25

Bookm 61:608 J1 '25 160w

"The sheaf of essays here assembled attests alike the range of M. Jusserand's intellectual interests and the soundness of the scholarship that counts among its fruits the 'Literary History of the English People.'" Oliver McKee, Jr.
+ Boston Transcript p5 My 9 '25 1050w

Dial 79:434 N '25 120w

"A volume of essays showing the scholarship, humor and delicacy of style one has learned to expect from M. Jusserand."

+ Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 60w

"He is as lively as he is learned. He rattles the dry bones to make music for us; and he never chokes us with the dust of his vellum-clad volumes. He has a swift eye for a picturesque fact, for a pertinent anecdote and for a pregnant aphorism. He has wit as well as wisdom, and on occasion he has humor also. As a result of his possession of these qualities he has here given us a historical study of serious import, which is everywhere readable and instructive." Brander Matthews

+ Int Bk R p95 Ja '26 2000w

"The carefully garnered treasures of a scholarly life. If one needs any justification to pursue literary and historical studies for their own sake, this volume supplies it. There is hardly an experience of life which is not colored and enriched as it passes into the mind here displayed with its reserves of selected knowledge and its trained capacity for appreciation." R. S. Morris

+ Lit R p1 J1 11 '25 1150w

"Not only is he a scholar but he writes in a foreign language with the greatest fluency. In no case does he attempt to write serious literary criticism, but with a scholarly and broad-minded taste he re-creates the atmosphere of past ages or discusses minor problems of literary gossip."

+ New Statesman 24:538 F 14 '25 550w

Reviewed by R: Le Gallienne

N Y Times p4 Je 14 '25 1000w

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin

N Y Tribune p16 My 10 '25 800w

Reviewed by E. J. Young

N Y World p6m Ap 19 '25 470w

"M. Jusserand on his departure left us with this courteous gesture and this farewell gift, the work of a ripe scholar who walks the paths of learning like a gentleman in his garden, enjoying the effortless ease of his erudition and 'the equanimity of a sane mind.'" A. W. Colton

+ Sat R of Lit 2:100 S 5 '25 950w

K

KAGAWA, TOYOHICO. Before the dawn; tr. from the Japanese by I. Fukumoto and T. Satchell. 398p $2.50 Doran

24-24948

"The novel is largely an autobiographical account of a sensitive Japanese boy, son of a local politician, and his evolution into a Christian evangelist, social worker and labor agitator. Mr. Kagawa has seen the lowly life he describes; and has, in addition, studied at Princeton and served as secretary to the Japan Labor Federation. He is familiar with Western philosophy from Kant to Emerson, and belongs to that literary school which looks to Russia for models. His novel has been a 'best seller' for five years. Inevitably, Mr. Kagawa's picture of Japan differs from any pretty chromo a foreigner might paint. He reveals to us no ghosts, no warriors and fewer ladies of joy. His hero represents an element more typical of Japanese society—the overwrought, underfed young man who struggles against poverty and lack of opportunity, trying to find some solid rock of faith in the present Japanese whirlpool."—N Y Tribune

"This is merely another form of a modern writer's attempt to express realism, and instead of accomplishing that objective, he merely succeeds in depicting the unlovely and sordid sides of life, with an almost utter neglect of the beautiful."

— Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 280w

"To this reviewer the crowning distinction of 'Before the Dawn' is that it renders a remote, alien people as distinct and comprehensible to us as the figures of our everyday existence. It is a somber book, sometimes poignantly moving and oppressive. There are parts of it, too, which are tedious, a fault of which some of the greatest books are guilty." E. C. Beckwith

+ — Lit R p7 Je 13 '25 550w

"Here is a book that has an international as well as a profoundly human significance. It shows us a Japanese tormented by the same mysteries, stirred by the same temptations, and reading the same literature as his young counterpart in England, and yet remaining so enormously different racially that the resemblances only serve to drive home the divergence. Mr. Satchell and his late collaborator, Mr. Fukumoto, have done a difficult thing with obvious love and care, and the result is a novel more important than nine out of ten."

+ Living Age 326:215 Jl 25 '25 380w (Reprinted from Observer)

"'Before the Dawn' is scarcely vivacious; and one cannot understand why 150,000 copies of the original should have been sold in Japan. The story is full of all the fads and vulgarities of the Occident and none of its saving ideas." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 37:180 My 9 '25 100w

Reviewed by D. B. Woolsey

New Repub 44:129 S 23 '25 350w

"For the first time in history a Japanese author has stepped across the circle of his national audience, and is speaking to the world on matters of common interest. There is in this striking book a demand for sympathy and an offer of brotherhood, which is not merely Japanese—a cry straight from the heart of suffering mankind."

+ New Statesman 25:201 My 30 '25 1450w

"'Before the Dawn' must be considered as literature, and in this test it falls short of Western standards. The difficulty here is not so much the subject, which is inevitably somewhat inconsequential, as the form adopted and the underlying spirit. Kagawa's book is broken up into fifty-eight chapters, none over a few pages in length. As milestones in the hero's journey through life, they may be reasonable, but they make for dull reading." J. Carter

— N Y Times p9 My 10 '25 1300w

"It is a vivid and savage book. The translators, Mr. Fukumoto and Mr. Satchell, have selected from the larger original and built up, in brief and simple sentences, fine scenes of town and country, weazened peasants and women with beautiful eyelids. But how far they are 'true' or merely 'realistic' is hard to say." Miriam Beard

N Y Tribune p9 My 24 '25 580w

"Mr. Kagawa, a Socialist who is wealthy and yet elects to live in the black slums of Tokio, writes relentlessly and well. There are sudden flashes of beauty in his work, of irony, felicity and wisdom." Morris Markey

+ N Y World p4m My 17 '25 520w

Outlook 140:224 Je 10 '25 40w

"The life of the slums emerges with amazing clarity, and Eiichi's experiences among the poor are by far the most interesting in the book. If it has little fire, little dramatic intensity, it is because the life of the Japanese has little of them." L. Kronenberger

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:239 O 24 '25 700w

"Whatever else Mr. Kagawa's book may be, it is certainly neither passionate nor poignant. The most generous allowance for the difficulty that the European must inevitably experience of breathing freely in its alien atmosphere leaves it clearly deficient in artistic qualities. There is a rather tepid love interest, and occasionally some good characterization. The pictures of slum life, however, command ready attention. Mr. Kagawa would earn the gratitude of English readers by endeavouring to appeal rather more than he does to the imagination."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p430 Je 25 '25 800w

"It would be unfair to expect an amusing and refined style of such a busy man. Theologians may condemn this book for the lack of higher criticism. Let also those be disappointed who expect an elaborate exposition of theories of social reconstruction. These are none of his business. What society most keenly needs now is thorough knowledge of the realities of social evils and an iron will and fanatical enthusiasm to reform them, and here is a book, written most realistically with the personal experience of fifteen years, by a most idealistic youth of Japan, who forgets himself in humanity." Shigeharu Matsumoto

World Tomorrow 8:187 Je '25 700w

KAHLER, HUGH MACNAIR, and HERRING, DONALD GRANT. MacIvor's folly. 287p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

25-4987

"MacIvor's folly" is the name given to a vast stretch of valuable timber-land in the sand-hills of North Carolina, owned by Dave MacIvor, a God-fearing Cromwellian type of Scotchman. The story concerns itself with Dave's fight to retain possession of his land in the face of financial ruin and even physical danger. Into this stern Scotchman's life comes romance in the blithe figure of Jane Borden, a northern girl of singular charm, whom Dave befriends in a trying hour. Jane's hasty marriage to a young southerner, her rude awakening to his real character, and his bitter hatred for MacIvor furnish the dramatic episodes of the tale.

"The plot is somewhat hackneyed. Rather than the plot, it is the spirit of adventure, love, competition, hate, pathos, and humor that makes 'MacIvor's Folly' interesting."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ap 1 '25 280w

"An immensely interesting novel, even though it is full of familiar situations and striking coincidences. The book's picturesque background is at once its strength and weakness."

+ — N Y Times p27 Je 14 '25 450w

"A straightforward tale of love and adventure."

+ Outlook 139:582 Ap 15 '25 70w

"An excellent piece of sound workmanship."
 + Sat R of Lit 1:694 Ap 18 '25 320w
 The Times [London] Lit Sup p401 Je
 11 '25 280w

KAISER, GEORG. Gas; a play in five acts; tr.
 from the German by Hermann Scheffauer.
 96p il $1.75 Small [3s 6d Chapman & Dodd]
 832 25-10691

"An expressionistic play. A billionaire's son is director and trustee of a great cooperative factory for manufacturing a gas which will serve every industrial purpose. When the factory is ruined by an explosion the director tries to turn the workers back to the soil, but, organized by the chief engineer, they return to their machines repudiating the back-to-nature idea. The play was produced by Russian worker-actors in Moscow in a setting of symbolized industrialism; and for the first time in English by the Birmingham Repertory Theater."—Cleveland

"Mr. Hermann Scheffauer, himself a poet and playwright of no mean accomplishment, has rendered the original into a sonorous, sentient, and appealing prose which should 'speak' quite as well as it reads." J. F. S.
 + Boston Transcript p3 F 7 '25 400w
 Cleveland p93 Ja '25

"It is expressionistic. Excellent, too, as an example of that genre. Possibly, caviare to the general. Speaking for myself, I confess to liking caviare. True, a little of it goes a long way. It's not a thing to make a whole meal on. Still, modern drama could incorporate it with good to itself." J. Cournos
 + Lit R p5 D 27 '24 500w

"There is a great suspicion that rhetoric has been substituted for dramatic intensity. 'Expressionism,' too often merely isolates an element that has always existed as one aspect of drama (Hamlet's soliloquy is in the vein) and seeks to erect an entire play upon the single pillar. The result may be interesting, but it is usually—and surely in this case—insecure."
 — Sat R of Lit 2:414 D 12 '25 200w

KAMM, MRS MINNIE ELIZABETH (WAT-SON). Pre-school age. 216p il $1.50 Little 372 Child study. Education of children
 25-21035

The subtitle gives the gist of the book, "a mother's guide to a child's occupation." These suggestive ideas concerning the playthings of the child from birth to five years are derived from Froebel, modified by Montessori, and adapted by the author to suit the material available in any home.

J Home Econ 17:726 D '25 80w

"The chief value of the book lies in the suggestions made with respect to toys and occupations for children during the pre-school period.
 These are varied and sound for children whose ability is average or above. The author's discussion loses succinctness because it wavers between science and sentiment. Her argument is apt to be based upon the particular rather than the general."
 + — Sat R of Lit 2:415 D 12 '25 130w

KAROLYI, MICHAEL, count. Fighting the world; the struggle for peace; tr. by E. W.
 Dickes. 464p il $6 A. & C. Boni [21s K. Paul]
 B or 92 [25-14843]

"Count Károlyi has written a book which recounts how he, the scion of a well-nigh medieval family of Magyar aristocrats, became the head of the first Hungarian Republic of the Jefferson and Lincoln brand. To-day he is in exile, a victim of his solicitude for the humble.
 His book deals with his own life and deeds until the dawn of that memorable morn. Not a word of complaint against those responsible for his downfall, who were, in turn, themselves soon overthrown; nor against his present detractors. 'Fighting the World' is the name he has given the book, and in it we find the glorious chronicle of long years of unremitting effort in the cause of peace and democracy."

 —Int Bk R

"Time will reveal whatever discrepancies there may be in this chronicle. Time also will tell how much of Károlyi's work is to become a part of the main stream of history. Certainly his life story makes an interesting book." Leo Kober

Int Bk R p379 My '25 1050w

"It has its interest for the general European public, and it has the advantage over most similar works of being written in excellent style, while the English translation by E. W.
 Dickes is very well done."

+ Living Age 325:125 Ap 11 '25 450w (Reprinted from Daily Telegraph)

Reviewed by Emil Lengyel

Nation 120:719 Je 24 '25 900w

Nation and Ath 36:896 Mr 28 '25 250w

"These memoirs deserve to be read. They are fresher, crisper, more thrilling and more illuminating than any of the hundred-odd war-time memoirs which the present reviewer has perused. They have their faults, to be sure. They are none too well organized. They furnish too little background. They contain statements and deductions with all of which no informed person is likely to agree. They deal too repeatedly with what should have happened, with what might have been. Károlyi stands too tall in the memoirs, and his fellow Hungarians too short.
 Yet the memoirs are of peculiar value because they are so self-revealing." C. J. H. Hayes
 + — New Repub 42:269 Ap 29 '25 1300w

"'Fighting the World,' barring those chapters which are devoted exclusively to internal Hungarian policies, will be interesting to any one curious about the break-up of the Hapsburg monarchy. Clearly and vigorously written, it is well translated. The only criticism is that it ends just when the most interesting events in Károlyi's life began." N: Roosevelt
 + N Y Times p1 Mr 29 '25 1000w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

St Louis p361 S '25

Sat R 139:332 Mr 28 '25 400w

"Extraordinarily direct, sincere, and discriminating." H: N. MacCracken
 + Sat R of Lit 1:597 Mr 14 '25 600w

"It is a book of great length but anyone who starts reading it is bound to be struck by its extraordinary fascination. There has probably seldom been a political book in which the author's opponents have been treated with greater fairness. One of its most extraordinary features is the objectivity with which he is able to appreciate the qualities of his opponents, even Tisza, and to see the good in men who were unable to see the far more obvious good in himself."

+ Spec 134:sup454 Mr 21 '25 1500w

"The matter of this book is less important than its author supposes, and the manner of its presentation is often tedious. Psychologically, however, these memoirs are of great interest, for they reveal with completeness and sincerity the mind of an aristocrat who was also a revolutionary."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p110 F
 19 '25 820w

KAUTSKY, KARL. Foundations of Christianity; a study in Christian origins; auth. tr.
 from the thirteenth German edition. 480p $4
 International pub., 381 4th av. N.Y.

270.1 Christianity. Church history—Primitive and early church 25-9084

This study of Christian origins is made from the standpoint of a Marxian Socialist's materialistic conception of history. He interprets Christianity in its beginnings as a revolutionary movement of the proletariat against the

KAUTSKY, KARL—Continued

Jewish hierarchy and the military power of Rome and emphasizes the communistic character of primitive Christianity. The book is in four parts: The personality of Jesus; Roman society in the imperial period; The Jews; The beginnings of Christianity.

"Exceedingly well written." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv Je '25 150w

"The book as a whole fails because it is not a scientific historical study of sources, facts and conditions, but a study with a purpose, a plea for Socialism. There are, however, many valuable contributions to the discussions of social conditions among the early Christians and the growth away from primitive simplicity."

— + Boston Transcript p6 Ag 5 '25 350w

"Some of Kautsky's explanations are guesses, and not very good guesses. The summary descriptions of Roman life are somewhat misleading, and it seems fantastic to use the concept of the proletariat for the very mixed subject-classes of that period. However, students of religion may be interested in the interpretation of Christianity given in this book." C. D. B.

— + Int J Ethics 36:221 Ja '26 180w

J Religion 5:558 S '25 40w

"Throughout, the writer's economic theories are kept to the front. Even when he professes to discuss 'sources,' his 'sources' are found to be not documents, but economic theories. Wherever the book touches questions of religious history it is a most unscholarly caricature, and yet it is a caricature written with extraordinary cleverness. If Americans possessed the religious education which they ought to possess, such a book would fall flat in our country." G. A. Barton

— + Lit R p3 S 12 '25 720w

"To the historian of early Christianity whose professional training has involved much scrutiny of the total range of the extant documents, Kautsky's easygoing method of treating the sources will be simply astounding. Data that would be inconvenient for his theory are jauntily ignored. Our author is a champion, not a historian. His work falls far short of being a scientifically dependable reconstruction of the history of Christian origins." S. J. Case

— Nation 121:307 S 16 '25 720w

"If there is some one who wants to read a book about religion without being made to feel religious, here is the book for him. There is fascination in seeing a man write five hundred interesting pages of print about a subject he has no use for—unless it is to use it as a club to make the world see certain things, namely, that there are no great men or great inspirations, divine or otherwise; that it is only the common man who counts. There is value in that idea, but it may be overworked." Carl Hovey

+ N Y World p4m My 10 '25 920w

"The contents and contentions of the work will not excite general approval. Kautsky is an adherent of the socialist school,—the economic interpreters of history,—and the book is a brilliant if perverse sample of that method. Its selection for English translation was therefore well advised, if it is read with discrimination. The main fault is a one-sided understanding of history, emphasis on the economic factor to the exclusion of others and interpretation of unrelated phenomena in the light of true but irrelevant facts. The book shows a better understanding of New Testament times than of New Testament ideas." H. J. Cadbury

— + Sat R of Lit 2:86 Ag 29 '25 750w

"As a contribution to our knowledge of primitive Christianity Kautsky's book has very small value. But it is a document showing what in orthodox Marxian circles is believed about primitive Christianity, and, as such, for the students of modern Socialism, it was perhaps worth translating."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p686 O 22 '25 1750w

KAYE-SMITH, SHEILA (MRS THEODORE PENROSE FRY). The George and The Crown. 361p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Cassell] 25-8269

The George and The Crown were rival inns which faced each other across the street of Bullockdean. The story is chiefly concerned with Dan Sheather, son of the landlord of The George. He and Ernley Munk, son of the rival innkeeper, were fast friends and in love with the same girl, Belle Shackford. After Belle had been betrayed and cast off by Ernley, she turned apathetically to Dan, but dismissed him when Ernley later offered her marriage. Faithful Dan, heart-broken, ran away to Sark, his mother's home. There he married, out of pity, a little French girl and unexpectedly found perfect happiness. But only for a year. When he returned to England with his motherless baby, he found that Belle and Ernley were not getting on well together. Once again, Belle turned to the comforting Dan for consolation. For a moment his love flamed up again, but the memory of his year with Rose restrained him from breaking Belle's marriage. "You can't get shut of a marriage," said Dan, "by just walking out of the door."

"Miss Kaye-Smith is not a writer of inevitably effective prose; her emotional scenes are in some rare instances perilously near to flatness. But her plain style at its best is firm and alive. In all its parts the story is admirably sustained, and Daniel Sheather, with 'short defiant nose and English mouth,' is a figure of truth any novelist might be glad to have us discover in his gallery." Lyman Bryson

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf S '25 450w

Booklist 22:34 O '25

"This story while not Miss Kaye-Smith's best is filled with so much of her knowledge of and insight into human nature that it must be read by all who know that she has in her the power to transmute life into fiction, the ability to make reality out of the imagination." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 2 '25 1250w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"This book, we think, will be found to take a place midway among the works of its author. Inferior to Green Apple Harvest or Joanna Godden, it is a good deal superior to The End of the House of Alard."

Dial 79:350 O '25 120w

"There is a hint of the conventional plot in 'The George and The Crown,' inasmuch as one can predict with some certainty what will happen next, but this gives one leisure to observe other admirable qualities, such as the penetration of the author's comment. Miss Kaye-Smith has few of the tricks of the moderns; she has much of their worldly wisdom, but the keen analysis to which she subjects her unsophisticated people does not destroy for a moment the sympathy of treatment which is one of the chief charms of her work." Katharine Buxbaum

+ Int Bk R p424 My '25 650w

"One applies the measuring stick of 'Joanna Godden,' and by contrast this book, although filled with gorgeous bits and scenes and chapters, is not so good. The outline is blurred. As a whole the book lacks the precision, the finish, the inexorable logic of 'Joanna.' There are many times when one wants to quarrel with it; when one balks at following the author along certain lines of thought. Those who do not know Joanna will very greatly enjoy 'The George and the Crown,' because it is a much better book than most in spite of the quarrels involved!" A. H. Gibbs

— + Lit R p3 Ap 25 '25 900w

"The idyll of the brief matrimony in Sark is an exquisite one, but the power of the book lies in its inspiration with the essential worthiness of life—which is the true 'treasure of the humble.'"

+ Living Age 325:388 My 16 '25 300w (Reprinted from Observer)

Reviewed by Edwin Muir
Nation and Ath 37:79 Ap 18 '25 200w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 43:79 Je 10 '25 180w

Reviewed by J. Franklin
New Statesman 25:46 Ap 25 '25 500w

"Miss Kaye-Smith passed definitely beyond the stage of promise with 'Joanna Godden'; her title character in that novel is one of the memorable women of English fiction. 'The George and the Crown' is a book equally rich and true in human experience, equally enfolding in its sympathy and pity, and marked no less by beauty in its perception of the external world. If it contains no one portrait so consummate as that of Joanna, it is more varied in its interplay of emotions, a wider segment of life."

J. D. Adams

+ N Y Times p7 My 3 '25 2200w

"I think that Dan is more friendly to me than any of Miss Kaye-Smith's heroes, and the Channel Islands idyll, as it is one of the hardest, is also one of the most successful of Miss Kaye-Smith's feats. I congratulate her on a very fine book." Hugh Walpole

+ N Y Tribune p1 Je 21 '25 1000w

"Into this story Miss Kaye-Smith brings the greatest variety of characters and subordinate situations. The whole village moves as easily through her pages as on its own streets. Every incidental part of Miss Kaye-Smith's invincible synthesis is dense with reality. It is all so vivid and charming and rollicking and authoritative that it is a pity it is so short."

+ N Y World p1m Ap 26 '25 380w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y World p4m My 10 '25 80w

"While the interest is less concentrated in the present story than in 'Joanna Godden,' it is always alive and is evenly and strongly maintained as between its men and women, the working out of their temperaments under special stresses, and the underlying pressure of passion and circumstance. The book's appeal is to a large audience—those who recognize the author's art in creating and presenting human nature in story form." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 140:69 My 13 '25 370w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"Intellectual integrity, the sensitive understanding and able delineation of types and places, a high level of expression—all these, from Miss Kaye-Smith, are matters of course, and it would be in the strict sense impertinent to praise them. What one asks oneself is: How does this new novel stand, not as against a general mediocrity, but as against the splendid best of Miss Kaye-Smith's own previous achievement? And, by that standard, although it has many and obvious merits, it is something of a disappointment." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 140:437 Ap 25 '25 420w

"The remarkable merit of the book lies in qualities which cannot be conveyed at second-hand. Here, as elsewhere, the author shows herself to be an artist and interpreter with few peers among the story-tellers of the day." H. W. Boynton

+ Sat R of Lit 1:739 My 9 '25 750w

"Sheila Kaye-Smith is always audacious, in an unpretentious sort of a way, and dares to write of human relationships as she knows them. 'The George and the Crown' adds a ninth to her list of distinguished novels, and reveals a touch still more direct and a style mellowed. In a great measure her skill lies in her role as interpreter rather than creator." Harriet Sampson

+ Springf'd Republican p7a J1 19 '25 1000w

"A restful story. The emotions which it arouses are quiet emotions, and its gentle rhythm ends in a cadence which resolves all discords. The devoted readers of this author will find here, no less charmingly displayed than before, the particular qualities that endear her—the sympathy for simple souls tossed in the sea of passion and circumstance, a loving insistence on local scenery and names, and an outlook on life which is sentimental without being false."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p252 Ap 9 '25 750w

Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

KEABLE, ROBERT. Numerous Treasure. 351p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Constable]

25-6519

Within a few hours of his arrival at Naiau, Ronald Herrick finds himself strangely at ease with his surroundings. The customs and conventions of English society slip from him, and in their place springs up a ready acceptance of tropical life and standards. Almost immediately he meets Numerous Treasure, laughing, alluring, the daughter of a down-at-the-heels Englishman and his Polynesian woman. In the manner of all island girls, Treasure has no illusions about life, and cherishes no ideals other than to be as happy as possible. Love especially presents no problems. One loves—one gives, voilà tout! For Ronald it is not so simple. The book is the story of their idyll.

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p333 Ap '25 1550w

"There are flashes in 'Numerous Treasure.' But for the most part they are only flashes. They burn with none of the lasting flame that illumined 'Simon Called Peter.'" A. F. Terhune

+ Lit R p11 My 2 '25 550w

"Full of admirable local colour and much solid reflection. The scene is staged with evident accuracy and care. Mr. Keable has fundamental hesitations that rob his work of intensity. There is a corresponding lack of magic in his style. It will be interesting to see what he does if ever he really lets himself go." J. Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:570 F 21 '25 180w

"Mr. Keable writes spiritedly and with pleasurable assurance, but he has not fully realized his problems or fulfilled his intention. 'Numerous Treasure' might have been a much better book."

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 29 '25 650w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Wyman

N Y Tribune p11 My 10 '25 650w

N Y World p6m Ap 26 '25 150w

"To enjoy Robert Keable's recipe one must be a little consciously on the loose, like an honest citizen doing the Moulin Rouge. One must be artlessly responsive to his various peep-show effects, retaining all the time one's right, and one's intention, to vote for the blue laws."

Outlook 140:405 J1 15 '25 220w

Reviewed by Gerald Gould

Sat R 139:142 F 7 '25 80w

"In spite of the fact that much of it is capable and even movingly written, something prevents this novel from being successful."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:732 My 2 '25 400w

"With empty masks for his principal characters Mr. Keable has not really given himself a chance. Fortunately there is the lovely Tahitian scenery, which he describes well and often. Tony, a sophisticated Englishwoman, and George Gurney, a sceptical Cambridge don, who has made his home on the island, are characters of some solidity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p70 Ja 29 '25 380w

KEITH, ARTHUR BERRIEDALE. Constitution, administration and laws of the Empire. (British Empire, a survey) 12v v 2 355p $4 Holt [16s Collins]

342.42 Great Britain—Constitution. Great Britain—Colonies. Great Britain—Politics and government [24-19437]

The second volume in the British Empire series is an account of the constitutional law and government of the Empire and of its complex internal and international relations.

Reviewed by O. D. Skelton

Am Pol Sci R 19:400 My '25 350w

KEITH, A. B.—Continued

"His descriptions of the various governments are somewhat compressed and to the student they will appear inadequate; but Professor Keith has never forgotten the general aim of the series and his book ought to enjoy well-deserved success as the most compact manual available in the field." W. F. M. Kennedy

+ — Canadian Hist R 5:353 D '24 1300w

"Professor Keith has worked out with great care the legal theory of imperial government and finds a number of important sources of authority, which are recognized as such throughout the British realm. It is a very imposing structure that he has built up; but unfortunately much of it collapses when he comes to discuss constitutional usage." L. M. Larson

— + N Y Tribune p4 Mr 8 '25 450w

"The task of describing the political systems of the Empire is one of great difficulty. For it no one could have been found better qualified than Professor Keith. His contribution to the present series contains the only satisfactory brief and comprehensive description of the governments of the Empire that has been published, and its value will be fully appreciated only by those students of politics who have had occasion to lament the lack of such a work." R: L. Schuyler

+ Pol Sci Q 40:286 Je '25 1150w

Sat R 138:45 J1 12 '24 140w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p411 J1 3 '24 400w

KEITH, MARIAN, pseud. See MacGregor, M. E.

KELLAND, CLARENCE BUDINGTON. Miracle. 295p $2 Harper

25-3193

This is the story of the complete metamorphosis of a man of noble thought and character into a ruthless, brutal being whose hatred for every living thing includes even himself. The scene is laid in Quebec where Donovan Steele, who had been betrayed by his parents and friends, discovers that the woman he loves is also false. In that moment he begins a new life, one in which God and humanity have no part. Becoming a wanderer on the earth he meets the lovely Nérée Caron who also had suffered thru friends but who had kept her faith. Donovan, to protect Nérée enters into a horrible fight from which he emerges blind. The climax of the story takes place at the shrine of Ste. Anne de Beupré where Donovan Steele is physically and spiritually redeemed.

Booklist 21:303 My '25

"It is excellent 'popular' writing, straightforward, quick marching and, in its own way, exceedingly well done." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 28 '25 600w

"Mr. Kelland has done good work in this novel of present-day Quebec, though his self-appointed task was a difficult one. He tells a highly sensational story with quiet force."

+ Cath World 121:429 Je '25 150w

"This tale of Canada does not keep the promise implied in Mr. Kelland's earlier books."

— Lit R p9 F 21 '25 100w

N Y Tribune p11 Mr 15 '25 200w

"It is a very good story of the popular type."

+ N Y World p5m F 1 '25 200w

"'Miracle' is claptrap, an artificial compound of all the popular ingredients." H. W. Boynton

— Outlook 139:347 Mr 4 '25 120w

"Possibly its melodramatic elements make the romance a little strained, or perhaps a little overfull in plot, but it runs smoothly, is good reading, and will appeal to many through its theme and sentiment."

+ — Springfield Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 430w

Wis Lib Bul 21:90 Mr '25

KELLER, ALBERT GALLOWAY. Starting points in social science. 183p $1.60 Ginn

304 Sociology 25-11325

Before its general publication Dr Keller, who is professor of the science of society in Yale university, used the material in this book with success in his freshman classes. It is a study of the methods society has developed to adjust man to his environment and help him to live with his fellows. The book shows how institutions have grown out of customs and takes up some of those upon which society chiefly rests—industrial organizations, property, religion, government, marriage and the family, science and art, and education.

"Though the treatment of materials is at times abstruse, the essays form a valuable general background for work in the more specialized fields of economics, political science, sociology, and history." F. K. and W. R. Hepner

+ — Am J Soc 31:395 N '25 200w

Am Pol Sci R 19:866 N '25 40w

KELLER, GOTTFRIED. Fat of the cat, and other stories; freely adapted by Louis Untermeyer. 283p il $3 Harcourt

25-17344

"These stories are—as the publisher has been kind enough to announce—'freely adapted.' And so, if you should dislike any part of any of these tales—a feeling that I hope may never occur to a single reader—do not blame it on Keller. And do not, I add hastily, blame me. Blame the adverb!" (Foreword) It is safe to say there will be no blame for the book, for the stories and pictures alike are filled with imagination and sometimes humor, and bear the touch of authentic enchantment. Glassy was a cat, fallen on hard times, who agreed to sell his fat to a wizard. But the wizard was outwitted and got a witch for his pains while Glassy kept his fat for himself.

Booklist 22:122 D '25

"A perfect gem of a book. The poet-artist in Louis Untermeyer has risen to the challenge of the old painter, philosopher, and story teller and delivered his stories in modern English with all the gusto of fresh creation." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:182 O '25 180w

"It is not improbable enough. The stories are admirably told in a clearcut, brilliant style that we might expect of such a technician as Mr. Untermeyer, but they seem more likely to interest students of folk-lore than children, who want their heroes and heroines very, very good and their wicked magicians very bad. Mr. Untermeyer's—or Gottfried Keller's—are so human in their mixed motives that they cease to belong to fairyland and enter the realm of realistic fiction." W. K. Rugg

+ — Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '25 180w

Cleveland p103 N '25

"Reminds me of a passable cottage chromo in a fine modern frame; the tales are not worthy of Mr. Untermeyer's skillful and pleasant prose. Even in his own day Keller was never held to be much more than fair second-rater, and as for the tales themselves, they never quite get out of Switzerland into fairyland." H: Boston

+ — Ind 115:351 S 26 '25 60w

"They are Swiss stories, humorous, gay, witty, and beautiful. But of all I like 'The Fat of the Cat' best. It has good suspense, but above all the adroit cleverness and sly humor of the cat certainly justify the feline race for possessing the proverbial nine lives when such a crafty bargainer as Glassy, hundreds of years ago, sold his fat but saved his life." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p813 N '25 100w

Nation 121:603 N '25 25 20w

"Mr. Untermeyer has made a free translation of five stories, which read as if they had been written in English at first. There are no literal idioms, but the stories move along so smoothly and the dialogue is so natural that it never gives the reader a sense of being made over and ill-fitting." C. M. Hewins

+ N Y Tribune p6 N 8 '25 1050w

"I feel confident that the parent who obtains this book either for son or daughter will delight in it just as much as the young ones."

+ N Y World p7m N 8 '25 60w

"Five unusual Swiss stories cleverly adapted by Untermeyer. There is a dry satire, biting as German pickle in all of them."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:282 N 7 '25 220w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 6 '25 100w

KELLERMANN, BERNHARD. Ninth of November; tr. from the German by Caroline V. Kerr. 443p $2.50 McBride [7s 6d J. Cape]

25-1017

With sweeping strokes Mr Kellermann paints the picture of the German empire in the last days of the European war. Berlin on the eve of the fatal November 9th, a city stripped of strength and power, is the scene of action. The dominant character in this picture is General von Hecht-Babenberg, a vain-glorious type of man who is more concerned about the whims of a pretty woman than the issues of his country's terrific struggle. There are also glimpses of his family—the son Otto, who, disabled by a self-inflicted wound, is barred from the trenches, and the daughter, Ruth, an idealist who works in Berlin soup kitchens. One gets vivid flashes of social and political life in the city—of mad fighting at the front, and terror-stricken citizens as their empire crashes.

Booklist 22:118 D '25

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Bookm 61:223 Ap '25 220w

"The novel is, of course, directed against the war, written without doubt when the suffering was at its worst, but written, perhaps, too soon after to have its full intent appreciated." K. O. O.

Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '25 850w

Cleveland p123 D '25

"The Ninth of November' is written with complete humility, honestly and with desperate fearlessness, it is a book that must be read, digested, stored up for its inevitable future values; a book, too, for those who still see war in terms of romance. Finally it is a book for those seeking intimate information concerning a conquered, desperate, tragically blundering people—for it is a book wholly human, never partisan." Kenneth Fuesse

+ Int Bk R p282 Mr '25 700w

Reviewed by Dorothy Brewster

Nation 121:237 Ag 26 '25 320w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 42:76 Mr 11 '25 1350w

"It is written with reverence, with sincerity, with that just and single intention of truth which is the very being of art. The tone is right, the mood is pure. You may not want to read; but at any rate you will not want to blush."

+ New Statesman 25:340 Jl 4 '25 320w

"Ill-designed and episodic in conception 'The 9th of November' still stands out among recent war novels by virtue of a certain sweep and sincerity. It is a story of endurance that had bad luck. None of its people are malignant or meanly cruel, yet, as is the case with so much Northern and Central European fiction, a usurping fate against which they are too weak to react, makes them instruments of suffering to one another."

+ N Y Times p9 F 25 '25 1000w

"If 'The 9th of November' fails of its ultimate purpose it is not the author's fault. It is our own limitations that are to blame. This novel should be read by every one who still hates Germany as a nation; by every one, if any still exist, who conceives of war in the old gallant terms of heroism and adventure."

Harrison Smith

N Y Tribune p4 F 8 '25 1000w

"A remarkable book! The reader is moved, tortured almost, by the exactitude with which the author presents the suffering of the poor, the wild extravagance and sensuality of the rich, the stupidity of officialdom, the maiming and killing of the soldiers, the callousness of the generals, the undercurrent of revolt and radicalism. It is a terrible indictment of war."

Outlook 139:230 F 11 '25 150w

"His impressionistic style, with its feverish rapidity, is excellently adapted to its portrayal. The narrative flashes from scene to scene and from character to character with a quickness which is almost bewildering. At first the book seems to represent the same chaos which obscured the actual happening. But as the story progresses the train of events takes form. One learns that it is of a nation rather than of individuals; and the tide that swept the Germany of the Kaisers to her downfall moves gigantically before the eyes."

J. M. Clarke

+ Sat R of Lit 1:507 F 7 '25 570w

"As fiction it must be owned that the book is disjointed and a little difficult to follow, but the reader will be left with a vivid picture in his mind of splendid, albeit unhappy, luxury on the one side and sordid conditions of starvation and sickness on the other. The book might be recommended as propaganda for the League of Nations."

+ Spec 135:113 Jl 18 '25 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p366 My 28 '25 320w

Wis Lib Bul 21:91 Mr '25

KELLOR, FRANCES ALICE, and HATVANY, ANTONIA. Security against war. 2v 435;436-851p $6 Macmillan

341 Peace. European war, 1914-1918—Peace. League of nations. International law and relations 24-25103

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"A comprehensive and, on the whole, a meritorious study. Students will find a large amount of well-digested and logically arranged information concerning the subjects treated. Many will no doubt regret that the attitude of the author toward the League, its various organs and agencies and even toward the Permanent Court is on the whole unsympathetic."

J. W. Garner

+ Ann Am Acad 119:155 My '25 350w

"A useful outline sketch of the various controversies that have kept Europe in turmoil since the formation of the League of Nations and the establishment of its Court, though the book needs to be used with some caution. It is also interesting as an analysis and discussion of the 'machinery of peace' and of the international courts."

+ Bookm 61:364 My '25 180w

"At times Miss Kellor gives evidence of a kind of Europhobia which blinds her to facts. Read with Mr. Hudson's studies, her second volume gives a rounded picture of the court. Each book requires the other as a supplement."

L: S. Gannett

+ Nation 121:144 Jl 29 '25 600w

"Miss Kellor's two huge volumes of over eight hundred pages afford a vast experience of admiration and despair, moving the candid reader to moments of rage and of derision, of gratitude for the mass of material assembled and of horror at the spirit in which it is presented."

J: Corbin

+ N Y Times p10 Ja 18 '25 1200w

"The main purpose of this work is historical, and to this end it furnishes a most useful record."

D: S. Jordan

+ N Y Tribune p13 Ap 19 '25 920w

Reviewed by W. F. Johnson

No Am 221:562 Mr '25 1000w

KELLOR, F. A., and HATVANY, A.—Cont.

"A good reference book."

+ R of Rs 71:222 F '25 100w

"These volumes are an authoritative, impartial, and helpful study of the real condition of Europe and the world."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Mr 13 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p91 F 5 '25 120w

KELLY, ALBANIS ASHMUN. Painting trade hand-book. 165p il $1.50 McKay

698.1 Painting, Industrial 25-8577

"Being a full synopsis of all the various parts of the trade covered by the general term of house painting; with definitions of technical terms in use in the trade, statistics of particular interest to those engaged in the business as master employers, as well as to the journeyman; classified information pertaining to the nature and uses of various paint and other materials employed; methods of estimating on work, instructions in shop and office management."—Subtitle

Booklist 22:14 O '25

"A good manual for the painter or man who wants to do his own decorating."

+ Cleveland p73 Jl '25

"Much practical information is presented but is not easily accessible because the book is unindexed and lacks orderly arrangement."

+ — Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:553 N '25

KELLY, ELEANOR (MERCEIN) (MRS ROBERT MORROW KELLY, Jr.). Mansion house. 339p $2 Century

25-7668

Here is given the story of an old Kentucky home and its children, delicate Aunt Alixe, gallant Uncle Topham and plucky little Judith, the last of the line. Honest, generous, loyal, Judith sums up in her small person the qualities which have always characterized the Carmichael family. At school she forms a close friendship with Olga who, as beautiful as she is selfish, brings only injury to those who love her. Judith's heritage stands her in good stead when she is forced to witness Olga's attempts to ruin the man she loves. The spirit of the Mansion house, which is the spirit of Kentucky is the pervasive atmosphere of the book.

"Likeable characters people 'The Mansion House,' and their experiences over a period of years go to make an interesting story, agreeably told."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 8 '25 260w

"We heartily recommend Eleanor Kelly's new book. Here we have a happy combination of the thoughtful with the clever, of story with 'style.'" E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R p8 My 29 '25 560w

"An interesting story, touched with sentiment and humor. She understands her people and their background; their thoughts and their deeds are set down sympathetically."

+ N Y Tribune p12 Je 7 '25 200w

"Mrs. Kelly has produced an unusual picture of Kentucky and has given us an account of a courtship so different from the average novelist's conception of such events that it is conspicuous not alone for its daring but for its truth."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 26 '25 80w

"The author sometimes resorts to ready-made, over familiar materials to secure anticipated results, delivering these vital blows with a sort of blind and defiant incertitude. She gives evidence too of a tendency to over-write in passages where restraint is difficult and all important. But in the creation of background and atmosphere, in the ability to evoke single scenes with an eloquent and penetrating clarity, she is signally successful."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:749 My 9 '25 320w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 Jl '25

KELLY, FREDERICK JAMES. American arts college; a limited survey, with the aid of a subvention from the Commonwealth fund of New York. 198p $2 Macmillan

373.73 Colleges and universities—United States 25-6935

"Dr. Kelly's book contains the results of a study of a group of representative institutions: Minnesota, Washington, Nebraska and North Carolina among State universities; Stanford, Vanderbilt and Harvard among endowed universities; Dartmouth, Oberlin, Baker, Grinnell and Rockford among endowed colleges, and Cincinnati among city universities. Brief visits were also made to Reed College, the University of California, Yale University and Smith College. Dr. Kelly emphasizes the need for further inquiry into college aims and methods, and recommends the establishment of an experimental school of college rank."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:9 O '25

"Doctor Kelly's study is especially welcome." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:165 O '25 160w

"Dean Kelly's work was done on the plane of the educational survey. As such it appears to be competent." C. E. A.

New Repub 42:348 My 20 '25 160w

"As a study of the forces now at work in the American college, Mr. Gavitt's book is much the more valuable." J. D. Adams

— N Y Times p3 Je 14 '25 150w

KELLY, GEORGE EDWARD. Flattering word; and other one-act plays. 212p $1.50 Little 812

25-2128

"The Flattering Word' is a satire calling for three women and two men. Narrow-minded, prejudiced people are shown therein as being also conceited and highly susceptible to flattery, and we enjoy, a minister with a strong aversion to the theater experiencing a change of mind after some cleverly applied flattery. 'Smarty's Party' is built upon the idea of the inevitability of heredity. Training and care go far, but 'blood will tell,' the author suggests, and the young man in the play needed only to be tempted sufficiently to show the yellow streak which was his inheritance. 'The Weak Spot' satirizes the frailty of human nature in encountering superstition. The book closes with 'Poor Aubrey' now expanded into 'The Show-Off.'—Spring'd Republican

"Simple in construction, genuine in atmosphere, written with a sense of reality and humor. Above all, they have a certain restraint and distinction."

+ Ind 114:162 F 7 '25 120w

Reviewed by Eva Goldbeck

N Y World p7m F 15 '25 300w

"This collection will be of interest to amateurs as well as readers."

Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 300w

"These are true comedies of American manners, not very witty, rather dull, singularly undramatic, occasionally comic, yet conveying just that heightening of values, just that concentration of emotion that gives the spectator the sense of richness and release which is the role of art." Rosamond Gilder

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 9:207 Mr '25 380w

KELLY, SAMUEL. Samuel Kelly, an eighteenth century seaman; now ed. with an introd. by Crosbie Garstin. auth. ed. 320p il $5 Stokes [16s J. Cape]

B or 92 Seafaring life

25-20375

Samuel Kelly's autobiography describes the life of an eighteenth century merchant seaman in the years immediately following the Revolutionary war. The editor writes in the introduction: "Everything is here, the hardships he endured, the ports he visited, the cargoes he carried, the wages he drew and paid, the food he ate, the trouble he had with his crews, his observations on winds, currents, seamanship and peccant humanity, during a period when England was almost continuously at war. . . . He saw history making in his day, the British evacuation of New York, the foundation of St. John's, New Brunswick, Benjamin Franklin walking the streets of Philadelphia, Washington in black velvet, addressing the Senate, and Lord Howe exchanging salutes with Admiral MacBride."

"It is a stirring story . . . a valid and informing narrative of the career of a British sailor." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 7 '25 650w

"His details concerning food, wages, discipline, cargoes, and methods of trade, combine to make his autobiography a document of real historical importance, as well as a most amusing book."

+ Nation and Ath 38:sup252 N 14 '25 250w

"The great interest of the book lies in the shrewdness and humor with which Kelly details the ordinary happenings of everyday life."

+ New Statesman 26:184 N 21 '25 850w

"Quaint, picturesque, vivid, this narrative of the sea life of an Englishman in the merchant marine makes an interestingly informing picture of that life during the last quarter of the eighteenth century."

+ N Y Times p7 N 22 '25 320w

"If anyone wishes to know what the Merchant Service was like during the last quarter of the eighteenth century, this is the book. Samuel Kelly was no stylist but he could always contrive to give the facts (which is what many far more pretentious writers cannot do), and he takes us from Liverpool to Barcelona, Bristol to Florida, without failing to mention a single item of importance. Smuggling, Spaniards, silver mines, Indians, wrecks, privateers and presentation swords—there is everything here." J. B. Priestley

+ Sat R 140:404 O 10 '25 400w

"We should be grateful to all concerned in its preservation and its publication. If what Mr. Garstin has withheld from us is only half as good as what he has given, then we think it would have been safe to publish two volumes. For the autobiography is not only of value historically, but the character of Samuel Kelly comes out in the document so gradually, but so surely, as though a solid figure grew unexpectedly out of hints, out of the undesigned suggestions of odd words, and the wreaths of vapour in the dim light of the cabin of a forgotten ship."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p713 O 29 '25 700w

KELSEY, DAVID STONE. Kelsey's rural guide; a practical handbook for the farmer, granger, suburbanist, and all town folk who enjoy outdoor life and hope for a rural home; with an introd. by Charles M. Gardner. 299p $1.50 Little

630 Agriculture. Farm life. Farm management 25-7263

The common sense and long experience of the author, Connecticut farmer, grange lecturer and agricultural writer, make this book a real guide for the farmer or the would-be farmer. He is a firm believer in country life and an optimist, but his advice is that farming should not be chosen hastily as a profession and not before asking many questions. Mr Kelsey has been meeting these questions for years, and in this well packed book he answers them. City folk who enjoy country life will find it readable.

Booklist 22:106 D '25

"A more practical, inspiring and generally helpful book on its subject rarely comes to the reviewer's notice."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 25 '25 170w

"Anyone who farms or gardens in that part of America that lies between Newfoundland and the Cotton Belt and between the Rocky Mountains and the Atlantic will find this modestly priced book both a delight and a paying investment."

+ Ind 114:386 Ap 4 '25 60w

"Whoever is interested in the actual problems of farm life—and the prospective farmer in particular—will find 'Kelsey's Rural Guide' a practical, direct and modern handbook dealing with every variety of rural experience."

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 2 '25 700w

"Mr. Kelsey is delightful. No flat dweller is likely to be able to withstand his enthusiasm. His chapter headings are siren voices. How can one resist 'Outdoor Housekeeping: Elbow Room on the Lawn'—a slogan which ought to depopulate the cities in less than two weeks? So much for the philosophy of the book. The rest is more practical counsel on farm management, market gardening, water supply, fences, implements, finances and rural co-operation."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ag 9 '25 280w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 10w

"It is cheerful, optimistic, and practical. It sees a far brighter future for farming than I can visualize; but that is nothing against it. There is much good, practical farm gospel in it." Herbert Quick

+ Sat R of Lit 1:774 My 23 '25 300w

"Most of Mr Kelsey's inspirational suggestions have a practical application. They embody a considerable knowledge of essentials, and the concrete examples indicate a considerable range of personal observation. Crops, pets, game birds, soils and tillage, water on the farm, orchard fruits, the country community, rural co-operation—on subjects as diverse as these Mr Kelsey has something to say in the manner of a breezy, popular lecturer."

+ Springfield Republican p12 Je 26 '25 560w

KENAGY, HERBERT GLENN, and YOKUM, CLARENCE STONE. Selection and training of salesmen; scientific method in developing the sales organization. 380p $3.50 McGraw

658.807 Salesmen and salesmanship. Employment management 25-9273

"The authors, both formerly connected with the Bureau of Personnel Research, Carnegie Institute of Technology, have based their work on the findings of that body during the years 1916-24. The book is intended for salesmanagers and personnel executives and claims to afford a proved technique for recruiting, training, and supervising the sales force."—St Louis

Booklist 22:58 N '25

St Louis p345 S '25

KENDALL, OSWALD. Stormy petrel. 275p $2 Houghton

25-17934

The Springfield had gone to Russia with a cargo of cotton. The soviet government had seized her, imprisoned her officers, and continued to hold her on a trumped-up charge, for ransom. With the approach of the severe northern winter, nothing could save the ship from destruction by polar ice unless she could be reached in time and towed to safety. Her owner approached the captain of the Asegurador, the only ocean-going tug of sufficient size and power for the undertaking, and asked him to assume the perilous and delicate task with its possible international complications. Captain Hawkes complied and the Asegurador sailed with its picked crew of hardy and competent men. The first mate tells the story of their exciting voyage and its success.

Booklist 22:162 Ja '26

"It is a thrilling and amusing yarn, with some politics thrown in."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 11 '25 320w

"Mr. Grummet, first officer of the Asegurador, tells the tale in the unassuming and disenchanted manner of one who is not unduly excited at the blow and bluster of wild waves. Mr. Grummet seems basically alkaline, but this does not detract from his adventures."

KENDALL, OSWALD—Continued

N Y Tribune p11 N 8 '25 150w

KENNEDY, M. D. Military side of Japanese life. 367p $5 Houghton [21s Constable]
355 Japan—Army

"Captain Kennedy is a British officer who spent three years in Japan on duty as language officer attached to the British Embassy, a post which may be described as that of military observer. He has written what is primarily a technical discussion of the Japanese army, its organization and its military methods."—N Y Tribune

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby
Lit R p4 My 16 '25 750w

"He lived intimately with the Japanese, and his account of his experiences gives the impression of a careful, intelligent, and impartial observer, well fitted to take advantage of his opportunities."

+ Nation and Ath 36:562 Ja 17 '25 130w

"Good books about Japan are rare. Captain Kennedy has almost achieved a good book. With less effort perhaps he would have been even more successful."

+ New Statesman 24:237 N 29 '24 420w

"No one can look through Captain Kennedy's rambling and badly edited story of the military side of Japanese life without having a more sympathetic understanding of the people of Japan." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p3 Mr 1 '25 800w

"In an unassuming way, he has drawn a vivid picture of a people. His description of life in a Japanese army camp gives an insight into the spiritual roots of one of the few genuinely military races in the world." Nathaniel Peffer

+ N Y Tribune p6 Ap 19 '25 260w

"He gives the kind of information which has not been generally accessible to writers who have tried to picture Japanese life. His account also has its value, of course, to the student of military affairs."

+ R of Rs 71:447 Ap '25 80w

Sat R of Lit 2:166 S 26 '25 260w

KENNEDY, MARGARET. Constant nymph. 344p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Heinemann]
25-6197

Here is a picture of genius and the children of genius. The genius is Herbert Sanger, musician extraordinary. His children, collectively known as Sanger's circus, are not quite so musical as their father but fully as extraordinary. From their pagan world which is the extreme end, to them, the delightful opposite of all that is conventional and orderly, the children are suddenly transplanted and set down in the midst of London society, wholly respectable and good. The book chronicles their joyous and other adventures, concerning itself chiefly with Teresa, the constant nymph.

"Miss Kennedy shares with her heroine that rarest of qualities, distinction." Marion Vaillant
+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '25 550w

Booklist 21:303 My '25

"There is a touch of originality about 'The Constant Nymph' which sets it apart from most novels. It is different, and this difference is more than charm. It has a kind of poignant beauty which wrings the heart at times, and which seems to us the more remarkable because it is the work of a young English writer who surprises us with the quality of her achievement." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 25 '25 850w

Cleveland p66 Je '25

"Such talk—pungent, brilliant, and rich in observation—has not been garnered within the covers of one book for a long time; its emotional and dramatic values are equally authentic."

+ Dial 79:77 Jl '25 120w

"Such precision—and felicity—in the use of language does not come by inspiration, but only from long-continued, painstaking drill and self-discipline. She has attained style: both in the popular, superficial sense of that term and in the meanings of Mr. Brownell's recent attempt to define it—a something that may, perhaps, be called dynamic balance of the whole." H. L. P.

+ Int Bk R p284 Mr '25 800w

"The trouble with Miss Kennedy seems to me not that she lacks talent but that she has very definitely fallen between two stools, that she has failed to make up her mind soon enough whether she wished to write a tragic farce or a genuinely heroic novel of the sort which she ends by attempting. Evidently she is familiar with the work of the contemporary English sophisticates; but if she has not already done so she might profitably read Jacob Wassermann's 'The Goose Man.' It is a novel which deals with a theme almost identical with hers, and it does all the things which her novel does not." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 120:434 Ap 15 '25 900w

"A novel so fearlessly unrespectable in its sympathies, so alluring in its characterizations, so romantic and so true that all England buys it, reads it, and promptly bursts into smiles of wholesome bitterness. She has written a satirical novel, and securely pinioned her subject to the wall for all to laugh at, and yet she has lured a public composed largely of such subjects to read her book and thus to laugh at themselves. Given such a large order to fill, it is small wonder that Miss Kennedy has relegated literary style to the background. At her hands the English language becomes a serviceable medium, coin of the realm, useful as a means to an end." M. E. Opydycke

New Repub 42:12 Ap 15 '25 1000w

Reviewed by Augustine Birrell

+ New Statesman 24:269 D 6 '24 1400w

New Statesman 25:15 Ap 18 '25 1150w

"To so subtly blend pathos and satire is proof of literary power of a degree seldom attained. 'The Constant Nymph' is a book which it is easy to praise 'extravagantly' and yet feel, at the end, that no more than justice has been rendered it." H: L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p5 F 22 '25 1800w

"Speaking advisedly and with caution, here we have the début of a talent as brilliant as May Sinclair at her best, and perhaps more versatile. The comparison is employed only to indicate the degree of excellence of Margaret Kennedy's work; there is no trace of imitation, nor even a derivative quality. Talent, I would call it; not genius, any more than in the case of Miss Sinclair." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p4 F 15 '25 950w

"The delicacy and pleasing grace of her title—which is one of the most fetching we remember in a long time—are everywhere found in the book. Miss Kennedy knows so well her feelings about her characters that she can write of them with a neatness and a definiteness that have their reward in the ease with which we read the 300 pages of her book. Three hundred odd pages make a long novel these days. But Miss Kennedy began her writing with pains and purgations and has gotten to simplicity of style." Savington Crampton

+ N Y World p7m Mr 1 '25 750w

"A fascinating novel." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y World p4m My 10 '25 60w

"An uncommonly readable and perhaps a moving tale. We say perhaps because, taken on its own ground, it hardly lives up to promise. Lewis Dodd does not wear well. And as he becomes unreal, our really central figure, little Tessa, the constant nymph, has to become shadowy also and her final passing becomes hardly more than a pathetic item, instead of the tragic fulfillment towards which the whole action has seemed to move."

— + Outlook 139:460 Mr 25 '25 300w

Reviewed by Gerald Gould

Sat R 138:498 N 15 '24 350w

"A novel ungloried in its portrayal of sordid relationships, shot through with a deliberate and outspoken vulgarity, 'The Constant Nymph' paradoxically stands out by reason of its beauty. Not the beauty of description—though it is written with a fine fresh animation—nor the beauty of incident—for its episode is much of it unlovely and some of it gross—but that rare and triumphant beauty that is compact of clarity of conception, sureness of craftsmanship, and sensitive but unsentimental understanding." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 1:523 F 14 '25 420w

Reviewed by Rebecca West

Sat R of Lit 2:207 O 17 '25 700w

"Miss Kennedy's new novel is very jolly to read. This is certainly the best novel I have read in which a genius plays any part. But a genius is never suitable subject for a novel. Miss Kennedy certainly makes the type both extravagant and convincing. But just because a genius expresses himself in his work primarily, and not so essentially, quite, in his life, he really banishes himself from good fiction."

+ — Spec 133:748 N 15 '24 400w

"Having been searching and creative, Miss Kennedy becomes rather mockingly cruel toward the end. But the work has real distinction. With all its brilliance and exquisiteness, its tender feeling and its intellectual daring, it fails to leave a unified impression at the end."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 380w

Springf'd Republican p8 My 9 '25 1050w

"This is the kind of book the English do supremely well, and we can't do at all. Simply, this is a lyric, not a novel. It is just about young girls and love and music. Underneath all is the spirit."

+ Survey 54:185 My 1 '25 380w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p684 O 30 '24 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

KENNEDY, MARGARET. Ladies of Lyndon. 320p $2 Doubleday

[25-24589]

In this first novel by the author of the "Constant nymph," Agatha Cocks marries a wealthy young baronet and goes to live in his ancestral home. She believes herself cured of an early love for a cousin, but when Gerald returns after several years, the old love returns with him, to the chagrin of the in-laws, who have a good deal to say about the affair. The lovers elope. When the death of her husband sets Agatha free, she cannot decide whether to marry Gerald or to retain her freedom.

Booklist 22:162 Ja '26

"The great power of this book, as of the later one, lies in the author's dissection of her women. One feels that her own sex holds few mysteries for Miss Kennedy: she is judicial, fair-minded enough, even capable of enthusiasms; but she is inexorable. One may go far without finding a more complete gallery of feminine portraiture than that of this book. With the men she is not quite so successful. But the book is entitled to a fairly high rating." H. L. Pangborn

+ — Int Bk R p133 Ja '26 550w

Lit R p12 N 14 '25 100w

"The undue length of the book would not be worth underlining were it not in the main so unusually pleasing—delightfully acute, exceptionally well written, and full of highly entertaining social strife." E. B. Jones

+ — Nation and Ath 34:547 Ja 12 '24 300w

"Many persons who joined in praising 'The Constant Nymph' will buy 'The Ladies of Lyndon' and feel themselves to have been woefully sold. Frankly, this first novel by Margaret Kennedy misses fire. Though marked by the same careful diction and fastidious choice of detail as 'The Constant Nymph,' it is as wavering in its procedure as the heroine in her amour." Rose Lee

— N Y Times p9 Je 7 '25 920w

"There is a well-constructed plot, a set of varied characters, including an eccentric artist and a definite point of view—the same, by the way, as that in 'The Constant Nymph.' But there is no doubt about it, the book lacks the zest one has been led to expect from Margaret Kennedy and the characters are a little pale."

+ — N Y Tribune p18 O 11 '25 400w

"If 'The Ladies of Lyndon' is a first book, it is remarkably mature both in conception and in expression. The apparent maturity of method cannot altogether conceal a certain crudity of invention: We recognize the touch of what would seem to be a practiced hand, but we are not sure that the practice has all been in the direction of perfection."

+ — Sat R 136:706 D 29 '23 550w

"I recommend 'The Ladies of Lyndon' as a test for readers of 'The Constant Nymph.' It lacks the sensational qualities inherent in the subject matter of the second novel, and there are passages in it which Miss Kennedy I feel certain, would handle otherwise today. But the native virtues of Miss Kennedy are there on almost every page; the opening chapters are perfect." L. W. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 2:291 N 14 '25 400w

Spec 132:566 Ap 5 '24 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p880 D 13 '23 200w

KENNEDY, ROBERT EMMET. Black cameos. 210p il $2.50 A. & C. Boni

326 Negroes. Negro songs 25-2069

"In 'Black Cameos' Mr. Kennedy has written a collection of twenty-eight negro anecdotes which include seventeen negro spirituals. Each story is introduced by an explanation briefly written in the third-person; the tale is then placed in the hands of one or more negro characters and to the last sentence is continued in negro dialect."—N Y Times

"Every one of his characters is as clearly cut and as clearly defined against its background of human nature as is the head of Hera on the coin of Argos."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 27 '24 500w

"Delightful and natural stories." V. McC.

+ Cath World 121:283 My '25 380w

"Whether the reader has any deep interest in the preservation of negro folk lore or not, this book is worthy of attention. It contains some of the funniest negro stories that I have read in a lifetime of interest in such tales. Mr. Kennedy's use of dialect is a real joy; he is true to life in spirit and letter." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p4 N 22 '24 450w

"'Black Cameos' reproduces real, verbatim negro dialect. It isn't the conventional sham which pervades so much of our literature. The contrast is as between a cast-plaster statue and its original carved in marble. The book is redolent with humor and good fun. Entirely free from vaudeville 'wit' and threadbare minstrel stories it greets the reader like a cool breeze."

+ N Y Times p17 Ja 18 '25 400w

"There are several wonderful folk songs included in the book which give a deep sense of the negro's delight in poetry, in raw sensation, in his rhythmic reactions. The prose sketches are told, for the most part, by the negroes themselves in their dialect. They are amusing and typical." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p8 D 14 '24 200w

KENNEDY, R. E.—Continued

"Mr. Kennedy has caught the true spirit of the negro of the older day as he is still to be found occasionally away from the sophistication of town life, or too old to change with the new machinery of civilization. His sketches are far from pretentious, even slight, but they bear the mark of sincerity and understanding." C. McD. Puckette

+ Sat R of Lit 1:427 Ja 3 '25 580w

KENNEDY, ROBERT EMMET. Mellows; a chronicle of unknown singers. 183p il $5 A. & C. Boni

784.7 Negro songs 26-2169

"Mr. Kennedy's childhood was spent in Louisiana. He has limited his search for Afro-American music to a section of country familiar and beloved. For scholarly comment upon the musical gleanings introduced in Mellows, he substitutes informal personal narrative and reminiscence. He portrays New Orleans, and into the picture steps a procession of dusky street vendors who sing their wares—the clothes-pole man, the blackberry woman, a chanting chimney-sweeper, a man chromatically wailing, 'buttermilk, buttermilk.' Mr. Kennedy has provided four folk-songs and twenty-three spirituals with piano accompaniments in which he achieves a masterly consonance of instrumental suitability and effectiveness."—New Repub

"Here are gorgeously interesting records of the vocal expressions of a gifted, imaginative, poetic race, dowered with the inestimably precious gift of song and ebullient resistance to material discomforts. No person can read it with any degree of understanding and still feel condescension toward this music, one of the very few gifts to the realm of art and beauty which America has made to the world." Walter White

+ Bookm 62:490 D '25 850w

"Beautifully edited and fitly illustrated. 'Mellows' is a contribution to negro lore that is really original." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 800w

"This is the third book of consequence on the general subject of negro folk-music published within the last three months, and fully deserving to rank with 'The Book of American Negro Spirituals,' edited by James Weldon Johnson, and Dorothy Scarborough's excellent 'On the Trail of Negro Folk-Songs.' 'Mellows' furnishes us not only with an admirable collection of songs but with charming comment as well." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 D 5 '25 250w

"Illustrations in black and white by Simmons Persons add to the text and music a piquant tang of pathos and grotesquery." Janet Ramsay

New Repub 45:169 D 30 '25 200w

"'Mellows' is a book of beauty, and charm. It is made up of memories, of poetry and of folk-songs arranged with skill that brings out the spirit of the primitive but profoundly beautiful old songs." Dorothy Scarborough

+ N Y Times p19 D 20 '25 1000w

"The novel interest in the book consists in the ingenious forewords Mr. Kennedy has supplied to each song, telling where and when and how and from whom it was recorded. This is not one of the more important books about the spirituals, but it is one of the most pleasant." Carl Van Vechten

+ N Y Tribune p7 D 20 '25 200w

"'Mellows' is a work of importance and beauty, and one in which the author's literary performance is matched by expert musical skill. A book which lingers hauntingly in the mind with the echoing insistence of an easily learned folk tune." Janet Ramsay

+ N Y World p6m Ja 10 '26 300w

KENNEDY, THOMAS HART. Introduction to the economics of air transportation. 154p $2 Macmillan

629.1 Aeronautics, Commercial 24-28125

This study in the economics of commercial aviation presents facts and statistics to prove that this form of transportation can be made a profitable business. The book recounts the history and technical features of airships and planes and the story of the United States air mail service. It has chapters on European air lines and transport companies and on projected air lines for the United States.

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 17 '25 170w

Harvard Business R 3:382 Ap '25 120w

"If one is looking for the story of the United States Mail service, he will find it well told in this little book."

+ N Y Times p19 Ja 4 '25 430w

KENT, FREDERICK CHARLES. Elements of statistics. 178p $2 McGraw

311 Statistics 25-328

"A textbook for an introductory course in the study of statistical methods. Sources, collection and tabulation of statistical data discussed briefly, followed by the proper use of graphics. The remaining chapters cover measures of central tendencies, index numbers, measures of dispersion, normal frequency curves, and correlation."—Management and Adm

"It is intended for a one-semester college course and this is all it will serve for, without supplement. In the space available the author shows considerable ability in summarization and overcomes the space handicap as well as possible. Its simplicity and clarity can be highly recommended." Robert Riegel

+ Ann Am Acad 119:156 My '25 300w

"The book is a clear and concise explanation of the nature and uses of some of the statistician's tools."

+ Harvard Business R 3:382 Ap '25 150w

"Necessarily technical and will be intelligible only to those who have a considerable knowledge of mathematics. To persons with such a foundation the book will provide a short and concise text on the most frequently used statistical methods."

+ Management and Adm 9:185 F '25 100w

"The book is excellently produced."

+ Nature 116:276 Ag 22 '25 160w

KENT, FREDERICK CHARLES. Mathematical principles of finance. 253p $3 (15s) McGraw

510 Mathematics. Finance 24-983

"Text-book suitable for students in commerce and business administration, treating of the mathematics of investment and insurance. Requires only a knowledge of algebra. Gives many examples and problems, and includes tables of compound interest functions."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"This book is not a mathematical analysis of the monetary and banking systems, but merely a very comprehensive treatment of the algebra and arithmetic of interest and insurance calculations, with copious examples suitable for students of commerce and business administration."

Nature 113:853 Je 14 '25 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:291 My '25

KERN, ROBERT RUSS. Supercity. 349p il $2 The author, The Iowa, Washington, D.C. 710 City planning 24-25881

"This book portrays a comfortable, clean, healthy, and beautiful city on the physical side. Definite suggestions are made for improvement of transportation, city-planning, housing, industry, ventilation, protection, zoning, aesthetic, recreations, etc., etc. The Super-City is presented in bold outlines; on some points details are given. It is a dream of the social scientist, not of the city-planner, contractor, or builder. Convenience, comfort, happiness, and time-saving are the words frequently used. Scores of problems of interest to the student of urban sociology are either treated or mentioned. Scarcely any important items are over-looked. Professor Kern knows a great deal about the modern city, and he weaves this knowledge into his Super-City."—Am J Soc

"There is little scientific information, no statistical tables, and no mention of research. This book is a pleasing dream, but it is sensible, suggestive, informing and based on knowledge. It is for the popular reader, but the academician will enjoy it." S. E. W. Bedford

+ Am J Soc 30:742 My '25 150w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 20 '25 350w

"A comprehensive, suggestive, and somewhat utopian scheme of city planning intended to remove the evils of present city life."

J Home Econ 17:495 Jl '25 100w

"The Super-City calls for a fresh start; a bare, clean tract of land, with so far as I can make out, the laws of property in rigid abeyance. It calls for more foresight and intelligent community-control than any group of people has possessed since the days of the Incas of Peru. Its engineering I suspect is mainly sound, but its social psychology is pretty terrible. Still, when Mr. Kern selects his site I will pick up stakes and join him. Such a brave, mad dream is worth losing a dozen jobs in the canyons of New York for, any day."

+ Nation 119:734 D 31 '24 400w

"Here is the vitiating error of Professor Kern's book; the error that condemns it to be a paper Utopia. He is lured into an attempt to remedy by 'plans' something that can be remedied only by changing the animus behind the plans. Once the human essentials have priority we shall not perhaps have to strain so heartily after mechanical solutions for what is essentially a social problem." L. Mumford

— New Repub 44:50 S 2 '25 1300w

"If we are insufficiently impressed with the complete logic and practicability of the social order here outlined, there yet remains a wealth of suggestion and reasonableness to interest and compensate the reader." H. Wright

+ Survey 54:251 My 15 '25 650w

KETTRIDGE, JULIUS ORNAN. French-English and English-French dictionary of technical terms and phrases used in civil, mechanical, electrical, and mining engineering, and allied sciences and industries. 2v 543;1147p $14; postpaid to libraries from London $12.50 Wilson, H. W. [50s Routledge]

443.2 French language—Dictionaries—English. English language—Dictionaries—French. Technology—Dictionaries [25-1552]

This dictionary, embracing the field of civil, mechanical, electrical and mining engineering and the allied sciences and industries, contains translations of one hundred thousand words, terms and phrases illustrated by numerous examples and explanations. The whole is arranged on a novel alphabetic plan for rapid reference. Hyphenated words, pairs or groups of words, contractions and phrases are each given a definite place and arranged in one alphabetic order, thereby obviating the necessity of cross-references or of search thru a long and confusing group of translations. Another novel feature is the incorporation of a telegraphic code.

"Containing, as it does, the translation of 100,000 words, phrases and terms, illustrated by numerous examples, this painstaking reference book should never fail the technical man."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:703 Ag '25 220w

"The vocabulary arrangement is novel, and allows one to turn up a reference without the cumbersome paraphernalia of the old method. The inventive mind of the author is further evidenced by the coding arrangement, by which any word or phrase may be coded into a word of ten letters, thereby opening up a new field of definite usefulness in technical dictionaries.

The dictionary is one that we can with confidence commend to our readers."

Colliery Guardian Je 5 '25 80w

"The Dictionary is in two sections, neither of which however is merely a slavish inversion of the other, but rather an intelligent counterpart in which the genius of both languages has been respected with reverence and keen appreciation: in this way it has been made to serve as a reliable guide even in cases of knowledge of only one of the two languages concerned. His Dictionary, a veritable monument of erudition and indomitable perseverance, ranks as a standard work of reference with which no business man can afford to dispense."

Econ R p480 My 29 '25 500w

"It is a monumental work of care and exactitude and, as the printing and binding are of the very best, we can recommend the book as a necessary work of reference in the office of every British manufacturing company or firm which has any business relations whatever with France."

+ Electricity p334 Je 5 '25 250w

"Bi-lingual technical dictionaries are of two sorts, the first a mere catalogue of corresponding terms in the different languages, the second a semi-cyclopedic definition of terms with cross references and explanations. Kettridge's French-English dictionary is one of the more elaborate of the complete kind and is very well done."

+ Eng N 95:315 Ag 20 '25 120w

"The dictionary is one which can be definitely recommended to the engineering profession as a thoroughly workmanlike book of reference."

Foundry Trade J My 21 '25 250w

"These volumes contain a marvelous collection of definitions useful particularly to the student of mining, mineralogy, metallurgy, and engineering in its various phases. They will, however, be of secondary value to the chemist, inasmuch as out of the 40,000 (more or less) words, terms, or phrases translated, less than 10 per cent pertain to chemistry. There is every evidence that the author is thoroughly familiar with his subject matter, and much praise should be given him for his original production." J. A. Le Clerc

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:988 S '25 480w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:36 Jl '25

"This large work is, we should think, the most important and accurate of its kind to be published in the English language. It is compiled with great care and not less knowledge; for Mr. Kettridge is by no means a novice as a dictionary maker."

Oil News p572 My 23 '25 300w

"The best publication of its kind that we have seen for many years."

Railway Gazette My 22 '25 220w

"Altogether, the work may be considered as one of the most complete, clear and useful of its kind at present on the market, and the author is to be congratulated on the highly successful outcome of what must have been an enormous task."

+ Syren and Shipping My 27 '25 500w

KEYSERLING, HERMANN ALEXANDER, graf von. Travel diary of a philosopher; tr. by J. Holroyd Reece. 2v 338;400p $10 Harcourt [36s J. Cape]

193 Philosophy

25-9081

"Keyserling belongs to that Baltic nobility of German stock which for centuries has been one of the foremost outposts of German culture on Slavic soil. . . His make-up combines in a remarkable degree the aristocratic virtues of the cavalier and the man of the world with the unbiased temper of the scientist, the democratic leanings of the rationalist philosopher, and the universally human sympathy of the mystic dreamer. The key to his strongly complex, world-embracing character is to be found in the 'Travel Diary of a Philosopher' (Das Reisetagebuch eines Philosophen), a comprehensive record of the impressions, emotions, and thoughts called forth by experiences in the Far East and North America during 1911 and 1912. Its first draft was finished just before the outbreak of the war; but it was revised, in part at least, in the midst of the war, and published in 1919. Keyserling is indeed something of a Wilhelm Meister. His emotional and intellectual life is in constant flux. He greets the beliefs and ideals of one people after another, as long as he dwells among them, as opportunities of identifying himself with them. Buddhism, Hinduism, Confucianism, Japanese self-mastery, for culture—of each and all he tries to see the positive side, the most fruitful part; in each and all he finds something helpful, some stimulus for heightening his own personality.”—Atlantic Monthly

KEYSERLING, H. A.—Continued

Reviewed by Kuno Francke

Atlantic Monthly 135:94 Ja '25 6600w

“The translator, it must be said, has achieved a miracle in view of the instructions which bound him to the very commas of the original text. Intricate as the thought frequently is, it is followed with unfailing grace and ease. There is but one peccadillo—the Chinese do not like to be called Chinamen.” W. E. Hocking

Atlantic's Bookshelf D '25 950w

Booklist 21:356 Jl '25

“Much in the manner of the oriental psychics who can erase at will all consciousness from their own minds' surface in order to receive impressions from their consultants' unimpaired, this quasi-German philosopher has achieved a wholly un-European power of similar receptivity, which invests the chronicle of his adventures with immense authority and interest. The literary quality of the book is ruined in this pseudo-English version, owing to the restrictions placed upon the translator by the author himself.” Winifred Katzin

+ Bookm 61:701 Ag '25 820w

“The work is the product of a profound, penetrating and mature intellect turned upon the mental, physical and intellectual phenomena of mankind; the fruit of much observation and careful study, prolonged meditation and the exercise of a particularly fecund and active mind. It is probably the most significant and comprehensive work of philosophy published in any European Nation since the Great War, and in his own country at once established Count Keyserling in the very forefront of modern thought.” F. W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 27 '25 950w

“The publication of this book in its excellent translation is one of the significant and important literary events of the year. To any thoughtful person it will appeal as one of the great works of this generation, profound, original, and inspiring.” D. R.

+ Ind 115:219 Ag 22 '25 1000w

“This is a wonderful book. I recommend it to all serious thinkers, and especially to those educationists, ministers, and fighters ‘in the warfare of humanity’ who to-day stand hesitant amid the perplexities of our time. It is an effort of the highest and most spiritualized humanism.” Robert Nichols

+ Int Bk R p733 O '25 2200w

Int J Ethics 36:106 O '25 200w

“It is a book of extraordinary insight. It is a rich quarry for the student of social psychology and the psychology of religion. . . The Travel Diary is not only an interesting and a masterly but also a most timely book. The growing antagonism between West and East can look for a peaceful solution only when we Westerners come to realize the greatness of the Oriental cultures and to appreciate the intelligence, insight, and moral character of the Orientals. Few books that have ever been written are so well fitted to give us the kind of information and understanding which we need as is this great contribution of Count Keyserling.” J. B. Pratt

+ J Philos 22:693 D 3 '25 2050w

“The adventures of any soul on a world tour would be interesting. As recorded by Hermann Keyserling, they are thrilling—that is, to those of us who take any interest in our own or anybody else's soul. Even to that casually inclined myth, the man-in-the-street, the record of such a journey as this must contain its charm. . . Keyserling not only tells you everything, but more. He frequently doubles on his tracks. Yet nothing makes any difference. His book arrives at no conclusions. That is one reason why it is so important, as a contribution to religion, philosophy and travel. We are tired of conclusions. We want to think for ourselves. He puts us, philosophically and mystically, on our own.” T. L. Masson

+ Lit R p1 My 29 '25 2100w

Living Age 326:290 Ag 1 '25 2500w

“A novel that has no artistic structure, combined with ideas that have no logical coherence, and based on observations that make no claim for accuracy—what shall we call such a book? The reader, ‘prepared to follow the wanderer through his many moods and transformations,’ will feel like the melancholy Jacques when he remarked: ‘The sundry contemplation of my travels wraps me in a most humorous sadness.’” Edgar Wind

— Nation 121:213 Ag 19 '25 650w

“Many thousands of people have apparently gained comfort from Count Keyserling, and no doubt thoroughly enjoy the classes he has started at his ‘School of Wisdom’ in Darmstadt. But that does not alter the fact that if he teaches what he writes, it is (unconscious) quackery.”

— Nation and Ath 37:242 My 23 '25 850w

“The book is delightful to read, an account of the extraordinary power of the author to project himself sympathetically into the most opposite modes of thought.”

+ Nature 115:977 Je 27 '25 120w

“This is the most fascinating aspect of Count Keyserling's book, the emergence of a faith in the dynamics of the West in the face of a predisposition in favor of the statics of the East so strong that at one time he thought of taking refuge in a Korean monastery. Since its publication in 1919 the Reisetagebuch has been recognized as the most important book to appear in Germany since the War.” R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 43:50 Je 3 '25 1900w

“It is inherent in this sage's position not only that he knows the truth, but that, knowing it, he is perfect. Yet he seems imperfect; he has so little humour, so little simplicity; he is so preoccupied with making an effect. This throws some doubt on the validity of his knowledge.” J. Franklin

New Statesman 26:241 D 5 '25 1550w

“The sole reason why this book of Count Keyserling is not one of the very greatest published in our times is because the author himself falls short of genuine greatness. That it is one of the most absorbing of all recent books is certain. And the mind that has cast it is undoubtedly one of the ablest among present-day thinkers. To read ‘The Travel Diary of a Philosopher’ is a definite experience in having one's own consciousness enriched and expanded. There is virtually no subject touched that it does not throw light upon, and the range of subjects is vast and broad, outside the scope or reach of writers only normally talented.” H: J. Forman

+ N Y Times p1 Ap 26 '25 2550w

“In this new conception of the possibilities of life, this ideal synthesis of the intellect and the spirit, there may not in fact be a cure for the sickness of the world, but there is a new path of freedom and fulfillment. And these are our need, far more than that mythical panacea for which we so frantically search.” W: A. Drake

N Y Tribune p3 My 24 '25 1850w

Pratt p6 autumn '25

“Whatever one may think of the prospect of success for such an experiment in supranational culture, the mere conception of it gives to this book a most unusual and truly inspiring outlook. I doubt whether there has ever been a more striking example of an individual's power of reproducing in himself other people's states of mind. . . . Remarkable as these appreciations of the most diversified national tempers are in themselves, they receive their chief significance from the spirit of universal sympathy which pervades the whole book making it a veritable treasure house of an enlightened and cosmopolitan idealism. The translator, Mr. J. Holroyd Reece, is to be congratulated for having given to this momentous product of contemporary German thought a thoroughly adequate English form." Kuno Francke

+ Sat R of Lit 1:705 Ap 25 '25 850w

"Almost every page of Count Keyserling's diary has something valuable in it, and the significance of the book lies rather in this than in any new and startling doctrine that can be abstracted from the text."

+ Spec 135:413 S 12 '25 850w

"Of all the qualities which are required of those who would bring peace to a war racked world three stand out as especially desirable. These are first, an intelligently creative imagination; second, a broadened sympathy; and third, a mystical apprehension of the reality of the spiritual realm and of the unity with which it transcends human differences. These three traits are combined in Count Hermann Keyserling in a very unusual way. One feels in taking up the book that he is in touch not only with an intellect of unusual range, but with an extraordinary suppleness of imagination." J. S. Bixler

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 2250w

"Upon its publication in German it was discussed in terms appreciative of its depth and subtlety in a review printed in the Times Literary Supplement of September 16, 1920. It was then pointed out that a writer long known as a scholar and philosophic thinker of high distinction and originality had expressed himself with charm and literary brilliance. These qualities are implicit in his analytical grasp of fundamental ideas, and in essentials they have been preserved in the English rendering. Here and there, it is true, there are sentences obviously foreign in construction, and for these Mr. Reece, the translator, disclaims responsibility."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p454 JI 9 '25 550w

Wis Lib Bul 21:198 JI '25

KILBOURNE, FANNIE. Mrs William Horton speaking. 276p $2 Dodd

25-5154

A light-hearted story of the first year of married life told by the nineteen-year-old bride herself. It is a chronicle of all the well-known experiences—discovering each other's unsuspected faults, struggling with the family budget, learning to drive the flivver and setting up the first radio. The two young people make plenty of mistakes but these have the effect of bringing them only closer together.

Booklist 21:340 Je '25

"It is a light story, but a very human one and most amusingly handled."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 25 '25 350w

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"It is a series of sketches. None of them is very weighty or matters a great deal. But they are lightly and nicely done." H. W.

+ Lit R p9 My 16 '25 170w

"The book has a pleasant ease of manner, as conversational and intimate and garrulous as schoolgirl chatter, or say, the reminiscences of women's home magazine 'advice' editors. It is buoyant with humor and thereby justifies its existence."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:91 Ag 29 '25 280w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

KILMER, ALINE (MURRAY) (MRS JOYCE KILMER). Poor king's daughter, and other poems. 46p $1.25 Doran

811

25-7495

The poems in Aline Kilmer's third book of verse have the qualities of her other volumes—sympathy and understanding and a delicate reticence.

"Mrs. Kilmer has written graceful poems before, and some of them were a trifle sentimental; but in this new volume she seems to me to become suddenly vastly more important as a poet." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:345 My '25 200w

"There is witchery in Aline Kilmer's poetry, a quality that is elfish more than anything else. It lures the reader on, teasing him with its indefinable fascination, promising fresh beauties at every turn. She seems herself the hamadryad of her poem, at one moment elf, at another human being and heir to all the sorrows in the world. One never knows exactly where to find her, for she has a quality which is all her own, and that in this age of many poets is a unique distinction." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 23 '25 800w

"Mrs. Kilmer can, and often does, present lyrics of cameo clearness, poems of amazing directness and finish that have the compact sparkle of jewels. Occasionally, however, her fatal facility of felicitous phrasing causes her to heap on words as an Italian peasant heaps on petticoats, and though the words are frequently as fanciful as the petticoats, the final effect is unfortunate." H. A.

+ Cath World 121:284 My '25 300w

"Her first volume of verse, 'Candles That Burn,' was published in 1919, and disclosed a genuine lyric gift. Here was a poet of unusually engaging quality—a quality of wistfulness shot through with sunlight. Now, after four years, comes her third volume, 'The Poor King's Daughter,' marking perhaps a deepened emotion, but also a lessened charm, for, while the wistfulness remains, the sunlight has disappeared." B. E. Stevenson

+ Int Bk R p660 S '25 400w

"The self-conscious woman, conscious even of her griefs, her wistfulness, her courage, almost never loses herself in the unselfconscious poet. Hence, so few of these facile and often pleasing verses are poetry." L. T. Nicoll

+ Lit R p6 My 29 '25 650w

"Like her previous books of verse, 'The Poor King's Daughter' holds that mixture of simplicity and shrewdness, stirred with a tuning-fork instead of a spoon, which is her peculiar gift. The charm of most of these lyrics lies in the fresh wit wherewith Mrs. Kilmer seizes on an old theme. She has a graceful way of telling the truths most poets forbear to mention." Babette Deutsch

+ N Y Times p13 My 17 '25 300w

"The qualities which give Mrs. Kilmer's work so distinct a charm elude analysis. Her music is not obvious, but is finely adjusted to the level of her feeling. Her images are delicate and unobtrusive." G. H. Busey

+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 7 '25 450w

Sat R of Lit 2:33 Ag 8 '25 120w

KING, BASIL. Bible and common sense. 168p $2 Harper

220 Bible. Whole—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 24-27689

"A simple statement of the author's personal experience in reading the Bible, contributed in the form of articles to Harper's Magazine." (Wis Lib Bul) Contents: The purpose of the Bible; The inspiration of the Bible; The Bible as the word of God; The Bible and dogma.

Booklist 21:217 Mr '25

"To be entirely frank, to discuss critical issues sympathetically but fearlessly and helpfully, to write broadly and without argument or homily, or to teach, convince or convert, is the task of a great spirit and a master writer. In 'The Bible and Common Sense' Basil King has done this in a powerful way which should bring light and rejoicing to groping readers." W. J. C.

KING, BASIL—Continued

+ Bookm 60:adv Ja '25 90w

"It is a book in simple and plain language, and so short that it can be read through in two hours." W: L. Phelps

+ Sat R of Lit 1:578 Mr 7 '25 750w

"A reverent and modern statement."
+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 280w

Wis Lib Bul 21:53 F '25

KING, BASIL. Faith and success. 266p $2 Doubleday

234.2 Faith. Success 25-20957

Mr King writes of the dynamic power of faith and its relation to success. Faith in his definition is "a power within which cooperates with God," and success is "faith's objective, the purpose for which it exists." The measure of the success he has in mind is the extent of its contribution, not its acquisition.

Booklist 22:141 Ja '26

Bookm 62:xli N '25 250w

Cleveland p115 D '25

"Mr. King evolves his argument with searching inquiry into the human heart, with careful steps proceeding slowly from one fully and clearly developed conclusion to another and with unflinching conviction that life must be based upon love if it is to reach any least measure of success."

+ N Y Times p26 O 18 '25 350w

N Y Tribune p18 Ja 10 '26 100w

KING, BASIL. High forfeit. 340p $2 Harper 25-18053

Theo's father issued his ultimatum: the day she became George's wife she ceased to be his daughter. She could leave her husband and come home at any time, but until then she cut herself off absolutely from her family. It was a blow to Theo, for she loved her father, but she loved George more, and married him. She tried hard to manage on her husband's small income and to do her own work, but at times her defiant courage failed. Those times were hardest for George. He hated the sacrifice she was making for him, and at last urged her to accept her father's offer and go home. Angry and humiliated, she went. Events moved swiftly, bringing changes for them both. When they met again, it was George's turn to issue the ultimatum. And this time knowing what she did, Theo accepted.

Booklist 22:163 Ja '26

"There is about this latest story of his a far deeper thoughtfulness than is usually to be found in a novel." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 10 '25 1450w

"Mr. King's characters do not ring true. 'The High Forfeit' falls down, and falls down beyond redemption, because its author refuses to make his people as real and convincing as the experiences they undergo. . . It is good reading, but by no means good literature."

— + N Y Times p9 Je 3 '26 650w

N Y Tribune p14 N 22 '25 150w

"Mr. King's latest novel lacks the touch of convincingness. Nevertheless, it is sufficiently well written to please Mr. King's large audience."

— + N Y World p7m O 18 '25 60w

Sat R of Lit 2:264 O 31 '25 40w

KING, GEORGIANA GODDARD. Pre-romanesque churches of Spain. (Bryn Mawr notes and monographs) 248p il $2.50 (9s) Longmans

726 Church architecture. Architecture, Spanish 24-16542

"The author, who is professor of the history of art in Bryn Mawr, has made a study of the Spanish churches and tells in her preface of having personally visited all but four of those discussed. She goes into Spanish history sufficiently to make evident what the characteristic culture of the country had come to be up to the end of the eleventh century through its successive subjections by Romans, Goths, Moors and other conquerors, including Christianity. She also, discourses eloquently on the resultant civilization and its qualities as influenced by intercourse with the East—with the Armenians, the Syrians, the Carthaginians, the Greeks of Byzantium."—Boston Transcript

"The work, which is quite as much historical and literary as architectural, is an important contribution to a department of study which during the last few years has attracted students, and not the least valuable details of the work are its excellent documentation and its complete bibliography, which are calculated to encourage study."

+ Architectural Forum 42:48 Je '25 280w

"Her literary style is not impeccable. The book shows great learning and this is not paraded unduly. In most respects it is a model of what a monograph should be, not too technical, and enthusiastic in bringing to the American public a subject so fertile and so fine." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Ja 10 '25 680w

"Miss King has given in a handy form a quantity of information which either is new or is to be found only in the sumptuous works or scattered periodical writings of Lampérez and Gómez Moreno."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p679 O 30 '24 250w

KING, GRACE ELIZABETH. Balcony stories. 296p il $2 Macmillan

25-19107

This is a new edition of the author's popular tales of Creole life in New Orleans. Two new stories have been added to the book, "Grandmamma" and "Joe."

"The stories have all been told before with the exception of 'Grandmamma' and 'Joe,' but they are all well worth the re-reading and all have in them that perfection of style and sureness of touch that characterized other short stories, her histories and her novels." L. H. G.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 11 '25 600w

Lit R p11 N 14 '25 150w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 29 '25 100w

KING, LOUISA (YEOMANS) (MRS FRANCIS KING). Chronicles of the garden. 276p il $3 (12s 6d) Scribner

716 Gardens 25-7838

An informal garden book which gives no definite planting directions but which ranges round about the garden looking at the changing picture, lingering over favorite blooms and discoursing about various garden matters. There are chapters about individual gardens of Mrs King's acquaintance and the appendix gives planting suggestions for various houses. Twenty-four illustrations.

Booklist 21:369 Jl '25

"There is a discursive charm about her writing which, mingled with her practicality and clarity, makes her book a valuable as well as a pleasing possession."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '25 250w

Cleveland p116 D '25

"It is written with a certain poetic touch that, however poetic, does not get far afield from practicality." C. M. M.

+ Lit R p5 J1 18 '25 60w

"Whoever has a garden or wants one, whether tiny or large, simple and old-fashioned, or modern and elaborate, will find something helpful and suggestive in her pages. She is concerned here almost wholly with effects and how to produce them and deals scarcely at all with the more fundamental labors of garden-making."

+ N Y Times p16 My 24 '25 450w

"As a mine of valuable hints for the grouping of varied plants in such manner as to bring out their greatest beauty of hue and form and of other garden suggestions covering a wide range, this book should meet with immediate and lasting success. And yet one lays it down with a vague sense of disappointment. . . Mrs. King's palette is bright with color, but her paints seem mixed with water rather than oil." R. S. Lemmon

N Y Tribune p9 Je 21 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Ap 16 '25 60w

"A book for the gardener's enjoyment. Not an essential book, but a pleasant one."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:167 Je '25

KING, R. W. Parson Primrose; the life, work and friendships of Henry Francis Cary (1772-1844), translator of Dante. 372p il $6 Doran [21s Secker]

B or 92 Cary, Henry Francis

Henry Francis Cary, 1772-1844, was an English country parson remembered today as the translator of Dante and the friend of Charles Lamb, who likened him to Goldsmith's Doctor Primrose. In 1826 he became assistant librarian of the British museum. His biography sheds light upon a literary group which included Coleridge, Lamb, Southey, Wordsworth, Hazlitt and Landor.

"Mr. King has made his book rather too mildly interesting. However, there is not likely to be any other book on the subject; it will be the standard life of Cary for the future, and, as a book of reference to the English literary world of Cary's day, it will always be of value. The appendices and index are adequate, and the printing and binding excellent."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:122 O 17 '25 950w

"Literary students should be grateful to Mr. King for the light which his excellent and readable biography sheds upon an important period, and upon a work of undoubted power and influence. Ordinary readers will no less appreciate this introduction to a gentle scholar, 'the flower of clergymen' as Lamb called him, who—allowing for differences in race, date and profession—bears a distinct and pleasant resemblance to Anatole France's Monsieur Bergeret."

+ New Statesman 26:54 O 24 '25 1000w

"Scrupulously written biography." Jacob Zeitlin

N Y Tribune p9 N 15 '25 860w

"Mr. King, who has all the secondary virtues, and has shown great industry in collecting biographical and bibliographical detail, never gets Cary alive, and seems not so much baffled by the problem as unaware of it. The facts of Cary's blameless and quietly distinguished career are all here, and we should be grateful for them, but Cary himself remains unelucidated."

+ — Sat R 140:316 S 19 '25 550w

"Mr. King has done his work excellently; he must have been indefatigable in research, yet the narrative runs smoothly, without those hard knots of mere fact which roughen so many biographies."

+ Spec 135:372 S 5 '25 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p581 S 10 '25 1800w

KING, WILLIAM JOSEPH HARDING. Mysteries of the Libyan desert. 348p il $6 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

916.19 Libyan desert [25-10072]

"Mr. W. J. Harding King has been solving the mysteries of the vast Libyan Desert for three years, mapping, photographing and studying the settlements of Arabs in their remote oasis towns. His contention that it is not easy to condense into one book an account of three years' work in an entirely unknown part of the world may readily be conceded. He kept a sharp eye on the beasts, birds and insects of the region, and brought back several collections."—New Statesman

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 25 '25 720w

"He has accomplished the task with great skill."

+ New Statesman 24:664 Mr 14 '25 270w

"A book like Major W. J. Harding-King's 'Mysteries of the Libyan Desert,' based on records compiled fifteen years ago, lacks the note of timeliness which is essential in order to create wide interest on the part of the reading public. The vast number of native words and expressions employed are confusing and wearisome, but nevertheless the reader who is interested in northern Africa and its peoples will find it well worth while to put up with the many deficiencies of 'Mysteries of the Libyan Desert,' for there is much that is of genuine interest in the book." M. E. Harrison

+ — N Y Tribune p10 Je 7 '25 700w

"Mr. King did not accomplish very much during three years wandering in the desert, but he affords lively impressions, creates an atmosphere, makes us acquainted with dour, suspicious Senussis, and takes us into an entirely unknown part of the world. With a little more sense of discipline and knowledge of human nature, he might easily have accomplished much serious work."

+ — Sat R 139:592 My 30 '25 460w

"Mr. King is obviously a man of science, but his book would not be as readable as it is if there was not in him a great deal of the Boy Scout. He loves tracking of all kinds, and the inferences to be derived from it; and, what with the country in which his researches were pursued and the tricks played on him by the men he had to employ, he had abundant opportunities for gratifying his bent."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p147 Mr 5 '25 1050w

KING-HALL, STEPHEN. Western civilization and the Far East. 385p $5 Scribner [18s Methuen]

950 China. Japan. Eastern question (Far East) [24-28238]

"The book deals with the internal and external problems of China and Japan and with the grand question of East versus West. It presents one of the few synthetic interpretations of China which approach adequacy, and covers almost every phase of the stupendous process of ferment, experiment, and adaptation now taking place in that vast country. The general tone is one of tempered optimism."—Outlook

"The book is so good and goes so far toward filling a long-felt want that the reviewer feels little inclined to inspect and check it for flaws. Some, however, will be stumbled over in passing. The historian will note a large number of errors in simple stating of fact: dates, for instance, have been dealt with most carelessly. Loose expressions and ambiguous terms are unfortunate. Notwithstanding its somewhat journalistic character and its nationalistic bias, this book presents a wealth of information and its theorizing is stimulating and suggestive."

KING-HALL, STEPHEN—Continued
S. K. Hornbeck

+ — Am Hist R 30:825 J1 '25 820w

Booklist 21:334 Je '25

"The book is one of the most exhaustive and interesting upon the subject that has come from the press." S. L. R

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 31 '25 700w

"Equipped with a first-hand and first-rate knowledge of his subject, he writes with admirable simplicity and commonsense, presenting things as he sees them. His style is easy and colloquial; his comment caustic often and always shrewd. He has his prejudices, and at times one feels that they affect his judgments. But on the whole his attitude is obviously fair-minded." D. R.

+ — Ind 114:105 Ja 24 '25 1200w

"What might have been made a rather convincing argument is weakened by the dyspeptic attitude with which the author, a Britisher, regards all things American and the almost collegian loyalty with which British actions are appraised. But in spite of its sophomoric touches, Mr. King-Hall's book gives a most valuable survey of the political situation, a survey of especial usefulness to the beginner." H: K. Norton

+ — Int Bk R p514 J1 '25 150w

"The great majority of such books fail to be very convincing because of the evident bias of their authors; most of the literature is propaganda. Mr. King-Hall's study stands out among these as an attempt toward a more judicial appraisal. He is not without a very definite position of his own, but he is able to state more than one side of any particular problem."

+ Lit R p11 Ja 31 '25 300w

"Mr. King-Hall pictures, with a fine sense of humor and a rare talent for forceful understatement, the opera bouffe of the chronic wars fought in vast China since the 1911 revolution." A. E. Zucker

+ Nation 121:172 Ag 5 '25 250w

"Mr King-Hall's book is admirable: well-informed, impartial, and wise. Perhaps he overestimates the strength of internationalism in the West; perhaps his patriotism sometimes leads him to praise the British more than they deserve. But in all that he says about the Far East he shows understanding and judgment." Bertrand Russell

+ — Nation and Ath 36:368 D 6 '24 780w

"There is here, at any rate, a mine of historical and political information with shrewd comment, which, if not always final, is usually helpful in forming sound conclusions. The maps and tables of dates are useful for permanent reference. As a whole, the work is not exactly light reading, though well written; but for persons seriously interested in a great subject it is valuable both for immediate study and constant reference." James Luby

+ N Y Times p1 Ja 25 '25 2750w

"Mr. King-Hall's purpose seems to be merely to state facts, to state them clearly and state them accurately, and in doing this he has done a real service to the cause of international relations." T: F. Carter

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ap 5 '25 1100w

"This is a book of great merit, and timely withal."

+ Outlook 139:230 F 11 '25 90w

"Unfortunately, though perhaps inevitably, people do not consider book construction a craft which needs learning like any other craft. The only school is experience, but the first lesson, even in that school, should surely be a comparatively short and unambitious one. Unhappily Mr. King-Hall had to write this, his first, book on an extremely ambitious scale. We perfectly understand that the scale was necessary if the subject was to be dealt with comprehensively. But the result is, frankly, chaos." E. J. S.

— + Spec 133:992 D 20 '24 980w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p659 O 23 '24 1300w

KINGSTON, CHARLES. Gallery of rogues.
243p il $3.50 Stokes [12s 6d S. Paul]

364 Crime and criminals [25-24893]

The author of "Dramatic days at the Old Bailey" here deals with a wide variety of topics connected with crime and criminals—with the sequels to certain crimes, the later adventures of men and women acquitted of murder, sensational escapes from prison and some notorious cases of miscarriage of justice. In his first chapter Mr Kingston discusses the question whether counsel should continue to defend a client who has confessed his guilt to him.

"There is a good deal of curious information and reflection in these chapters which will appeal to that strange, large public which finds crime a fascinating subject and criminals unusually interesting personalities."

+ Ind 115:479 O 24 '25 100w

Nation and Ath 36:652 F 7 '25 260w

"Some of the chapters of this Gallery of Rogues are very scrappy, but there is scarcely a page that is dull."

+ — New Statesman 24:344 D 20 '24 500w

"The close student of psychology in its highly controversial department of criminal anthropology will barely attend to the present volume. The readers of Dostoevsky will find in it no cause for penetrating awe and distress. One has to picture an audience of respectable citizens who cherish their popular Sunday papers, and eagerly thrill in response when fond memories of past sensations are recalled."

Sat R 139:59 Ja 17 '25 250w

"It is rather a squalid and trivial record, and on the whole we prefer to leave these people in the full blaze of the limelight and then hear no more of them."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p870 D 18 '24 520w

KINGSTON, CHARLES. Romance of Monte Carlo. 219p il $4 Dodd [15s Lane]

914.494 Monte Carlo 25-18474

Mr Kingston tells the story in a manner not too highly colored, yet enlivened by many anecdotes and reminiscences, of the origin and history of Monte Carlo and its famous casino, the career of its presiding genius, François Blanc, and of various other people connected with its sixty years' history. There are stories of the famous gamblers, of fortunes won and lost, and of crimes and sensations associated with the place.

"Mr. Kingston's style is so bright and persuasive that it compels our admiration and holds our interest. During not a few pages he writes with the satirical brilliance of Strachey. 'The Romance of Monte Carlo' is a work to recommend heartily to the intelligent reading public." R. B. MacDougall

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 5 '25 2100w

"Mr. Kingston tells his story in a spirit of mild and tolerant cynicism perfectly suited to his theme."

+ N Y Times p16 Ag 23 '25 700w

St Louis p410 N '25

"Mr. Kingston has a strange story to tell. Cheerful and sensible, he sticks to facts and declines either to preach or to whine. He is cynical, of course—who could write of those supreme cynics, the founder of the Casino and his son, without falling into cynicism? Yet the story almost deserves its title of a romance, if in truth romance can be found in anything so sordid."

+ Sat R 139:682 Je 20 '25 300w

"The story of the rise of the Casino at Monte Carlo and the concomitant transformation of that famous promontory from being an almost uninhabited stretch of rock and wild flowers into the most carefully tended and best-known artificial beauty spot on the shores of the Mediterranean lends itself to reminiscence and anecdote. Mr. Kingston writes agreeably of this development, and tells innumerable stories."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p225 Mr 26 '25 200w

KIPPIS, ANDREW. Captain Cook's voyages; with an account of his life during the previous and intervening periods. (Blue jade lib.) 410p il $3 Knopf

B or 92 Cook, James. Voyages and travels 25-7997

"In 1788 the Rev. Andrew Kippis presented with scrupulous care the accounts of Captain Cook's voyages of exploration and discovery during the previous twenty years which ended in his death. Since that date editions of the history of his travels have been frequent enough to keep later generations mindful of what was attempted before the Islands of the Sea became a part of the commercial world. As a contemporary of Capt. Cook, Dr. Kippis was able to write with authority, more especially because his information came from a number of reliable sources and he had at his disposal all the available information of the times."—Boston Transcript

"Though the author omits nothing nor extenuates anything, he is at pains to justify every act of the explorer. He leaves one with a greatly increased respect for the spirit and achievement of the now almost legendary Captain Cook."

+ Bookm 61:710 Ag '25 160w

"Since Capt. Cook is one of the great explorers of the southern seas, this description of his voyages, after a lapse of 178 years, is doubly valuable, showing as it does the great changes that have taken place in that part of the world. Dr. Kippis did his work well, and this recent reprint preserves the charm of the earlier editions."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 24 '25 150w

"In this book, as in other scores, Cook's adventures still hold their own as the most romantic, enlightening and heartening tale of the sea ever told." F. O'Brien

+ Int Bk R p635 S '25 5800w

"Dr. Kippis's life of Cook is satisfying as a record of his achievements and in its interesting details of the voyages, but that estimable divine had no gift for biography. Cook never comes alive in his pages. We learn what his qualities were, but never meet the man himself."

+ N Y Times p17 Ja 11 '25 1800w

"A fine book and the publishers are to be congratulated and thanked for the way in which it is presented. Apart from its historical value it is a godsend for men tired of hackneyed stuff and that literary photography which passes as realistic presentation of contemporary life. A godsend, because Kippis is as readable as Froude or Strachey, though he is at times as rugged as Bunyan." C. J. Finger

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ap 12 '25 650w

"Dr. Kippis is a delightful, vivid and zestful narrator."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 170w

"Written in the majestic diction of the period this book is a notable addition to Alfred Knopf's Blue-Jade library. It is a worthy monument to one of the most remarkable men of his time, who carried the glory of his nation to the uttermost parts of the sea." W. McFee

+ Sat R of Lit 2:211 O 17 '25 1100w

KIRCHWEY, FRED A. ed. Our changing morality; a symposium. 249p $2.50 A. & C. Boni [8s 6d K. Paul]

173 Woman—Social and moral questions. Moral conditions 25-897

Contents: Introduction, by Freda Kirchwey; Styles in ethics, by B. Russell; Modern marriage, by A. G. Hays; Changes in sex relations, by Elsie C. Parsons; Toward monogamy, by Charlotte P. Gilman; Women, free for what? by E. Muir; Virtue and women, by Isabel Leavenworth; Where are the female geniuses? by Sylvia Kopald; Man and woman as creators, by A. Goldenweiser; Dominant sexes, by M. Vaerting; Modern love and modern fiction, by J. W. Krutch; Can men and women be friends? by F. Dell; Love and marriage, by L. Lewisoohn; Communist Puritans, by L. Fischer; Stereotypes, by Florence G. Seabury; Women and the new morality, by Beatrice M. Hinkle.

Booklist 21:290 My '25

Bookm 61:237 Ap '25 120w

Boston Transcript p2 F 7 '25 450w

Dial 78:339 Ap '25 150w

"As far as it goes, this symposium, in which several authoritative persons collaborate, serves a useful purpose. That most of them differ, and some of them flatly contradict one another, shows what a problem it is and how far it is from solution. Presumably, all these essays—no less than fifteen in number—are written by liberal-minded, progressive persons. Yet how much honest prejudice, how much solemnity, attends most of the efforts! One wishes for a little common sense, a little humor." J: Cournots

— + Lit R p4 D 20 '24 850w

Reviewed by Irwin Edman

Nation 120:121 F 4 '25 1000w

"This is a calm book, and very few of the contributors have found the subject diverting. Fearlessly, keeping cool heads and careful vocabularies, they have examined this combustible subject, its unhappy past, its disreputable present, its gloomy future." K. A. Porter

+ N Y Tribune p3 Jl 5 '25 1300w

"Fifteen voices in the wilderness contribute to this volume. They do the subject to a turn, but since their terminology is not that of the A. B. Sees we fear they will furrow no new ground. Although it is to be hoped that some distinct overtones will reach the wilderness, the faces of the contributors seem turned to that converted civilized minority which understands the function of psychoanalysis, has read D. H. Lawrence, and is fairly persuaded that women are human. Such a document as 'Our Changing Morality' cannot be overlooked." Harry Salpeter

N Y World p8e D 7 '24 470w

"There is too much variety and individuality in the book to judge it summarily, and too much talent to judge it lightly. Most of it is worth reading, and much of it was worth writing; there is a good deal of wit, and not a little wisdom. Scattered through the book, and interspersed with patches of shallow nonsense, there is much stirring appeal for justice, freedom, and humanity, and much shrewd comment on the times." R. B. Perry

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:492 Ja 31 '25 920w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p263 Ap 16 '25 320w

"It is a clear, realistic and brilliant presentation of sex manifestations and relationships. The information and intelligence of these authors is vastly stimulating."

+ World Tomorrow 8:286 S '25 100w

KITCHIN, FREDERICK HARCOUD (BEN-NET COPPLESTONE, pseud.). London "Times" under the managership of Moberly Bell (Eng title Moberly Bell and his Times); an unofficial narrative. 298p il $4.50 Putnam [12s 6d P. Allen]

072 London Times. Bell, Charles Fred-eric Moberly 25-11508

"These are chapters, revised from those which have already seen the light in Cornhill, of personal reminiscences of life in The Times Office, by a former member of the staff who left Printing House-square in 1909."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

KITCHIN, F. H.—Continued

Reviewed by J. H. Sedgwick
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 11 '25 2550w

"As a worker in the plan of the Times he has the advantage of being able to talk shop about both mechanical and editorial production. This 'inside dope' is what makes the volume so valuable. Most volumes dealing with British journalism are academic and pedantic in their mode of treatment and are superficial and jejune in their material. Consequently, this volume which discusses the absence of typesetting machines and modern web presses in the plant of the Times is a real contribution on the practical side of British journalism." J. M. Lee

+ Lit R p6 Je 20 '25 1050w

"This is a book of such uncommon fascination to the newspaper man that he may be inclined to over-estimate its possible interest to those who are not journalists. Yet it is difficult to imagine that Mr. Kitchin's intimate revelations of life behind the sober red-brick front of Printing House Square during a period of nearly twenty years, can fail to gratify the curiosity of a large public."

+ Nation and Ath 36:893 Mr 28 '25 720w

"This book is a most competent piece of journalism but its title is misleading. It contains numerous references to Mr. Moberly Bell, the famous Manager of the Times, but in substance it is the autobiography of Mr. Kitchin, with whose portraits it is adorned. Mr. Kitchin's self-assurance makes us a little cross—he reminds us often of Boswell—but he knows a good deal that no one else knows about the recent history of the most famous of all newspapers, and has succeeded in writing a book which, even if it does not gain a wide reclame amongst the general public, should certainly fascinate every professional journalist who has the chance of reading it."

+ New Statesman 24:600 F 28 '25 1300w

"The story of his editorial career is admirably set forth. Mr. Kitchin commands an excellent journalistic style, for journalism can exhibit style in the highest sense. It is brisk, lucid, graphic, condensed and continuous. A few facetious platitudes are inevitable." Isabel Pater-son

+ N Y Tribune p2 My 10 '25 1750w

"Bell was a very striking personality, and Mr. Kitchin has given us a real 'feel' of him, while recounting with liveliness and humor a highly interesting journalistic episode."

+ Outlook 141:102 S 16 '25 120w

"Altogether Mr. Kitchin has given us one of the liveliest contributions to contemporary history that we have read for many a day, and it would be a thousand pities if its necessary preoccupation with so many of the technicalities of newspaper management were to debar the general reader from making acquaintance with the 'fresh good stuff' which it contains."

+ Sat R 139:192 F 21 '25 750w

"Mr. Kitchin tells his story well, though it has one great fault—there is altogether too much Kitchin in it." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 2:295 N 14 '25 1050w

"A remarkable piece of work. As a picture of the redoubtable 'Manager' the word ruthless applies to it, yet few readers will finish the book without a great liking, one may almost say without a little love, for that much-abused man. 'I am writing not as an official biographer but as a novelist,' says Mr. Kitchin, and indeed the inner history of the Times from 1890 to 1911 reads like a novel, and the chief actors in the story are made as real to us as are characters in first-class fiction."

+ Spec 134:412 Mr 14 '25 1650w

"A keen, vivid chronicle."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 3 '25 920w

"This book should not be ignored by any who may wish to study the private and domestic affairs of The Times some 15 years ago. We regret its publication as an intrusion on a traditional anonymity; but we readily admit that Mr. Kitchin has done his self-imposed task, if not quite impartially, at least as well as it could be done with the information at his disposal. His hero is Moberly Bell, a great servant of The Times; but while doing justice to him he at times does less than justice to others equally devoted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p122 F 19 '25 160w

KLABUND, pseud. See Henschke, A.

KLARWILL, VICTOR, ed. Fugger news-letters; auth. tr. by Pauline de Chary; foreword by H. Gordon Selfridge. v 1-2 il ea $6 Putnam [16s Lane]

940.2 Europe—History—1517-1648. Fugger family [25-9309]

"Letters written by correspondents of the great European bankers, the Fuggers, from 1568 to 1605. Such events as the battle of Lepanto, the execution of Marie Stuart, St. Bartholomew, the burning of witches, plagues, wars, and miracles are described by contemporary reporters."—Outlook

"There is humor in their archaic simplicity and a dark irony in the slow-moving, tragic history of the time as seen by contemporary eyes. From a strictly scholarly standpoint one wishes the documents had not been edited quite so much for modern taste. The book would then have greater value as an historical document, if less charm for the polite, modern reader who takes his Middle Ages sugar-coated and prefers his Renaissance greatly diluted."

+ Ind 114:591 My 23 '25 150w

"The last part of the introduction shows a depth of comprehension of the causes and effects of world happenings, along with a streak of bitter sarcasm for the human race, that proves the genius of the writer and raises the book from a mere collection of records to an illumination of a past era that sheds a new beam of light upon the present." H. Glynn-Ward

+ Int Bk R p799 N '25 700w

"The most enjoyable book which I have come across for a very long time" Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 36:187 N 1 '24 1200w

"It is a little hard to judge from the present volume what is the real historical value of the papers. Obviously it must be considerable, but here the editor's concern, one feels, has been to select a miscellany of general interest and amusement. Moreover, he explains, in a preface which is informative but singularly confused, that in the German published version he has not retained the original 'mode of speech'; and this modernised style is, of course, maintained in the English translation. The effect as we now receive it, then, must be considerably removed from that of the authentic documents."

New Statesman 24:146 N 8 '24 1350w

"A curious and readable book."

+ Outlook 138:564 D 3 '24 50w

"In this translation the rendering seems generally proper and clear. The editor's introduction is learned but heavy; and the supplementary notes, though helpful, embody some things quite obsolete now. Far more valuable are the thirty illustrations, taken from rare Viennese pictures and books." Raymond Turner

+ Sat R of Lit 1:704 Ap 25 '25 1050w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

Spec 133:1023 D 27 '24 2450w

"It is a pleasure to welcome an English edition of the Fugger-Zeitungen. The translation seems to have been well done, although the translator has tripped here and there. . . The student, the historian, the general reader, will all find something of interest in this collection. Such a strange medley of events can scarcely be found elsewhere."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p696 N 6 '24 750w

KLAUSNER, JOSEPH. Jesus of Nazareth; his life, times and teaching; tr. from the original Hebrew by Herbert Danby. 434p $4.50 Macmillan

232 Jesus Christ

25-17357

Written by a Hebrew scholar and Zionist, this book is an account of the historic Jesus, his times, his Jewish environment and his life and teaching. The author's aim, as expressed in the preface, has been to keep the account as objective and scientific as possible and free from Jewish bias, but the book, written originally in Hebrew, is intended primarily for Jewish reading.

"Dr. Klausner tries to keep away from the subjective attitude and discuss the matter from the standpoint of pure scholarship. In spite of himself unconscious bias colors his message. From his own standpoint he gives an idea of the historic Jesus. It is not to be expected that Christian people will accept his portrayal and estimate of their Lord and Master. Yet he has added something distinctive to the understanding of His times and therefore of Him."

Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 250w

J Religion 5:658 N '25 20w

"A life of the Founder of Christianity written in Hebrew by a Jew for his fellow Jews and translated by a Canon of an Anglican Cathedral excites one's expectations. It is indeed a rare origin for such a book. Mr. Klausner's 'Jesus of Nazareth' does not disappoint; it is really a remarkable work. That such a book could have been written by a Jew, as an expression of the new Jewish national spirit, is an index of the degree of understanding between different faiths that is gradually being produced by the modern scholarly approach. Mr. Klausner, a Jew in religion, is every inch a scholar." G: A. Barton

+ Lit R p12 N 28 '25 800w

"This book is the most important contribution to the 'Life of Jesus' literature since Schweitzer's 'Quest of the Historical Jesus,' and in some senses the most important book since Renan, though it is utterly devoid of literary charm." A. W. Vernon

+ — N Y Tribune p4 Ja 10 '26 900w

"A book of great significance. Christian as well as Jewish scholars should welcome this translation."

+ Springfield Republican p10 Ja 5 '26 650w

KLENNER, KATHERINE (EVANS), baroness von. Greater revelation. 259p $2.50 Siebel pub. corp.

134 Automatic writing. Spiritualism

25-8286

A record of automatic messages received from painters, authors, musicians, actors, poets and preachers of past and modern times with whom the author claims to have established spirit communication. The messages are reproduced in the handwriting and with the signatures of the communicating spirits.

"To our mind, the author makes out only an indifferent case for the artistic and intellectual stimulus to be found on the further side of the Styx and quite hopelessly damns herself by specific deductions that would fail to convince a normal child. She does not for a moment elect or command our attention. Her bag of tricks is soon exhausted, and those which she has fail to convince." F. W. B.

Boston Transcript p3 Je 27 '25 360w

"Two things will be obvious to any one who has the patience to read this book carefully: first, all the messages clearly emanate from the same mind (whosoever that may be), and this mind is very ill educated, strangely ignorant of logic, of grammar, and of the technique of poetry. Secondly, all these various spirits constantly promise world-shaking revelations—and as constantly never give them!" T. A. Miller

— Sat R of Lit 1:928 J1 25 '25 480w

"The most laughable book that we have received for some time. . . They all write thorough nonsense, and are almost illiterate; but the good Baroness swears to the authenticity of the signatures."

— Spec 134:466 Mr 21 '25 200w

KLICKMANN, FLORA (MRS E. HENDERSON-SMITH). Carillon of Scarpa. 502p $2.50 (7s 6d) Putnam

25-12173

"For the first twenty-five chapters or so Mrs. Poggs, a rich American who goes with her daughter Gladsome as a paying guest at the Royal palace at Scarpa, a penniless Ruritanian kingdom, is a thoroughly delightful companion, and as long as she is in the center of the stage the entertainment never flags. She takes the absent-minded King, the charming princesses and the lazy Scarpanians all under her wing, and we forget the curious mise en scène in chuckling over her sallies and mistakes in Court etiquette. When Gladsome's romance begins with a doctor who turns out to be the Crown Prince the story develops into a rather tedious adventure."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Folk who demand little from their summer reading, who chuckle easily, criticize not at all and want their stories 'clean,' might do far worse than browse through 'The Carillon of Scarpa.'"

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 1 '25 300w

"Here is an amusing and humorous romance, set down with charm and considerable feeling. Altogether a pleasant and refreshing story." H. H. Wallerstein

+ Lit R p4 Ag 29 '25 300w

"The idea which might have sufficed for something under 300 pages seems very thin when spread out over more than 500, and even Mrs. Potter-Poggs ceases to be amusing long before the book is finished. The descriptions, too, though occasionally graceful, are over-numerous and overlong, while the moralizing Queen Dowager is a good deal of a bore. 'The Carillon of Scarpa' is a novel which could have been much improved by vigorous pruning."

— N Y Times p8 Je 28 '25 580w

"The Carillon of Scarpa' is well-mannered, seasoned with a little philosophy, and, on the whole, amusing."

+ N Y Tribune p8 S 13 '25 160w

"Thoughtful reflection is mingled with the humour of this book, but it is altogether too long."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p225 Mr 26 '25 120w

KLINGSOR, TRISTAN L., pseud. (LECLERE TRISTAN). Cézanne; tr. by J. B. Manson. 62, 40p il $1.75 Dodd [5s Lane]

759.4 Cézanne, Paul

Monograph on the life and work of a great French colorist of the Impressionist school, with forty illustrations.

"Entertaining and authoritative."

+ Dial 78:523 Je '25 100w

"The essay on Cézanne is not quite satisfactory. Too much stress is placed upon his color and not enough on his design." T: Craven

— N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 120w

KNEELAND, NATALIE. Cases in retail salesmanship. (Merchandise manuals for retail salespeople) 189p $1.50 Shaw, A.W.

658.8 Salesmen and salesmanship 24-32116

"Presents, in dialogue form, 135 cases covering problems of retail selling and indicating correct and incorrect methods of handling selling situations. Evidence regarding service in Pittsburgh stores is given by shoppers, while records of the problems they have met as sales-

KNEELAND, NATALIE—Continued
persons are given by students of the Research bureau of retail training, located in Pittsburgh.—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:15 O '25

"As a primer in teaching the technique of selling, this volume is especially to be recommended for use by department store inspectors."—L. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 4 '25 280w

"The arrangement is such that the points brought out follow the general outline of a model sales talk. Each case is accompanied by a short résumé of the principles involved and by questions designed to show their application."

Harvard Business R 3:510 J1 '25 60w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:300 My '25

KNEELAND, NATALIE. Hosiery, knit underwear, and gloves. (Merchandise manuals for retail salespeople) 126p $1.50 Shaw, A.W.

677 Hosiery. Knit goods. Salesmen and salesmanship 24-32119

"Presents practical information in the form of questions and detailed answers regarding values desired by the customer, materials, trade customs, selling points, etc."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:15 O '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:294 My '25

KNEELAND, NATALIE. Waists. (Merchandise manuals for retail salespeople) 149p $1.50 Shaw, A.W.

677 Clothing and dress. Salesmen and salesmanship 24-32114

"In as simple and brief a way as possible, this manual gives merchandise facts and data which are usually gained only through years of experience in selling and handling waists. It shows the salesperson how to judge and explain values, describes the particular uses of each kind of material, differentiates between regular merchandise and sale merchandise, lists the fabrics, styles, and colors usually found in waists, and explains how the salesperson may be of real service by fitting the coloring and personality of the customer with appropriate colors and lines."—Publisher's note

Booklist 22:15 O '25

KNEVELS, GERTRUDE. Octagon house. 308p $2 Appleton

25-15983

Jerry Day was a quick-witted and capable young person. When Dallison asked her to become his daughter's companion she accepted with alacrity, not foreseeing that within a short time she would discover a murder, become implicated in a jewel theft, and be shut up in a madhouse. In all this excitement and terror Jerry did not lose her head. Aided by Michael O'Boyle, her cheerful, persistent suitor, she saved the jewels, unraveled the mystery and restored the real Nicolette Dallison to her father's arms. Then Jerry took refuge in Michael's.

"It holds the attention well."

Lit R p7 S 26 '25 80w

"Well above the average of the usual run of such tales." Ruth Von Phul

+ N Y Tribune p11 S 27 '25 260w

"A genuine thriller, replete with mystery, horror, death, and deceit. The reader is assured an evening of exciting diversion."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:245 O 24 '25 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p741 N 5 '25 80w

KNIBBS, HENRY HERBERT. Temescal. 370p $2 Houghton

25-7941

A Mexico of bandits, revolutionists and intrigue is the proper setting for this debonair soldier of fortune. Hunted by his enemies, Temescal and his comrade ride over the mountains to a shepherd's hut. The old goatherd and his daughter receive the strangers hospitably and care for them. When the dashing Temescal rides away, he leaves his heart behind in the keeping of the soft voiced, La Luz. As soon as opportunity offers, La Luz clips off her hair and follows her lover to share, as his lieutenant, his dangerous escapades.

Booklist 21:383 J1 '25

"With a dash like Sabatini's, and a character drawing far better, this story, which purports to be an historical novel of events unforgotten and hero still alive to read it, should last longer than the average novel. In the first place, it gives us Mexico from the inside, in a way which makes us understand it; in the second, it gives a vivid picture of the abdication of Diaz; in the third, it introduces a character which will not soon be forgotten, either in fiction or in fact." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 22 '25 1100w

Cleveland p83 J1 '25

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p655 S '25 350w

Reviewed by C. M. Morrison

Lit R p4 My 29 '25 450w

"A story considerably above the average of its kind, revealing familiarity with the country described and an ability to tell a good narrative."

+ N Y Times p22 Ap 26 '25 200w

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 100w

Sat R of Lit 1:842 Je 20 '25 160w

"A well-told story depicting Mexican life with considerable accuracy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 13 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:200 J1 '25

KNIGHT, GRANT COCHRAN. Superlatives. 197p $2 Knopf

823 English fiction. American fiction 25-7934

Under such titles as the most terrible, the happiest, the most tragic, the most humorous, the author discusses familiar characters in English fiction, bringing forward his reasons for the superlatives he applies to them.

"In an entertaining and pleasantly informal manner, Mr. Knight has lined up for us the characters of ten heroes and heroines of fiction, most of them well known to the average reader. The merit of these papers is not always equal. To our mind the best—surely the most convincing—of these essays is 'The Most Unreal,' where Meredith's Diana Warwick is neatly and deftly vivisected; the least convincing and conclusive 'The Most Memorable Children,' drawn from Henry James' 'The Turn of the Screw.'"

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 3 '25 450w

"Grant C. Knight's 'Superlatives' is not criticism, because Mr. Knight had a scheme in mind and then ransacked letters to fill it out. . . . The author is always intelligent, however, and he offers a deal of entertaining comment on the various characters he has picked. It is one of those books which should wheedle readers back into reperusals of some very great achievements in letters, and if it does that it has more than fulfilled its function." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 15 '25 320w

Sat R of Lit 1:763 My 16 '25 200w

"A series of papers that will be of intense interest to readers of the older novels."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:110 Ap '25

KNIFE, EMILIE (BENSON) (MRS ALDEN ARTHUR KNIFE), and KNIFE, ALDEN ARTHUR. Shadow captain. 347p $2 Dodd

25-6389

"A narrative compiled from notes gathered and set down by Launcelot Dove, one time chief lieutenant of the famous Captain William Kidd." The action of the story takes place in New York in 1703, two years after the execution of the notorious pirate, Captain Kidd. The captain's hidden treasure and his attractive widow, like a lode-star, draw numerous suitors to the feet of Mistress Kidd, but the most vigorous courting is done by two villains, James Stuart and Lord Carstairs. A revelation in the moonlight—the shadowy form of the captain himself—eventually brings defeat to the treasure-seekers, and the reward of loyalty to the widow.

Booklist 21:383 J1 '25

"A spring tonic for all lovers of adventure stories is 'The Shadow Captain.' It brings vividly to mind all the tales regarding Captain Kidd and his famous treasure."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 11 '25 400w

Cleveland p83 J1 '25

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p587 Ag '25 200w

"The background of the little town that was New York in 1703 is sketched in with a good deal of color, and the tale, which is told skillfully and with spirit, moves rapidly, its incidents following closely upon one another's heels."

+ N Y Times p22 My 24 '25 400w

"Adolescents might find it a thrilling yarn. The style is simply awful; the authors seem to think that a seventeenth century idiom can be indicated by the quaint expedient of changing all 'ifs' for 'ans' and making the characters 'thee' and 'thou' one another like Quakers."

— N Y Tribune p11 My 24 '25 500w

"The story is told in a lively style that seems in perfect keeping with the atmosphere of the time in which the scenes are laid. The Knifes have written a good adventure yarn that will well repay investigation by one in search of entertainment having to do with pirates and hidden treasure."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 270w

"An ingenious idea, but the action is scant and the style gadzooksy." H. W. Boynton

— + Outlook 139:580 Ap 15 '25 200w

"It is a fullblooded, swashbuckling story, obvious in plot, but alive with the clash of swords and the rustle of silk. True, its pseudo-colonial English is about as convincing as an eighteenth century plume worn above a modern haircut. True again, the character of James Stuart is something of an historical liberty. But fiction must be served, and this tale, told frankly for and as a story, will help to brighten Sabbath blues for those who are still afflicted."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:674 Ap 11 '25 180w

"This is an historical novel much above the average. The characters have life and the story a swing which carries the reader from the first page to the last."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p585 S 10 '25 220w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

KNOWLES, LILIAN CHARLOTTE ANNE (TOMM) (MRS C. M. KNOWLES). Economic development of the British overseas empire. (London school of economics and political science. Studies in economics and political science) 555p $4 A. & C. Boni [10s 6d Routledge]

330.942 Great Britain—Colonies. Great Britain—Economic conditions [24-28124]

"This is the first of two volumes designed to meet the needs of the students at the University of London, for whom the development of the empire has been made a required subject. This book contains three general chapters on the empire as a whole; a general discussion of the economic problems of the tropics, and detailed surveys of British India and the tropical possessions. The dominions are to be the subject of a forthcoming volume."

—Am Econ R

"Despite the good introductory chapters on the history of the empire, the sense of historical development is not successfully conveyed. The arrangement of material is neither decisively chronological nor decisively topical. There are also some negligences which will affect some readers adversely. A uniform style of reference is not maintained in the footnotes. Some references are incomplete. Commonly, the difficulties are not of much moment, but they suggest undue haste in the preparation of the manuscript for the press. The material itself is, however, excellent." A. P. Usher

+ — Am Econ R 15:306 Je '25 350w

"Dr. Knowles possesses two gifts, not often found together—the gift of happy generalisation and the gift of the faithful presentment of details. Occasionally the generalisation may be a bit too bold. Nearly always, however, the generalisations are extremely suggestive and stimulating to the reader." H. E. Edgerton

+ — Econ J 35:133 Mr '25 650w

"Here is a useful book, done with complete competence."

+ Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 40w

"While this survey is broad and sweeping in its general aspects, it is remarkably definite and detailed in its chapters devoted to particular regions and definite products. It throws much light upon the course of our own agricultural and economic products." A. S.

+ R of Rs 71:556 My '25 200w

"The thoroughness with which Professor Knowles has studied the official sources of information and the lucidity of her exposition will make the work indispensable to all students of economic history."

+ Spec 135:456 S 19 '25 60w

KNOX, D. B., comp. Children's funny sayings; an amusing book for everybody. 206p $2 Dutton [3s 6d Unwin]

136.74 Children's sayings

A great many of the classic anecdotes about children are here, a few that are known to be true, and others made up by their elders, but undeniably funny.

"Very entertaining book."

+ N Y Times p8 Ag 2 '25 220w

"The impression persists that the risible qualities of some children's remarks may exist largely in the ears of their relatives."

— N Y Tribune p11 O 11 '25 100w

KOFFKA, KURT. Growth of the mind, an introd. to child-psychology; tr. by Robert Morris Ogden. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 382p il $4.50 Harcourt [15s K. Paul]

150 Child study. Psychology, Educational 25-1748

"Koffka's book is concerned not with the concrete details of child-life but with the general principles of original nature, mental growth, and learning. In particular it applies the doctrines and point of view of the so-called Gestalt-psychology to the problems of instinct, habit formation, memory, and higher forms of learning."—Nation

"I welcome his criticisms and have profited by them. I agree with his insistence that very little in human instincts or learning proceeds in the form of a mere series of events like the tumbling down of a row of blocks when one is pushed. There is almost always a large amount of organization, control and direction. I think, however, that what we need to remedy the defects of a too mechanical connectionism is not fewer connections but more." E: L. Thorndike

KOFFKA, KURT—Continued

+ Nation 120:553 My 13 '25 650w

"An interesting and important book."

+ Nation and Ath 36:532 Ja 10 '25 30w

"One has, at times, an uneasy feeling that the word 'configuration' works with a little too facile a magic; that some of the generalizations would be the better for rather more support; that one has, at times, travelled far from the early, carefully controlled experimental work that first brought the school into prominence. These are, however, the faults of enthusiasm; only time and work can show whether Professor Koffka is justified in all his interesting claims." G: Humphrey

New Repub 44:288 N 4 '25 750w

"There is a freshness of treatment, and an inventiveness and fertility of method that produce an effect very much like the opening of a window." R. B. Perry

+ Sat R of Lit 1:773 My 23 '25 300w

"It is a pity that so much of Professor Koffka's book had to be devoted to polemics on general theory. It was no doubt necessary to make it clear how far he differed from the Behaviourists but we are inclined to think that he might have made shorter work of them. Nevertheless, his book is extremely interesting, and it is to be hoped that in its English dress it will be widely read."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p66 Ja 29 '25 1300w

"One misses direct applications to school problems. This necessarily weakens the book for professional training. It will be very stimulating as a teacher's reference book but will have little practical worth to parents or general readers who are approaching the study of psychology without special training." J. M. Andrews

+ Yale R n s 15:203 O '25 160w

KOHLER, WOLFGANG. Mentality of apes; tr. from the 2d rev. ed., by Ella Winters. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 342p $4.50 Harcourt [16s K. Paul]

591.51 Animal intelligence. Apes [25-4567]

"The experiments recorded in The Mentality of Apes form part of a series of patient investigations which Professor Kohler and his associate, Professor Koffka—two exponents of the Gestalt psychology—have been making in several directions. The object of the work done in Teneriffe was twofold. First, since it is already established that the higher apes are physically allied to man, more closely even than they are to the other ape species, there was a desire to determine what intellectual kinship they might have with man. And, secondly, there was the wish to observe in them some of those simplest primary acts of an intelligent kind which cannot easily be observed in the more complex human being, but which must be observed if we are ever to learn what at root an act of intelligence is."—Spec Ap 4 '25

"Aside from the interesting studies and experiments in animal psychology outlined in these pages, the book appeals to laymen on account of its sympathetic and occasionally whimsical treatment of the subjects of the experiments, and the unpontifical attitude of the author. The translation is clear and adequate."

+ Ind 114:421 Ap 11 '25 100w

"Both the observations and conclusions of 'The Mentality of Apes' are important. The book deserves to be widely read. It already has been, by the scientific circle for which it was written; and it is hoped that it may also achieve wide influence and usefulness in non-scientific circles." R. M. Yerkes

+ Int Bk R p461 Je '25 1300w

"The importance of the topic, the scarcity of scientific studies of the behavior of the man-like apes, and the eminent ability of the author combine to make the book a notable contribution to animal psychology. It should indeed be read with interest and profit by students of psychology, even though they care little about animals in general, and still less about chimpanzees in particular; and by students of animal life, even though they care little about psychology." E: L. Thorndike

+ Nation 120:430 Ap 15 '25 1400w

"Every serious student of psychology ought to read it. I am a mere amateur in this subject, but I found Professor Köhler's book fascinating." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 36:681 F 14 '25 1250w

"The book seems to us a very valuable one: its net result is to show that chimpanzees are very ingenious within a narrow range."

+ Nature 116:351 S 5 '25 450w

Reviewed by Max Eastman

New Repub 42:189 Ap 8 '25 760w

"This is undoubtedly the most important book on animal psychology which has appeared for many years. It is written by a man who is neither an anthropomorphist nor a mechanist, and yet who combines the sympathy of the one with the scientific attitude of the other. The impasse is made perfectly clear, and the necessity for some new psychological concept is obvious."

+ New Statesman 25:50 Ap 25 '25 1000w

St Louis p341 S '25

Sat R 139:221 F 28 '25 450w

Reviewed by R. B. Perry

Sat R of Lit 1:773 My 23 '25 1100w

Spec 134:160 Ja 31 '25 70w

Spec 134:560 Ap 4 '25 1650w

"The accounts of the experiments abound in little descriptive details which make the animals live before us; and the nine illustrations are excellent. Professor Köhler's work will, we think, always be regarded as a classic in its kind and a model for future studies in animal psychology. It is a pity that the book has not been better translated."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p131 F 26 '25 1900w

KOHUT, MRS REBEKAH (BETTELHEIM). My portion (an autobiography); introd. by Henrietta Szold. 301p $3.50 Seltzer

B or 92

25-8699

The autobiography of a gifted Jewess, the daughter of a rabbi and the wife of another famous rabbi and scholar. Her family emigrated to America when Rebekah was five years old and she became the most loyal of Americans. At twenty-two she married Alexander Kohut, devoting herself to his eight motherless children and rendering great service to her husband in his literary work. After his death a life of much public usefulness opened out to her and she became a leading figure in the Jewish sisterhoods and the Council of Jewish women.

Booklist 22:159 Ja '26

Boston Transcript p2 My 29 '25 300w

Cleveland p80 Jl '25

"One reads her story with a growing respect and admiration. One wishes that all anti-Semites would study this record of generous achievement. For Mrs. Kohut gave—all through her life—her energy and service to others."

+ Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 70w

"No page of the book is really dull, and all of the pages are distinguished by the presence upon them of a rare, maternal personality."

+ Nation 120:672 Je 10 '25 350w

"Every word will be read with sympathy and profit that has been set down by this vicarious mother in Israel for the encouragement of sincerity and effort on the part of others who have to face her many problems." James Luby

+ N Y Times p5 Ap 26 '25 1950w

"The unfortunate fact is that Mrs. Kohut has not written a clearly revealing autobiography. To use a heavy word, she has adumbrated many things without analyzing any. She has suggested some trying ordeals, has given us some witty and vivacious paragraphs, and has pressed a warm-hearted personality upon our senses. But something has held back her pen. She is all restraint." W. D. Lane

+ — N Y Tribune p4 My 24 '25 1000w

"As the story of a life spent unstintingly in service and as a chronicle of Jewish-American life during the past fifty years, 'My Portion' is an unusual biography."

+ N Y World p4m My 17 '25 820w

"The rebellious note of the autobiographies of young women from the ghetto—justified and socially valuable as that note may be—is wholly absent from these pages."

+ Outlook 141:676 D 30 '25 300w

St Louis p358 S '25

"This book is written in an easy, flowing style, with modesty and dignity, and, while frankly self-revealing, it is disfigured by no breaches of due reticence."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p563 S 3 '25 860w

KOMROFF, MANUEL. Grace of lambs. 221p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-21066

There is no thread of similarity in theme to bind these stories together, but there is evident in all of them a quality that proclaims the same hand. The tone is often somber—characteristically Russian in that—but it is often exquisite. The first of the stories, from which the book takes its title, concerns a down-at-the-heels English professor in China who has saturated himself in Oriental philosophy expressed in the proverb, "Lambs have the grace to suckle kneeling."

"The style is inferior. Still, the volume is an excellent example of the story-teller's art in its elemental, forgotten aspects, and Mr O'Brien, the anthologist, was more than usually keen when he compared it with something improvised in a bazaar, before a spell-bound audience."

+ — Dial 80:67 Ja '26 120w

"To those who knew the separate tales they well with surprising beauty. For those who come upon them for the first time the stories spread the fresh vista of a rich personality, contributing a new essence to our literature."

J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p6 O 24 '25 450w

"In these fourteen very short stories Manuel Komroff displays a fine thin talent for making little cameos. Each one is distinct and clear and precise in a simplicity that never quite owns the sinews of power. All his stories have grace and delicacy without dark blood and rich humor."

+ — Nation 122:67 Ja 20 '26 100w

"Curiously enough, if the scenes and the people were American, one would be tempted to think much better of them. But, being Russian, too many great examples rise to dwarf them beyond recall, and at the end one is no more than moderately glad for introduction to a smallish, neatish talent, prodigal of the gestures of warmth, yet somehow cool, synthetic and commonplace, with the surface plausibility of deft copies of great originals."

+ — New Repub 44:185 O 7 '25 150w

"Manuel Komroff has the virtues and the shortcomings of the 'divine amateur' in literature. An examination of the somewhat cryptic short stories, set against Oriental or Russian backgrounds, in 'The Grace of Lambs,' leaves the impression that the author is unaware of the nature and the limitations of his undeniable gift. His happy effects seem to be just that—a sudden lift of spontaneous improvisation, achieved by accident and impossible to repeat."

N Y Times p10 S 27 '25 700w

"I will express a preference for one which—I stake my reputation on this judgment—is among the great short stories of all literature, 'The Little Master of the Sky.' It is a prose poem, in one episode shockingly and startlingly cruel in a manner that we think of as Russian (for Mr. Komroff is Russian, though he writes classic English), pathetic, utterly lovely. And fine as it is, it does not greatly outshine the rest of the book." J. Macy

+ N Y Tribune p11 O 11 '25 500w

"Of the group of stories, the one called 'Little Master of the Sky,' and the one called 'The Political Horse,' seem to be best. The latter is filled with the rich, vulgar, irresistible humor of the Russians. Judging by the title he has chosen for his book, the author must have admired the opening story, 'The Grace of Lambs.' We find its philosophizing a little trite, and its resolutions evasive and unimportant."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:301 N 14 '25 480w

KOROLENKO, VLADIMIR GALAKTIONOVICH. In a strange land; tr. from the Russian by Gregory Zilboorg. 214p $2 Richards, B.G.

25-8124

"Korolenko's fictionized recollection of his visit to the United States during the 1890's. Through his puppets, Matvai and Dinma, guileless immigrants from the Russian village of Lozishtche, he expresses rather quaint notions about America, but he does indicate the bewildering effect of an industrial civilization upon immigrants raised in primitive surroundings and on simple concepts of life."—N Y World

"A simple theme, universal in its way, touched with Russian pensiveness and inconclusiveness. Here lingers a delicacy of treatment at odds with the exterior of the author's men and women, a beauty, a sympathy; no hardness, no glitter. 'In A Strange Land' denotes substantial worth." R. D. W.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 25 '25 520w

"Korolenko in this example of his work stands high above the average of the overpraised Russian novelists."

+ Ind 115:247 Ag 29 '25 150w

"This is a Russian emigrant story, told in a whimsical, delightful style, full of humor and pathos." R. L. Kurzman

+ Int Bk R p682 S '25 500w

Reviewed by Anzia Yezierska

Lit R p6 Je 6 '25 750w

"Korolenko's tale of two Russian immigrants, very capably translated by Gregory Zilboorg perhaps interests and surprises as much because of its author's scant knowledge of this country as for its excellence. Although his story shows some absurdities and misconceptions and an occasional grotesque misunderstanding or misinterpretation, it is a strikingly vivid and plausible account of the adventures and mishaps of a simple-minded young Russian immigrant who on his arrival knows not a word of English."

+ N Y Times p22 My 17 '25 350w

"For a Russian, especially for one of Korolenko's ability, the story possesses entirely too much plot and too little human nature. However, there is some genuine humor in the book and some happy observation, and it is quite as good as many another tale of Americanization no less popular because of lack of literary quality." B. C. Vladeck

+ — N Y Tribune p16 My 10 '25 500w

"After 'Passion and Pain' and 'The Treasure,' Korolenko's fictionized recollection of his visit to the United States during the 1890's is rather a disappointment. 'In a Strange Land' is not the kind of book by which to remember the author of 'Makar's Dream.' It proves the dependence of an artist on data instead of, exclusively, on his immortal soul." H. S.

+ — N Y World p7m My 3 '25 130w

KRAPP, GEORGE PHILIP. English language in America. 2v 377;355p $10 Century
420.9 English language. Americanisms
25-19533

The author of this historical study of the English language in America is professor of English at Columbia university. The first volume consists of seven essays, each complete in itself, on the mother tongue, vocabulary, proper names, literary dialects, style, American spelling and American dictionaries. The second volume is devoted to pronunciation. The book is exceedingly rich in illustrative examples and local detail. Bibliography. Indexes.

"English as it is spoken and written in the United States never had a better exponent than Professor Krapp, and this learned treatise on the subject will not fail to be welcomed by scholars and laymen alike. The work would excel as that of a philological expert who has the historical problems of language deeply in mind; it is also valuable as the output of an investigator who has spared no effort to make his chapters abounding rich in illustrative detail, some of it gathered from the mother country, most of it supplied by the life that has been lived on this continent since the first English settlers established themselves in the new world." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 5 '25 1250w

"Two volumes as interesting as they are instructive, as skilfully composed as they are solidly scholarly. . . . There is no one of these chapters which is not based on years of accumulation and investigation; and there is no one of them which does not contain a host of things more or less unfamiliar, even to most of those who have believed themselves to be fairly acquainted with the wordy battle between Americanisms and Briticisms. But there is never a taste of acridity in Professor Krapp's pages; he gives us light without heat; he retains the equable poise which a scientist ought to possess; he planes above partizanship, and seeks always to see the thing as it is, impartially and unemotionally. He is as moderate in assertion as he is modest in manner. He combines clarity and sanity; he has the caution of a scientist and the imagination of an artist. And he never allows his erudition to cumber and clog the flow of his illuminating narrative." Brander Matthews

+ Int Bk R p27 D '25 2050w

"This is a large work, and of the utmost importance. It represents years of diligent labor by a highly competent philologist, and is packed with interesting stuff. . . . No one will ever write about American pronunciation hereafter without leaning upon him heavily." H. L. Mencken

+ Nation 121:599 N 25 '25 650w

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin

N Y Tribune p5 Ja 10 '26 1200w

KRAUS, HERBERT. Germany in transition. (Norman Wait Harris memorial foundation lecture) 236p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press]

943 Germany—Politics and government.
Germany—Foreign relations 25-359

Lectures by the professor of international law at the University of Königsberg. Contents: Political conditions and tendencies in Germany; The reparation question; The League of nations and Germany; Self-determination and Germany; The new German constitution; Separatism in Germany.

Reviewed by M. W. Graham

Am Pol Sci R 19:402 My '25 460w

"The casual reader, who is not an expert on international relations, is often pretty much in the dark as to just what the learned professor is talking about. Yet the book is good for the point of view that it expresses, whatever the manner of expression." L. S. K.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 F 7 '25 370w

"Open-minded people will be benefited by this discussion. Others will only be hardened in their opinions."

Ind 114:78 Ja 17 '25 160w

"In reading Germany in Transition one has the uncomfortable feeling of listening to the revelations of a sensitive man who has been compelled by reason of unfortunate publicity to discuss intimate family matters of an embarrassing nature. Dr. Kraus with much tact and delicacy of feeling has touched on certain controversial subjects, and has succeeded in making one see how his fellow-countrymen have reacted to the bewildering events since 1918." P. M. Brown

Int J Ethics 35:308 Ap '25 500w

Lit R p11 Mr 28 '25 100w

"The essays contained in Professor Kraus's book have the usual defects and advantages of lectures published in book form. The author must have been told in advance that American lecture audiences prefer the sweet melody of optimism to the tragic dirge of a political 'Eroica.' One wonders whether his conclusions would not have turned out a bit more pessimistic if he had reached them in his Königsberg studio with no anticipation of the visible signs of approval or disapproval in the faces of his American hearers." Emil Lengyel

Nation 120:551 My 13 '25 400w

"It is the expression of the view of those Germans who are far from nationalist. From the academic point of view, as from the political, you get, then, only the statement of the problem, not its solution."

N Y Tribune p13 Ap 19 '25 180w

Outlook 139:118 Ja 21 '25 10w

"He is well worth reading because he gives an authoritative German point of view, yet is moderate, scientific, and lucid." S. B. Fay

+ Sat R of Lit 1:668 Ap 11 '25 500w

KREYMBORG, ALFRED. Troubadour; an autobiography. 415p $3 Boni & Liveright
B or 92 25-8503

Mr Kreymborg writes his autobiography in the third person, but with a depth of feeling that is far from an impersonal detachment. He shows us the family life in the small rooms back of the cigar store on 56th street—the evenings over the chessboard with his gruff but kindly German father, the wintry days with his mother near the friendly round stove in the dining room; the mandolin duets with his brother Carl that are the first outlet for his absorbing love of music. He writes of the women, beginning with his mother and his Aunt Isabelle, whose love and faith in the gifts of this frail, quiet, self-contained child, never falter. Music and books are the predominating interests of his life. He is led with several of the youthful aspirants of the day, into this literary venture and that, thru near defeat and half success until each in his turn wins recognition.

Booklist 21:380 Jl '25

"Mr. Kreymborg writes graciously and with a sagacious eye. He looks back upon his life and he sees a struggle that apparently has no end, but he appears to relish much of it. And because he does relish it so the reader is bound to be carried swiftly along on this amusing and sprightly river of self revelation." H. S. Gorman

+ Bookm 61:90 Mr '25 720w

"Written by a poet who has not yet arrived at popularity, it is conceivable that a paradox is about to ensue: the paradox of the poet achieving his fame through his prose. At all events, it is most probable that this prose work will be more widely read than its author's verse has been." B. P. H.

Boston Transcript p1 Ap 4 '25 580w

Cleveland p106 N '25

"Alfred Kreymborg, neither a prince nor favoured, having made song in vain, is forced to turn to prose to win his people's ear. This is the dramatic kernel of the volume. It reveals the almost infeasible mechanism of our land for making our poets over into prose; the modern alchemy whereby much gold is transmogrified to lead." Waldo Frank

Dial 79:72 J1 '25 1400w

"His book is a frank, revealing document, not the story of a great man but almost a great story of a man."

+ Ind 114:386 Ap 4 '25 60w

"Mr. Kreymborg follows the events of his life in detail. From the time when he played chess with the air and the skill of a champion, to his canned music selling days, to the days of his troubadouring, he carries one along with humor and with an eye to drama. He spins a cunning yarn, as a novelist might of love, conflict and a measure of victory." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p2 Je 20 '25 750w

"'Troubadour' is very far from being a failure by and large. If its hero has little to say for himself, he has much to say about the persons he has met; and he has met almost everybody. Portions of his book will be valuable some day for the same reason that they are interesting now; they contain what is probably a unique record of an important literary generation." Mark Van Doren

Nation 120:521 My 6 '25 550w

"The last few years of Mr. Kreymborg's life are perhaps too close to be seasoned by either memory or art, and towards the end a certain baldness of statement is increased, perhaps, by the mere number of things to be stated. The larger part of Troubadour, however, is compact and poignant, and in treating of his loves and friendships Mr. Kreymborg has written with a tenderness and a quiet sincerity which contrasts happily with the smears of vulgarity of one or two recent autobiographies." L: Mumford

+ New Repub 42:11 Ap 15 '25 1450w

"'Troubadour' is an indispensable document upon contemporary America. An important book and an altogether delightful one, 'Troubadour' is especially valuable for its comprehensive account of the ways in which our modern, vital, disturbing America has sought esthetic forms for the expression of its experiences." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p7 Mr 29 '25 670w

"Few novels have drawn the East Side, with its mixed ideals and jargons, so unaffectedly. It is this very genuineness of gesture, this lack of pomposity, which makes his record as real as it is readable." L: Untermeyer

+ N Y Tribune p4 My 31 '25 620w

N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 320w

Outlook 140:406 J1 15 '25 180w

"At the age of forty Kreymborg can write an autobiography which is American, because he loves and understands America. It is the story of a man who wanted to prosper all those things in America which the mind and the spirit could savor. It is the record of a creative personality." Gilbert Seldes

+ Sat R of Lit 1:741 My 9 '25 560w

Reviewed by E. M. Jewett

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 700w

Wis Lib Bul 21:142 My '25

KROEBER, ALFRED LOUIS. Anthropology. 523p il $4.50 Harcourt

572 Anthropology 23-16060

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"This is the most complete and best balanced book on anthropology that I know of. It is so well written that it is almost literature, so good that it is almost great; and so sound that it will take a lot of juggling for our Huntingtons, East, Wiggams, Goulds, McDougalls, Stoddards, and the rest of the tribe of racemongers and eugenists to conjure any white rabbits out of it. . . . It is a sane book and can safely be recommended to those who want to know what a real anthropologist has to say about anthropology." G: A. Dorsey

+ Am Anthropol 27:558 O '25 1100w

Cath World 120:283 N '24 280w

"A notable book—one which deserves to be known and studied in Europe as well as in America."

+ Nature 116:238 Ag 15 '25 350w

KROHN, MRS JOSEPHINE (ELLIOTT). Old King Cole, and other mediæval plays; with an introd. by Constance D'Arcy Mackay and general notes on production by Cora Mel Patten. (Drama league junior play ser.) 208p $1.50 Doran

812 Children's plays 25-10874

In the introduction to these four plays for pupils of the upper grammar grades and Junior high school, Constance D'Arcy Mackay writes: "All of these miniature dramas have the pungent idiom of the middle ages, its spirit and gayety, plus the salt of literary flavor. Each scene moves briskly. No play is clogged with talk for talk's sake." Games, songs and folk dances are interpolated to introduce large groups of children, so that each of the plays may be given by an entire grade. The score for the incidental music is included, as well as general notes on the production of the plays.

"Not only are the plays written for children but the child's very own appreciation and humor are revealed in each one. Mrs. Krohn has written them for children, but they will be enjoyed equally as well by the grown-ups. Charming in their simplicity, these plays should furnish truly good material for those searching for plays for children." Frederica Magnus

+ Lit R p12 O 31 '25 100w

"The plays themselves, while sometimes a trifle too ingenuous, with the moral stressed somewhat more heavily than necessary, are nevertheless full of vigor and spirit and the mediæval background excellently managed in atmosphere and detail. Of the four, we found 'Old King Cole' and his lost fiddlers three the most entertaining."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:92 Ag 29 '25 130w

KROPOTKIN, PETR ALEKSIEVICH, prince. Ethics; origin and development; auth. tr. from the Russian by Louis S. Friedland and Joseph R. Piroshnikoff. 349p $4 Dial press

170.9 Ethics—History 25-816

For descriptive notes see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:357 J1 '25

"Kropotkin was prevented by death from writing the dialectic aspects of his theories, but this preparatory volume states his issues adequately, while the vivid recapitulation of previous moral teachings gives the work a high documentary value."

+ Dial 78:523 Je '25 200w

Ind 114:135 Ja 31 '25 150w

"It is, of course, a fragment, but a fragment so beautiful and of such noble intent, that one feels a certain reluctance to judge it at all." G: Boas

+ J Philos 22:245 Ap 23 '25 1500w

"In principle there is no objection to the writing of a history of philosophy by a man who has a position of his own to defend; in fact, the method has distinct value. But it also has its dangers, chief among which are false perspective and the doing of actual violence to the thought of the writers considered. Kropotkin avoids neither danger." C: A. Bennett

+ — Nation 121:97 J1 15 '25 800w

"It presents a comprehensive, though somewhat discursive, survey of the progress of speculation throughout the course of human history, the exposition being skilfully combined with systematic criticism. The difficulties of translation have been fairly successfully overcome, so that the book is always interesting and readable; and students will find it a useful introduction to the more detailed work of Westermarck or Wundt."

KROPOTKIN, P. A.—Continued

+ Nation and Ath 38:64 O 10 '25 750w

Reviewed by H. M. Parshley
N Y Tribune p1 J1 26 '25 240w

"There is perhaps no better book of its kind; not only is it authoritative, but also it is written in a style so easy, lucid, and persuasive as to attract the general reader. Obviously, the translators have done their work well."

+ Outlook 139:193 F 4 '25 120w

KRUTCH, JOSEPH WOOD. Comedy and conscience after the restoration. (Columbia univ. studies in English and comparative literature) 270p $2.50 Columbia univ. press [12s 6d Milford]

822 English drama—Restoration 24-28256

A study of the English comedy of manners of the Restoration period, of the society which produced it, the influences that led to its decline, the development of literary criticism and the various specific attacks on the evils of the stage.

"It is an admirable summary of the characteristics of British drama in the seventeenth and opening years of the eighteenth century and will prove a valuable hand-book to all persons desirous of having some general notion of historical playwrights without the trouble of reading them. But, of course, he has nothing or very little new to tell, and it might be questioned whether the results attained by his conscientious compilation are worth the trouble involved in making it." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p4 F 28 '25 850w

"We have a right to look for, but we do not find a systematic summary of the work of other scholars on the subject such as should make us aware of what is new and what familiar in Mr. Krutch's findings. His additions to our knowledge consist of fuller descriptions than exist elsewhere of the Collier controversy, the activities of the Society for the Reformation of Manners, and the various official measures taken to regulate the stage. . . . His critical estimates of plays and playwrights are sound and pointed." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Nation 120:124 F 4 '25 620w

Reviewed by S. Chew

N Y Tribune p9 D 21 '24 350w

"Mr. Krutch's chief service is in enlarging the immediate materials and general background for study of the English stage reformation rather than in establishing new critical theories." G. H. Nettleton

Sat R of Lit 1:561 F 28 '25 500w

"The author carries his learning lightly and reserves for an appendix his valuable bibliographies of seventeenth century critical theory and the Collier controversy. Although but lately printed, the volume was completed in 1920 and deserves an honourable place among the studies produced by the revived interest in Restoration literature."

+ Spec 134:248 F 14 '25 120w

"The book as a whole is an illuminating exposition of the disaster which overtook the English stage in the first years of the eighteenth century, told with authority and attesting a lively appreciation of the writers of the Restoration whose overthrow it records."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:350 My '25 300w

KUMMER, FREDERIC ARNOLD (ARNOLD FREDERICKS, pseud.). First days of history. (Earth's story) 311p il $2 Doran

930 History, Ancient 25-9053

This history of the ancient world is told quite simply for young readers. The method by which it is narrated links events in the various countries at the same time so that the whole becomes a connected story with facts and dates related.

"The value of this book of Mr. Kummer's is that he shows the dawn of history among all the great peoples of the world and he connects his stories so that the reader sees how the history of one nation bears upon that of another and sees however indistinctly that in reality it is all one story."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 200w

Cleveland p103 N '25

"Lacks vividness and telling power. There is good material in the book, but one has the feeling that the whole is not so very far beyond the state of elaborated notes." M. G. Bonner

+ — Int Bk R p686 S '25 160w

KUPRIN, ALEXANDER IVANOVICH, Gambrinus, and other stories; tr. from the Russian, by Bernard Guilbert Guerney. 162p $2 Adelphi co.

25-16719

"Five tales comprise this collection. The Gambrinus [of the title story] is a small beer cellar in a Russian seaport on the Baltic. It is visited by sailors, and fishermen from the far parts of the world. Here Sascha, an ugly Jew, with a mastery of melody, plays out his spirituality nightly in an outpouring of folk, topical and classical music from his violin. He is the idol of the frequenters of this beer cellar that is in many ways the dramatic centre of the life of the port. When the whims of civilization deal harshly with Sascha—when he has been purposely injured so that he may no longer play his violin to entertain his fellowmen—he persists in the ways of music and plays the music that is close to his heart on a penny whistle." (N Y Times) Contents: Gambrinus; Monte Carlo; Roach hole; The disciple; The old city of Marseilles.

"There is none of the finesse of Chekhov or the artistry of Katherine Mansfield, into whose domain these fragmentary sketches appear to trespass. They reveal, however, an acute observation and a certain dexterity along stylistic lines which carries the reader on in spite of himself. The volume undoubtedly suffers in translation."

+ — Bookm 62:505 D '25 130w

"A rather disillusioning glimpse—to those who have never been there—of Monte Carlo, and an altogether interesting sketch of 'The Old City of Marseilles' are the most interesting and best written of the several other sketches in the little book."

Boston Transcript p3 N 28 '25 150w

"Few short stories have turned up recently with such a power to live and be worth reading again."

+ New Repub 44:185 O 7 '25 200w

N Y Times p11 S 27 '25 750w

"There is much fine beauty in the work of Kuprin; tenderness, too, and a full talent for the description of moving scenes. In Gambrinus the reader comes away with a deeply etched memory of the damp beer hall which is the seat of the story's adventures. But the impression of the characters, even those most deeply involved, is diffused and uncertain."

+ — N Y World p4m S 6 '25 100w

"In comparison with 'Gambrinus,' the other stories in the volume are slight, indeed, appearing more like sketches for stories than stories themselves. Their picaresque obsession is, however, picturesque, and in the beautiful translation Mr. Gurney has made, they glow with poetry."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:345 N 28 '25 360w

KUYPER, ABRAHAM. To be near unto God; tr. from the Dutch by John Hendrik de Vries. rev ed 679p $3 Macmillan

242 Spiritual life

25-7958

A series of 110 meditations by the Dutch theologian and statesman, one time prime minister of the Netherlands. The theme of the contemplations is the same thruout—the nearness of the soul to God.

Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 320w
N Y Tribune p5 Ag 2 '25 100w

KUYUMJIAN, DIKRAN. See Arlen, M., pseud.

L

LACON, pseud. Lectures to living authors; adorned with portraits of some of the various subjects by Quiz. 231p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d G. Bles]

824 Authors, British. English literature—History and criticism [25-24734]

Lacon's lectures are addressed to twenty-three of the most widely read contemporary British authors. He tells them frankly, as if he were talking to them in friendly fashion, what he thinks of them, summing up their faults and their virtues as they appear to him. Contents: Sir J. M. Barrie; G. B. Shaw; H. G. Wells; John Galsworthy; Sir A. C. Doyle; Walter De La Mare; Arnold Bennett; G. K. Chesterton; Robert Hichens; Max Beerbohm; Rudyard Kipling; Hilaire Belloc; Morley Roberts; W. B. Maxwell; D. H. Lawrence; John Masefield; H. A. Vachell; Charles Marriott; W. J. Locke; Hugh Walpole; E. F. Benson; J. C. Squire; Percy White.

"The estimates achieve a certain vigor simply because they are addressed directly to the authors criticized and because, now and again, there is a fresh and pointed turn of a phrase. Hardly ever do they add a thought not previously enunciated."

— + Boston Transcript p6 O 31 '25 220w

Reviewed by R: Le Gallienne
Int Bk R p699 O '25 950w

"Informal and entertaining volume." H. B.
+ Lit R p5 Ag 29 '25 160w

"Lacon's book is adorned with a set of the silliest and most ineffective cartoons we have ever seen, but the letterpress is for the most part on a different level. Lacon addresses his 'Lectures' to a couple of dozen of the best known English writers; and his frank judgments of their work are shrewd and well-balanced, as well as amusing."

— + New Statesman 25:264 Je 18 '25 320w

"In spite of his narrow vision, Lacon knows how to write." Malcolm Cowley
+ N Y Tribune p8 N 15 '25 300w

"With sharp impertinence and a great air of being outpoken the pseudonymous author of these lectures gives certain living authors a piece of his mind. This might have been most amusing and even salutary had he possessed more trustworthy information and a little knowledge of the general principles of literary criticism. Unfortunately, 'Lacon's' facts are too often untrustworthy. In fact, it is only when 'Lacon' writes of novelists and the novel that he has anything valuable to say. The lectures to Mr. Galsworthy and Mr. H. G. Wells are much the best in the book."

— + Sat R 140:19 J1 4 '25 450w

LADIES' home journal one-act plays. 221p $1.50 Doubleday

822 English drama—Collections. American drama—Collections 25-16662

Five one-act plays for amateurs written by Roland Pertwee, Freeman Tilden, A. A. Milne and Booth Tarkington. Two of the plays contain suggestions for the amateur producer, and two of them may be produced without payment of the usual royalties. Contents: Evening dress indispensable, by Roland Pertwee; Enter Dora—exit dad, by Freeman Tilden; The loveliest thing, by Roland Pertwee; The man in the bowler hat, by A. A. Milne; Bimbo, the pirate, by Booth Tarkington.

Booklist 22:64 N '25

"A collection quite out of the ordinary." Frederica Magnus

+ Lit R p11 N 14 '25 160w

"Pertwee's two plays are insignificant, and certainly not fresh. Tilden's play is a silly trifle. 'The Man in the Bowler Hat,' by A. A. Milne, is indeed, delightfully fresh, a one-act burlesque on the 'thriller' play which would be much enjoyed by people sophisticated enough to laugh at 'thriller' plays, and quite unintelligible to anybody else. Only Booth Tarkington's 'Bimbo, the Pirate,' has any real dramatic meat in it."

W. P. Eaton

— + N Y Tribune p5 O 4 '25 520w

Pratt p25 autumn '25

"Little Theatre Organizations and amateur dramatic groups throughout the country will find these plays a genuine contribution to the ever-increasing volume of actable short plays."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:179 O 3 '25 300w

"Will prove a boon to dramatic clubs and amateurs young and old who wish to produce something clever and amusing without too much trouble and expense. A glance at the names of the authors who (by request for this special purpose) have written the little plays published in this volume, reveals the fact that The Ladies' Home Journal considered the best none too good for the ambitious amateur."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 O 12 '25 300w

LADDO, RAYMOND BARDEEN. Non-metallic minerals; occurrence—preparation—utilization. 686p $6 McGraw

553 Mines and mineral resources 25-8576

"The main facts concerning composition, descriptions, properties, occurrence, and uses of nearly 100 commercial minerals, with bibliographies. Brings together a large amount of data from the technical literature of the United States and foreign countries. Author was formerly an expert in these subjects with the United States Bureau of Mines."—N Y New Tech Bks

"Up-to-date information in condensed form on the resources, preparation, and various uses has been woefully lacking and the author has filled a long felt want in this book." W. M. Weigel

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:765 J1 '25 350w
N Y New Tech Bks 10:22 Ap '25

LADY OF QUALITY, pseud. Serena Blandish, or The difficulty of getting married. 232p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

25-11075

With a light ironic touch this burlesque describes the difficulties of Serena Blandish in getting married. "A young girl of nineteen whom Nature had given every grace of figure, face, ankle, wrist and expression" she had a fatal amiability and candor. Of lovers there were plenty but of proposals, none. Riches came near her but invariably receded. In a critical moment a countess adopted her, promising to give her every opportunity to make a brilliant marriage. But nothing happened. The countess became impatient and was threatening to turn her out when an enormously rich Portuguese count appeared on the scene. His name was connected with mystery and scandal but Serena, in desperate straits, accepted his offer of marriage. On the eve of the wedding she found that he was the illegitimate son of a Nicaraguan Indian and not a count at all; but he was rich and marriage imperative. "Better to be married in Iberia, than single in London."

Cleveland p87 S '25

"'Serena' will be all things to all readers. You will find a little of Michael Arlen in her gait, a dash of Ronald Firbank in her complexity, and even a little Jane Austen somewhere about the eyes. Certainly you will find the same engaging simplicity of David Garnett of 'Lady Into Fox' fame. You will find as many epigrams as there are paragraphs and at least three hours of either astonishment or amusement in this book." Dawn Powell

LADY OF QUALITY, pseud.—Continued

+ Lit R p2 Ag 8 '25 300w

"Whoever the author of this little jeu d'esprit may be, he is one of the cleverest of contemporary writers, and he has managed by his mastery of the classical manner to produce a narrative in which layer after layer of irony reveals itself to the reader who brings a perception delicate enough to catch it. All the worldly wisdom which eighteenth-century cynicism presupposes is there, and below the surface lies delicately implied the modern criticism of the morality of that same great century." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 121:43 J1 1 '25 820w

"Written as if with a reminiscence of the Young Visitors in the back of the head, and with perhaps a faint recollection of the Happy Hypocrite, and with traces of other undetectable influences, all mingled by a talent for synthesis which marks the book as 'unique' without, somehow, making it original."

New Repub 44:51 S 2 '25 150w

"As burlesque, as extravaganza, it is by all odds one of the most amusing skits which has been turned out in a long while."

+ — N Y Times p5 Je 7 '25 1450w

"The bitterness is never sly, but always lusty, too insistent, perhaps, but Serena will not be forgotten, nor will her observations, which, being from 'the high realm of candor,' may be partially true." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p4 Je 7 '25 700w

Outlook 140:565 Ag 19 '25 200w

"Daintily ridicules all the supposed proprieties. Whoever wrote Serena (one has heard Mr. Beerbohm suggested) he carries his fiery liquor like a gentleman. He can mock (as can few of our younger Voltaires) without smashing the furniture. There is admirable wit in this irreverent, trivial, and thoroughly mondaine fairy tale." Christopher Morley

+ Sat R of Lit 1:927 J1 25 '25 450w

Reviewed by Rebecca West

Sat R of Lit 2:207 O 17 '25 700w

"It is a lighthearted story, but it bears witness to a good depth of analytic knowledge." Andrew Carey

+ Spec 134:848 N 29 '24 300w

"While there is a certain tart cynicism in the situation, the portrayal is too tepid to stir the reader's furtive sympathy or frank disgust. If Serena were not a puppet her story would perhaps be too painful. As it is, all reality is carefully excluded from her story, and even from the glittering environment."

Springfd Republican p7a My 31 '25 220w

"A Lady of Quality has proved herself a searching critic and an acute observer of society; and the vivacity and sparkle of her pages will provoke delight."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p868 D 18 '24 360w

LA FAYETTE, MARIE MADELEINE (PIOCHE DE LA VERGNE) comtesse de. Princess of Cleves; tr. by H. Ashton; with an introd. (Broadway translations) 287p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

[25-11189]

An historical novel having for its background the France of Louis XIV's time. It is thought to be semi-autobiographical in character and is counted as the author's masterpiece, marking the beginning of the history of the novel of sentiment. While the characters of the novel are as true as possible to history the chief interest is psychological.

"A worthy attempt is made to recreate a mood by an excellent introduction. But the age of diarists and philosophical discussion is so unutterably French, one cannot help missing much of the delicate shadings. However, the prize counts more than the void that remained before. The present volume should act as an appetizer for the original."

— + Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 100w

"Her manner is so quiet that until one is used to her it is easy to miss the fact that she is smiling. But the Princesse de Cleves is a masterpiece, and there is no need to say any more about this translation, than to point out that it is by Professor Ashton, who has written two excellent books on Madame de Lafayette and knows the whole period well, and that he has done his work so tactfully that it is a pleasure to read."

+ New Statesman 24:604 F 28 '25 700w

"The Princess of Cleves' has been justly called the earliest example of the modern novel: it is a masterpiece in its delicate observation of human nature and in its skilful presentation of a pitiful tale."

+ Sat R 139:195 F 21 '25 120w

"All teachers of comparative literature will welcome this translation which worthily takes its place beside the others in the notable series."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:161 S 26 '25 350w

"She reproduces both detail and atmosphere faithfully, but she refines them both. She is no strict moralist, nor are her characters paragons of virtue. She has, indeed, extraordinary delicacy of touch. It is one of her great achievements that, having left behind the florid old romance of chivalry, she has contrived to retain in her new model its comeliest traditions of taste and breeding. Many critics have praised the psychology of this book, with good cause. The characterization of the principal three figures is highly skilful and subtle."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p115 F 19 '25 1000w

LA FONTAINE, JEAN DE. Forty-two fables; tr. by Edward Marsh. 89p $2 Harper 841 25-9910

The translator has chosen some of the more and some of the less familiar fables, following closely the metrical form of the original. An unusual feature is the dedication of each translation to some present-day celebrity.

"His work achieves something of the courtly effect. Each poem bears its dedication, an opportunity for the exercise of malice—but, unfortunately, a lost opportunity."

+ — Bookm 62:507 D '25 150w

"Those chosen are not all familiar, and many familiar ones were not chosen, but the collection is on the whole well-rounded. The quality of the verse is certainly all that could be expected, not exalted, not always smoothly flowing, but thoroughly pleasing, and altogether in the style of the French."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '25 160w

"The volume is amusing, properly owlish and ribald in turn, and it contains enough really good lines to rank the author with some of his favorite Georgians."

+ N Y Tribune p11 O 11 '25 220w

LAGERLOF, SELMA OTTILIANA LOVISA. Treasure; tr. from the Swedish by Arthur G. Chater. 158p $2 Doubleday

25-26436

"The Treasure' is the story of the Denmark of King Frederick II., in the sixteenth century, created from the materials of primitive folklore and told in a simple and straightforward narrative."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:340 Je '25

"Certainly much less important is 'The Treasure' than 'Marbacka,' with which Selma Lagerlof, the only woman thus honored, won the Nobel prize a few years ago. Coldness of nature and of deed fill the pages of this sixteenth century romance. It is not an easy theme to make convincing, not a pleasant one if convinced. Yet such sureness of means, such delicacy of effect (remembering the different standards four centuries later) that "The Treasure" stands out as a pure 'tour de force.'"

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 27 '25 450w
Cleveland p81 J1 '25

"It is impossible not to believe that in the original the aims of this story are perfectly achieved. Its old-fashioned style, its easy power over story telling and tone, its fine proportions grow out of art reduced to artlessness and sophistication rendered simple. In translation, unfortunately, it seems to lose a great deal. The style is awkward, the rhythm is choppy, the pictures, one imagines, lose part of their sharpness and clarity. But it is obvious that a translator is confronted with difficulties in trying to carry over so simple a story as this."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 19 '25 580w

Reviewed by H. A. Larsen

N Y Tribune p5 J1 19 '25 906w

N Y World p7m My 3 '25 170w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"She has told a convincing tale that can be most succinctly described as real unrealism."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:164 S 26 '25 200w

LAKE, KIRSOPP. Religion of yesterday and to-morrow. 183p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Christophers]

230 Christianity 25-21889

The professor of early Christian history in Harvard university writes of the clash of parties in the religious world of yesterday and today. The first part of the book discusses the characteristics of Catholicism and Protestantism and the intellectual movement in Christianity which, beginning in the first half of the nineteenth century is still unabated. In the second part of the book he deals with some of the theological questions which most trouble the churches today.

"There is clear thinking and fine expression on every page of this decidedly notable and opportune publication. It does not matter how far the reader is able to go along with Professor Lake. The book should be read by every student of modern religious trends interested in the future of Christian forces." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 62:xlili N '25 180w

"There is much to admire in his scholarship, but he fails to grip your soul." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '25 350w

"Dr. Lake deals straightforwardly with the outlook for orthodoxy and experimentalism. His most provocative pages, necessarily, are those at the end in which he makes a few guesses as to the likelihood or otherwise of the religion of to-morrow being identical with Christianity in any of the forms we know."

+ New Statesman 25:supxiv O 10 '25 280w

"In short and succinct form, with the authority of scholarship, in a lapidary and epigrammatic style, with herculean frankness, and with a mystic's treasured faith, Professor Lake attempts, before it is too late, to call the churches to an honest acknowledgment of truth and to a thorough intellectual house-cleaning." A. W. Vernon

+ N Y Tribune p4 D 13 '25 1150w

Reviewed by B. W. Bacon

Sat R of Lit 2:447 D 26 '25 500w

"Prof Lake illumines the whole field of historical religious discussion, from a point of view which is outside of both Catholicism and Protestantism, yet hostile to neither. Had the author expanded this historical summary in the same spirit of intellectual appraisal and sensitive appreciation, a highly serviceable popular history of the Christian religion on critical grounds might have resulted."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 15 '25 800w

"We do not appreciate Professor Lake's frankness and acuteness any the less because we cannot endorse his conclusions. If in this as in his other books he seems sometimes to be almost perverse, and we are tempted to leave him on one side, we find that a patient study of his interpretations and arguments suggests important questions we might have ignored, but for which every honest thinker will desire to find an answer or to understand why he fails to find it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p564 S 3 '25 750w

Reviewed by A. T. Case

World Tomorrow 8:381 D '25 950w

LALOU, RENE. Contemporary French literature; tr. from the French by William Aspinwall Bradley. 402p $4.50 Knopf [18s J. Cape] 840.9 French literature—History and criticism 24-30797

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:269 Ap '25

"At present, the most that can be said for it is that it would make an excellent manual for such college students as wished to orient themselves in the field." A. W. Porterfield

+ Bookm 61:111 Mr '25 220w

Dial 78:428 My '25 150w

"In a sense 'Contemporary French Literature' may become an important event in American letters. It is an excellent model and its zest—let us hope—may fire some one in our land to attempt a Contemporary American Literature. We certainly stand in dire need of an American Lalou." G. B. Munson

+ Lit R p3 F 21 '25 650w

"This translation, pitted with the slips of ignorance and a rare clumsiness of diction, is made from a text cut by Mr. Ernest Boyd. Speaking from a small knowledge of Mr. Boyd's critical ineptitudes, one would rather the task had been left to a village barber. M. Lalou is only to blame to the extent that he has condoned and even commended both editor and translator." R: Aldington

+ Nation and Ath 37:402 Je 27 '25 1400w

"A large and complicated affair and it has its blemishes. Mr. Bradley is a known translator, and his work must be pronounced, in general, satisfactory; yet it is unpleasant to feel obliged to recast some of the passages one has desired to quote. Errors typographical are not really numerous, yet they occur in such numbers as to have justified a memorandum, started at the beginning, for the benefit of the publisher, could one have realized how many slips were to develop. Least satisfactory of all are the pages on Marcel Proust, who seems to have infected commentator and translator alike." H: B. Fuller

+ New Repub 41:346 F 18 '25 1000w

"Only very wide reading indeed could give one such a literary 'map' as M. Lalou provides. Moreover, he names and describes many a book which the reader whose interests are not critical may recognize as likely to appeal to him. He is a good guide also to the general reader."

+ New Statesman 25:256 Je 18 '25 250w

"The difficulty of trying to be complete and at the same time of aiming at clear classification in presence of such an amount of material is appalling. It is in the classification that M. René Lalou fails. The pages dedicated to Romain Rolland, to Péguy, or to the symbolists are excellent. Elsewhere he is too continuously allusive, as if whole parts of his book had been made up of impressions from the daily press, and he irritates the willing reader." Ernest Dimnet

+ Sat R 139:647 Je 13 '25 800w

"Any review of 'Contemporary French Literature' should begin by stating that the book is excellent. Indeed, for those who are seriously interested in the progress of French literature since 1870, it is almost indispensable." Malcolm Cowley

+ Sat R of Lit 2:22 Ag 8 '25 550w

"It is regrettable that M. Lalou's book has been cut down and is rather badly translated.

LALOU, RENE—Continued

Nevertheless it is a valuable guide to a rich period of French literature, so rich that the unguided enquirer is lost without some such précis."

+ — Spec 135:308 Ag 22 '25 1550w

LA MOTTE, ELLEN NEWBOLD. Snuffs and butters. 256p $1.75 Century

25-8733

Sensitive and ironic tales the recurring theme of which is the contact of white with native in the Far East and in Africa. Contents: Snuffs and butters; The Malay girl; The golden stars; The middle-class mind; Proof; Widows and orphans; The Cardiff giant; The onlookers; In Mashonaland.

Booklist 22:34 O '25

"Each story has its gruesomeness—as Miss Motte's stories are likely to have. Each, however, is vivid and memorable and thought-provocate."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 450w
Cleveland p88 S '25

"Her stories are sharply cut and polished; she is a restrained and effective artist. The atmospheric background is maintained, the characters are quickly and vividly established, the style is simple and sure. It is somewhat difficult to decide why these are not great stories."

+ — Ind 115:24 J1 4 '25 120w

Reviewed by J. McLaughlin

Lit R p9 My 16 '25 300w

"Though these stories are sensitive and discriminating, ever conscious of striking contrasts, they are for the most part written with restraint and economy of detail. Her little dramas are sharp and poignant with far-off places and strange, strong passions. Several of them remind one of Kipling's fascinating early tales of India."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 26 '25 620w

"Free from any of that nasty snobbery frequently found in books written by Nordics on the delectable follies of another race. Miss La Motte has a certain respect and courtesy for the yellow and black people with whom she deals. And that in itself is an ingratiating quality in a white woman."

+ N Y Tribune p9 My 17 '25 500w

"In attempting to make her characters live up to the romantic props of Asia—coolies, opium, heat and intrigues—she completely smothers their poor humanity. And she reproduces the atmosphere of Asia little more convincingly than a chop suey restaurant."

— N Y World p4m Ag 30 '25 200w

"They are all fine, powerful, stories, full of both the depths and heights of humanity as it exists in the Far East. Whether or not you ignore Miss La Motte's uncontrollable flings at Great Britain you will enjoy her stories immensely."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:223 O 17 '25 280w

World Tomorrow 8:354 N '25 60w

LAMPREY, LOUISE. Days of the leaders. (Great days in American history ser.) 357p il $2.50 Stokes

United States—History—Civil war—Stories.
United States—History—Spanish-American war—Stories

25-17064

Thirty-one stories connected with events in American history from the beginning of the Civil war thru the war with Spain.

"The use of unfamiliar material has given fresh interest to old stories making the book a welcome one both to the girl and boy studying American history and to their teachers."

+ Booklist 22:122 D '25

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 11 '25 50w

LANCHESTER, HENRY VAUGHAN. Art of town planning. (Universal art ser.) 244p il $7.50 Scribner [21s Chapman & H.]

710 City planning

[25-11399]

"The author reveals how the art of planning is prehistoric, in that from remote times men found it convenient to devise some system for the arrangement of their dwelling places. This idea furnishes an historic basis for the highly scientific experiments of today. He shows how intimately the material structure has at all times related itself to the religious, social and economic demands of the times and how variations in these have compelled adaptations, on the efficiency of which has often depended the success or the failure of the civic organization. Passing to present-day conditions, he indicates the wide range of subjects which necessarily come under the purview of the town planner, such as topography, history, economics, the life of the people, housing, communications, hygiene, education, recreation, land values and charges, and suggests that the great need is a museum in every town, with lectures and demonstrations from time to time."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 22:19 O '25

"We can conceive of his survey as of more than ordinary interest to the student of civic planning; to the lay reader it will offer many an insight into the importance of such work in our modern communities, whether young or old in physical aspects or in spirit."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 29 '25 530w

"His consideration of English town planning is, as it was reasonable to expect, the most satisfactory and that of the United States the least. Historically and philosophically the book is highly gratifying. Not that it purports to be exhaustive or final, but in that it is suggestive and stimulating, and that is really what a book of this character should be." C. R. Woodruff

+ — Lit R p5 S 12 '25 650w

"Mr. H. V. Lanchester, who is one of the most distinguished authorities of town planning, has displayed the first principles of this art without dullness or excess of detail, but in such a way that the layman who reads his book must inevitably be stimulated to a new interest in the subject."

+ Sat R 139:494 My 9 '25 600w

"It is because Mr. Lanchester is entirely free from the doctrinaire view of the subject that he is such a valuable counsellor. He would proceed 'slowly, ah, slowly' towards the light of civic amenity, warned by the mistakes of the past and alive to the possibilities of the future. Incidentally, his comparison of town planning to the composite arts of drama and the opera will bear pressing home."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p309 My 7 '25 1300w

LANCIANI, RODOLFO AMEDEO. Ancient and modern Rome. (Our debt to Greece and Rome) 169p $1.50 Marshall Jones

945.6 Rome (city)

25-12763

"Few if any have done more to stimulate interest in pagan and Christian Rome than has Rodolfo Lanciani. The present book selects certain topics such as malaria, water supply, hospitals, palaces, shooting lodges, libraries, porticos, fire departments and summer resorts, comparing in each the salient features of the ancient city with those of Papal or modern Rome, and furnishing much material for a vivid reconstruction of the externals of ancient life."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 22:67 N '25

"The reader of these briefly vivid studies finds within them continuous proof of the truth of the pronouncement of disillusioned Ecclesiastics that 'there is nothing new under the sun.'"

F. B

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 22 '25 1000w

"The element of personal reminiscence is interestingly but not unpleasantly prominent. And devoted as is Senator Lanciani to the Rome of the past, the city of Consuls, Cæsars and Pontiffs, he is also a thoroughgoing citizen of the new Rome of the kings." A. S. Pease
+ N Y Tribune p12 S 27 '25 200w

LANCIANI, RODOLFO AMEDEO. Wanderings through ancient Roman churches. 325p il $7.50 Houghton [32s 6d Constable]

726 Rome (city)—Antiquities. Rome (city)—Churches. Christian antiquities 24-27654

From the hundreds of Roman churches Professor Lanciani has chosen the pagan temples and their artistic treasures, the Constantinian basilicas of Saint Peter and St Paul, the church of the Saviour at the Lateran, the church of the Holy cross and the minor Constantinian churches of St Agnes and St Lawrence. There are 67 illustrations.

"There is a delightful compound of information regarding classic and Christian antiquities. Signor Lanciani is a learned cicerone and excellent company in wandering through the past. Naturally his book is but a fragment, though a large and important one." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 14 '25 1300w

"The text is embellished with admirable and, for the most part, unusual illustrations, some of them hitherto unpublished." C: H. A. Wager

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ja 18 '25 750w

Outlook 138:564 D 3 '24 50w

"Those who have heard Professor Lanciani lecture will recognize in these pages the genial and informal character of his spoken discourse. They will recognize, too, the same wealth of knowledge at command." Grant Showerman
+ Sat R of Lit 1:897 J1 11 '25 720w

"It deserves a prominent place on the bookshelves of every student of Rome past or present. Though Prof Lanciani has written this book primarily from the point of view of an archeologist, he has been successful in developing a delightfully anecdotal style which cannot fail to appeal even to the most casual reader."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ja 26 '25 780w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p189 Mr 19 '25 550w

LANE, MRS ROSE (WILDER). He was a man (Eng title Gordon Blake). 380p $2.50 Harper 25-6944

The hero of this biographical novel is the stalwart figure of an American known to the public as Jack London, but who in the story bears the name of Gordon Blake. His career has its beginning on the squalid waterfront of San Francisco. There young Blake grows to manhood with a passionate love for the sea and for black-eyed Spanish Mary. Then comes the desire for a larger, cleaner life, and the determination to get an education. Blake struggles desperately thru several years of book learning with one purpose in mind—to become a writer. His subsequent travels with Coxey's industrial army, his Alaskan adventures, his contact with slum life in New York—these are the threads of life Blake weaves into his stories which finally bring him money and fame. He dies at the age of forty, a renowned author, having realized his hopes.

Booklist 21:340 Je '25

"That Miss Lane can write there is no question and she tells her story well. But we cannot help asking: 'Who is she to attempt this task which has already been done by a far better writer, Jack London himself?'" Karl Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p11 Mr 28 '25 1250w

"This novel, ostensibly based on the life of Jack London, has certain qualities to recommend it, in spite of the fact that, if measured by the standard of Christian ethics, its value is negligible." C. P.

+ Cath World 121:859 S '25 200w

"She has written sincerely and restrainedly of 'a tragic and magnificent career.'"

+ Ind 114:420 Ap 11 '25 50w

"As a writer Rose Wilder Lane is that rarest of all things—a realist and romanticist both at once. If I were to name an American writer of more power and beauty than the author of 'He was a Man' I do not know who it would be. 'He Was a Man' is close-packed with the grandeur and the pathos of the American Dream." Floyd Dell

+ Lit R p3 Mr 28 '25 1400w

Reviewed by L: Mumford

New Repub 43:133 Je 24 '25 180w

"The book is not uninteresting in itself; but it is far more interesting as an illustration of its type. Nor need we be astonished at this type's prevalence and popularity. Effort, struggle, success, make an easy and elemental formula: all the fairy-stories follow it." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:451 Ag 1 '25 420w

"The book is realistic, detailed and a little tiresome. For it all centres about Gordon; and carefully as Gordon has been drawn, he never seems quite real. From first to last he remains some one we have been told about, rather than some one we have known."

+ N Y Times p14 Mr 22 '25 1100w

"It won't do, Miss Lane, your method and this hero. Some day you must write the missing chapters; throw away this fine book of yours; treat him as an enemy and not as a man whose spirit you have loved and whose epitaph you have carved with such reticence for posterity." Harrison Smith

+ N Y Tribune p4 Mr 22 '25 1050w

"The novel does not profess to be a biography in fiction form, but the reader will have little difficulty in recognizing the parallels; and this perhaps will lessen the novelty of the story for him. To some the interpretation may seem somewhat in the nature of an apologia."

Springfield Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p414 Je 18 '25 550w

LANG, MINNIE (MCAFFEE) (MRS EDWIN LANG). Basketry weaving and design. 93p il $3.50 (15s) Scribner

745 Basket making 25-6814

The book gives clear instructions in weaves and fundamental structures, followed by descriptions of model baskets. There is a chapter on the use of wood beads as ornaments and one on pine-needle basketry.

Booklist 21:331 Je '25

"Well-printed with forty-six clear and attractive plates."

+ J Home Econ 17:354 Je '25 70w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:22 Ap '25

"Mrs. Lang is an expert in this useful and beautiful art, and any one wishing suggestions and guidance in the creation of articles that can be made by it can hardly go amiss in consulting her book, which is in itself an artistic creation."

+ N Y Times p26 Mr 15 '25 300w

"While the book is not intended primarily as a series of lessons the author's instructions should enable the reader to make any of the articles shown as models."

N Y Tribune p17 Mr 15 '25 100w

Pratt p21 autumn '25

LANGDON-DAVIES, JOHN. New age of faith. 255p $2.50 Viking press

575 Evolution. Heredity 25-20279

The book deals with the question, Can science save our present social life? This age takes more on faith, says the author, than any other age has done. But it is a quack science, often, that enlists men's faith—a science misused in the cause of prejudice. The author takes issue with A. E. Wiggam, Lothrop Stoddard and other writers of popular science who engender race and class prejudice. In conclusion the author sums up what science has really taught us about evolution, heredity and race.

LANGDON-DAVIES, JOHN—Continued

"He certainly strikes a telling blow against race prejudice, and one cannot help feeling that many of his criticisms are well taken. The style is rich, rare and racy and there is not a dull page in the book. It will arouse a storm of approval and abuse. Let us hope that out of the heat more light may break." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '25 350w

"A very interesting, well-written, and humorous book, containing a great deal with which we can heartily agree, especially the main thesis." B. C. A. W.

+ Cath World 122:421 D '25 380w

"Mr. Langdon-Davies analyzes with a pleasant array of scientific facts the theories of his 'racial fiends' and 'heredity fiends,' with the result that serious questions are illuminated and charlatans are exposed with a good humor which adds to their discomfiture." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 115:506 O 31 '25 1350w

"A spirited and effective volume." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p7 O 25 '25 1400w

"'The New Age of Faith' is a pugnacious little book which is doubly effective because it is such amusing reading; for Mr. Langdon-Davies poisons his blade with a wicked and quite irresistible wit, assailing a host of solemn pronouncements with a gleeful grin backed up by an array of facts that may not be unanswerable, but are certainly awkward for his victims." J. Bakeless

+ N Y Tribune p9 N 15 '25 560w

"An authoritative and popularly phrased reply to the extravagant generalizations about race and human heredity of such writers as Madison Grant, Lothrop Stoddard and A. E. Wiggam has been long overdue. In 'The Age of Faith' John Langdon-Davies supplies the popular phrasing—indeed, a high order of verbal clarity and pungent wit—but hardly the requisite authority."

+ — Springf'd Republican p14 O 16 '25 750w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 1 '25 220w

"This book quite definitely and deliberately gives the lie to practically everything that McDougall, Grant, Stoddard and Wiggam have written on the subject of races and peoples. It denies their science, ridicules their psychology, derides their fears and knocks the props from under their provincialisms. It's a good service—and it lifts the problems in debate out of the realm of prejudice into the realm of intelligence." J. K. H.

+ Survey 55:243 N 15 '25 120w

LANGSTAFF, JOHN BRETT. David Copperfield's library; with prologue by Sir Owen Seaman and epilogue by Alfred Noyes. 157p il $2 Stokes [6s Allen & U.]

027 David Copperfield's library. Libraries, Children's. Dickens, Charles 25-26551

This is the story of the children's library known as David Copperfield's which has been established in the house in London where Dickens lived during the days of his boyhood. Mr Langstaff tells of his discovery of the house, of the movement he headed to preserve it as a memorial to Dickens, and the work of reclaiming and converting it into a library for the boys and girls of St Pancras, a neglected district of northwestern London. The rooms are filled with the best books for children collected from many lands.

Booklist 21:356 J1 '25

"It is a story that all lovers of Dickens will enjoy, and all lovers of London also."

+ N Y Times p6 F 15 '25 1400w

Reviewed by Katherine Tappert

N Y Tribune p6 Ap 5 '25 380w

Sat R of Lit 2:31 Ag 8 '25 100w

LANGTRY, LILLIE (LADY DE BATHE). Days I knew; with a foreword by Richard Le Gallienne. 300p il $5 Doran [24s Hutchinson]

B or 92

25-14488

Coming to London from her island of Jersey as a young bride, with no finer setting for her beauty than one black evening gown, the creation of a Jersey dressmaker, Mrs Langtry was acclaimed the greatest beauty of those Victorian days and was soon giving sittings to such eminent portrait painters as Millais, Whistler and Poynter. She tells the story of her social and stage triumphs with a frank zest and disingenuousness.

Booklist 22:114 D '25

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Bookm 62:345 N '25 300w

"This volume is light, agreeable, and easy to read. There are plenty of amusing anecdotes about all sorts of people. There is no scandal in it to speak of, and that will disappoint a good many readers."

+ Ind 115:534 N 7 '25 100w

"It is a disappointing book, for of the wonderful poetry and amazing letters Mrs. Langtry must have garnered during a lifetime, the selection is feeble indeed." Shane Leslie

— Int Bk R p667 S '25 950w

"In its quiet way this is a book of considerable fascination. It is strange that 'quiet' should be the adjective that comes to mind, but the truth is that though the story of Mrs. Langtry's life is romantic to the verge of melodrama she tells it in a matter-of-fact and sensible way which adds greatly to the effect."

+ Nation and Ath 37:302 Je 6 '25 350w

"That Lillie Langtry was frivolous, misguided, selfish, is not to be denied. But she was more sinned against than sinning, and the real criminal was Society. And in her pages there is an entire absence of malice, of whimpering, of excuses." P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p7 N 8 '25 2200w

"Those who read this book for scandal will be disappointed, just as those who read it for any significant revelations of what actually went on in a great beauty's mind will have to do most of their reading between the lines—and the print there is small. However, so much of the story as she tells is told with a pleasant sprightliness, with ease and no affectation." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p13 N 1 '25 1500w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

St Louis 23:438 D '25

"On the whole, the book makes cheerful reading for those who live in heavier times, albeit there is hardly a laugh to be got out of it. When she left the Victorian drawing-room for the stage and the racing stables, the story of her life loses interest, her personality intrigues the reader no longer."

+ — Spec 134:1017 Je 20 '25 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p345 My 21 '25 450w

"It is a pleasant desultory account of things and people in which those who like kindly gossip and harmless anecdotes of the great and near great will find ample pasturage. Its contributions to theatrical history are microscopic."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 10:68 Ja '25 220w

LANNI, CLEMENT G. Traveling on the Democratic donkey. 220p il $2 Rochester alliance press, inc., 49 N. Water st., Rochester, N.Y.

329 Rochester, New York—Politics and government. Politics, Practical. Democratic party 25-10777

For five years Mr Lanni has traveled on the Democratic donkey in the steadfastly Republican city of Rochester. The two important factors to which he attributes the long rule of the Republican party in that city are the strong political machine built up by George W. Aldridge, leader of the Republican party in Monroe county, and the weakness of the Democratic machine. In his good-natured narrative of personal experiences he shows how political machines are built up on the power of patronage and how candidates are elected on the ticket of the smoother running political organization rather than on a matter of issues. Mr Lanni's description of the political methods of Rochester applies equally well to those of other towns and cities throuout the country.

Am Pol Sci R 19:858 N '25 200w

"Though his political experience has been limited to Rochester, his reflections and conclusions as a result of these experiences apply to every place from Chicago to Topeka, and will be found of interest and value to anybody who wonders why the wicked machine of his own town is so hard to shake off." C: W. Thompson

N Y Times p3 Ag 16 '25 2200w

"The book tells little that is new about the voter, but supplies some possibly valuable data on the mentality of the vote hunter."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:930 J1 25 '25 350w

LA PRADE, ERNEST. Alice in Orchestra. 171p il $1 Doubleday

787 Musical instruments. Orchestra and orchestral music

Alice is at a symphony concert with her mother. Suddenly she finds herself entering Orchestra by way of the tuba. She is personally conducted from one section of Instrument land to the next, and learns all that a little girl can understand about the strings, the wood-winds, the brasses, and the drums, and what part each group plays in Orchestra. There is a foreword by Walter Damrosch and an appendix contains short descriptions of the various instruments, and a chapter on the great composers.

"The book is most ingenious, and should be widely enjoyed by all music lovers, and carefully explored by those who wish they were."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 9 '25 280w

"The freshest, most delightful combination of information with fanciful adventure we can remember." A. M. Jordan

+ Ind 115:560 N 14 '25 280w

"The scheme of the book is well knitted together, there are good anecdotes, excellent and invaluable clear definitions, humor and musical information." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p46 D '25 380w

"Mr. La Prade has most cleverly and with a delicate touch administered a potent piece of nourishment. What could be more apropos at this time than that a child's book on the orchestra should be put out by a member of and the writer of program notes for the orchestra which first gave symphony concerts for young people?" Dorothy Lawton

+ N Y Tribune p6 N 22 '25 550w

"If you want to know more about music, about the different instruments in an orchestra, and if you wish to hear concerts with more intelligence and therefore more enjoyment, you will certainly want 'Alice in Orchestra.'" M. G. Bonner

+ N Y World p7m D 6 '25 80w

LARDNER, RING W. What of it? 220p $1.75 Scribner

25-10656

A humorous medley consisting of miscellaneous magazine and newspaper pieces—stories, sketches, plays and extravaganzas.

Booklist 22:34 O '25

"A book made up of such miscellaneous pieces is a mistake." J. F.

— Bookm 61:587 J1 '25 100w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 27 '25 300w

"This may be insolent fooling and unrefined, but it is funny. We hope Mr. Lardner lives for many years and keeps right on writing and cheering up our passage through this vale of tears." D. R.

+ Ind 114:590 My 23 '25 1100w

"The humor becomes more conscious of its own presence as Mr. Lardner realizes that he is a national figure, and something of the first verbal innocence is gone, to reappear only by flashes in the last book of all, 'What of It?'" Donald Douglas

— + Int Bk R p409 My '25 40w

Reviewed by T: L. Masson

Lit R p6 My 2 '25 120w

"Ring Lardner is the most thoroughly American writer we have today, and one of the most American we have ever had. One who accepts the country so completely that he does not even know he is accepting it. One who sees America, not as a country full of tendencies, types, curiosities, weaknesses, but simply a place full of people, all of them interesting when you get to know them well. And he can also write about these people in their own language." Robert Littell

New Repub 42:1 Ap 15 '25 1950w

"Jack Keefe is a great creation. In view of the inexhaustible supply of dullness on hand his creator is in the nation's debt for proving that amusement can be extracted from it." H: L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p1 Ap 19 '25 2300w

"The chief glory of this book is that it is chucked to the brim with Lardnerian wise cracks—which are exactly what they are." Dan Longwell

+ N Y Tribune p9 My 10 '25 760w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 160w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

LARMINIE, MARGARET RIVERS. Soames Green. 274p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Chatto & W.] 25-16607

A quiet story of English home life in a suburban town. Peter Celian, solicitor of Soames Green, is the father and guiding spirit of the family, a kindly and cultivated man whose human sympathy and understanding are almost unailing. In his plump and placid wife he has missed his fullest desire, but she is content and unconscious of any lack in his devotion. He watches the love affairs of his dearly loved son and daughter thru early frustration to happy fulfilment. His relations with his wife's orphaned niece Lena, who has made her home with them since early childhood, are less happy. A strangely perplexing, yet attractive girl, she remains an alien in the family till she one day breaks away, leaving Peter with a sense of failure, in his lack of understanding of her and his inability to give her the love and sympathy she needed but was too proud to ask for.

Cleveland p108 N '25

"Rather a pleasing analysis of the relation between a father and his two children as compared with his feeling for an adopted child. Miss Larminie is believed in London to be the nearest approach to Jane Austen today."

+ Ind 115:332 S 19 '25 70w

"'Soames Green' is that rare find—a novel of character—spun occasionally a bit too thin but in the main worked out with delicacy and temperateness, subjecting psychology to people." Mary Ross

+ N Y Tribune p12 O 18 '25 580w

"A good book; it is all but a very good book. She has an idea which is interesting without being startling, and she works it out with the utmost scrupulosity." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:363 Ap 4 '25 160w

"Miss Larminie often writes with distinction. You will find her style good, her humor good, her knowledge of character excellent."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:244 O 24 '25 180w

LARMINIE, M. R.—Continued

"Told with freshness and a most affecting quietness; and we find ourselves hard put to it to say why, for all its slight crudities of plot, we have been so glad to read it."

+ — Spec 134:416 Mr 14 '25 150w

Spring'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 600w

"Another intelligent, well-turned novel, written with grace and quiet confidence, but a novel that, in spite of its indubitable and unpretentious merit, leaves very little mark upon the mind."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p86 F 5 '25 350w

LARNED, W. LIVINGSTON. Illustration in advertising. 319p il $4 McGraw

659 Advertising. Art, Commercial 25-9397

"Confined to newspaper and magazine advertising, and does not include direct-mail, trade-periodical, or outdoor advertising art. Concerned mainly with the methods of the artist, touching very briefly on the work of the photo-engraver."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:424 J1 '25

LASKI, HAROLD JOSEPH. Grammar of politics. 672p $6 Yale univ. press [18s Allen & U.]

320 Political science [25-22519]

Mr Laski divides his treatment of politics into two parts. In the first part he deals analytically with the philosophy of politics—the purpose of social organization and the nature of sovereignty, rights, liberty and equality, property, nationalism and civilization and the authority of the state. In the second part he discusses political, economic, judicial and international institutions in the light of the principles established in the first part.

"It is open to serious question whether One Big Union which Mr. Laski considers as a possible transition from the existing individualism to his proposed scheme of federated vocations, would not defeat or delay the whole plant. In general, however, the book is not revolution-mad. Its chief fault is its meagre indexing. Had the author attempted to write page heads and marginal paragraph summaries, he might have made the book more readable." R. H. A.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 N 28 '25 680w

"The book has remarkable merits, but Mr. Laski has slipped into certain bad habits of thinking and writing which definitely depreciate the value of his work. They are habits which a writer of his quickness and intelligence could, if he wished, easily eradicate, and they are probably, to a great extent, unconscious. It is, therefore, we feel, necessary to insist upon them, but, in doing so, we run the risk of seeming to undervalue the book as a whole. On the contrary, it is because we do appreciate the great possibilities in Mr. Laski as a political thinker that we think it right to warn him when we see him going unnecessarily astray."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:625 Ag 22 '25 850w

"Mr. Laski has produced what is certainly the most comprehensive book on political theory that has appeared since the War. Written with all the knowledge and more than the authority displayed in Mr. Laski's earlier works, it is at once more human and more entertaining." C. E. M. Joad

+ Nature 116:670 N 7 '25 920w

"It would be easy to quarrel with Mr. Laski's enterprise wholesale and retail—or any other enterprise like it which attempts something worth while. No doubt academic shells will soon begin to burst about his ears. The authors of dull books on how the Constitution has provided, Congress has enacted, and the Supreme Court has ruled will doubtless rend their garments and scatter ashes in the wind. Father Time will smile, quizzically as always. But anybody who wants to know the drift of thinking in English political theory must for his own good read this portly volume. Here is a landmark that shows how far we have come from the realm of Herbert Spencer. Here is an author who quits hemming and hawing and asserts, declares, and challenges. That method makes the leaves rustle in academic groves." C. A. Beard

+ New Repub 45:91 D 9 '25 1000w

"Its vice is a certain slowness of movement, which makes it, at certain points, rather tedious reading. Though it covers so much ground, it could with advantage have been shorter. But its defects are of a minor order. As a whole, it is essentially a workmanlike study—good craftsmanship throughout, and at its best full of luminous comment and useful suggestion."

+ — New Statesman 26:52 O 24 '25 850w

"Mr. Laski's talent for analysis and criticism is a very notable one—he has the sharpest of noses for defects in the existing order; but in bidding for recognition as creator, as authentic architect, of institutions, he bids too high. That is only to say that he may not be reckoned one of a very small group of men of supreme genius. On the other hand, the book abounds in ideas and suggestions that should be useful to the architect, of whom there is such crying need."

+ — Outlook 141:361 N 4 '25 160w

"Mr. Laski shows himself not only a widely informed student, but an independent thinker of very great ability. He has, unlike most political philosophers, the inestimable advantage of an historical training and an extensive acquaintance with political institutions and their working. Naturally, he is not equally at home in all parts of his subject. The section on the principles of local government, for example, lacks the mastery shown in discussing such fundamental problems as Sovereignty and Rights. But in the big issues of political theory there is no comparable modern work, and this book will be indispensable to all serious students for a long time to come."

+ — Sat R 140:265 S 5 '25 860w

Reviewed by Lindsay Rogers

Sat R of Lit 2:313 N 21 '25 1100w

"Mr. Laski himself is at his best when he leaves considerations of high theory and busies himself with practical suggestions. His proposals for the extension of the scope of local government, for the improvement of the committee stage of public Bills, for the training and promotion of permanent officials—to take only a few at random—have notable shrewdness and point. Nor is his book, as a whole, unworthy of its ambitious title, for, despite faults of arrangement and style, it is honest, searching and human."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p503 J1 30 '25 1800w

LATHROP, LORIN ANDREWS (ANDREW LORING, KENYON GAMBIER, pseud.). Princess of Paradise island. 305p $2 Doran 25-8905

Charles Bonsal is the fortunate heir to an island in the Bahamas. He sets out blithely in search of his kingdom, and to his amazement finds it held by a lovely lady in a Paris gown. Jeanne's title to the island left her by her father has been hitherto undisputed. She has carried on alone since her father's death, running the plantation and managing the blacks with pluck and ability. Charles is willing to withdraw his claim, but charmed by this cool slim princess and intrigued by the mystery surrounding the false transfer of the island, he decides to stay and win the one while solving the other. It is more difficult than he supposes. He is not alone in the field, and there are other complications. But at last the would-be-king and the princess-in-possession reach a compromise and agree to share their Paradise so badly named.

"A story that at once mystifies and amuses." island, which under the circumstances is not

+ Boston Transcript p5 J1 3 '25 150w

"A tale which, though the blasé may spurn it for 'old stuff,' has yet the virtue of being far better handled than a great deal of 'new stuff' which we see constantly bungled by ill-trained pens."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:780 My 23 '25 300w

LAUBACH, FRANK CHARLES. People of the Philippines; with a foreword by Daniel Johnson Fleming. 515p il $3.50 Doran

279.4 Philippine Islands—Religion. Missions—Philippine Islands 25-4216

The book is mainly an account of the religious history of the Philippines and the work of the Christian missionaries. The author states his theme thus: "The preparation of the Filipino people for the spiritual leadership of the Far East and perhaps of the whole world." He has a strong belief in the spiritual capacity of the Filipinos and of their strategic position as the outpost of Christianity in the Orient.

"His statement of conditions in the Islands and of the qualifications of the Filipinos, over-enthusiastic as it may sometimes seem, will none the less have to be reckoned with alike by those who resist the demand for independence and by those who support it." E. N.

Boston Transcript p5 F 14 '25 870w

Cath World 121:28 Ap '25 850w

Cleveland p93 S '25

"This reviewer, who has lived in the Philippines, feels constrained to say that, in his opinion, Dr. Laubach's estimate of Filipino ability and character is exaggerative; that the author's zeal and optimism considerably exceed his judgment."

— Outlook 139:277 F 18 '25 150w

"For the religious worker in the foreign field, Dr. Laubach's book should prove an interesting and inspiring volume; but to the layman desirous of aid and further enlightenment toward orienting himself on the Philippine problem, it has little value." Norbert Lyons

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:376 D 5 '25 780w

"Perhaps the picture he paints may be too rosy. But whatever the proper amount of emphasis upon present day missionary effort in the country may be, the book stands, so far as the reviewer knows, supreme in its field." R. D. Nelson

+ World Tomorrow 8:350 N '25 200w

LAUGHLIN, CLARA ELIZABETH. So you're going to Italy! and if I were going with you these are the things I'd invite you to do. 493p il $3 Houghton

914.5 Italy—Description and travel 25-9302

A companionable little book on Italy which successfully avoids the guidebook manner. The author has made up her book of the things she likes to think about when she is in Italy and it is not unlikely that other travellers will wish to know the same things—historical associations of persons and places, bits of information of various sorts which help to a comprehension of the places visited. The cities covered are Naples and its vicinity, Rome, Florence and Venice.

Booklist 21:376 J1 '25

"Miss Laughlin unsuccessfully admits in one place that she has 'just reread a great many books on Rome,' and the number and length of the quotations she uses leaves little room for original work. She has accumulated facts and facts and still more facts, tied them together with a string of trivial remarks, and enveloped the whole in a flimsy wrapping of facetiousness—precisely what one would expect from the title. Mechanically, the book leaves little to be desired."

— + Bookm 61:602 J1 '25 160w

"Invaluable to the tourist, and most interesting, as giving main historical points in a nutshell, to the stay-at-home traveller. The book contains many illustrations from famous paintings." F. M. W.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 29 '25 520w

Cleveland p100 S '25

"If you're going to Italy, here's a heartily recommended traveling companion." H. B.

+ Lit R p5 J1 11 '25 160w

"For the ordinary traveler it is a most excellent method, putting juice into the dry facts mentioned in other guide books, capturing the flavor of places, enriching the feast with all manner of little tales of history and biography and serving the whole with a sauce piquante of vivacious companionship."

+ N Y Times p20 My 10 '25 300w

"Miss Laughlin creates a background for the traveler such as only a confirmed enthusiast and historian could provide, and does it with no end of charm. People rather than places are her real hobby and she brings a goodly company to life. . . For those who travel, an auxiliary guide book may be used for emergencies. For those who stay put, here are days and nights of good reading and a liberal education in classic Italy."

+ N Y Tribune p15 Je 14 '25 180w

Outlook 140:269 Je 17 '25 20w

"This successor to 'So You're Going to Paris' has the same merits. It is not a guide book so much as a series of pleasant lectures on the background of history and biography which is a first essential in seeing Europe. A Baedeker or its equivalent should go with Miss Laughlin's book, and will be made much more useful and intelligible by the freer comment and ampler backgrounds of 'So You're Going to Italy.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 1:864 Je 27 '25 100w

"It seems an almost incredible feat, but a careful examination of the index of names connected with Italy reveals hardly a single omission of any importance. Naturally the author cannot treat each subject exhaustively, but she offers quite as much information as an ignorant person should want for the better understanding of a supplementary guide book; though even the supplementary guide book is hardly necessary as the author gives quite sufficient instructions for finding the places which she describes."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p623 S 24 '25 320w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

LAURIE, DAVID. Reminiscences of a fiddle dealer. 171p il $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d T. W. Laurie]

B or 92 Violin 25-7895

"Here is the biography of a man with a most prosaic vocation, and a most alluring hobby. His vocation, oil-selling, he soon abandoned, and his hobby, dealing in fine violins, acquired the dignity of a profession with him, becoming, indeed, his main interest in life. Mr. David Laurie spent the greater part of what must have been a very happy, satisfying life searching for and dealing in violins of superior workmanship and exquisite tone. His search for these treasures took him over the greater part of Europe, and gave him opportunity to meet most of the great violinists and violin-makers of his day, as well as a host of other interesting people. During his lifetime he came into possession of some rare instruments, including violins made by Bergonzi, by Joseph Guarnerius, and by the great Stradivarius."—Sat R of Lit

"On the whole, a notable addition to the scant library of the fiddle-fancier. But the real work the amateur violin-lover wants—a book full of pictures and details about the art of the various great makers of the second and third class—remains to be written. A man like David Laurie, saturated in the lore of the fiddle-maker's craft, will be the man to write it."

H. W. Boynton

+ — Lit R p4 My 2 '25 1050w

LAURIE, DAVID—Continued

Reviewed by Albert Meyer

N Y Tribune p8 My 10 '25 580w

"A number of illustrations of a few of the more famous violins lend an added interest to this charming little book."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:711 Ap 25 '25 180w

"To all who have to do with fiddles the volume must be fascinating but the general reader also will find it well worth while."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 30 '25 1300w

"The chief interest of Mr. Laurie's reminiscences is that they give us a peep at the world of music from a new angle, that of one who was a lover of musical instruments rather than a music-lover. They have the added attraction of being written by an engaging personality about a period that has passed into history and people who have become legends. . . He has many romantic stories of his pursuit told, as it were, from a fireside armchair, in a gossipy, casual way which the reader may sometimes find difficult to follow."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p41 Ja 15 '25 300w

LAVER, JAMES. Portraits in oil and vinegar.

215p il $3.50 Dial press [10s 6d Castle]

759.2 Painters, British [25-21657]

"Mr. James Laver presents twenty-five artists in a series of studies in which the acid of conviction is rendered imperceptible by the sparkling oil of sympathy." (N Y Tribune) Among the artists criticised are Frank Brangwyn, Frank Dicksee, George Clausen, Jacob Epstein, Roger Fry, Eric Gill, Duncan Grant, Henry Lamb, Wyndham Lewis, Paul Nash, Cayley Robinson and Henry Tonks.

"The essays are short and pithy. They sparkle with delightful intimacies, they kindle the imagination. They are quite the most fascinatingly well-written little gems of artistic appreciation of the season. For the man who knows little of art they give a clear, delightful, speaking familiarity with the chief figures in present-day British art." D. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 19 '25 450w

"A readable book about painters and painting will always give uncommon pleasure because it will come as a surprise. Mr. Laver's book is most readable. Partly this is because it is written in a bright, intelligent, and intelligible style, alert and journalistic; partly because it deals easily with easy ideas. One stands a far better chance of making an appetizing essay out of the propounding of general ideas than out of the analysis of particular works; and Mr. Laver's book is concerned chiefly with the former. This is fortunate, for about ideas he has usually something clever and amusing to say, whereas about works of art he can say little but what is absurd. The fact is, Mr. Laver has plenty of wit and no æsthetic sensibility." Clive Bell

+ — Nation and Ath 37:138 My 2 '25 850w

"He is more at home among the recognized leaders of official British art, and is genuinely enthusiastic over nonentities; his ventures into radicalism are confined to the resolved contentions of yesterday. There are, of course, many ways of making a book on art, and the reader who prefers personalities, anecdotes and descriptions to enlightening evaluations will find Mr. Laver thoroughly delightful." T. Craven

+ — N Y Tribune p16 S 27 '25 300w

St Louis 23:434 D '25

"Mr. Laver is amazingly reticent and amazingly just. He writes as if he belonged to the future, or the very remote past, a critic out of Wells or Byzantium. And yet, for all his reticence and justice, we can place Mr. Laver because he is, after all, but an intellectual visitor to the world of Wells or Byzantium."

Sat R 139:466 My 2 '25 400w

"With considerable incidental wit, which makes the little essays easy and amusing reading, the author combines a positive genius for ignoring all main critical issues. He does tell breezily what is now fluttering the æsthetic doves of London. For these reasons the book may safely be recommended to those many art lovers who like to read but hate to think."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:319 N 21 '25 80w

"Though Mr. Laver's oil and vinegar tend to mix into a mild salad-dressing, not innocent of sugar, his appreciations of twenty-five contemporary British artists have more critical discernment than his figurative Prefatory Note would lead one to suppose."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p317 My 7 '25 250w

LAW, FREDERICK HOUK, ed. Modern plays, short and long. 429p $1.50 Century

808.2 Drama—Collections 24-31314

This book contains different types of one-act plays, short plays, and full-length plays, and is designed for class reading and practice. To stimulate interest in original dramatic construction, and to develop appreciation of the drama, Dr Law gives before every play introductory problems parallel to those in the play. He also furnishes numerous suggestions and directions for written work in play construction. Contents: Rip Van Winkle played by Joseph Jefferson; Benjamin Franklin, journeyman, by Constance D'Arcy Mackay; The pioneers, by Mary MacMillan; Just neighborly, by Alexander Dean; Masks, by Perry Boyer Corneau; The maid who wouldn't be proper, a puppet play, by Hettie Louise Mick; Iolanthe, by Sir William Schwenk Gilbert; What men live by, by Virginia Church; The green goddess, by William Archer; Off Nags Head, by Dougald MacMillan; Bushido, by Takeda Idzumo.

Booklist 21:372 J1 '25

"Within the limits set himself by the author this is a well made text book. There are those, however, who will be disposed to quarrel with Dr. Law over the quality of his selections. His effort would swell the crowds before 'Abie's Irish Rose' rather than the audiences of the Theater Guild."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ag 8 '25 420w

Cleveland p89 S '25

"Professedly designed for juvenile reading, it is naturally exceedingly elementary in its character. What it has to say about old and new drama, the nature of a play, theme, plot, dialogue, atmosphere, etc., is all sound enough as far as it goes, but not provocative of comment. More valuable, though not excessively, are the lists of books given for those in search of further information." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p4 Ja 10 '25 100w

Lit R p9 Mr 21 '25 60w

"I can fancy this book, or the methods suggested by this book, employed by a wise teacher with stimulating effect; not, perhaps, any better fitting boys and girls to be shoe-horned past the college entrance board, but certainly fitting them better to enjoy the art of their contemporaries, and showing them, in the process, that education need not be a dull and stupid thing." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 8 '25 400w

"The book presents good lists of plays and collections of plays. The selections included for classroom study have been chosen with a recognizable system in mind, but in most cases one feels that a better example of the particular type might have been found. The questions and study-helps following each play included in the text are in every way commendable." Ernest Hanes

+ — School R 33:235 Mr '25 220w

"There are many illustrations which add to the attractiveness of the volume, whose price is about half the cost of a front seat at a good play."

+ Spring'd Republican p14 S 16 '25 220w

LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT. St Mawr.
222p $2 Knopf

25-11588

The hero is a magnificent stallion with whom the heroine virtually falls in love. The other characters are Lou Witt and her mother, a cosmopolitan American, Rico, Lou's artist husband, and two grooms, who seem to be next in importance to St Mawr himself. St Mawr is more than a horse; he is a symbol. He satisfies Lou as no man has ever satisfied her. The scene shifts from England to Arizona where Lou goes with her mother and her horse and his groom and buys a ranch in the mountains.

"Mr. Lawrence's art embraces a great power of characterization. It embraces as well as an admirable skill in the use of description, and especially natural description. There is genuine beauty, and impressive prose-poetry, in his picture of the American West. There are those who may not accept the philosophy of Mr. Lawrence, there are those who may insist that his art is not the sort of art that should dominate. But there are few who can say, truthfully, that he leaves them untouched. Such power as Mr. Lawrence possesses cannot leave the reader cold; the man can, and does, write superbly." B. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 20 '25 720w
Cleveland p107 N '25

"If one had not read him before, one would be startled into thought by his vehement sincerity, alienated by a vulgar superficiality in his depicting of character, and led on from page to page by such poetic phrases as 'the hawks sat motionless like dark fists clenched under heaven.'"

+ Dial 79:431 N '25 100w

"Mr. Lawrence seems to be emerging from the morass of perverse analysis in which his art was gradually sinking. In this novel he approaches normalcy. At least he has written a straightforward story with half a dozen superbly convincing characters in it."

+ Ind 115:24 Jl 4 '25 120w

"Beautifully written, often entertaining, always interesting, 'St. Mawr' is the novel of a profound weariness, a profound hopelessness. Evil is triumphant; there is no help anywhere." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p613 Ag '25 800w

"If 'St. Mawr' will appear to many as animal-worship it is certainly animal-worship as desirable as that of the ancient Egyptians, who worshipped the divine indifference and poised detachment of the cat and rightly despised the enslaved soul of the dog. In any case 'St. Mawr,' and especially for those who do not blindly trust 'intelligence,' is a fable as splendid and glittering as any we are likely to have in our own time." Donald Douglas

+ Lit R p3 Je 27 '25 620w

"In 'St. Mawr' Mr. Lawrence seems to have reached a very dangerous stage in his development as a writer. Never before has he been so patchy, so sure of himself and so unsure of his theme, so confident and at the same time so unconvincing. His inspiration fails again and again, but he flings the second-rate and the palpably histrionic at his reader with the same conviction as he shows when he is at his best. The characters in 'St. Mawr' are little better than mouthpieces for the author's hopes and despairs about modern life. His women talk as only he himself writes in the more didactic pages of his books. The situations are frankly distorted to put in the wrong everything in which he disbelieves." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 37:270 My 30 '25 480w

Reviewed by Robert Littell

New Repub 43:184 Jl 8 '25 1150w

"Mr. Lawrence is undoubtedly a poet, a philosopher and a man of genius; but he seems occasionally to be just a little deficient in horse-sense." P. C. Kennedy

— New Statesman 25:285 Je 20 '25 1200w

"'St. Mawr' is the D. H. Lawrence of 'The Trespasser' and 'The White Peacock,' which means a good story told with fascinating fluent energy. It is, further, the acridly witty Lawrence of the controversial articles, the introductions to anonymous memoirs and the mordant conversation. It is, finally, the first novel in which Lawrence has drawn his major characters and much of his scene from American material."

+ N Y Times p8 Je 14 '25 750w

"'St. Mawr' is a shorter novel than Mr. Lawrence is accustomed to write—only 222 pages, unencumbered by dissertations or digressions. Its tempo is much brisker. The narrative moves at a swift canter. The characters are sharply and brilliantly drawn. The novel is a piece of symbolism, which is, however, so well written that, if you are a child, you are at liberty to read it as if it were the story of a horse, of a superb golden stallion." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 Je 14 '25 2650w

"From any angle, as a devotee of Lawrence, as an adept of good fiction, and as a student of contemporary affairs, it is important to read 'St. Mawr.' It is as entertaining as the earliest of Lawrence's books, and as searching and profound as his latest. It furthermore is conclusive proof that Lawrence has not stopped developing in the novel and in life." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y World p9 Jl 5 '25 520w

"Mr. D. H. Lawrence is a dog with one trick. He can communicate physical sensations with the most amazing vividness, and he can do very little else. His prose is wretched; his animal-worship is ridiculous; his dark gods are the very devil. . . His attempt to dramatize the subconscious possesses a certain interest, but, in the last analysis, it is tedious as art and profitless as philosophy." Gerald Bullett

— + Sat R 139:556 My 23 '25 1150w

"'St. Mawr' has balance. Its probings and analysis, if they break no new ground, are clear and relevant; its style, as richly cumulative as ever, is less idiosyncratic and more normal; its narrative, though it moves downhill and is in one mass without a single chapter break, is straightforward. In these respects, if Lawrence has plowed the field no deeper, he has yoked his horses more firmly together." L. Kronenberger

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:4 Ag 1 '25 820w

LAWRENCE, WILLIAM. Henry Cabot Lodge; a biographical sketch. 204p $1.75 Houghton

B or 92 Lodge, Henry Cabot 25-9343

Bishop Lawrence was a lifelong friend of Henry Cabot Lodge and a classmate at Harvard. His warmly appreciative biography is chiefly a sketch of Senator Lodge's political career, with a chapter on his personality.

"In language that is clear and forcible and with an intimate knowledge of his subject, Bishop Lawrence narrates in detail the private life, public service, the principles, ideals and achievements of Senator Lodge."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:646 Ag '25 350w

"Readers who wish to learn details of Senator Lodge's life, who wish to analyze his acts and methods, who wish to glimpse his eloquence and scholarship, will not find these things here. They will find an earnest presentation of one good man's lifelong friendship and esteem for another." E. E. Whiting

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Jl '25 480w

Booklist 22:29 O '25

"A model of what such an appreciative biographical sketch should be. Bishop Lawrence has managed to present in brief outline an extraordinarily comprehensive study, with adequate background, so that the book has solid value as a bit of contemporary history."

+ Bookm 61:599 Jl '25 160w

"From his chapter on 'Stock and Youth' to the closing 'Last Years,' the hearer was given and the reader is given a complete portrait of Henry Cabot Lodge." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 9 '25 650w

LAWRENCE, WILLIAM—Continued

"Bishop Lawrence has written a calm well-reasoned study of his life-long friend."

+ Ind 115:24 J1 4 '25 180w

"Bishop Lawrence was in Harvard with Senator Lodge. His little volume is the loving tribute of classmate to classmate. It is written with no little literary distinction and should do much to please Mr. Lodge's friends and something to soften his enemies." Hamilton Holt

+ Int Bk R p44 D '25 800w

"Eulogy is an unfavorable form of historical expression. In the absence of criticism the weighing of evidence falls only on one side, and personal tribute, however genuine, cannot compensate the want of balance. Bishop Lawrence's biographical sketch [is] based upon his public eulogy." W. C. Ford

— Nation 120:693 Je 17 '25 360w

"Bishop Lawrence's is in many respects a model short biography. He writes with vigor and forthrightness. . . But, naturally, the main interest in any life of Lodge is the story of his political antagonism to Woodrow Wilson and the League of Nations. On this point the Bishop is hardly likely to satisfy impartial opinion. . . This biography's chief merit is that it is the well-informed personal record of an intimate friend." C. Puckette

+ — N Y Times p3 My 24 '25 1450w

N Y Tribune p9 S 20 '25 130w

"A very illuminating picture of the formative years of Lodge's character. Here the Bishop faces the facts and does not gloss over his temperamental peculiarities." R. F. N.

+ Pol Sci Q 40:650 D '25 280w

Sat R of Lit 1:883 J1 4 '25 280w

"The part of the sketch which is a portrayal of the more gracious side of Mr Lodge's personality is distinctly superior; in political narrative, Bishop Lawrence identifies himself with—and defends—Mr Lodge's ostensible attitude and point of view. The political discussion is so largely a reflection of Mr Lodge's own views that it lacks critical value, except as Bishop Lawrence is able to throw light on Mr Lodge's actions by examining his temperament and heredity."

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Je 5 '25 950w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 13 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

Reviewed by S. M. Crothers

Yale R n s 15:394 Ja '26 300w

LAWSON, JOHN HOWARD. Processional; a jazz symphony of American life, in four acts; the Theatre Guild version. 218p il $2 Seltzer

812

25-5353

In the preface to "Processional" Mr Lawson states that his purpose in the play is to reflect to some extent the color and movement of the American processional as it streams about us. The setting is a West Virginia coal mining town during a strike. To the accompaniment of a blaring jazz band and the hoarse shouts of the miners and soldiers as they clash in the streets, the colorful scenes follow one another in swift kaleidoscopic succession. There is no closely knit theme, tho the interest centers about Sadie Cohen, the jazz mad Jewish girl, and Dynamite Jim, one of the striking miners who becomes her lover.

Booklist 21:372 J1 '25

"There is a sour moroseness, a savage, atrabilious motive behind the play which probably makes it effective on the stage but detracts from its effect in the printed page."

— Ind 114:421 Ap 11 '25 90w

"One might argue lack of form, but scarcely to any point, since Mr. Lawson himself has, for his own good reasons, frankly eschewed what is conventionally accepted as form. And yet the play has a cumulative unity. One can't conceivably mistake what the play is about, or misunderstand the intimations of the personalities or incidents of the play; one can't possibly be insensible to the play's dramatic violence, its almost mad, riotous rhythms. Some one has said that only the poets dare be absurd. Mr. Lawson is a poet who has dared and who has been fortunate enough consequently to catch here and there what appears to be a fresh and vital beauty." W. Y.

+ Lit R p9 Ap 4 '25 220w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y World p6m Ap 26 '25 230w

LAWSON, WILLIAM PINKNEY. Fire woman. 254p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-11515

A story in which the Penitentes, a secret sect who expiate sin by self-torture, are a part of the background. The Truchas mountains, the highest ridge in Arizona, is their sanctuary. Here in the darkness of night they perform their crucifixions and blood-lashings. The heroine of the story is Claire Innes, a young American artist who comes to this part of the country to paint—and to seek forgetfulness of a loveless marriage. While visiting an old school friend, she meets the lovely Dolores and her lover Don Ramon, a handsome youth who becomes infatuated with Claire. So do the fortunes of Claire Innes become dramatically interwoven with those of these religion-crazed people. As events move on, she and Ramon, with a guide, Ricardo Quintana, whose presence adds a note of mystery to the story, are sentenced to a horrible death from which they are saved by the timely interference of a violent thunderstorm.

"Without question, this is a story for those who like thrills and daggers and moonlight romance, hot passions and terrible happenings in the dim and starlight nights. It is highly moral and instructive, if you want to add to your geographical knowledge, and it is sufficiently unlikely not to keep you waking o' nights."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 J1 18 '25 320w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 180w

Reviewed by E. A. Hackett

Lit R p5 Ag 22 '25 70w

"Mr. Lawson's style is highly colored, smacking of the hectic. But it is carried off with such fine story-telling that it is hardly offensive. This is decidedly a novel of action, but infinitely superior to the usual novel of this school."

+ — N Y Times p12 J1 5 '25 800w

N Y Tribune p7 Ag 9 '25 120w

Sat R of Lit 2:141 S 19 '25 120w

LAWTON, MARY. Lifetime with Mark Twain. 352p il $3.50 Harcourt

B or 92 Clemens, Samuel Langhorne

25-23089

"The book is a transcription of a rambling, informal account by Kate Leary of her thirty years' service in the Clemens household. Mark Twain, many years ago, suggested that the faithful Kate tell the world all she knew about him. At the urging of Miss Lawton, and with her assistance, Kate Leary, now an old lady who lives entirely in the past, made this thick book."—Lit R

"It is a method which in other hands would produce nothing more than the usual vapid, valet reminiscences with which we are unhappily familiar, but Miss Lawton has handled her material with so much humor, discrimination, and feeling that the result is amazingly vivid and delightful. In this instance, the result is a picture of the intimate Mark Twain more effective and convincing than any full-length portrait in a dignified biography. All lovers of Mark Twain will be grateful for this book."

+ Ind 115:652 D 5 '25 150w

"It is a book full of repetition, of half remembered episodes—a rather thin account of much that is already known. On the other hand, it is an emphatically honest book. In spite of the difficulty of matching the words of rambling narrative on the tongue of certainly not an experienced story teller, Miss Lawton has managed to catch the personality and the moods of Kate, so much an echo of Mark Twain's." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p7 N 21 '25 280w

"A curious, amusing and in some ways vivid and important picture of the Clemens family." C. H. Grattan

+ New Repub 45:143 D 23 '25 550w

"It is a most perversely enthralling story, for the reader is perfectly aware all along of the fact that it is Miss Lawton who is engineering the narrative and even padding it. It ought not to be enthralling, but it is. . . The guiding hand of the director is necessarily evident. But the genuineness of Katy's talk wherever she needed no guidance speaks for itself." C. W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p5 D 20 '25 2000w

"Readers familiar with the Paine biography and the letters of Mark Twain will not find as much which is actually new in Katy Leary's book as they may expect, but they will find everything interpreted in a naive way which is new. Detail after detail is delicious." Carl Van Doren

+ N Y Tribune p1 N 29 '25 1300w

LAXDAELA saga; tr. from the Icelandic; with an introd. by Thorstein Veblen. 302p $2.50 Huebsch

839.6 25-11871

The Laxdaela saga is the Icelandic saga of romance. It relates, in the first part, the love of Gudrun, most famous of all Icelandic ladies, for Kjartan, the poet, and his career in Norway. The second part continues Kjartan's story after his return to Iceland, his betrayal by his rival Bolli, and the revenge for Kjartan's death; also Gudrun's marriage to Thorkel Eyolfson, and the closing of her stormy life as an anchoress nun.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '25 400w

"An excellent translation of a saga of Icelandic life a thousand years ago. The freshness and vigor of the colloquial narrative are admirably retained."

+ Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 40w

"The translator must himself be something of a poet in the wider sense; and that, I fear, Mr. Veblen is not. As an economist he has a large following, and deserves it, but he is not an artist. Another and almost more serious fault of Mr. Veblen's is that he intrudes his economic theories into his translation." Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p3 N 28 '25 650w

Nation 121:77 J1 8 '25 20w

"Mr. Veblen's work furnishes students a valuable record of social and political conditions when Iceland was in transition from paganism to Christianity. But as literature not only does this exhibit the normal difficulty of the sagas—the profusion of names and genealogical passages to impede tracing relationships; not only, as the translator remarks, has it been smoothed off and touched up by some pious thirteenth-century clerk, but whether or not the latter is to blame, an account of deeds which might have stirred the heart with their noble and stoical ferocity seems, rather, generally flat and grey, though bloodstreaked enough." Abbe Niles

+ New Repub 44:184 O 7 '25 150w

"While the cultural importance of this saga is below that of the edda, and, indeed, below that of the other sagas, its narrative interest is far from inconsiderable. Indeed, for those readers who will take the trouble to accustom themselves to such few peculiarities of style as they will encounter, there will be generous repayment in thrilling incidents and absorbing plot. Did we say 'plot'? This should be in the plural, for the 'Laxdaela' is not only a single story, it is also a volume of stories, all more or less interrelated."

+ N Y Times p14 My 17 '25 1800w

Reviewed by H. A. Larsen

N Y Tribune p3 Ag 2 '25 1550w

"Thorstein Veblen has rendered it into admirable prose which conveys to the English reader not only the story of old Viking days, but also much of the half-savage, half-heroic atmosphere of the original

+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 6 '25 500w

LAY, TRACY HOLLINGSWORTH. Foreign service of the United States; foreword by Charles Evans Hughes. 438p il $5 Prentice-Hall

353.1 United States—Diplomatic and consular service 25-6167

"Consul General Lay is well-nigh the first writer to give any comprehensive insight into the workings of that great machine, the Department of State. So far as we know he is the first since that service underwent a reorganization under the terms of the Rogers act. The analysis is given the necessary background by chapters on the development of the Foreign service and the control of that service by the President and by the Senate. For the most part the book is a manual setting down with considerable detail the duties of the multitudinous bureaus, commissions, councils and institutes. The duties of the assistant secretaries, of the solicitor, of the division of Latin-America, Far Eastern, Western Europe and so on are all discussed. A great deal of the book, however, is taken up with the familiar assaults upon the strange American policy that underpays all its foreign representatives and refuses to house them as the Ambassadors, Ministers and consuls of all other civilized peoples are housed."—Lit R

"No one could be better fitted to perform this task than Consul General Lay. There is a difficulty, however, with this volume, which should be frankly recognized; it is rather of the nature of a thorough technical report by an expert for the information of fellow officials and other government officials in and out of Congress than a popular book for the general reader. This report resembles closely other reports prepared by request for the information of superior officials or for committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives." P. M. Brown

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:629 Ag '25 350w

Booklist 22:10 O '25

"His examination is about as complete as his pages allow. His examination is also more frank than is usually to be expected from an official writing about his family affairs." J. B. A.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 550w

Reviewed by C. M. Morrison

Lit R p12 Mr 28 '25 520w

LEA, FANNIE HEASLIP (MRS HAMILTON POPE AGEE). With this ring. 237p $1.75 Dodd

25-3845

The heroine of this amusing tale is Lila Kemp, an attractive southern girl who at twenty-eight is not, like many of her friends, married. The small town of Columbia accepts the inevitability of her spinsterhood. But Lila tries out a pet theory of her own. Planning a month's vacation in New York, she buys some smart clothes and a platinum wedding ring, and under the name of Mrs James Duval, she seeks adventure in the big city. She finds it in the trig-looking person of Anthony Thorne who falls head over heels in love with her. The complications which follow are both fearful and funny for Lila—but she returns to Columbia with every prospect of becoming Mrs Anthony Thorne.

Boston Transcript p3 F 28 '25 320w

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"It is brightly told and abounds in clever lines. We have read other things of Miss Lea's that were better. Still, it is a pleasant tale that

LEA, FANNIE HEASLIP—Continued
once begun must be finished, and who desires too much gravity when spring is in the air?"
Helen Wallerstein

+ — Lit R p9 Mr 7 '25 280w

"The author has hardly worked out of her theme as much of complication and interest as it might have afforded. But her conversations are clever and some of her characterizations have more than a touch of vitality and life-likeness. Altogether it makes an artificial but gay and entertaining comedy romance."

+ — N Y Times p9 Je 14 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:113 Ap '25

LEAVENWORTH, CHARLES SAMUEL. Lessons of history. 100p $1.50 The author, 79
Howe st., New Haven, Conn.

901 History—Philosophy 24-22011

These four studies are concerned with the movements or cycles by which history repeats itself—the rhythm of progress and relapse in civilization. The author briefly examines the substance of historical movements during six thousand years of experience and reads a lesson to the present age about how to guard against one of these oft repeated retrogressions.

Reviewed by J. M. Vincent

Am Hist R 30:628 Ap '25 550w

Hist Outlook 16:184 Ap '25 300w

Reviewed by W. F. Johnson

No Am 220:372 D '24 80w

Reviewed by F. M. Kling

— Sat R of Lit 1:304 N 22 '24 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p654 O
16 '24 120w

LE BLANC, MAURICE. Memoirs of Arsène
Lupin. 315p $2 Macaulay

25-9294

This is the story of the first adventure of Arsène Lupin, the tale of the great love of his life which eventually led to his later adventures. Ralph d'Andresy, who later under the name of Arsène Lupin became so illustrious, had never loved until he met Josephine Balsamo, countess of Cagliostro, an adventuress of extraordinary beauty. Ralph and Josephine try to solve a great secret which has its origin back in the Middle Ages. They become deeply implicated in strange crimes and tragedy in which the mysterious personality of Countess Cagliostro, the crimes of Madame Pellegrini and the machinations of a secret society play a significant part.

"If the present intrigue does not seem to hold us with the same breathless intensity, the same gay dash, perhaps it is only because we have grown old and reached that dreadfully serious time of life, twenty-five."

— Boston Transcript p4 Ap 25 '25 140w

Reviewed by L: Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 60w

"The style of these mystery stories is too well known to require extended comment. The baffling complications start early and are maintained without interruption. A great many characters are introduced, and one has some difficulty in getting the names and titles correctly filed in one's memory. There is such a thing as overcrowding a mystery story."

+ — N Y Tribune p12 My 31 '25 200w

LEE, AMBER, pseud. Woman I am. 305p $2
Seltzer

25-6620

"The woman I am" is, according to her own confession, not exactly a nice person to know.
In this avowed autobiography Amber Lee records in detail the history of her intimacy with the several men who have won her. At sixteen she leaves her foster-father's home in a Boston suburb and elopes with one of his pupils.
The marriage, while not long lived, serves as an introduction to scenes of riotous living such as call to mind a sensational moving picture.

While still comparatively young, Amber Lee commits a crime—and is given the enforced leisure to write her book.

"The story is well written; there is no getting around that point. It has unity, color, and strength of a kind. The story is told well within the bounds of decency, and is far more readable than many similar narratives. The characterizations are fairly clear-cut. There have been many worse stories and several better modeled along parallel lines, and those for whom the book was written will enjoy it."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Jl 3 '25 260w

"The lady who describes her lurid past in these passionate pages might have been forgiven all other sins except the deliberate one of writing a dreary book about them."

— Ind 114:420 Ap 11 '25 30w

"In style, it is cheap, with a pronounced leaning toward 'fine-writing,' a tawdry thing, altogether, and one written and published, one suspects, with the box office looming large."

— Lit R p9 Ap 11 '25 180w

N Y Tribune p11 My 24 '25 260w

"It is undoubtedly 'naughty' and not for 'tots,' but there is obviously no temptation in it to fascinate the prurient instincts of the wayward and immature. We have carefully pondered the contents, and it is our opinion that the concluding pages of Amber's story give the entire book a sort of sterilization in the mind of the reader by so strongly arousing his revulsion that he is incapable of regarding her with any kindlier feelings than a sickened incre-duly."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:713 Ap 25 '25 200w

LEE, JENNETTE BARBOUR (PERRY) (MRS GERALD STANLEY LEE). Dead right. 300p
$2 Scribner [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

25-7073

Miss Millicent Newberry, detective and psychologist, works upon the theory that once the underlying motive of a crime is discovered, the problem is practically solved. The famous Blanchard case is put into her hands, a case of a stolen will which under a certain condition leaves three quarters of a million dollars to the daughter, Rosalind Blanchard. If she chooses to violate that condition, St Joseph's hospital profits by her foolishness. A certain trustee of the hospital engages Milly to find that will,
and as companion to Rosalind she makes the Blanchard house her laboratory. So Milly begins the unravelling of a mystery at the heart of which she finds a beautiful love story.

Booklist 22:163 Ja '26

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 15 '25 200w

Cleveland p84 Jl '25

"This may be a trifling story. Our critical sense tells us that even as detective stories go, such it is. Nevertheless, we burned the midnight oil over it and felt all the time we were reading a delightful sense of satisfaction. So it does not behoove us to cast any disparagement on its slightness." H. W.

+ — Lit R p9 Ap 4 '25 270w

"Mrs. Lee's woman detective gives a touch of freshness to this story, 'Dead Right,' by the mere fact of her sex. It must be admitted, however, that she does not add any lustre to her profession, and though we are told that she was highly successful at unraveling mysteries, the tale furnishes no evidence of the abilities with which its author credits her."

+ — N Y Times p19 Je 7 '25 450w

"Well written, albeit somewhat saccharine, in a nicely singing prose." Leonard Hess

+ — N Y Tribune p11 Ap 19 '25 370w

"The characters, although interesting enough in themselves, seem as remote and detached as so many pictures on the wall of a gallery.
The plot interest is weak because the narrative is disjointed and lacks movement and intensity. Miss Lee has had two excellent horses to ride but has fallen between them."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:713 Ap 25 '25 200w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p89 F 5 '25 130w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

LEE, SIR SIDNEY. King Edward VII; a biography; v 1, From birth to accession, 9th November 1841 to 22nd January 1901. ltd ed 830p il $8 Macmillan

B or 92 Edward VII, king of Great Britain (25-5635)

This is the official biography of King Edward VII undertaken at the request of King George V and based on documents in the royal archives. The first volume covers in minute detail the long years during which Albert Edward was waiting for the crown, closing with his accession to the throne in 1901, at the age of fifty-nine.

"It ranks far above Strachey's Queen Victoria in the materials used. On the other hand the ponderous character of the narrative almost deprives the book of those human and humane qualities which we are now accustomed to associate with the late Prince of Wales." A. L. P. Dennis

+ — Am Hist R 30:818 Jl '25 1050w

Reviewed by W. C. Abbott

Atlantic's Bookshelf My '25 700w

Booklist 22:30 O '25

"Masterly and brilliant narrative." Edmund Noble

+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 21 '25 3900w

"It is, of course, too long; and it is a book more to be dipped into than read from cover to cover. But it will be indispensable to the future Mr. Lytton Strachey. And in spite of its longueurs and its occasional rather irritating pomposities, it does give a picture of a real man, pleasure-loving, impulsive, and of average ability and intelligence; but at the same time full of a public-spirited desire to pull his weight in the community and with certainly remarkable gifts of tact and bonhomie." Basil Williams

+ — Canadian Hist R 6:158 Je '25 1850w
Cleveland p113 D '25

"It is not intimate, but it impresses one as reasonably accurate." D. R.
Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 1000w

"At no time is he carried away by his subject—which is understandable; but he fails to present artistically the fascinating and tragicohistorical scenery which Destiny constantly wove about King Edward's life. The reader finds an informative but uninteresting book, which gives a good résumé of the Prince's times, a much-clipped film of his career, but really no serious character-reading at all. It is a pity Lytton Strachey was not allowed to make a real live biography out of even the restricted materials." Shane Leslie

+ — Int Bk R p464 Je '25 2750w

Reviewed by J. R. Towse

Lit R p2 Ap 18 '25 1700w

"Sir Sidney Lee has upon the whole done his work with skill, judgment, and industry. It was perhaps inevitable that much space should be consumed with records of tours and functions that tend to tedium. But we get a clear picture of a fairly liberal-minded man, less spoiled by his upbringing and the flattery and servility of courts than almost any prince of his time." J. A. Hobson

+ — Nation 120:662 Je 10 '25 1400w

"It is probable that the official biography of Edward VII. could not under any circumstances have been made, in 1925, a good book. But I do not believe that it was necessary to make it quite so bad and so dull as Sir Sidney Lee has succeeded in doing. It is a lamentable confession that, although where books are concerned

I have the digestion of an ostrich, I have failed absolutely to be able to read this first volume from cover to cover." Leonard Woolf

— Nation and Ath 36:859 Mr 21 '25 1150w

"Sir Sidney Lee had a great opportunity in this work. With unexampled access to the materials, he might have written a book which would have explained that mystical hieroglyphic, the English monarchy. As it is, he has preferred to write one of those empty and funereal volumes in which sharpness of view is sacrificed to vastness of canvas." H. J. Laski

— New Repub 42:321 My 13 '25 1200w

"Naturally in a semi-official biography one cannot expect that materials will be handled with the freedom of Mr. Lytton Strachey, and in any case the Strachey method does not appeal to Sir Sidney Lee, who prefers to rely upon the cumulative effect of facts. This makes neither for easy reading nor lively character drawing, and long stretches of the book are little more than a bare catalogue of dull events; yet the marshalling of this procession of trivialities is in itself expressive of the drudgery which no prince who takes himself seriously can hope to escape."

New Statesman 24:722 Mr 28 '25 1450w

"As a painter of portraits Sir Sidney Lee is no Sargent. He is not brilliant as an impressionist, but an encyclopedia for detail. His is no wizardry of words, but good, plain prose and plenty of it." P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 Mr 8 '25 4500w

Reviewed by W. B. Wells

N Y Tribune p4 Ap 12 '25 1300w

N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 500w

"It is interesting from beginning to end. As an 'official' history it has the advantage of being based on important unpublished material. At the same time it has the natural disadvantage which attaches to any 'authorized' biography. Sir Sidney's work has been further handicapped by the fact that much of the material concerns persons still alive, and a good part of it can hardly be made public without inviting diplomatic complications. He has been forced to pick and choose, and yet has done this with sufficient skill to present a full picture of the part which King Edward as Prince of Wales played in international politics." N: Roosevelt

+ — No Am 221:738 Je '25 1900w

Outlook 139:659 Ap 29 '25 300w

R of Rs 71:445 Ap '25 400w

"If this be biography, then indeed the art is dying. The first ten chapters from the birth to the marriage of the Prince, though too many, are at least biographical. The remaining thirty chapters are not biography, but an analytical history of the forty years from 1861 to 1901. It is not Sir Sidney Lee's fault that the path has been trodden wide and flat by his predecessors; but he might have practised a little selection and compression."

+ — Sat R 139:239 Mr 7 '25 1350w

"There is little doubt that his latest work will long be cited as the most comprehensive account of the career of Edward VII. . . . Nobody would wish that he had turned his Life of the Prince of Wales into a chronique scandaleuse. But it is questionable whether he has done the late King's reputation any service by keeping silent as to the facts of one side of his life, with such extenuating circumstances as there may have been, and at the same time throwing out occasional and wholly unsupported innuendoes and equivocal allusions; and it is certain that thereby he has been unfaithful to a principle of biography enunciated by himself." R. L. Schuyler

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:663 Ap 11 '25 2250w

"If much of the information incorporated in the first volume was already matter of public knowledge, there is also a good deal that is new, and even more which has been familiar only to those who have made special studies of certain international issues."

Spec 134:367 Mr 7 '25 1900w

LEE, SIDNEY—Continued

"What Sir Sidney has given us will be read with great interest by all students of the period and much of it will be enjoyed by the general reader; but it is somewhat overloaded with facts and somewhat bare of flowers. His book should have gained in interest for most people if its breathless and unending procession of occurrences had been occasionally suspended in favour of a chapter or two giving the biographer's views of the possibilities which lie open to a Prince of Wales, and a discussion of the opposed conceptions of those possibilities entertained by the Prince and his mother."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p147 Mr 5 '25 2900w

LEE, VERNON, pseud. (VIOLET PAGET).

Golden Keys. 250p $2.50 Dodd [6s Lane]

914 Italy—Description and travel. France—Description and travel

In her notes of wanderings in out-of-the-way corners of Italy, France and Germany, as well as her own England, Vernon Lee lovingly contemplates the spirit of places and by her sympathy and imagination evokes it for the reader.

"In her new volume the slightness of the material, it must be admitted, becomes apparent. Many of the papers concern places revisited, and the memories and comparisons that come from such regretful returns are less stimulating than the emotions with which one enters a city for the first time, like a conqueror. But there are two essays at least which show Vernon Lee's precious talent at its best. 'Semur-en-Auxois,' and 'Out of Venice at Last.'"

— Raymond Mortimer

+ — Nation and Ath 37:297 Je 6 '25 700w

"One of the fundamental criticisms which can be leveled against this book is its failure to focus attention on the significant detail. So gradually is the transition handled that often one is scarcely aware of any motion. Another point which should be made regarding 'The Golden Keys' is the spirit of its style. This style, elegant, graceful and polished as an ormolu snuffbox, is perhaps justified by its appropriateness to the book's underlying philosophy." J: Carter

+ — N Y Times p9 Ag 23 '25 1450w

"Done in the cobblesone style, where the reader bumps about pursuing subjects and predicates, tenuous charm flies off its ethereal wings, leaving behind it nothing more entrancing than a retrieved subject and its predicate." Blair Niles

— N Y Tribune p12 O 11 '25 750w

"Each volume of the series seems more charming than its predecessor, and this may be counted the most charming of all. She has brought in it her method to its highest pitch of graceful ease."

+ Sat R 139:467 My 2 '25 280w

"These quiet, reflective, esoteric essays reveal in Vernon Lee, as she wanders among the highways and byways of Europe, a rich measure of that 'disinterested interest,' which is always highly individual and passionately loyal to its own vision. She is less concerned with actually describing places than in analysing the moods which they induce in her, and, if her sensitive art is too introspective and elusive for the general reader's taste, it will commend itself to all who see life with the inner eye and who can appreciate a nervous, artistic prose."

+ Spec 135:112 Jl 18 '25 300w

"As one who has lovingly investigated the handling of words, she has an artist's sense of them. Nor in these essays, which indeed are of a tantalizing brevity, does she ever say too much."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p251 Ap 9 '25 1500w

LEE, VERNON, pseud. (VIOLET PAGET).

Proteus; or, The future of intelligence. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 63p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

151 Intellect

25-17354

Proteus is Vernon Lee's name for the changing world of appearance, "the mysterious whole which we know must exist, but know not how to descry—Reality." She is concerned with the relation of intelligence to the changing aspects of reality. Intelligence, as she describes it is a never resting faculty, responsive to all aspects of a thing, a habit of mind which takes "otherness" into account, is not dismayed by unexpectedness and is capable of perceiving and judging beyond the range of personal experience. This quality Vernon Lee claims is a product of the modern spirit and dates only from the days of Montesquieu, Voltaire and Gibbon. She goes on to show some of the services that this kind of intelligence may render

Booklist 22:100 D '25

Reviewed by T. S. Knowlson

Lit R p2 N 14 '25 350w

"A very stimulating little essay. . . Her outlook seems to savor more of a weak discontent with the bustle of progress or of an apology for self-conscious aestheticism than of a valuable contribution to the thought of 'to-day and to-morrow.'"

+ — Living Age 326:386 Ag 15 '25 130w (Reprinted from Discovery)

New Statesman 25:612 S 12 '25 500w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 N 1 '25 1200w

"A concise, suggestive piece of work."

+ Sat R 139:589 My 30 '25 60w

"Her writing is discursive—slap-dash even at times—and this is what arouses dislike if the reader has a mind which runs in grooves, but it is a delight to follow her as she speculates on the future of intelligence as applied to Ethics and Intellectual Manners."

+ — Sat R 140:218 Ag 22 '25 150w

"Here, among the books that are to be treasured, is a very short one, but very broad and very deep. It is a sprightly bit of adventuring into the present and future of mind."

Survey 55:376 D 15 '25 300w

"The function of genius is to stimulate intelligence, not to furnish us with ready-made thoughts, however true or sublime. This opinion like most of those in Vernon Lee's book we find quite unexceptionable. We see intelligence, as critical, responsive, quick, cautious, and many other things. Vernon Lee has given us a very interesting account of it in all these aspects. But we are still not quite clear that we understand what she means by it. We cannot understand, in particular, why she supposes it to be new."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p393 Je 11 '25 720w

LEFEVRE, EDWIN. Making of a stockbroker. 341p $2.50 Doran

332.6 Brokers. Wall Street

25-13097

John Kent Wing goes into a Wall Street brokerage office to learn the business. On page 35 he is offered an initial salary of $3 a week. On page 339 he is junior partner in a firm offering a certain man a salary of $1,000,000 a year. The story of the phenomenal rise of this great stock brokerage house makes interesting reading. It describes to the uninitiate public the legitimate methods by which the huge enterprises of big business are financed and set afloat.

Booklist 22:103 D '25

"The work serves eloquently to discredit the persistently unfair and legendary conceptions of Wall Street as the paradise of predatory gamblers and immense, easily made fortunes."

Bookm 62:221 O '25 120w

"Mr. Lefèvre knows the art of story telling, he knows the potency of good dialogue. With such weapons he not only unfolds the tale of a rising commercial concern, but he brings his readers into familiar relations with a character true and for the most part unsentimentalized." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 11 '25 450w

"Mr. Lefèvre has long since acquired the faculty for writing business stories in an interesting fashion, and this one possesses a documentary air that adds to its convincing quality." Harold Callender

+ N Y Times p5 J1 12 '25 1800w

Reviewed by R: J. Walsh

N Y Tribune p13 O 4 '25 850w

Outlook 140:529 Ag 12 '25 300w

"Of course there are exploiters in Wall street today as always, but this book deals only with legitimate business. It is full of business romance, and might be called a most entertaining sermon."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 S 10 '26 500w

LEFFINGWELL, WILLIAM HENRY. Office management; principles and practice. 850p $5 Shaw, A.W.

651 Office management 25-2298

A detailed study of office problems from the point of view of scientific management. Contents: The theory and principles underlying office management; Analysis of the problem of office management; Standardization; Methods of control.

Am Econ R 15:334 Je '25 60w

"It is safe to say that the sections to which you refer you will find practical, written in a matter-of-fact vein, and readily understandable." F. S. Stahl

+ Am Management R 14:329 O '25 520w

Booklist 21:331 Je '25

"It is a work teeming with material capable of application to every kind of business, and its universality is the basis of its usefulness wherever there is a desire to work thoroughly and effectively."

+ N Y Times p12 Mr 22 '25 380w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:300 My '25

LE GALLIENNE, RICHARD. Romantic '90s. 271p $2.50 Doubleday

928 Authors, British 26-124

Mr Le Gallienne was a newspaper reviewer and also a publisher's reader during the literary period in England to which these random memories relate. The literary circle in which he moved included among the great figures of the older order such men as Swinburne, Watts-Dunton, Meredith, Tennyson, Spencer and William Morris, and among young romantics and revolutionaries such individualities as Aubrey Beardsley, Lionel Johnson, Ernest Dowson and Oscar Wilde.

"It is a volume of historical value, a beautiful and invaluable chronicle of a period rich in wonderful men and women; and no one else could have written it. Let us be grateful that the 1890's have been preserved for us through the sympathetic eyes of one who lived and labored in, and who loved those high, daring days." C: H. Towne

+ Bookm 62:334 N '25 1100w

"If you want to know who anybody in the 90's was, this is your unparalleled opportunity to discover, and if you want to know more about Richard Le Gallienne, who made criticism a fine art, and friendship a tapestry, here are two hundred-odd pages to tell you."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 450w

"Mr. Le Gallienne's volume is full and lively. He shows himself, on the whole, more generous, dignified, decorous and urbane than several of our contemporary American commentators, writes with relish of things and persons intimately experienced, presents many sprightly anecdotes and descriptions." H: B. Fuller

+ N Y Times p12 D 20 '25 1750w

"The Romantic Nineties' is an 'I remember' book without any melancholic overtones. This book will be the delight of such ladies and gentlemen as prove their literary sophistication by their familiarity with the gossip that swirls in the wake of great men." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p7m N 22 '25 800w

LEHMAN, BENJAMIN HARRISON. Wild marriage. 324p $2 Harper

25-5966

A picture of academic life of which Cambridge is the background. The return of Elam Dunster to his father, a professor of geology, revives the scandal of eighteen years ago, when Elam's mother, with her three-year-old son, deserted her husband and Cambridge. Now Elam, a sturdy, good-looking youth, returns to live with his father and study at Harvard. Staying at the Dunster house is young Madeleine Colquhoun whose husband, a colleague of the professor's, is on an expedition in the Andes. Elam falls in love with her and again the Dunster name and tradition-bound Cambridge are brought to the perilous edge of another scandal.

Boston Transcript p6 F 25 '25 1100w

"Wild Marriage' could be called, fairly enough, the best college novel since 'This Side of Paradise'; at least, it is the first since the Fitzgerald classic to approach distinction in style and dignity in structure." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p12 Ap 25 '25 370w

Nation 120:524 My 6 '25 60w

"Mr. Lehman, so far as mere narrative goes, tells his story not brilliantly but well. It is not illuminating as to Harvard undergraduate life, nor does it get very far under the skin of Cambridge."

+ N Y Times p9 F 22 '25 850w

"Wild Marriage' has one hopeful dissimilarity from most first novels—it ends much better than it begins. It remains to be said that Mr. Lehman will probably succeed in fiction. He can construct—he can observe with a good deal of accuracy—he can fit a plot together. His style, though entirely undistinguished, is competent." S. V. Benet

+ N Y Tribune p4 Mr 29 '25 1100w

"The author, preoccupied with the mental agility of his central character, fails to realize fully the situation he has created. The father of Elam is projected to the reader as the same wooden image which appears to Elam. So with the other characters whose happiness and ease of life are upset by the interloping youth. The failure to recognize the potentialities of these persons—all superior dramatic material to the boy—results in a constant diminuendo of the dramatic pitch, which never after the starting point assumes the fervor or pungency of life." Morris Markey

+ N Y World p6m F 22 '25 300w

"Though nothing extraordinary in substance, the novel is made distinguished by manner and detail. Mr. Lehman recreates perfectly the difficult scene of Cambridge; with quiet mirth and a great deal of deftness he has gone behind the walls that provoke such musings on Brattle Street and has given us the essence of what he found there." Bernard de Voto

+ Sat R of Lit 1:611 Mr 21 '25 600w

LEIGH, RANDOLPH. Citadel of freedom: a brief study of the Constitution and its builders, and of the movement to destroy it. 234p $2 (10s) Putnam

342.73 United States—Constitution. Referendum 24-28879

The author holds that direct government as exemplified by the initiative, referendum and

LEIGH, RANDOLPH—Continued
recall, is at variance with the original conception of the Constitution and with the principle of representative government.

"A book which the publishers have thoughtfully spared reviewers the trouble of appraising. According to the jacket 'the story of the Constitution' is 'told with swift eloquence,' 'almost 200 years of political development' are 'described in barely 200 pages,' and 'the first dollars-and-cents challenge of the initiative, referendum, and recall' is flung down for whom or whatsoever it may concern. As the book appears to meet in all respects the promises of the prospectus, there is nothing in particular to add."

Nation 120:389 Ap 8 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p227 Mr 26 '25 700w

LEIGHOU, ROBERT BENJAMIN. Chemistry of engineering materials. (International chemical ser.) 2nd ed 538p $4 McGraw

620.1 Chemistry, Technical. Building materials 25-11286

"In the present edition of this textbook, the author states in his Preface, the chapters on 'fuels, iron and steel, corrosion, non-ferrous metals, and non-ferrous alloys have been almost entirely rewritten and a great deal of new material has been added,' while 'more attention has been given to metallurgical processes and the chapters on boiler waters, lubricants and primary electric cells have been largely rewritten and recast.' The first edition, (1917) bore the title, 'Chemistry of Materials of the Machine and Building Industries.'"—Eng N

"This is the second edition of a well-known book that appeared originally in 1917. Sufficient changes and additions have been made to bring the subject matter thoroughly up to date, and the work remains as a leader in its field."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:814 O '25 100w

Eng N 94:1030 Je 18 '25 100w

"The book fills a want in the classroom, should be in every professor's and student's library, and is a valuable addition to the International Chemical Series." F. C. Vilbrandt

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:988 S '25 220w

LEIGHTON, JOSEPH ALEXANDER. Religion and the mind of to-day. 372p $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton

201 Religion 24-14894

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Cleveland p24 Mr '25

"The good and bad features of Professor Leighton's volume are those of the liberal Protestantism in vogue to-day. The chief merit of the book would probably lie in the skill with which Professor Leighton persuasively presents the religious values of liberalism over against two opposed positions, a dogmatic and traditional adherence to ancient credal forms on the one hand and a materialistic absorption in the externals of life on the other hand. Many readers of the book will doubtless be helped to relinquish outworn biological and historical beliefs and then to find religion more vital and practical than before." S. P. Lamprecht

+ J Philos 22:133 F 26 '25 1700w

"With frank, fearless finality the author faces the wreckage of the whole system of outworn creeds and dogmas. And with the same spirit of uncompromising honesty envisaging from within and from without the confused spectacle of life's drama, he proceeds to outline in the light of these conclusions a new cultural synthesis for the religion of today and that of tomorrow." Mary Siegrist

+ N Y Times p13 S 14 '24 1850w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p599 S 25 '24 320w

Reviewed by W. L. Sperry

Yale R n s 15:175 O '25 100w

LENGLEN, SUZANNE. Lawn tennis, the game of nations. 147p il $2 Dodd

796 Tennis

25-18051

The famous French champion describes in lucid manner her strokes and the method of using them. There are no accompanying diagrams, but the eight full page illustrations are from photographs of the writer in action. The appendix contains various rules of the game.

Booklist 22:108 D '25

Cleveland p118 D '25

"The prima donna of the courts has discarded all temperament in her treatise of the game she loves and gives devotees of tennis a splendidly instructive work that must help the player, tyro and near-expert alike. Mlle. Lenglen has done more. She has made her book so readable that without doubt it will attract to the tennis courts and lawns many of those who have as yet only stood at the border of the tennis world, interested but not participating." Paul Neumann

+ Lit R p5 N 7 '25 200w

Living Age 327:215 O 24 '25 180w

"The famous Suzanne writes about the game of tennis with as much verve and devotion as she plays it. Her book is a volume of practical advice to players that embodies her own observations, experience, rules and methods and ought to be of the greatest value to any one who wants to learn to play lawn tennis or to improve a game already learned."

+ N Y Times p12 S 13 '25 500w

LEONARD, WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING. Tutankhamen, and after; new poems. 67p $1.50 Huebsch

811

25-26169

Poems gathered for the most part from various periodicals in which they originally appeared. The author says, "With the exception of The Lynching Bee and the privately printed Two Lives, this volume contains the best of my serious verse composed since The Vaut of Man." The book is divided into three sections: People, Books, Wars.

Booklist 21:269 Ap '25

"Mr. Leonard is a poet with personality. It is not obtrusive, it is distinctive."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 31 '25 150w

"Mr. Leonard has managed to say something new about Shakespeare, and where a man has done this it is peevish to quarrel with him for not having said it in words worthier of their so constraining subject." Babette Deutsch

+ Lit R p4 Ap 11 '25 600w

"There is a frequent lapse into rubber-stamp inversions. Nor does Mr. Leonard refrain from clipping vowels for the sake of the meter. Altogether one is tormented by the feeling that here is a poet whose nobility, obvious in flashes, remains for the most part unrevealed; that here are the unbeautiful stammerings of a somehow clearly passionate and beautiful spirit." Irwin Edman

+ Nation 120:695 Je 17 '25 450w

"He is a scholar and a thinker, and his poetry reflects both scholarship and thought. But these weightier materials are irradiated with a fine play of color and light and rendered less ponderable by the author's graceful lyricism. Several of the poems are memorable."

+ N Y Times p19 D 23 '24 250w

"Beautiful and scholarly and even passionate work." Zona Gale

+ N Y Tribune p4 Mr 15 '25 1050w

"There are few exponents of any recent school who write with a firmer restraint yet with more sonority than William Ellery Leonard." L. Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 2:334 N 28 '25 250w

LEONARD, WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.
Two lives. 109p $2 Viking press

811

25-22776

In three sonnet sequences the story is told of an intimate personal tragedy and the anguish of a soul racked by conscience.

Booklist 22:151 Ja '26

"Mr. Leonard has used a very colorful way of expressing himself. The work demands a great deal of praise, and certainly is a highly commendable attempt."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 9 '26 280w

"One feels that the book is probably better as an analysis than as a poem. It is tremendously effective and poignant, but it is at times gnarled and difficult verse."

+ Ind 116:79 Ja 16 '26 80w

"That 'Two Lives' has exerted less than its due influence directly upon Mr. Leonard's contemporaries—owing to the circumstance that it was never printed until 1922, and then only privately—will seem of little moment to another generation which will read it and call it, I am convinced, one of the best of early twentieth-century poems. Those future judges will have forgotten how Mr. Leonard's sonnet-sequence lived for so long a smothered life, and they perhaps will never have known the reason for this—the painful environment which made Mr. Leonard hesitate to tell his story to any public at all, let alone a wide one. They will see the poem, that is to say, as the work of art which it is." Mark Van Doren

Nation 121:546 N 11 '25 600w

"That a poet should at all succeed in a task of such delicacy would be matter for astonishment; the degree to which Mr. Leonard succeeds amazes one. That there should be some small amount of dead wood, fruit of the necessity of always carrying through the particular sonnet in hand, though the matter pertaining thereto might be exhausted, will cause no surprise; it is a matter of surprise that there should be so little dead wood as is actually the case." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p8 N 29 '25 350w

"Not the least remarkable feature of the poem is the sheer power of the narrative to startle and waylay. The bald and dreadful tale takes on majesty and beauty by the author's employment of the poetic medium, and more especially by the use of the grave, succinct, austere sonnet stanza." Babette Deutsch

+ N Y Tribune p7 D 6 '25 600w

"The accent of the verse is large and intimate, if academic; the tone is noble." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p6m Ja 3 '26 480w

Reviewed by L: Untermeyer

Sat R of Lit 2:335 N 28 '25 180w

Springf'd Republican p7a O 4 '25 100w

LEUBA, JAMES HENRY. Psychology of religious mysticism. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 336p $5 Harcourt [15s K. Paul]

201 Mysticism. Religion—Psychology

25-5217

"A study of the psychological, physiological, and conceptual factors in mysticism, indicating that the experiences which the mystic attributes to direct divine influence may well be referred to other causes."—J Religion

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 11 '25 900w

"A study of mysticism undertaken from a purely psychological point of view is bound to be of great interest, especially if it is pursued in a truly scientific spirit and conducted with that reverence which the subject demands. Dr. Leuba's work fulfills these requirements and will consequently prove illuminating and suggestive. The essential handicap under which the author labors is that he lacks a reliable principle by which genuine mysticism may be distinguished from the counterfeit." C. P. B.

+ Cath World 121:275 My '25 600w

"Professor Leuba has made in this book another notable contribution to the psychology of religion. It is the fruit of long years of labor, and of conscientious and competent labor. One should not expect, even from so finely independent and searching a psychology as Leuba's, a satisfying interpretation of mysticism. What one has here, as in no previous book in any language, is a rich assemblage of materials for an interpretation; an invaluable set of warnings against dupery." W: E. Hocking

+ J Philos 22:688 D 3 '25 1850w

J Religion 5:331 My '25 30w

"It is not, decidedly not, a book for the general reader or for those who hold that such discussions of religious matters ought not to be. For those interested in psychology, however, or those who find the complexities, divagations and curiosities of the human mind interesting, this book's 300-and-odd pages will repay careful reading and intense study."

+ Lit R p11 S 12 '25 220w

"Mr. Leuba's book offers the most successful attempt in the English language to penetrate to the heart of mysticism." Woodbridge Riley

+ Nation 121:668 D 9 '25 1000w

"Mr. Leuba's work is very good as far as it goes; it explodes the objective validity of the mystical theory as to the causes of the trances, but we wish he had gone further, and were not so shy of the 'Austrian physician.'"

+ Nation and Ath 37:80 Ap 18 '25 620w

"Overemphasizing the importance of the book would be difficult. It is useful, authoritative, stimulating. Sanity and sobriety, a laboratory rather than a platform tone and a total absence of what may be called the lingo of complexes and consciousnesses, distinguish this competent study of the transcendent experiences of the human mind." A. W. Hinshaw

+ N Y Times p22 Je 21 '25 1250w

Springf'd Republican p10 S 8 '25 650w

"We are not denying that the book has a scientific value. It is based upon solid research, and here and there we find true and fresh observations. But the book adds one more proof that mysticism cannot be treated on the lines of 'psychologism.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p132 F 26 '25 950w

LEVINE, LOUIS. Women's garment workers. 608p il $5 Huebsch

331.88 Clothing industry. Woman—Employment. International ladies' garment workers' union 25-7266

"This book tells the story of the half-million workers who make the clothes which the American woman wears. . . The change in the life of the women's garment workers, from the early sweat-shop to the present status of industrial citizenship, is incomprehensible unless related to one fundamental fact. That fact is the growth of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. . . [without it] the record of achievement, of higher wages, of the reduction of working hours to forty-four and forty a week, of the persistent planning which has made the worker a participant in the shaping of his own industrial destiny, would have been impossible. The history of the women's garment workers since 1900 is therefore the history of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union."—Preface

"The importance of research and the value of the trained investigator have been recognized by the International from the first. But their originality and progressiveness has nowhere been more clearly manifested than in the co-operation given to Dr. Levine in writing this history of their Union. It is a great story, greatly told." Helen Everett

LEVINE, LOUIS—Continued

+ Am Econ R 15:524 S '25 800w

Boston Transcript p4 F 21 '25 1000w

"Mr. Levine's tale of the dressmakers is distinctly a creative achievement. He managed to identify himself sympathetically with the movement and then wrote its biography—blending the facts with such imaginative skill that ineluctably they arrange themselves into a cause." B. Stolberg

+ Nation 120:604 My 27 '25 1150w

Reviewed by G. Soule

New Repub 41:345 F 18 '25 1300w

"Dr. Levine's book is written by a scholar, but not for scholars alone in spite of its professional workmanship and careful documentation. He has maintained his academic detachment in dealing with the facts without a sacrifice, apparently, of his sympathy and appreciation." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p12 F 8 '25 2900w

Reviewed by P. F. Brissenden

Pol Sci Q 40:472 S '25 1650w

LEWIN, PERCY EVANS. Resources of the Empire and their development. (British Empire, a survey) 12v v 3 364p $4 Holt [16s Col-lins]

914.2 Great Britain—Colonies. Great Britain

—Industries and resources. Great Britain

—Commerce. Natural resources [24-19318]

The third volume in the British Empire series deals with the development of overseas production and trade between the different parts of the Empire.

Reviewed by O. D. Skelton

Am Pol Sci R 19:401 My '25 60w

"Mr. Lewin has produced rather a remarkable volume. He has contrived to pack into the compass of less than three hundred pages an amazing number of facts, and for reference purposes his book should prove of real value. It suffers, however, from the protectionist bias of the author."

+ — Nation and Ath 35:418 Je 28 '24 100w

Reviewed by L. M. Larson

N Y Tribune p4 Mr 8 '25 40w

Reviewed by R. L. Schuyler

Pol Sci Q 40:288 Je '25 500w

Sat R 138:45 Jl 12 '24 140w

"It is unhappily inevitable that some of his well-marshalled material will in time grow out of date, but there are chapters of permanent value, notably the interesting account of railways. Mr. Lewin has incidentally rendered a valuable service to historical judgment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p411 Jl 3 '24 500w

LEWIS, ALBERT ADDISON. Boxwood gardens, old and new. 191p il $5 William Byrd press, inc., Richmond, Va.

710 Gardens. Box

25-6827

A book devoted to some old American gardens graced with the aristocratic boxwood, which the author says is "the most beautiful and permanent garden inheritance in this country," something to be collected and cherished like rare old furniture. In text and illustrations Mr Lewis takes the reader into such beautiful old gardens as Martha Washington's at Mount Vernon, William Byrd's at Westover, Dolly Madison's at Montpelier, Patrick Henry's at Red Hill, John Martin's at Brandon, as well as into some new gardens where box has been effectively used.

"For all the charm of his book we cannot but feel that he might have done better to stick to planting box trees instead of writing about them." Hamilton Bell

+ Lit R p6 Ja 10 '25 450w

"Interesting historical data and legend of Colonial boxwood gardens, together with excellent reproductions of a large number of photographs. One cannot read these descriptions of Colonial gardens without feeling that if Americans value their heritage, boxwood has still an important part to play in garden-building."

+ R of Rs 70:448 O '24 150w

"Not until today has there been a book upon boxwood, the bush, the tree, its use in the past and in the present: and this volume of Mr. Lewis's will be essential to the shelves of everyone in the country whose interest lies in gardening as an art or who studies the history of gardening."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:811 Je 6 '25 400w

LEWIS, CHARLTON MINER. Poems. 97p $1.50 Yale univ. press

811

24-30520

The author of these poems, posthumously published, was for twenty-five years professor of English literature at Yale.

"There is spaciousness and a rare biblical quality in some of the 'Poems' and a paradoxical lightness of touch in others. Certainly they are derivative, and from many widely separated sources, yet many are so beautifully fashioned, with the loving skill of an artisan who cares for his medium, that we may sometimes overlook the lack of spontaneity."

+ — Bookm 61:487 Je '25 160w

"Professor Beers, one of the dead poet's confrères at Yale, deserves well of the republic of American letters for making more widely known these witnesses of a rare poetic gift, enriched by learning, and vivified by an insight which beheld no less clearly than those 'temporal' things which are seen, those which although unseen—'are eternal.'" F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '25 650w

"It is our loss that a poet who could write so well should have left so little." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p4 D 27 '24 180w

"Not so abundant a writer as William Vaughn Moody, Charlton Lewis shares with Moody in the high insistence that poetry fails to be poetry if it lacks distinction. Slender as this posthumous volume is, it is entitled to occupy an envied place among Americana."

+ N Y Times p19 D 28 '24 800w

"Grace was Professor Lewis's note; a delicate flavor spiced with humor characterizes this posthumous volume." L. Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 2:335 N 28 '25 80w

LEWIS, ERVIN EUGENE. Personnel problems of the teaching staff. (Century education ser.) 460p $2.25 Century

371.1 School management and organization. Teachers

25-2286

Written by the superintendent of schools of Flint, Michigan, the book deals with problems that arise in the administration and supervision of a public school system and, in particular, with the supervision of the teaching staff.

Booklist 21:259 Ap '25

Reviewed by J. D. Wolcott

School Life 10:140 Mr '25 150w

"The reader will not find the author offering new and unusual solutions for the problems connected with salary and tenure but will discover a good outline and summary treatment of the best work that has been done by investigators, national committees, and research workers. The book has the distinction of being an initial contribution in the field the author has undertaken to develop, and it is commendable that he confined his efforts to an outline of the existing investigations, data, and techniques instead of attempting to give elaborate evaluations and generalizations." I. M. Allen

+ School R 33:308 Ap '25 640w

LEWIS, MRS ETHELREDA. The harp. 359p
$2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-12985

Pride of race, a fathomless joy in his clean Scandinavian heritage, is to Andrew Falconer his passion and his religion. Kinsmen are those whose minds respond to this same chord. These lessons Andrew learns of his mother in their quiet home in the African veld. His life is a search for his kinsmen in spirit, a search which leads him, a splendid solitary figure, across the world and back again. The first tragedy comes when, still a boy, he loses his mother; the second, and most bitter, of his life, is his betrayal by the cheap little creature he makes his wife. After years of mental anguish the veld gives Andrew back his poise. The vision of the immortality of race returns to him thru his own little son. But again his hopes are defeated, his friendships frustrated, and love itself, glimpsed for a moment in his own country among his own people, comes too late. The end of the quest is a renunciation, a losing which to Andrew is a finding forever.

"Emotional, often even rhapsodic, this (apparently) 'first novel' witnesses a fertility of imagination, a keenness of analysis, and a gift of verbal description which (the 'emotion' and 'rhapsody' being sternly controlled) should produce even better stories of that South Africa of which Mrs. Lewis writes as only they can who have been a part of the life-of-the-country—they visualize for others." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 18 '25 1000w
Cleveland p107 N '25

"It is not at all a novel for those who gobble fiction in the ordinary way, but it ought to find many a reader of the sort that enjoys the beautiful and the distinctive in fiction."

+ N Y Times p13 J1 5 '25 520w

"If Mrs. Lewis's manner at times approaches the grandiose and at others the sentimental, it is not unsuited to the material she works with—material that is extraordinary in its human scope and in its special setting."

+ — N Y Tribune p12 J1 26 '25 180w

"This is an oppressively sombre story, beautifully written, nobly conceived, but overburdened with the weight of one man's poignant sorrows, disillusionments, and trials."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:90 Ag 29 '25 200w

"Long passages of cryptic reflection profusely punctuated with the triple dot device make this book a fatiguing one to read."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p106 F
12 '25 150w

"The author's constant use of the 'historic present' and her way of telling the story by flashes are signs of its impulsive key; it has a sentimental tinge from which a little more detachment might have saved it. In spite of that, however, 'The Harp' is an uncommon and imaginative book with sharply vivid touches, and it utters a cry from the heart which is sustained throughout the novel."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p414 Je
18 '25 400w

LEWIS, JOHN LLEWELLYN. Miners' fight for American standards. 189p il $2 Bell pub. co., Indianapolis, Ind.

331.88 Coal miners. United mine workers of America 25-13407

The president of the United mine workers of America discusses the evils of the coal industry and defends the policies of the Union.

"John L. Lewis speaks as one capitalist to another—even though he is president of the largest labor union in the United States. Mr. Lewis has set down in this book the principles and policies of the United Mine Workers of America, or, more accurately perhaps, those of its present administration. Except for the trifling matter of their application, they might also be those of any up-to-the-minute American business man." Evans Clark

N Y Times p3 Ag 9 '25 1800w

"This book is a calm statement of the facts about coal, as the miner sees them. It should be read by everyone who has an interest in the settlement of the questions and issues in this strike and in the prosperity of the industry as a whole. It is not to be expected that every statement in the book will be accepted at its face value, nor in general can that be said of the employers' 'case' as they present it. It is something, however, that the appeal of the miners for consideration of their claims is made in his frank and intelligent manner."

+ R of Rs 72:559 N '25 180w

"Will repay the reader's scrutiny. This volume puts the case of the organized miners with eloquence and cogency. Particularly significant is the chapter devoted to the subject of mine management." R. W. Bruère

+ Survey 54:609 S 15 '25 80w

LEWIS, MRS ROSA (OVENDEN). Queen of cooks—and some kings (the story of Rosa Lewis); recorded by Mary Lawton. 208p il $3 Boni & Liveright

B or 92

25-11609

An American newspaper woman, after repeated and persistent efforts, induced Rosa Lewis to tell the story of her life—from scullery maid to proprietorship of the Cavendish, one of London's most exclusive hotels. Her personality and wit gained her the friendship of the many notables she entertained and her book is full of her frank but usually kindly comments on these personalities—including King Edward, Lord Ribblesdale, Sir William Eden, Ellen Terry, Lady Randolph Churchill, Lord Roberts, Mrs Edith Wharton and Mrs Patrick Campbell.

"It has the advantage, for one thing, of being largely true; for another, of being written in one of the most delightful styles known: that of conversation. Like all of its type, it is singularly useless, but it has the real advantage of adding another vital character to the small list of the world's literary individualists."

+ — Bookm 62:90 S '25 320w

Boston Transcript p2 J1 3 '25 1400w

"A delightful medley of shrewd comment on life, criticism of persons, and unconventional philosophy."

+ Ind 115:163 Ag 8 '25 150w

"It is the amusing and amiable autobiography of a remarkable woman seasoned with wit and wisdom as distinctive and tasty as any of her famous dishes." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p3 Ag 8 '25 460w

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson

N Y Times p3 J1 12 '25 1950w

Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 20w

"The complete picture of one woman's life lies in the pages of this book. It is told in her own words, with directness, naïveté, and mature wisdom. It must have taken skilful editing on Miss Lawton's part to keep the narrative so fresh and simple."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:109 S 5 '25 450w

"The book runs on, chattily, full of a working philosophy which if generally applied would greatly speed up the millennium. Quite possibly one would disagree with her point of view here and there, but taking her in the large she is a woman whom one would be glad to know as an artist in her own line and a friend whose loyalty once given would stick at nothing."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 J1 13 '25
460w

LEWIS, SINCLAIR. Arrowsmith. 448p $2 Harcourt

25-6078

In his latest novel Sinclair Lewis has drawn a full-length figure of a physician, a born seeker and experimentalist. He follows Martin Arrowsmith from medical school thru experiences as general country practitioner, as health officer and clinician, as fighter of the plague on a

LEWIS, SINCLAIR—Continued

West Indian island and finally, as director of a medical institute. He marries twice. His first wife is both playmate and helpmeet, who ministers to his genius and puts up with his egotism. His second wife, rich and exacting, tries to make him a fashionable scientist, and failing in the attempt, divorces him. The book leaves Arrowsmith in the Vermont woods working with a fellow-spirit as an independent researcher.

"The love story of Martin Arrowsmith and Leora is by all means the most artistic thing of the kind that Mr. Lewis has done and adds greatly to the realism of the tale." Courtenay Dinwiddie

+ Am J Pub Health 15:448 My '25 1250w

"The bleak scientific philosophy, the callousness, the unconventionality of certain characters will disturb some readers of the book, but few will deny its power or honesty or skill. Mr. Lewis is no longer the composer of superlative jazz. He has shown himself an artist, sincere, powerful, restrained." R. Danielson

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ap '25 700w

Booklist 21:303 My '25

"One does not gallop through 'Arrowsmith.' It is absolutely an interesting story, but one goes slowly to the end, with no temptation to turn a few pages and come to some more dialogue. It is an effective and interesting novel, judged by the standards of mere writing. Beyond this, it is deeply understanding and unflinchingly honest." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 7 '25 1750w

Cleveland p67 Je '25

"Arrowsmith is an important step in the campaign to de-bamboozle the American public and relieve its institutions of bunk. Mr. Lewis has attacked this old enemy in one of its highest places. In all phases of medicine—education, private and public practice, and finally research—he has revealed its pretensions and exposed its perpetrators. If he has sacrificed the reality of fiction, it is in the interest of the reality of a public cause which gives largeness of view and significance to Arrowsmith." R. M. Lovett

Dial 78:515 Je '25 1400w

"By far the best work that Mr. Lewis has yet done; in fact, so good that one is tempted to toss one's cap in air and give three rousing cheers." D. R.

+ Ind 14:302 Mr 14 '25 1200w

"'Arrowsmith' is a long novel, a padded novel, in places hard to read, in places hard to understand. There is an overwhelming amount of irrelevant detail put in to add verisimilitude. The lingo of the Rotarian or the Booster, and many readers will find it hard to digest and assimilate. If his purpose was to depict the medical profession on its cultural, scientific or social side, he has failed. If his purpose was to caricature certain features of the medical profession, he has succeeded, and admirably." Joseph Collins

+ Int Bk R p306 Ap '25 2050w

"In the pursuit of Martin one gets ripped to pieces—exhausted. In spite of that, however, one pursues, because Mr. Lewis is above and beyond all a novelist and therefore the whole value of the book is the creation and interpretation of Martin. The humanity of it outshines the science. The appeal of this ungainly, unlovable, sometimes drunken and always uncouth hero lies in his urge to find out—to go on finding out till he drops in his tracks." A. H. Gibbs

+ Lit R p4 Mr 7 '25 600w

"'Arrowsmith' will probably not attract the enormous attention which 'Main Street' and 'Babbitt' attracted because it is not so remarkable as a pamphlet; but considered purely as a novel it is better than either because it has a more striking fable and because it is essentially truer." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 120:359 Ap 1 '25 1050w

"Science can hardly be made a social problem, and one feels that Mr. Lewis's reforming zeal has misled him. There is, however, some very effective satire in the book on all sorts of shams and illiberality." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 36:818 Mr 14 '25 150w

"It is not often that a novel calls for review in a scientific journal, but Mr. Sinclair Lewis has given us in 'Martin Arrowsmith' a work of such interest and importance that notice of it should not be neglected. Mr. Lewis showed great promise in his earlier work, but here he has surely found himself, and we have no hesitation in strongly recommending this book to all research workers." W. P. K.

+ Nature 115:797 My 23 '25 350w

"Being a vertical rather than a horizontal view, it cuts across all strata of American life except that of the manual laborer, and is therefore more inclusive and more varied than the earlier books. Moreover, having a more sharply defined point of view, it is more positive, and it goes deeper, concerning itself less with the surface and more with a fundamental trait of the national character. It gains enormously from centering its focus, not on the exponents of social aberrations, but on an antagonist and to some extent a victim of them." T. K. Whipple

+ New Repub 42:3 Ap 15 '25 3400w

Reviewed by J. Franklin

New Statesman 24:629 Mr 7 '25 2500w

"Artistically 'Arrowsmith' is an authentic step forward. Mr. Lewis has perfected his instrument and infused it more thoroughly with his own individuality. The novel is full of passages of a quite noble felicity and the old skill in presenting character through dialogue never fails." H. L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p1 Mr 8 '25 1900w

"'Arrowsmith' is hot with the authentic fire in which art and science are purified." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p2 Mr 8 '25 2300w

"'Arrowsmith' is probably Mr. Lewis's best book so far—as it should be. As fiction it moves him upward a notch. As satire, too, 'Arrowsmith' seems to move him upward; one feels that the chief persons are not so much straw men and more in the nature of real types—that as types they are more essentially vital." R. W. N.

+ N Y World p7a Mr 15 '25 760w

"To speak bluntly, Mr. Lewis seems to be too intent upon the pursuit of shams to be consistently a great novelist. There is too much sham in the world as he discovers it. A great novelist, one supposes, aims to find reality of a sort in nearly everything and does not merely make exhibitions of any of his characters. A conscious effort to 'show up' somebody or something seems nearly as incompatible with real imaginative power as an ambition to 'show off' one's own cleverness—from which Mr. Lewis is happily free. Yet it must be confessed that habituation to this later form of fiction tends to spoil one's taste for the more conventional forms of the art. It does not spoil one for Conrad, or Dostoevski, or Shakespeare, or even for Howells or Kipling, but it does perhaps dull one's appreciation of the more or less standardized good novel." C. H. Gaines

No Am 222:165 S '25 450w

"Probably most readers would like the new story better if it had some thousand fewer technical terms, and was thereby reduced to ordinary length. Looking at 'Arrowsmith' as a novel of life and character, I see one thing in which it stands pre-eminently above 'Main Street' and 'Babbitt.' For the first time, barring some possible exceptions in his pre-'Main Street' novels, Mr. Lewis has depicted a woman the reader thoroughly likes." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 139:457 Mr 25 '25 880w

"A work crammed with brilliant pictures: a work planned on the heroic scale—and yet a work in total effect rather dull and formless. To speak of it lightly, to fail in realization of its huge superiority to the mass even of good and conscientious but ephemeral fiction, would be simply stupid; one must judge it by severe standards; and, judged by them, it fails. For skill and intelligence, however prodigious, are no sort of substitute for inspiration. The vital creative breath does not blow through these pages: one does not love, or hate, any character in them." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:389 Ap 11 '25 1050w

"'Arrowsmith' is a better book than 'Main Street,' better written and much better conducted. If it is not so good a novel as 'Babbitt,' its satire is at least as important and perhaps better documented. Browning was perhaps rash in asserting that all service ranks the same with God, but it is certainly true that Lewis as a social satirist is eminently serviceable, and that we can well afford to let the future take care of his permanent literary values." H: S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 1:575 Mr 7 '25 1650w

"There is scarcely a foible of medicine or public health that is not touched on, and none of these is dragged into the narrative by force, but all move in smoothly and logically. . . . Every intelligent medical man with a sense of humor will enjoy the book. Every medical student who feels vague rumblings of scientific curiosity or the urge for pure research, should read it." T: J. LeBlanc

+ Science 61:632 Je 19 '25 1100w

"Though it turns out that Mr. Sinclair Lewis's new novel is accumulatively good, and not centrally good, though still it is the detail that interests and moves us most, yet Arrowsmith is beyond doubt the best of Mr. Lewis's novels."

+ Spec 134:372 Mr 7 '25 1750w

"The satire is stinging, deserved perhaps. Yet like so many of the misbegotten daubs offered by painters as interpretations of their own distorted emotions and crude mentalities, what might have been a rare realistic novel has suffered from the same lack of proportion and excursions into extravaganza that make of the daily press a school of literary pathology. Flashes of fine service, glimpses of gallant deeds, shrewd skill, clean courage, and now and then a redeeming recklessness serve to carry one over sodden pages of booze and selfishness." Haven Emerson, M.D.

+ Survey 54:180 My 1 '25 680w

"There is a stirring epic quality in Mr. Sinclair Lewis's new novel. 'Martin Arrowsmith' is easily the best work he has yet given us."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p153 Mr 5 '25 880w

Wis Lib Bul 21:90 Mr '25

LEWISOHN, LUDWIG. Israel. 280p $3 Boni & Liveright

296 Jews. Zionism 25-24283

"Israel" is a most earnest plea, addressed chiefly to the Jew himself, for an understanding of those things that set his race apart, for a faithful adherence to the best traditions of his race and resistance to the forces of assimilation. Mr Lewisohn describes talks with Jews in many cities during his last travels in America, and conditions among the Jewish population in various European capitals. The last half of the book is given to an account of the Jews in Palestine and the task of Zionism.

Booklist 22:142 Ja '26

"To recount the origin and growth of this movement back to the Holy Land of the Jewish people, would be to write an epic poem. This has indeed been accomplished by Mr. Lewisohn. In the story of Israel he stands revealed as the most outstanding figure in the interpretation of Jewish life and aspirations. The reader of this book, and there will be very many such, will hasten to proclaim it as the most interesting and informative work Mr. Lewisohn has yet written." L. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 21 '25 900w

"His dream of a world redeemed by the message of the prophets will doubtless stir generous hearts to enthusiasm. That may by some be considered a sufficient merit; but others will note that he is lacking in a sense of reality and will wish that he had abated somewhat his fanatic passion against those who have different notions of what is either wise or possible in this very complicated and tangled web of individual and national relationships." Jacob Zeitlin

+ N Y Tribune p1 D 13 '25 1100w

"Humaneness and kindness in every page, ensures for the book a permanent place in the newer history of the Jewish people." Maurice Samuel

+ N Y World p7m N 29 '25 750w

"Conscientious Jews will be the first mildly to object to this idealization of the Jew. They could base the Jew's claims not on any fancied superiority but on the Jew's ineluctable humanity. The Jewish people does not wish to be regarded as the one saint in a company of sinners." Joel Blau

+ Sat R of Lit 2:462 Ja 2 '26 1100w

LEWISOHN, SAM ADOLPH, and others. Can business prevent unemployment? 226p $2 Knopf

331.137 Unemployment. Insurance, employment 25-17126

"The volume is the result of collaboration between two business men and two professors of economics [Sam Adolph Lewisohn, Ernest G. Draper, John R. Commons, and Don D. Lescohier]. It summarizes the achievements of the newer strategy as they are illustrated by the experiences of a few selected establishments, and lists the names of more than one hundred concerns 'which have worked successfully along stabilizing lines.' Separate chapters are given to unemployment insurance and to public policies for the relief of unemployment."—Nation

"It is clear, convincing, thrilling, to read of this experience in this convenient form. It is obviously address to business men, the ones who need it most." J: B. Andrews

+ Int Bk R p737 O '25 1600w

Reviewed by P. F. Brissenden
Nation 121:763 D 30 '25 370w

"Here is a book which is at once scholarly and brief, short but not trifling, condensed nor yet too solid for easy assimilation." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p6 S 27 '25 950w

"Their argument should interest all employers of labor in so far as it shows that by preventing unemployment the profits of any business may be increased. The appeal of the writers, in fact, is not to any sentimental consideration for the employee but rather to the intelligent self-interest of the employer. What especially recommends the book is the fact that it explains the methods that have been fully tried out in business practice."

+ R of Rs 73:112 Ja '26 130w

"It is by and large one of the most succinct, lucid, suggestive and readable books on the subject that has come from the American press." R. W. B.

+ Survey 55:378 D 15 '25 1150w

LEWITT, ERNEST HENRY. Rigid airship; a treatise on the design and performance. (Specialists' ser.) 283p il $8.50 (30s) Pitman

629.154 Airships 25-10565

"This book, which is the first complete work on this subject to be published, is written on the results of experience gained by the author whilst engaged on the design of rigid airships at the Bedford works of Messrs. Short Bros., Ltd., and at the Air Ministry. It is intended for the use of designers and aeronautical students; and it is assumed that the reader has a knowledge of engineering principles up to the standard of a university degree. The book deals with structural design and performance only; no attempt has been made to deal with engines and machinery. . . . The mathematics have been kept as simple as possible."—Preface

LEWITT, ERNEST HENRY—Continued

"One is moved to enthusiasm by the neatness of the book. It is as carefully put together as an airship's frame, the workmanlike job of a thorough engineer. Illustrations, tables, diagrams and index all are clear and serviceable." E. W. Chapin

+ Lit R p12 N 21 '25 250w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:22 Ap '25

LIDDELL HART, BASIL HENRY. Paris; or, The future of war. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 86p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

355 War. Military art and science 25-19548

Having laid down as a premise that the moral objective of war is to subdue the enemy's will to resist, the book discusses the respective merits of the different means by which this purpose may be attained, and especially the value of air-craft as a weapon.

Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '25 250w

Reviewed by T. S. Knowlson

Lit R p2 N 14 '25 150w

"His limits of space—ninety-two small pages—oblige him to make sweeping assumptions, which are at least disputable, as to the power of the new weapons, and his rare appeals to history are equally controversial. His book is written in the rather truculent style of controversy which many people find convincing; but we could wish that, in dealing with so large a subject in so few pages, he had saved some space on epithets for the amplification of his argument."

— + Nation and Ath 37:768 S 26 '25 320w

"A thoughtful essay on the future or war." I. B. H.

+ Nature 116:670 N 7 '25 160w

N Y Tribune p10 D 20 '25 200w

"It is a book which might well have been written by a brilliant civilian free from the encumbrance of technical military knowledge and making war with great ferocity with an army of words on a battle area of paper."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p658 O 8 '25 220w

"It is a piece of keen reasoning."

+ World Tomorrow 8:354 N '25 150w

LIGGETT, HUNTER. Commanding an American army; recollections of the World war. 208p il $2 Houghton 940.41 European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns.

European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 25-9303

Recollections of the campaigns of the Marne, Saint-Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne by the commander of the First American army corps. His account of military operations is accompanied by maps showing the lines at the beginning and end of the campaigns, and the extent of terrain over which the battles were fought.

"It should be stated emphatically that this is a soldierly book—soldierly in the best and highest sense of the word, in that it gives a full report of the actual situations and events in the clearest and most concise terms. This is a great contrast to the interminable waste of words in the usual 'war book', and the result is a work that is readable and enjoyable. General Liggett has done a good service in giving so important a narrative in such attractive form." T. G. Frothingham

+ Am Hist R 31:182 O '25 550w

Booklist 22:26 O '25

"These 'recollections' are what one expects of the 'military' mind. They are such stuff as might have been formed by joining nightly intelligence summary reports. They are for the most part merely a record of troop dispositions. Very little personality creeps into them. To one not interested in and somewhat informed on the tactical problems of the war the book is impassable. As a military document the book is distinctly useful to historians." D. R.

Boston Transcript p3 Je 13 '25 550w

"A remarkably simple, straightforward account of the manner in which the first American Army was commanded during the World War. The story of the offensives of 1918 is condensed almost into textbook form. There is no fine writing and no heroics. Military writers, from Julius Caesar on, have preferred clear conciseness to the purple patches of the war correspondent."

+ Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 130w

"General Liggett's recollections are the first commentary on the greater Gallic war by any of the higher American commanders who took part in it. But in this case we do not find 'his wit set down to make his valor live.' There are few volumes of recollections in which the first personal pronoun is used so sparingly. The author says next to nothing about himself or his own opinions; and his general viewpoint is so detached that the average reader might finish the book with the impression that General Liggett himself played but a small part in the great affairs he narrates so placidly and briefly." T. H. Thomas

+ Lit R p2 J1 25 '25 460w

"Except John J. Pershing, no American officer was so well qualified to write a book upon the amazing campaign in France as Hunter Liggett." H; E. Armstrong

+ N Y Times p6 My 24 '25 1600w

"So far there has been nothing published relating to American participation in the war of higher authority than this modest contribution from General Liggett."

+ R of Rs 71:671 Je '25 220w

"From the standpoint of the general reader it would have been more interesting if it had been fuller and less impersonal, if the author had offered more of the very illuminating comments and opinions he occasionally allows himself. But in another sense this reticence is decidedly creditable to the author; and it is no small satisfaction that the first book forthcoming from any of the leading American Commanders in the war should be so sound a military narrative; written from so broad a viewpoint and marked by so fine a tone." T. H. Thomas

+ Sat R of Lit 2:176 O 3 '25 580w

"Gen Liggett writes with impersonal compactness and formal, dry succinctness. His style resembles that of another soldier who conducted an expedition into France and wrote a book about it—Caius Julius Caesar."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 5 '25 650w

LINCOLN, JOSEPH CROSBY. Queer Juison. 362p $2 Appleton

25-19433

Carey Judson was the least practical and the most likable of men. When his banking firm collapsed thru the dishonesty of his partner, Carey took it upon himself to pay off, a little at a time, as much of the debt as he could. His brother George made him bookkeeper of his own prosperous firm, and gave him a place in his home. It was hard for a man as sensitive and proud as Carey to accept all that George did for him, and he winced at his sister-in-law's grudging concessions. But it was harder still to feel that thru him Emily Sayles and her mother were reduced to penury. Carey's quixotic idea of the right thing to do brought him trouble enough, until Emily took a hand and put an end to misunderstandings.

Booklist 22:118 D '25

"We who know Cape Cod know also that Mr. Lincoln writes out of first-hand knowledge. He has lived in its sandy shores and studied its life; in fact, he was born in its very heart, and the very simplicity he puts into it is the outgrowth of the simplicity he has found there." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 10 '25 1200w

"It is always refreshing to find an author who believes, as Mr. Lincoln does, in the essential goodness of human nature; who can marshal a whole bookful of well-assorted characters, poke kindly fun at their faults, put them through an engrossing drama of action, and bring them out in a way that leaves the reader unashamed of belonging to the human race." E. L. Shuman

+ Int Bk R p130 Ja '26 380w

"For those who have come to believe in Joseph Lincoln, 'Queer Judson' will be no disappointment. His mellow understanding and his humor are writ large on every page." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 N 14 '25 300w

"Here is everything that makes a Lincoln story enjoyable—dryly humorous Cape Cod talk, quaint characters, the fresh breeziness of the New England shore life. There is also a sound human-nature quality in the main situation."

+ Outlook 141:357 N 4 '25 120w

"It is wholesome, innocent, obvious entertainment, but Mr. Lincoln has a faculty for holding the attention, once he is given a hearing, even of readers who profess to scorn the type of fiction he offers."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:384 D 5 '25 200w

"A story that is refreshing in its assertion of a true ideal of conduct and is unfailingly entertaining."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p814 N 26 '25 180w

LINCOLN, NATALIE SUMNER. Missing initial. 290p $1.75 Appleton

25-9515

"Norma Page is awakened from slumber by a cry which makes her witness of a murder taking place across the court from the apartment she is occupying. Only the hand and dagger of the assailant, besides the body of the victim, are visible. Swiftly following upon this promising beginning, the story is invaded by a throng of characters who might have done the vile deed. . . . When all of them get going, the ensuing tumult rises to a frenzy which sometimes puts us at a loss to follow who is which and how. Nevertheless, the 'kick' is unflinching throughout, and that is the main requirement."—Sat R of Lit

"Mrs. Lincoln, as usual, develops her story skillfully. And when its mystery is at last solved, the surprise within the surprise is perhaps the greatest surprise of all." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 620w

"Mrs. Lincoln develops her story with the dexterity born of long practice, and she offers us the latest in 1925 thrills. There isn't a dull page in the book." H. A. J.

+ Lit R p9 Je 20 '25 80w

Reviewed by Ruth Von Phul

N Y Tribune p12 Ji 26 '25 100w

"You will find every one acting as he shouldn't, a young girl helping the police along, and a sustinment of interest kept at infra-red heat." Donald Douglas

+ N Y World p10s My 31 '25 50w

"The present murder yarn is an exciting, cleverly constructed specimen whose success was limited, for us, by the excessive quantity of dust which the author threw constantly in our eyes."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:899 Ji 11 '25 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p621 S 24 '25 120w

LINDSEY, BENJAMIN BARR, and EVANS, WAINWRIGHT. Revolt of modern youth. 364p $3 Boni & Liveright

136.76 Juvenile delinquency. Sexual ethics 25-23199

Drawing upon his long experience with delinquent youth for illustrative cases in point, Judge Lindsey deplores the prevailing attitude toward sex delinquency in the young, many of whom undoubtedly err in ignorance, and calls to account the careless, unsympathetic parent. From the growing body of sentiment among the youth of today against the rigid conventions of the past, the Judge provisions a reconstruction of the marriage code that may tend to correct some of the social evils of the present.

"A few of the anecdotes in this volume are worth reading. There is a great deal of repetition, much deliberate and unpleasant description of sins, sorrow and human suffering, and some common sense talk about birth control. It could all have been put down in two thousand words in a pamphlet."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 9 '25 300w

"Against its background, the upper bourgeoisie, which is morally so much more stupefying than the very slum, the Revolt of Modern Youth is presented in a book which is both searching and sensational."

+ Dial 80:71 Ja '26 70w

"His words are not steeped in honey. He is bitter, with the bitterness of truth. He is revolutionary. He hates 'smugness' and says so. He puts a finger on the trouble, and lays it bare to scrutiny. Parents might attempt to read the book, but few would ever finish it. They would call the judge either crazy or a liar and toss the book aside. It wouldn't hurt them to read it; in fact, it might do much good. But it must be remembered that it is truth without any whitewash or varnish." W: C. Kerr

Lit R p11 N 28 '25 220w

Outlook 141:642 D 23 '25 150w

"If the reader can forgive the ineptitude with which Mr. Evans has performed his part of the work and can succeed in penetrating to the Judge behind Mr. Evans, he will find the book full of information and stimulating thought. . . . Until our laws cease to be the mere codification of social prejudice, this book will have its place."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:484 Ja 9 '26 250w

LINDSEY, THERESE (KAYSER) (MRS S. A. LINDSEY). Blue northern; Texas poems. 54p $1.50 Harold Vinal

811

25-15783

Poems of Texas, in part, but particularly poems of nature, rhymed and unrhymed. They are grouped under three headings: The old Spanish trail; Portraits; Earth and her songs.

"Strong are they also with the strength of an unerring insight. And lovely as well, with a delicacy of line and of color far more compelling than the ungraded tints in vogue in these 'cubist' days."

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 10 '25 380w

"A painstaking volume of the usual verse. Amiable 'realism,' for the most part like Maud 'without savor or salt.'" Eileen Hall

+ N Y Tribune p12 O 18 '25 250w

LINEBARGER, PAUL MYRON WENTWORTH (PAUL MYRON, pseud.). Sun Yat Sen and the Chinese republic. 371p il $4 Century

B or 92 China—History. China—Politics and government. Sun Yat Sen 25-4930

Long residence in China and active support of Sun Yat Sen gained for the writer the confidence of the Chinese liberator who has himself supplied much of the material for the biography. It is not a connected life story but is told in a series of episodes—the childhood of the little Chinese boy, American influence during two sojourns at Honolulu followed by English influence at Queen's college, Hong Kong, work for the revolution and methods used by the founder of the Chinese republic, his presidency, and something of the reformer's life at Shanghai. Judge Linebarger calls himself a "partisan of Sun Yat Sen," but he shows good cause for his partisanship.

Booklist 21:300 My '25

LINEBARGER, P. M. W.—Continued

"The inspiring life story of modern China's late liberator is graphically and authoritatively told."

+ Booklist 61:357 My '25 160w

"Judge Linebarger's book, inclined perhaps to draw a supernatural halo around his subject, is a chronicle that is not only valuable as a record but makes interesting reading as well."

F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 4 '25 470w

Cleveland p99 S* '25

"It is so undermined and overlaid and shot through with the author's adulation that it is hard to read and harder to accept." H: K. Norton

— Int Bk R p514 Jl '25 120w

"The fact that Sun is dead does not lessen in the least the value of Judge Linebarger's biography. Rather it gives the book a unique value, for much of the material was obtained from Sun himself. And until we have available Sun's memoirs, as we probably will have some day, the present book must stand almost alone as an authoritative source." J: J. McLaughlin

+ Lit R p12 Mr 28 '25 330w

"He has gathered some new material on Dr. Sun's youth and has then drawn largely upon his own imagination. The resulting volume is a gesture of devotion to the author's hero, but it can make no claim to consideration either as critical biography or as history."

— Nation 120:722 Je 24 '25 120w

"The work is not expertly done. It is often too florid in style, the author too frequently imagines what Sun Yat-sen probably thought and felt and what motives moved him; and there are many wasted pages wherein the author discourses at length upon subjects already sufficiently plain. But he does make Sun Yat-sen a vital, interesting individual, very much alive and vigorous, and he does succeed in making colorful and understandable the life of the Chinese village out of which grew the founder of the Chinese Republic."

— N Y Times p26 Mr 22 '25 850w

"These gushing pages are done in the best 1905, sob-sister manner. Which is a pity." Nathaniel Peffer

— N Y Tribune p8 Ap 12 '25 350w

"Great indeed would be our gratitude to Judge Linebarger did this book fulfill the magnificent promises of the cover blurb. But the book does not fulfill those promises; it is, in fact, a woeful disappointment."

— Outlook 140:265 Je 17 '25 450w

R of Rs 71:334 Mr '25 180w

"Linebarger seems to have been laboring under the conviction that somehow a Chinese should be treated not as one would treat the story of any great man, but with a bit of apology for his being Chinese. Sun Yat Sen is worthy of a virile biography. Perhaps, now that the great reformer is gone, Judge Linebarger will feel less restrained, and, if he has had such exceptional opportunities of knowing his hero, he may give us a more tangible, more simplified and therefore more virile account of that very worthy life." Sidney Greenbie

— Sat R of Lit 1:668 Ap 11 '25 620w

LIPPMANN, WALTER. Phantom public. 205p $2 Harcourt

323 Public opinion. Political science 25-22062

In this book Mr Lippmann continues his inquiry into the nature of public opinion. He maintains that the public is a mere phantom or abstraction—a convenient catchword of democracy. The work of the world goes on without much help from public opinion. It is only mustered out in a crisis. Normally things are settled by a "kind of professional public consisting of more or less eminent persons. Most issues are never carried beyond this ruling group; the lay publics catch only echoes of the debate." It is Mr Lippmann's belief that life is enhanced by the private work of individuals rather than by conscious public opinion and the action of masses.

Booklist 22:144 Ja '26

Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 350w

Reviewed by Read Bain

Hist Outlook 16:402 D '25 800w

"The book is clear, extraordinarily so considering the fundamental and controverted issues it raises. . . . Mr. Lippmann makes effective and penetrating use of the pluralistic tendencies of contemporary thought, including the theory that intelligence operates not of its own momentum but to adjust conflicts and resolve specific difficulties. This philosophical background gives his book a reach and force which distinguish it from almost all other contemporary writing in the field of affairs, and of which this review fails to take adequate account." J: Dewey

+ New Repub 45:52 D 2 '25 2600w

"Mr. Lippmann, Editor-in-chief of the New York World, has long been favourably known in England as an acute and stimulating writer on the theory and practice of politics. We are, however, we must confess, slightly disappointed by the book now before us."

— New Statesman 26:suppli N 14 '25 1050w

"There is no reason why Mr. Lippmann should not have spoken out as boldly as he has done. But what our author might have also done is not to overstate his case. It was not necessary, in order to arrive at the simple rules of public conduct which he has laid down, to start out with the sweeping indictment he has drawn up against the Public as a thing in itself. It is on the distinction between the immediate issue and the basic issue, the specific act of government and the ultimate sovereignty, that Mr. Lippmann seems to me to have fallen into confusion." Simeon Strunsky

— N Y Times p1 O 25 '25 2650w

"The book not only informs and illuminates but it is one of those rare books which startle one into a realization of how stupendous is the task before us as a people if we are to carry to a successful conclusion the work initiated in 1789." W: E. Borah

+ N Y World p6m N 8 '25 480w

Reviewed by W. Y. Elliott

Sat R of Lit 2:406 D 12 '25 1100w

"To say that he has made a significant contribution to an intelligent understanding of the processes of government would be faint praise. 'The Phantom Public' like 'Public Opinion,' will become one of the modern classics of American political thought. And it is a book that will be read and reread for pure delight in its rare literary quality." P. B. + Springfield Republican p7a N 15 '25 2000w

"For Mr. Lippmann, ultimate control must be political: not even the educator can furnish the 'patterns of mind' which will bring at least a shadowy unity into this general pluralism. The political expert is still, as in his Public Opinion, to be the hope of the race. Well, every man to his own taste. But the problem of education can not really be so easily disposed of. None the less, this book, read with critical caution, will prove extremely provoking and constructive to those casual minds that have assumed that democracy has solved all its important problems."

+ Survey 55:256 N 15 '25 250w

LISCOMB, HARRY F. Prince of Washington square. 180p $1 Stokes

25-6703

Jack, the newsboy hero is thus described by the author: "The Prince of Washington Square was a handsome, manly and superbly muscled youth of fifteen, with a buoyant disposition toward his compatriots. His ebony hair had been combed and parted flawlessly in the centre." Jack's adventures are told in a mixture of slang and highbrow but perverted English. The author is said to be a boy of nineteen.

"Here is an excellent volume for reading aloud of an evening. Reading it on a train is dangerous, for fellow passengers are convinced that loud and uncontrolled laughter is a sign of actual, or at least incipient, lunacy." J. F. + Bookm 61:221 Ap '25 230w

"To us 'The Prince of Washington Square' seems only a melancholy attempt at being funny. The marvelous adventures of the Prince himself are funnier to us than the strange use of words which look as though the dictionary had been upset on the page and the longest words put into the sentences, regardless of meaning. They give an impression of too deliberate burlesque."

— Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 450w

"Mirthless and nasty little book."

— N Y Times p8 Mr 15 '25 720w

"He is the Boy Scout who would be Balzac, with the help of what he has seen in the movies. If he has failed he has failed deliciously. Considered as a whole, Harry Liscomb's contribution to the world's knowledge of what goes on inside a boy's mind is one that repays perusal. Perhaps it is quite as significant as he meant it to be—but not in the same sense." Lawton Mackall

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 15 '25 420w

"Anybody who misses this ought to be made to stay after school." Frank Sullivan

+ N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 700w

"As an isolated piece of writing the book is not worth a syllable of discussion. But the principle involved in the fact that it is a book and not a manuscript in the waste-basket where it belongs elicits vigorous censure."

— Sat R of Lit 1:780 My 23 '25 400w

LOBINGIER, JOHN LESLIE. Projects in world-friendship. (Univ. of Chicago publications in religious education. Principles and methods of religious education) 177p il $1.75 Univ. of Chicago press

268 Religious education. Internationalism 25-9231

In the belief that a knowledge of the customs and culture of other races is essential to helping most effectively such causes as Christian missions and world peace, Mr Lobingier shows how the church school can work toward this end. A record of various projects carried on under his leadership, by pupils of different ages, is included.

"The book is a good illustration of the vital use of the project method."

+ J Religion 5:446 Jl '25 70w

"Excellent suggestion material for use in church schools."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:227 O '25

"Mr. Lobingier has here a real, a going concern. It may be too modest to amount to much, but he has really done it. Perhaps he will double his pace next year, be more audacious, more effective." S. N. Cleghorn

+ World Tomorrow 8:314 O '25 580w

LOCHNER, LOUIS PAUL. Henry Ford—America's Don Quixote; with a preface by Maxim Gorki. 240p il $3 International pub.

940.312 Ford, Henry. European war, 1914-1918—Peace [25-7922]

The book is concerned with one episode in Henry Ford's life, his Peace ship pilgrimage to Europe in 1915. Written by the secretary of the expedition, the book gives a detailed account of the organization of the peace mission, its personnel, the campaign of ridicule to which it was subjected, its adventures in Europe and the doings of the Neutral conference for continuous mediation after the peace expedition proper had ended

Reviewed by Elmer Davis

N Y Times p3 O 4 '25 2000w

"Mr. Lochner's story is readable, interesting and, we believe, sincerely told. He states his opinions fearlessly and seeks no shelter for the indictments he chooses to make."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:279 N 7 '25 380w

"The reader, and especially one who shared in or sympathetically remembers the cutting ridicule heaped upon Ford and his expedition during the summer of 1915, may not agree with Mr Lochner in his defense of the attempt to get 'the boys out of the trenches by Christmas.' But it will do no one harm to read the other and inside story of the ill-fated attempt."

Springfd Republican p6 Je 8 '25 520w

LOCKE, ALAIN LE ROY, ed. New Negro; an interpretation. 446p il $5 A. & C. Boni

326 Negroes. Negro literature 25-25228

"This compilation grew out of the Harlem number of the Survey-Graphic issued last Spring, with Alain Locke as editor. Much of that material has been incorporated here, with a deal of additional. Here Harlem, home of the new negro, speaks." (N Y Times) "Herein is included, in fact, work by every young American Negro who has achieved distinction or fame in the literary world—Rudolph Fisher, Walter White, Jessie Fauset, Eric Walrond, Claude McKay, Countee Cullen, Langston Hughes, Jean Toomer and many others are represented. There are also contributions from the pens of a few of the older men, James Weldon Johnson, W. E. B. Du Bois and William Stanley Braithwaite." (N Y Tribune)

"This book marks an epoch in the hectic career of the American Negro. It illuminates an intellectual revolution which owes its origin and expression to a multiplying series of social changes during the past decade. In undermining and annihilating the Negro myth it functions as a clarifying and signal contribution to contemporary thought." V. F. Calverton

Nation 121:761 D 30 '25 920w

"'The New Negro' is a volume that has interest for readers of varied types. No matter how well-informed the reader, he will find here facts that he has not known about the progress of the negro in America." Dorothy Scarborough

N Y Times p5 D 20 '25 1500w

"This is a remarkable book. I am not certain but, so far as its effect on the general reader is concerned, it will prove to be the most remarkable book that has yet appeared on the Negro. Alain Locke, the editor, has done a superb job." Carl Van Vechten

N Y Tribune p5 D 20 '25 3000w

Reviewed by Janet Ramsay

N Y World p6m Ja 10 '26 600w

LOCKE, WILLIAM JOHN. Great Pandolfo. 366p $2 Dodd

25-17123

The hero, Sir Victor Pandolfo, is an inventor, a genius of incredible energy and resource, a great egoist. When he meets the beautiful young widow, Paula Field, he immediately lays siege to her heart in whirlwind fashion. He names his newly discovered metal for her. He showers gifts upon her. He risks his life on a slippery precipice to bring her a rare alpine flower. But Paula, while conscious of his magnetism which equally attracts and repels her, draws back from her too domineering and confident lover, fearing the submergence of her personality in his. The final outcome is inevitable, but it is not until she feels his need of her, till troubles have gathered about him and he seems for the moment a beaten man, that the proud Paula relents.

Booklist 22:73 N '25

"Vivacious and florid is the style in which Mr. Locke tells this story, the same style with which he has won the favor of multitudes of novel readers. Sometimes it seems as if he insisted on having two words do the work of one,

LOCKE, WILLIAM J.—Continued
or as if he was intent on finding a five-syllable word where a two or three-syllable word would suffice. Moreover, the story approaches its inevitable ending laggingly. . . . If we have counted the list of his books of fiction correctly, 'The Great Pandolfo' is his twenty-eighth, and if we pass their personages before us we shall find a unique procession of men and women. They are distinctively Lockian, and they always wear the hallmark of their creator. But they are always entertaining, always the people of a world that is not quite our own, that is born of the novelist's fancy." E. F. Edgett
— + Boston Transcript p3 S 5 '25 1400w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"From the author of 'The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne,' 'The Beloved Vagabond,' and 'The Glory of Clementina,' this new novel is bound to be a disappointment. Perhaps 'The Great Pandolfo' is a reaction, but he is rather a poor one. His crude, overconfident personality dominates the story, and one understands why the heroine is repelled by him without understanding why she is supposed to find any charm in him."

— Ind 115:451 O 17 '25 120w

"An intense and virile story, told with Mr. Locke's usual charm." M. A. E. White
+ Int Bk R p741 O '25 400w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p2 S 5 '25 380w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 26:177 N 21 '25 280w

"We get here melodrama, with a touch of bedlam, but it is all picturesque and worldly wise and beautifully written. In a word, it is William J. Locke, and that is saying much." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p9 N 1 '25 380w

"In point of fact, The Great Pandolfo is in all conscience original enough: its intellectual quality is high and its subtlety of feeling adequate. The highly emotional tale is told with crispness and coolness, with restraint, with wit. Only it is a little hard to take its attitudes seriously." C. H. Gaines

+ — No Am 222:166 S '25 1000w

"Mr. Locke still excels in the happy art of discovering new and interesting people concerning whom, as soon as he introduces them to us, we quite naturally and simply want to know all that he can tell. Paula and the Great Pandolfo are worthy additions to the long list of such literary acquaintances for which already his readers have occasion to be grateful."

+ Outlook 141:320 O 28 '25 200w

"Mr. Locke's pleasure in his people, his ingenuity, his pleasant manner carry off much that might be expected to prove fatal. Frankly, we have been entertained even by those episodes in the career of the inspired and boastful Pandolfo which most excited our incredulity."

+ Sat R 140:449 O 17 '25 220w

"It will remake no life, nor even linger long in any memory, but it is good enough to be read with steady absorption by anyone at all who picks it up."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:162 S 26 '25 380w

Spec 135:890 N 14 '25 50w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 1 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p616 S 24 '25 380w

LOCKHART, JOHN GILBERT. Mysteries of the sea; a book of strange tales. 265p il $3 Stokes [8s 6d Allan]

910.4 Voyages and travels. Shipwrecks
25-14958

There is some element of mystery in every one of the dozen episodes or disasters at sea that Mr Lockhart describes. The stories, which are taken from both history and myth, include an account of the pre-Columbian discoveries of America, the strange and romantic finding of Madeira, the myth of the Flying Dutchman, the voyage of La Pérouse to the Southern seas, the mystery of the brig "Mary Celeste" found sailing the mid-Atlantic without a single human being on board, the sinking of H.M.S. "Victoria" and the last voyage of Lord Kitchener. For each one of these sea mysteries Mr Lockhart examines the various explanations already offered and gives his own solution.

Booklist 22:156 Ja '26

"The 'Lost Ships of La Perouse' spell enchantment, as their name implies. So do the two chapters on the sea monster and on the great sea-serpent, which appeared off the west coast of Scotland in 1908, and chased ashore a party in a small boat. The book also contains delightful old maps and etchings. Sea lovers will find thrills herein."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 31 '25 350w

"The facts are set down simply and with no attempt to sensationalize the dramatic situations, a bit of good judgment that makes the telling really more effective. The earlier pieces, in particular, are highly interesting in these days of prosaic seamanship." J. Ferris

+ Lit R p12 D 12 '25 150w

"Mr. Lockhart's style is easy and well suited to his material; it nowhere sinks into British journalese, and the author shows a scholar's care in the assembling and sifting of his facts. Sailor-minded folk will like these books particularly, for the author never neglects to tell exactly what a sailor wants to know, to wit: the wind, the weather, the ship's course and other vital matters." H. Beston

+ N Y Tribune p9 D 27 '25 500w

"This book has a taking title, which is not falsified by the quality of its contents. Mr. Lockhart writes well, and has the art of telling a story compactly yet vividly. His dozen episodes are well selected from the field of history and myth."

+ Sat R 139:13 Ja 3 '25 100w

"This book is certainly a fascinating one."

+ Spec 134:292 F 21 '25 350w

"This is a book that every English man, woman, and child ought to read."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p864 D 18 '24 720w

LOCKHART, JOHN GILBERT. Peril of the sea. 294p il $3 Stokes [8s 6d Allan]

910.4 Shipwrecks [25-1664]

A book of shipwrecks and escapes, from the sinking of the "White Ship" in 1120, with the son of King Henry I of England on board, to the loss of the Titanic in 1912. Other disasters described are Sir Humphrey Gilbert's last voyage, in 1583, the casting away of the "Tobie," the wreck of the "Medusa" in 1816 and of the "Birkenhead" in 1852.

Booklist 22:156 Ja '26

"Mr. Lockhart's volume is a mere piece of book-making. But the fascination of its theme cannot be denied, and some of its earlier chapters are especially interesting. When he comes to such recent disasters as that of the 'Titanic,' he has nothing new to tell us, and his style resembles that of a sentimental newspaper reporter. The best part of his book, indeed, is that which he has compiled, and not written."

+ — Nation and Ath 36:304 N 22 '24 500w

Reviewed by H. Beston

N Y Tribune p9 D 27 '25 100w

"The selection is admirable and well worth adding to any collection of books of the sea."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:324 N 21 '25 100w

"To a certain extent this is journeyman work, and has been done before; but it is useful to have these accounts set out in a reliable, but at the same time readable, form."

+ — Spec 134:292 F 21 '25 100w

"[The stories] are well chosen and well told."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p767 N 20 '24 550w

LODGE, HENRY CABOT. Senate and the League of nations. 424p $4 Scribner

341.1 United States—Foreign relations.
United States. Congress. Senate. League of nations
25-22067

The leader of the Senate fight against the League of nations here gives his view of the controversy and seeks to justify the part he took in it. Mr Lodge goes back to the beginning of the Wilson administration to build up the fabric on which he based his bitter opposition to the President and his estimate of Wilson's character. Many documents in the case are supplied.

"A sustained and bitter attack upon the Wilson administration from 1913 until the end of the executive's second term in office. It was expected that the author's concentrated hostility would be given free rein here, but in spite of it his book has considerable historic value."

Bookm 62:614 Ja '26 180w

"The importance of Senator Lodge's posthumous contribution to this subject cannot be denied." J. E. Chamberlin

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 25 '25 320

"Senator Lodge's bulky and documentary volume is an elaborate attempt to prove that Woodrow Wilson was a failure and that the League of Nations has amounted to nothing. It is the autobiography of that portion of the author's life by which history will certainly judge him." Hamilton Holt

— Int Bk R p44 D '25 800w

Reviewed by C. M. Morrison

Lit R p8 D 12 '25 1150w

"This book might better have been called 'Henry Cabot Lodge on Woodrow Wilson.' Almost half of the text of it is given to happenings which occurred before the Treaty of Versailles came to the Senate. The one thread of new information and of new interest that runs through the book is the historic development of Mr. Lodge's attitude toward Mr. Wilson's personality and behavior." W. Hard

Nation and Ath 121:517 N 4 '25 1450w

"Senator Lodge's unveracity is quite astonishing. His ignorance may be excused on the ground that many things now known were not accessible to him. But unveracity added to ignorance produces an amazing narrative. . . . What he did not know is vastly more impressive than what he did know." C. H. Grattan

— New Repub 45:117 D 16 '25 450w

"It is a destructive book, as destructive as Hamlet's poisoned rapier. It wounds Mr. Lodge even more deeply than it wounds Laertes. Yet as a document it is of considerable value and of intense interest. It contains much that is new about the conferences, the manoeuvres, the play of personalities and politics in this country, preceding and following the Versailles conference." Silas Bent

— + N Y Times p1 N 1 '25 2550w

"The book is much more than an account of the Senate's dealings with the League of Nations. It is that and it is probably the most authoritative account thereof that we may ever expect to have. But it is also an expert analysis of all the important diplomacy of the Wilson Administration." W. F. Johnson

+ No Am 222:376 D '25 1450w

"No historian of the World War and its aftermath will find that he can afford to pass it by. It is more than a notable public document of the times; it is a portraiture of two men whose struggle with each other profoundly affected, if it did not determine, the course of the United States at one of its critical periods. In the first place, it is a portrait of Lodge himself. As no other book that has appeared, or is likely to appear, it explains to the reader of imagination the animosity which Senator Lodge aroused in his political opponents, and particularly in Mr. Wilson and his more devoted followers."

Outlook 141:342 N 4 '25 950w

"Those who dissent from Senator Lodge's policies, quite as much as those who agree with them, will refer to his book for its statement of facts and especially to the documents printed in the appendix."

R of Rs 72:664 D '25 160w

Survey 55:384 D 15 '25 70w

LODGE, SIR OLIVER JOSEPH. Atoms and rays; an introduction to modern views on atomic structure & radiation. 208p il $3 Doran [21s Benn]

541.2 Atoms. Radiation 25-2685

An introductory treatise on the electrical theory of matter, the structure of the atom, spectral lines, etc. Some of the chapters are rather technical and require on the part of the reader acquaintance with the fundamental principles of mechanics and simple geometry.

"An excellent summary of the subject, presented in simple nontechnical form for the general reader."

+ Booklist 21:292 My '25

"Lucid and informative volume."

+ Bookm 61:360 My '25 120w

"In 'Atoms and Rays' he recounts, in lucid fashion, the extraordinary achievements in physics during the last quarter of a century. Here and there we encounter a stiff phrase, a reference to a cosine, which makes the layman shudder. But such instances are rare. On the whole, the book can be read by most lawyers and novelists and artists, not only with instruction, but with pleasure; for Sir Oliver Lodge is not only a master physicist, but a master storyteller." B: Harrow

+ — Int Bk R p469 Je '25 1400w

"Of all the books lately written to expound the New Physics to non-experts, 'Atoms and Rays' is one of the very few which are really worth buying. The reader with a taste for something more than 'Our Scientific Correspondent' provides, can sit down to think and to enjoy; the professor of some other branch of science can widen his horizon, and can learn at the same time a lesson in the art of first-class teaching; and the same lesson also cannot fail to impress itself upon even the specialist in mathematical physics who stands in no need of the actual instruction here presented."

Irvine Masson

+ J Phys Chem 29:492 Ap '25 1050w

Reviewed by G. L. Wendt

Nation 121:236 Ag 26 '25 400w

"He gives an admirable account of what is really known about the constitution of the atom, and he does as much as is humanly possible to make the theory of quanta intelligible to non-mathematicians." Bertrand Russell

+ Nation and Ath 35:780 S 27 '24 900w

New Statesman 23:624 S 6 '24 600w

Reviewed by Bertrand Russell

N Y Tribune p1 Ag 2 '25 1300w

"Sir Oliver Lodge's book contains two parts of distinct value. The first of these is the simple but necessarily algebraic treatment of the elementary portion of the Bohr theory of spectral lines. The second is the preface. The preface is at once the best plea for popular scientific exposition which the reviewer has met, and at the same time a justification, or rationalization, of a method of treatment which he has always found, as a reader, peculiarly irritating. He refers to the lack of continuity, which may be due in part to the fact that some of the chapters appeared as separate magazine articles." J: Mills

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:728 My 2 '25 450w

"His exposition is leisurely, almost chatty, and its peculiar merit is that the new ideas are, as far as possible, linked up with the old ones."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p496 Ag 14 '24 750w

LODGE, SIR OLIVER JOSEPH. Ether and reality; a series of discourses on the many functions of the ether of space. 179p $2 Doran [3s 6d Hodder & S.]

530.1 Ether (of space) 25-25754

In this small book addressed mainly to the layman Sir Oliver Lodge explains the functions and properties of the ether, and its bearing not only on matter but on life and mind.

Reviewed by G. W. de Tunzelman
Nation and Ath 37:sup348 Je 13 '25
1400w

"Everything that Sir Oliver Lodge writes bears so clear an imprint of his powerful and persuasive personality that a book bearing his name may be confidently anticipated to hold the reader's interest and stir his imagination. In the present little work such an expectation is not disappointed. In spite of the charm and simplicity with which the book is written, some difficulty may be experienced in understanding exactly what Sir Oliver wishes to lay down as regards the physical properties of the ether." E. N. da C. A.

+ — Nature 116:305 Ag 29 '25 650w

"He takes the existence of the ether for granted, and nowhere deals with those physicists who think the assumption unnecessary; but the book remains of value as an exposition of the properties we may attribute to the ether if we assume its existence."

+ — Spec 134:812 My 16 '25 60w

"We may believe on various grounds that existence after death is indeed a fact, but we protest that there is not evidence in the scientific sense which admits of test. And it is at best gratuitous of Sir Oliver to express his personal beliefs in such a way as to imply that they find the same acceptance as is accorded to the ideas in the other part of the book. With this exception, however, we may compliment him whole-heartedly on an exposition which makes this most difficult subject understandable by anyone who lacks previous scientific knowledge." W. F. K.

Spec 135:19 Jl 4 '25 1000w

"We agree with Sir Oliver that the phenomena of mind are not to be explained in terms of matter; but we cannot see that explanations in terms of the ether with which he presents us would be any less material."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p325 My 14 '25 950w

LODGE, SIR OLIVER JOSEPH. Talks about radio; with some pioneering history and some hints and calculations for radio amateurs. 267p $2.50 Doran [5s Cassell]

654.1 Radio communication 25-23732

Part I, entitled Radio in general, contains a résumé of the history of wireless experimentation and the development of the radio, and will be of interest to the general reader. Part II, Details that make for efficiency, and Part III, Calculations for amateur constructors, will make a more specific appeal to the radio fan.

"He would be hard to please who did not find something acceptable and worthy of thought in these interesting chapters. We have read the book with much pleasure." A. Russell

+ Nature 116:565 O 17 '25 1000w

N Y Times p8 D 6 '25 280w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p679 O 15 '25 70w

LOEB, HAROLD A. Doodab. 287p $2 Boni & Liveright

26-139

Doodab is a wistful, ineffectual, sensitive soul, who finds release from irksome reality in fantastic dreams of an imaginary world where he moves a superman. His life is futile, incomplete in all its relations. He fails in marriage, in business, and as a father to his live young daughter whom he discovers too late for the companionship that might have been theirs. This tardy recognition of one another comes when Luella falls in love with the man who is indirectly responsible for Doodab's dismissal from his position. As he lived, so Doodab died, in the vortex of a splendid dream.

"In 'Doodab' we have a story intensely and militantly at variance with all the older standards of novel-writing. Nevertheless, it carries an emotional thrill, a delicate satire, and abundance of pointed episodes and expressions furnishing food for thought, all reminding us of 'melodrama' in the highest sense of the word. Mechanically considered, the novel shows the results of inexperience." L. S. K.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 23 '25 1200w

Dial 79:516 D '25 60w

"On the whole, Mr. Loeb's book is one that invites the pigeonhole; it is a book sprung from the American novelist's sociological bias and negative response forced into an alien garb by one wishing to be 'modernistic.' Therefore it should be read." H. A. Potamkin

Lit R p4 S 12 '25 280w

Nation 121:738 D 23 '25 150w

"With all its faults, and they are many, there is this to be said for Mr. Loeb's novel—it has a happy ending."

+ — N Y Times p22 Ag 30 '25 520w

"There are many pages of uninspired writing, too many for a volume of this length. On the other hand, there are realistic passages written with a gusto, an excess of animal spirits, which make them something far better than realism. Writing imaginatively, with the sort of exact fancy shown in these Kapepulan descriptions, requires a different sort of talent. So does the creation of living characters. Both elements are present in this first novel." Malcolm Cowley

+ — N Y Tribune p8 N 22 '25 500w

N Y World p7m O 25 '25 100w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Outlook 141:126 S 23 '25 200w

"The author contrives to win our sympathy for Doodab, but only in the moment of unique, quixotic destruction. Up to that point, the careless, disjointed sentences, the carefully spoken epigrams, the periodic Rabelaisianisms, and the self-conscious mental ramblings which constitute the bulk of the volume are not sufficient to bring any person or scene to life."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:142 S 19 '25 100w

LOEB, JACQUES. Proteins and the theory of colloidal behavior. (International chemical ser.) 380p il $3.50 McGraw

541 Colloids 24-32121

"Represents the most successful attempt yet made to explain colloidal behavior quantitatively on the basis of classical physical chemistry. . . . Contains a huge mass of valuable experimental data, most of which are the result of Loeb's own work." Am Chem Soc J—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:600 D '25

LOFTING, HUGH JOHN. Doctor Dolittle's zoo. 338p il $2.50 Stokes

25-20167

Another volume about Dr Dolittle and his animal friends, beginning with the time when they returned to Puddleby riding in the shell of the giant sea snail. Dr Dolittle planned a new and larger zoo, run on modern improved lines, for the quartering of some of his many friends in the animal world. This was carried out with the cooperation of the animals themselves and proved a great success. There was a mystery too, in which Dr Dolittle became involved, but with the help of his animal acquaintances he escaped the clutches of the villain.

Booklist 22:169 Ja '26

Cleveland p103 N '25

"Seems to have far more to do with rats and mice than with the more definitely zoological animals. But there is much humor in the book, and that is all that is necessary." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p48 D '25 30w

"The fifth volume in a series that does not grow dull and never repeats itself."

+ Nation 121:603 N 25 '25 10w

"The book's quaint fancies, lively narrative and interesting story will make it quite as much a favorite with young readers as its predecessors have been. The author has as great a gift for drawing as he has for story telling, and his many illustrations are remarkable for their economy and expressiveness of line."

+ N Y Times p4 N 8 '25 300w

LONDON. UNIVERSITY. BOARD OF STUDIES IN HISTORY. Tudor studies; presented to Albert Frederick Pollard; ed. by R. W. Seton-Watson. 319p $5 (15s) Longmans

942.05 Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603 25-907

A collection of essays relating to the Tudor period, the work of twelve of the colleagues and pupils of Professor Pollard, presented to him in recognition of his services to the cause of historical study in the University of London. Contents: Wales under Henry VII, by C. A. J. Skeel; Cardinal Morton's register, by Claude Jenkins; The Abbot Trithemius, by R. W. Seton-Watson; The political conceptions of Luther, by J. W. Allen; Bodin and the genesis of the Doctrine of sovereignty, by F. J. C. Hearnshaw; William Thomas: a forgotten clerk of the Privy council, by E. R. Adair; The Lancastrian constitution, by T. F. T. Plucknett; The destruction of sanctuary, by I. D. Thornley; The political influence of the 'North parts' under the later Tudors, by R. R. Reid; Tudor reforms in the royal household, by A. P. Newton; The commons' privilege of free speech in parliament, by J. E. Neale; The transformation of London, by E. J. Davis.

"Testimony must be given to the sound scholarship and excellent writing of these essays. If Mr. Neale's theory of parliamentary freedom of speech is not in all points convincing, or if Miss Reid's explanation of political changes by a somewhat kaleidoscopic arrangement and rearrangement of personalities seems sometimes slightly fanciful or if Professor Newton in his interesting and suggestive description of reforms in the royal household makes no account of the progressive fall in the value of money during his period, or if Miss Skeel's Wales exercises its influence somewhat negatively, these are all either minor matters, or scholars' differences of opinion, or the results of insufficient contemporary testimony." E: P. Cheyney

+ — Am Hist R 30:805 J1 '25 900w

"A future Froude, if he should ever make his appearance, will find much to help him in all this careful and painstaking work."

+ New Statesman 24:602 F 28 '25 800w

"Readers of these miscellaneous studies will find in them not a little new information as well as suggestive points of view." A. L. Cross

+ Pol Sci Q 40:461 S '25 1050w

"These essays strike one as rather the preparation and kneading of material than artistic conclusions on history. They illustrate the methods of modern historical research; they bristle with references and they expose a vast amount of painstaking comparative work among dusty sources and authorities. The plain man interested in his country's history will perhaps not feel his imagination greatly warmed by their matter-of-fact and often meticulous pages. But to the scholar they should be valuable."

+ — Sat R 139:82 Ja 24 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p863 D 18 '24 1050w

LONG, HARRIET CATHERINE. County Library service. 206p il $1.75 A.L.A.

021.6 Libraries, County 25-10340

The county library system, now generally recognized as the solution of the library problem for country districts, is in operation today in about two hundred counties in the United States, forty-two of these counties being in the one state of California. The chief of the traveling library department of the Wisconsin free library commission here traces the history, development and operation of the system, discussing library administration, staff, book transportation, methods, records, etc. There are illustrations from photographs, a bibliography and an index.

Booklist 22:4 O '25

"This first comprehensive book on county library service in the United States gives a clear digest of existing county library organization. The text reads easily. The reader feels that county library service is desirable and within the not distant range of possibility."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:53 F '25

LOOMS, GEORGE. The Caraways. 311p $2 Doubleday

25-8366

From very humble beginnings John Caraway had risen to a position of business prominence in the community and was something of a social success, until his affair with Penny Carlyle. Gossip dealt unkindly with their story and John left town, urging his friend, Abner Poteet the minister, to move with him to Goldsboro where larger opportunities awaited them both. The second half of the book carries the story forward several years. Caraway had become the wealthiest and most influential man in town, tho his business methods were not always above reproach. At least his adopted son Milton took exception to them, and his attitude led to frequent clashes with his father. Their differences assumed dramatic intensity and led to a tragic outcome with Poteet's revelation concerning Milton's birth.

"George Looms writes well. 'The Caraways' is his best novel so far, and it is a good piece of work. The story is interesting, the characterization good." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:587 J1 '25 100w

"Mr. Looms has analyzed with rare understanding a peculiarly complicated problem, the drastic method of its acceptance, the unflattering manner of its solution. And he has added to its dramatic ending an element of surprise, somewhat unique in a day when 'endings' are too apt to be up in the air or anti-climax." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 23 '25 700w

"Mr. Looms does not pull down the stars, but he makes a worthy gesture in their direction."

N Y Times p9 Ap 12 '25 750w

N Y Tribune p14 My 17 '25 100w

N Y World p3m Ag 2 '25 200w

"Mr. Looms writes well. But he has not yet learned to grasp the three dimensions. His descriptive work is done gracefully and vividly. But his characters are a bit stiff, being painted rather than created."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:15 Ag 1 '25 160w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

LOOS, ANITA. "Gentlemen prefer blondes"; the illuminating diary of a professional lady. 217p il $1.75 Boni & Liveright

25-23371

The newspapers called the lady Lorelei, at the time her "gentleman friend Jennings became shot." The jury acquitted her. The gentleman friend who lives to figure in the diary is Mr. Eisman, the button king. He is educating the beautiful blonde by means of diamond bracelets and a trip to Europe, where an English nobleman is also permitted to contribute to her education to the extent of a

LOOS, ANITA—Continued

$7,500 tiara. The petite blonde has developed the acquisitive instinct and the instinct of self-protection to an equally perfect degree. Her naïve revelations make hilarious reading.

"Of course for many this is the season's funniest book. It is rarely and side-splittingly delightful; it is the kind of sly, sophisticated spontaneity that will make any man and most women roar with laughter not once but fifty times."

Boston Transcript p8 N 25 '25 400w

"Granting that Miss Loos is a good scenario writer—she is an excellent diarist. She possesses a sense of humor, droll at that. And Ralph Barton's 'intimate illustrations' are delightful." W: C. Kerr

+ Lit R p11 N 21 '25 120w

"Miss Loos's book is civilized, human, ironic and never crude in its effects." H. J. Mankiewicz

+ N Y Times p21 D 27 '25 550w

"It is a droll book and a merry one, and it is just because of her very facility in funmaking that one resents all the more Miss Loos's straining for misspelled words for comedy." Ruth Goodman

+ N Y Tribune p10 D 27 '25 700w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 27 '25 180w

LORD, LOUIS ELEAZER. Aristophanes; his plays and his influence. (Our debt to Greece and Rome) 183p $1.50 Marshall Jones

882.4 Aristophanes 25-12638

"Professor Lord's 'Aristophanes' gives a brief account of the origin of Greek comedy and of the Athens of Aristophanes and a description of the subject matter of the plays. All this takes less than half the book, the remainder following Aristophanes through Greece and Rome and on through Renaissance, German, French and English writers."—N Y Tribune

"Mr. Lord writes with a clarity born of true understanding."

+ Booklist 22:64 N '25

Boston Transcript p1 O 10 '25 230w

"Has much of interest to the student of sources and influences." A. S. Pease

+ N Y Tribune p12 S 27 '25 150w

"There is much material of interest historically in Mr. Lord's account and some that is suggestive in characterization and analysis. But the special quality of Aristophanes slips through the lines for anyone who is not thoroughly familiar with his texts. The book will, perhaps, not do much to stimulate the reading of the comedies, but it will help to refresh the memory of those who have read them."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:706 O '25 120w

LORING, ANDREW, pseud. See Lathrop, L. A.

LOVETT, ROBERT MORSS. Edith Wharton. (Modern American writers) 91p $1 McBride B or 92 Wharton, Mrs Edith Newbold (Jones) 25-9972

A sketch of Mrs Wharton's literary biography, which studies her novels in the order of their appearance, the development of her literary reputation and the method of her art.

Booklist 22:30 O '25

"He gives not only a fine study of Mrs. Wharton's writing but a picture en route of the woman as well—not, perhaps, in terms of personality but in a rarely interpretative way. Mr. Lovett should write oftener in this vein. His book is excellent reading as well as a clear text for students of this most revered of our women novelists." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:585 J1 '25 120w

"Mr. Lovett's essay is always readable, informed, temperate, and in parts piquant." J. E. J.

+ Cath World 122:137 O '25 350w

"Mr Lovett's knowledge of contemporary literature, as well as the historical prospective he has always so eminently at his command, fit him admirably for the present task. With the civility, explicitness, and lucidity of the most advanced and liberated university professor, he places Mrs Wharton in the niche in which one feels she is ultimately to remain."

+ Dial 79:517 D '25 80w

"Interesting if rather planless and not especially discerning little monograph." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p466 Je '25 220w

"It is evident that the author of this volume, while he appreciates Mrs. Wharton's great talent and believes that, from the point of view of pure art she deserves the place that has been accorded her, is more in sympathy with the newer movements in literature, imperfect as they yet are in expression." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p5 S 12 '25 220w

"Mrs. Wharton is difficult to discuss because her work is so uneven, yet Mr. Lovett never falters and ends on a note that is praise or blame as one happens to feel: 'she remains for us among the voices whispering the last enchantments of the Victorian age.'" C. H. Grattan

Nation 121:361 S 30 '25 420w

"It is one of the prime merits of the book that the author, while never doing less than justice to his subject, gives us no wild effervescence of literary enthusiasm, but proceeds by the sedate and thoughtful method of one conducting a scientific examination. . . One may follow Mr. Lovett with the confident assurance that he is attempting to deal with his subject sanely, honestly and without bias." S. A. Coblentz

+ N Y Times p13 Je 7 '25 900w

"Mrs. Wharton emerged as a brilliant short-story writer in 1899. Yet here is Mr. Lovett very respectfully, with coolly qualified admiration, examining, analyzing, summing up Mrs. Wharton's work and explaining in deferential and complimentary terms that her long reign is over; that, in fact, she belongs, when considered with reference to the main English current, in the last decade of the nineteenth century. And here is Mrs. Wharton quietly challenging that verdict by the production of another symmetrical, flawlessly finished little masterpiece, which reopens the case." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 My 17 '25 600w

Outlook 141:100 S 16 '25 150w

R of Rs 71:671 Je '25 120w

"The estimate is just, and his comparisons with her master, Henry James, and Thackeray are excellently made. He allows too little, however, for the charm and interest of her aristocrats."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:841 Je 20 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

LOW, ARCHIBALD MONTGOMERY. The future. 203p il $2 International pub. [5s Routledge]

901 Prophecies 26-1664

Professor Low's book is a forecast of life in the year 3000 and the possibilities it holds in the way of scientific and social development. He sees planet communication, broadcasting of heat and light, and vast progress in motoring, wireless, aviation and television. Men and women will be vastly improved mentally and physically, in dress and in sex relations. Warfare will not be abolished but will become less frequent because the frightful methods of the future will require longer preparation and a longer period of recovery. With the general advance of science will come many chemical and biological wonders. As for the human brain, the author believes that it can keep pace with this progress.

"Very interesting vision of the future in the light of scientific progress." I. B. H.
+ Nature 116:670 N 7 '25 120w

"The author has put his finger on a good many disabilities of the present age; and if he makes the reader think about the waste of energy in his lighting system or his crystal set he will have done something to bring about a new state of affairs, even if it does not exactly follow the lines laid down for it by Professor Low."

New Statesman 25:642 S 19 '25 400w

"The best part of the book is its exploration into the many possibilities of modern electrical discoveries, wireless, television, and so on; and there is a speculative chapter on interplanetary communication. He is too much inclined to colour his vision of the future with the hues of his own private sociological views; and, worse still, he is apt to drop into trivialities."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p523 Ag 6 '25 420w

LOW, BENJAMIN ROBBINS CURTIS. Darkening sea. 33p $1 Yale univ. press

811 25-5352

"Keats lives again in the volume called 'Darkening Sea' furnishing melody for the title poem and matter for 'The Golden Whip-poorwill,' while a medieval note sounds in 'The Minstrel Rides' and 'Spring Riding.'"—N Y Tribune

"Marked with a wistful dignity of utterance, Mr. Low's title poem is too long to quote, but it is poetry approaching a high order." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 22 '25 270w

"His lines are rich with sensuous imagery and brave with high spirit, battle and hard wind." G. H. Bussey

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ap 19 '25 150w

LOW, BENJAMIN ROBBINS CURTIS. Seth Low. 101p $2.50 Putnam

B or 92 Low, Seth 25-8687

A brief account of the life and notable public services of Columbia university's president, 1890-1901, and Greater New York's reform mayor, 1902-1903, written by his nephew.

"It is unfortunate that the brevity of the book has forced the author to compress into small space the activities of this leader in the reform of municipal government, giving only the barest facts concerning his dramatic fight for better government."

Am Pol Sci R 19:647 Ag '25 150w

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 11 '25 200w

Reviewed by W: McAndrew

Educ R 70:161 O '25 60w

"Seth Low was a figure of consequence in the history of New York City, to which he rendered valuable service, and this monograph concerning his busy life is well worth the reading of those interested in the story of the metropolis."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 26 '25 400w

"The author has set down the salient facts interestingly, and interpreted them fairly, although he has banked them in metaphor."

+ N Y Tribune p9 My 24 '25 100w

"The book is too slight and short to be dignified by the classification of biography, and yet its scant hundred very readable pages present an intimate picture of the man who was so active and personable a figure in the annals of Columbia university for many years, and a chief magistrate over Greater New York whose terms of office are gratefully remembered."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 S 3 '25 220w

LOWELL, AMY. John Keats. 2v 631:662p 11 $12.50 Houghton [42s J. Cape]

B or 92 Keats, John

25-4305

Long a student of Keats Miss Lowell has discovered much fresh material concerning the poet and she omits no detail which could add to the completeness of her picture of him. She follows the brief life of the poet almost literally from day to day, moving among his friends, observing the influences surrounding him, watching the birth of his poems and the circumstances out of which they grew. There are thirty-six illustrations, including some unusual portraits, prints and facsimiles.

Reviewed by Bliss Perry

Atlantic's Bookshelf Mr '25 680w

Booklist 21:300 My '25

"From the outset through every page, she writes with the historian's command of fact, with the biographer's sympathetic knowledge, with the poet's insight into the soul not only of one man, but of all mankind. To these she also adds the analytic faculty of the critic. We discover at once, and we continue to realize as we turn every page, that here is not the mere dry-as-dust record of a life, or a formal array of material, but a skillfully drawn portrait in which the imagination of the artist is blended with all the available essential facts of biography." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p1 F 14 '25 4800w
Cleveland p106 N '25

"There is an unusually excellent index. All in all, the work is masterly, fascinating, definitive—a brilliant tribute from one poet to another." N. H. Dole

+ Ind 114:273 Mr 7 '25 1400w

"A great and beautiful task. She has written not only by far the best biography of John Keats, the most complete, the most accurate, the most understanding, but she has written one of the best biographies in the English language." R: Le Gallienne

+ Int Bk R p232 Mr '25 2650w

"The reading of this book is a literary experience of the first order, although Miss Lowell's style is often loose and inept and certain of her ideas seem to be trash. The conclusions are often superficial, but the picture and movement are so vital that the reader touches the actuality of a great life. Miss Lowell's last act was to produce a creative biography." Genevieve Taggard

+ Nation 120:663 Je 10 '25 1500w

"From the point of view of both literary criticism and of psychology, the life of Keats is immensely interesting. . . The book is a failure because, as it seems to me, Miss Lowell has lost her sense of proportion. Enthusiasm is a good servant, but for a critic and biographer the worst master. It has landed Miss Lowell and her reader in a maze, or rather a series of mazes, from which, as one reads, escape into fresh air seems to be impossible." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 36:749 F 28 '25 1100w

"Altogether Miss Lowell in her voluminous answer to the question why there should be another life of Keats is amply justified by her new or unused material. That she is justified for a second reason which she urges, the need of a fresh interpretation of him, her readers will be even more ready to grant." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 41:344 F 18 '25 2250w

"The simple truth is that the book is far too long. The author pleads in her preface that she felt constrained to write a complete biography, though with no idea of supplanting previous works on the subject. But the new material is not really so very copious. The twentieth part of this work would have been much more to us than the whole." F. L. Lucas

+ New Statesman 24:748 Ap 4 '25 1750w

LOWELL, AMY—Continued

"Had she given us less of bulk, she might have been obliged to give less of value. In view of the last, therefore, in view of a value which cannot be overestimated, Miss Lowell's occasional garrulities, her not infrequent ineptitudes of style and her often annoying repetitions must be forgiven. . . . Amy Lowell's 'John Keats,' one is forced to believe, will henceforth hold rank as the ultimate biography." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p1 F 15 '25 2700w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

N Y Times p21 Je 14 '25 2250w

"She has written a superb narrative and she has produced a piece of criticism which is as refreshing in its rightness as it is titanic in its proportions." Mark Van Doren

+ N Y Tribune p1 F 15 '25 1400w

"Miss Lowell proceeds to give us Keats as we have never had him before, to the last melancholy curtain. Her method, avowedly modern as psychology, is remarkable in its power of immediacy, fiercely authentic in fact, delicate in deduction; she is honest without effort, compassionate without prostration, scholarly without dogma. Where Swinburne howled like a dervish, Miss Lowell speaks like an advocate. Matthew Arnold is not more sagacious, Colvin is less intuitive." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p6m F 15 '25 1850w

"Miss Lowell's interpretation of Keats's character is clear cut, subtle and convincing. A few of Miss Lowell's opinions are challenging. But even when she fails to carry complete assent to her opinions she is suggestive in the extreme; and I wish to take leave of her biography on no note of disagreement but to salute it in all admiration as a masterly piece of work." S: C. Chew

+ — No Am 221:545 Mr '25 4000w

"Spirited and exhaustive work." C. B. Green

+ Outlook 140:466 Jl 29 '25 2450w

Pratt p33 spring '25

"As interesting as it is monumental. Perhaps there is not enough new material to justify its 1,260 pages, but there is a good deal, and she certainly succeeds in rehabilitating the maligned character of Fanny Brawne." A. E. Coppard

+ Sat R 139:267 Mr 14 '25 1150w

"Keats fascinates us simply because he is a poet; and Miss Lowell has done both wisely and characteristically in fixing her attention upon the miracle of his poetic development. Hers is a serious, an intensely serious, piece of work. With a thoroughness of method usually considered academic, she has set out to produce a biography of Keats that shall supersede Sir Sidney Colvin's, and to mingle with it a critique of the poems that shall take precedence of all earlier studies of Keats. The book should, therefore, be approached with seriousness of purpose, or not at all." C. B. Tinker

+ Sat R of Lit 1:521 F 14 '25 2400w

Spec 134:288 F 21 '25 140w

Reviewed by Newton Arvin

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 920w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 580w

Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 15 '25 340w

"Miss Lowell has done valuable service by her generous biography, because she has not been distracted by her own conception of Keats (which is in some respects singularly inadequate) from her main purpose of giving all the facts. . . . In reading her book we have to reconcile ourselves to bewildering lapses, of which there are enough to supply a whole essay of purely destructive criticism."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p177 Mr 19 '25 4000w

Wis Lib Bul 21:142 My '25

"Disparagement will see but a vast accumulation of facts, some old and some new, that have not been properly subjected to processes of elimination and arrangement. Admiration, on the other hand, will be aware of the experience that absorbed a rich and original temperament, but it too may sometimes question whether it is not being asked to follow that experience moment by moment in a way ultimately impossible to anyone but Amy Lowell herself, instead of being given the significant design of that experience, which is the only way in which full impact could be made. But when this has been said, of the durable importance of the book there can be no doubt. It must affect all considered criticism of Keats hereafter." J: Drinkwater

+ — Yale R n s 15:381 Ja '26 1200w

LOWELL, AMY. What's o'clock. 240p $2.25
Houghton

811

25-16810

These poems written during the last four years of Miss Lowell's life, illustrate her peculiar genius in its wide range of subject and style.

"The world of What's O'Clock is largely a world of gardens, wheat-fields, lilacs, humming birds, the fountain, and the moon. It would be difficult to find another who treated nature with the magic that she sometimes knew." Theodore Morrison

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '25 750w

Booklist 22:65 N '25

"What's O'Clock' is a personal book. It contains much that is lyrical, much that is pure beauty; but much, too, that is Miss Lowell speaking as she might have spoken in front of the great fire in Brookline, or in a letter." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:205 O '25 500w

"For the most part the verses here collected reflect what seems to be the poet's impatience with her muse. They are marked by a note of irritation with life and art, an impatience with convention, whether it profess to regulate conduct or meter; and even her admirers will agree that it was this strident note which to a large extent challenged attention for her verse." B. M. K.

Cath World 122:416 D '25 320w

Cleveland p121 D '25

"Whatever her limitations, Miss Lowell's poems at their best are 'fretted chambers of imagery,' often of strange and startling beauty." R: Le Gallienne

+ Int Bk R p806 N '25 1500w

"Miss Lowell's qualities are what they always were; it is doubtful whether her work shows any 'advance' upon the earlier 'Patterns.' Her brilliance, her command of the lacquered phrase and the glazed figure, her pyrotechnique which caused words to bloom and burst in the same moment as though issuing from firework flower-pots, her restless excitement provoking the most inanimate objects to a furious life of their own—these were characteristics recognizable from the first." L: Untermeyer

+ Lit R p1 S 26 '25 1450w

"What's O'Clock' contains, I think, her finest poems. Flaws a plenty may be found but it is a book which none can demolish. Brittle much of it is, but it is the brittleness of stained glass which when shivered into bits, retains not only its polish but its intrinsic luster." Lola Ridge

+ Nation 121:710 D 16 '25 1000w

"In this book she allowed herself to lay aside brush and palette, to sound the personal, the lyric note. Poems like Footing Up A Total, like The Watershed, like The Sisters, like the fine sonnets to Duse with which the volume concludes, show an intention and an intensity both new to Miss Lowell's work. One welcomes them as one does a human voice in a world of mirrors and windows, in 'a no-world of all-colored light.' Not the least regret with which this book leaves the reader is that the poet was not permitted to pursue the untraveled road toward which such pieces point like finger-posts." Babette Deutsch

+ New Repub 44:183 O 7 '25 700w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p3 S 6 '25 2200w

"Is quite deserving of a place alongside of 'Men, Women and Ghosts' and 'Legends.' Like all of her volumes except the earliest, it contains some wholly admirable pieces; and like all of them, without exception, it has its longueurs. Better than any of them, perhaps, it displays her weakness and her strength with an equal amplitude. Coming as it does out of her prime, it may well be taken as representative of her entire poetic character." Mark Van Doren

+ — N Y Tribune p1 S 6 '25 850w

"'What's O'Clock' is a living volume. The fact that the poems in it were written during the last four years of Miss Lowell's life has no intrinsic significance. True, she was at the time engaged upon her remarkable biography of Keats; she was admittedly pouring every atom of her power into that book. It may, not without some plausibility, be contended that she had very little left for her poetry. Nevertheless, the fact remains that Miss Lowell could do nothing weakly or wearily. She could write some pretty bad verse; she could not write lukewarm or half-hearted verse." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p4m S 20 '25 860w

"The effects in it are heightened, the silences prolonged. It is beautiful and final. It makes me think of her own descriptions of the Bronze Horses of St. Mark's, trotting forever forward without moving." G. H. Conkling

+ No Am 222:161 S '25 520w

"It should be a matter of regret to Amy Lowell's friends that her exhaustive and scholarly biography of Keats does not stand as her last literary work. Her book of poems, 'What's O'Clock,' comes as something of an anti-climax; nor can it be said to add greatly to her degree as a poet. We find her a rich, sensuous nature, a book woman, steeped in literature, exotic, abnormal, sometimes preposterous—she wrote at night—extravagant in her use of color. But do her words have wings? Imagery, originality, imagination, fervor, color—all these and more it may have, but if the winged feet are wanting it is not poetry." C. B. Green

+ — Outlook 141:198 O 7 '25 700w

Pratt p26 autumn '25

"In this last book one feels, I think, a deepening of experience, and a beauty less dependent on the eye. The poignant susceptibility to sense impressions is still there. There is the delight in words that are carved and vivid and luminous as gems; the delight in rhythms as free yet as poised as the flight of a gull. And at times there is prodigality in each. But there has been nothing before in Miss Lowell's poetry quite like the 'half quizzical, half wistful,' altogether winning self-revelation in 'The Sisters'; or the mocking lightness of touch and ironic suggestion of 'The Slippers of the Goddess of Beauty.'" J. L. Lowes

+ Sat R of Lit 2:169 O 3 '25 3800w

LOWNDES, MARIE ADELAIDE (BELLOC)
(MRS FREDERIC SAWREY LOWNDES).
Afterwards. 308p $2 Doubleday

25-10810

How Robert Lovell, an unscrupulous bounder, using an excellent war record to give him an entrance into London society, just missed marrying the beautiful Lady Kitty Fleming and falling heir to an enormous fortune is the theme of this mystery story. The "lady in the cellar," the murder on which the plot hinges, is only one of the many thrills which enliven the pages.

"To a title so vague that it might have served for almost any novel, Mrs Belloc Lowndes has attached a story so diluted that a good two-thirds of its exposition might better not have been served up at all." L. S. G.

— Int Bk R p742 O '25 400w

"'Afterwards' is an entertaining and well developed yarn, though the author's determination to bring about a happy ending deprives the heroine of some of the sympathy she might otherwise have won."

+ N Y Times p8 Je 7 '25 400w

"Mrs. Lowndes makes no attempt at prolonged mystification; she relies for thrills on the skillful building up of the antecedent circumstances and the deft unwinding of the fateful clew. A glittering background of smart society, and enough nice, jolly, harmless folks for contrast, assist in making this one of the most satisfactory tales of the season."

+ N Y Tribune p12 Je 21 '25 300w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 20w

LOWY, ALEXANDER, and HARROW, BEN-JAMIN. Introduction to organic chemistry. 389p il $3 Wiley

547 Chemistry, Organic

24-22571

"Concise college text, presenting principles and important applications. Not intended as a laboratory manual but gives a brief outline for identification of organic compounds. Unique features are the glossary, the chapter on nomenclature, and the valuable charts on technology and uses of various products."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"The value of the book will depend largely upon the point of view of the particular instructor. If he wishes one from which the student can quickly check up the general results of type reactions, as well as the accuracy of structural formulas and the applications of the subject, he will find the book valuable, for these are plainly stated and conveniently arranged. The applications in general, and particularly the applications to biology, are strictly up to date." R. R. Renshaw

+ — Am Chem Soc J 47:900 Mr '25 500w

"The book contains brief statements about a great variety of substances. It will be welcomed by those teachers who desire for their students a text in which graphic formulas, methods of preparation, and chemical reactions of the more important compounds are given in a condensed form suitable for a rapid review of the subject. From this point of view the work has been well done." J. F. Norris

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:106 Ja '25 450w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:292 My '25

LOYD, LEWIS RICHARD WILLIAM, comp.
Lundy; its history and natural history. 248p il $4.50 (12s 6d) Longmans

942.3 Lundy (island)

25-11990

Situated twelve miles off the Devonshire coast Lundy island is distinguished for remarkable natural features and for its bird life. Its rocky cliffs and difficult approach make it an almost impregnable stronghold and the island has been at different times the retreat of outlaws and pirates. The book outlines the history of the island and its various owners since the twelfth century, gives an account of its bird life and a list of its plants and insects.

"Tourists visiting England in search of 'fresh woods and pastures new' will be delighted to have this volume as a guide to the island of Lundy."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 8 '25 420w

"The history and natural history of the island are well set forth in this interesting account." Frances Pitt

+ Nation and Ath 37:575 Ag 8 '25 150w

"Although hardly a book for the general reader, Lundy is an important work, filling a serious gap in our voluminous topographical literature, and ornithologists may safely be recommended to get a copy."

LOYD, L. R. W., comp.—Continued

+ New Statesman 26:24 O 17 '25 600w

"Mr. Loyd has done memorable service in his compact, faithful, occasionally even thrilling record of Lundy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p454 J1 9 '25 920w

LUBBOCK, PERCY. Region cloud. 220p $2.50 Scribner [7s 6d J. Cape]

Unsubstantial as a story but perfect in artistry this novel cannot fail to be regarded as an illustration of Mr. Lubbock's mastery of the art whose theory he expounded in the "Craft of fiction." The story of Channon the painter is a picture of genius and the stuff that goes to its making. Channon, a strange and powerful figure, drew to himself in his region cloud the men and women whom he needed to feed his genius, using them while they could be of service to him and then, when they had had their day, throwing them into the discard. These people whom Channon's genius commanded were all willing to be used, all but Austin, who had one little talent of his own not possessed by Channon—pride. Austin saved himself and his talent by quietly slipping away from the devourer.

"The thin, fine shadow of Henry James lies perceptibly over 'The Region Cloud' . . . This is no ordinary novel and it should appeal to no ordinary reader. It is psychological in its essence, but happily free of complexes, subconscious and the like. It is outside the modern tradition. It is not smart, it is not erotic, it is not realistic—sex is there and intelligence is there and reality, but all are arranged and ordered by the hand of an artist." Lorine Pruette
+ Lit R p4 J4 9 '26 850w

"In spite of its indebtedness to its model [Henry James] 'The Region Cloud' is not a pastiche, the virtue had not gone out of James's mantle when it fell upon Mr. Lubbock. Only, James was a pioneer and Mr. Lubbock is not; James was always reaching out for something new, Mr. Lubbock is occupied with breathing life into what is old. Any improvements and modifications that a man of intelligence can make without presumption upon James's achievement, he makes; but he does not add to that achievement. And therefore, though we read him with a living and not an antiquarian interest, we cannot extract from 'The Region Cloud' the exciting sense of the creative spirit feeling its way. The scenery along the road is as good as it can be, but we have been there before." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 140:600 N 21 '25 950w

"Such a tenuous theme was all that Mr. Lubbock needed; he can probe at leisure all the psychological ramifications of this curious impact of geniuses; and his measured delightful prose can, and does, plume itself on every page. The Region Cloud is a fine and an important novel. That Mr. Lubbock would be so successful a working novelist we had not guessed. One can only hope that he will find other themes as intimate, quiet, and congenial as this."

Spec 135:995 N 28 '25 700w

"A work of art of which the most conspicuous and the most admirable feature is its flawless unity of execution and design."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p735 N 5 '25 950w

LUCAS, ALFRED. Antiques; their restoration and preservation. 136p $2 Longmans [6s E. Arnold]

579 Archeological specimens—Collection and preservation. Antiques 25-26105

From his experience as chemist of the Department of antiquities, Egypt, the author writes this little book on the restoration and preservation of antique objects and the application of these methods to specific materials—clay, glass, ivory, metals, parchment and vellum, pictures, textile fabrics, etc. Some physical and chemical tests are added and a list of the necessary reagents and solutions is given.

"A simple, nontechnical discussion on the care of antiques."

+ Booklist 21:216 Mr '25

"Mr. Lucas's book forms a very useful introduction to the modern methods of treatment of antiques, on which subject very little literature has hitherto been available, but, being written in as non-technical a manner as possible, it is likely to be of more value to the antiquarian than to the chemist." R. A. M.

+ Nature 115:45 Ja 10 '25 300w

"Mr. Lucas writes simply and non-technically, and his instructions and cautions go much into detail."

+ N Y Times p23 D 14 '24 250w

LUCAS, EDWARD VERRALL. Introducing London. 145p il $1.25 Doran [2s 6d Methuen] 914.21 London—Description

An attractive little guide book in which the visitor is met at the station and conducted thru the city. There are 16 etching-like illustrations.

"E. V. Lucas, the ingratiating essayist, has compiled a thorough and practical guidebook, to set at ease the visitor in London. It is a catalogue discriminating in selection of places of charm and interest."

+ Bookm 62:508 D '25 100w

"An invaluable little book."

+ Nation and Ath 38:126 O 17 '25 90w

"One has never thought of brevity as the soul of Mr. Lucas's wit, and hustle of any kind one imagines must be abhorrent to him. Yet here is he doing London in some hundred and fifty pages of large print without suggesting anywhere the megaphone or the charabanc. If he moves quickly it is by judicious omission. He knows where to linger and what to pass by. His introductions to our great art-galleries and museums are intimate and friendly; he makes his readers free of them and their riches. His references to our notable buildings, ancient and modern, are apt and individual."

+ New Statesman 25:738 O 10 '25 300w

"If I were proceeding to London for the first time I should choose Mr. Lucas as my guide." Sylvia Thompson

+ N Y Tribune p15 N 15 '25 100w

"A capital little book for those who want broad details, in a few walks, of what is worth seeing. He writes easily with the humorous and literary touches we expect, and, further, a good sense of the practical."

+ Sat R 140:267 S 5 '25 220w

"This little guide-book is very well named. It is not intended for Londoners but for the man who is a 'stranger in these parts.' We believe it would admirably serve the purpose of someone meeting London so to speak, for the first time and intending to recollect it as a place he has met with."

+ Spec 135:501 S 26 '25 120w

"Mr. Lucas is the pleasantest of guides, singling out what is most beautiful, most curious, and in a word what is best worth seeing."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p535 Ag 13 '25 450w

LUCAS, EDWARD VERRALL. Playtime & company. 93p il $2.50 Doran 821 25-23614

A book of verses for children illustrated by Ernest H. Shepard.

Reviewed by A. C. Moore
Bookm 62:182 O '25 70w

"Those who have known and loved 'A book of Verses for Children,' 'Anne's Terrible Good Nature,' and 'The Slowcoach,' will be delighted to find that in 'Playtime and Company' Mr. Lucas has collected the verses he has written for children, and that the inimitable Ernest Shepard has done scores and scores of delightful drawings for it." Marcia Dabwin

+ Bookm 62:459 D '25 120w

"They are rollicking and genial rhymes about people and things in many lands, but mainly, of course, about those that touch the lives and thoughts of little English boys and girls. Mr. Shepard's drawings have the same qualities of charm, characterization and skill in the use of line that mark his illustrations of the Milne books."

+ N Y Times p6 D 6 '25 80w

"Despite the fact that his verses have in many cases a distinctively English slant Mr. Lucas's rhymes have enough of the illusion that appeals to the fancy of children in any land to make them of general interest."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:387 D 5 '25 120w

LUCAS-DUBRETON, JEAN. Samuel Pepys; a portrait in miniature; tr. from the French by H. J. Stenning. 290p il $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d A. M. Philpot]

B or 92 Pepys, Samuel 25-10852

"A biography similar in form to 'Ariel'; though it may be less inexact to compare it with Marcel Schwob's 'Imaginary Lives.' It is with Pepys' affairs of the heart, his little cautious romances that the author chiefly concerns himself. Pepys, careful in his business (because he is an ambitious average man), suffering almost constant anxiety for his peace of mind and for proper material advancement, that his petty peccadilloes will be disclosed; Pepys, the timorous, seeing God's hand, and thankful, in any unsuccessful rendezvous; Pepys, inglorious imitator of his dissolute peers; the prudent Don Juan, the periwigged official, the hen-pecked husband. Here you have him."—Lit R

Bookm 62:510 D '25 100w

"The author lays bare all of his delightful qualities as a charming sinner with such sympathetic understanding that one would hardly guess the work to be a translation. Credit is due Mr. H. J. Stenning who translates from Mr. Lucas-Dubretton's French version. The book is well and plentifully illustrated."

+ Ind 115:424 O 10 '25 100w

"Done into Spanish and then reproduced in English, 'There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town To-night' took the naive form of 'It Will Be Very Warm in the City This Evening.' The appreciative reader of the diary of Samuel Pepys will too often find similar results in Mr. Stenning's English rendering of J. Lucas-Dubretton's French translation of Pepys's entries. The book is suggestive of 'Ariel' in its invention of detail, but, in the opinion of this reviewer, Lucas-Dubretton's understanding of Pepys does not match André Maurois's intimate appreciation of Shelley." L: Pendleton

+ Int Bk R p114 Ja '26 2150w

"Written with much grace and with pleasant irony. It is biography with the vitality of the novel. It is biography which recreates, which interprets—which dares to interpret without fear or favor and which is, therefore, if nothing else, arresting." W. Y.

+ Lit R p3 S 19 '25 280w

"It was a clever thing to do and the French author is to be praised for a book that is always vivid and which carries an element of authenticity which must make us believe that if this is not Samuel Pepys it is some one very like him." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p2 O 11 '25 1950W

"His book is readable, full of neat quotations, apt allusions and an abounding zest for his subject. But one hardly recognizes Samuel made up for his part as 'The Great Lover,' and he would never recognize himself." Stanley Alden

+ N Y Tribune p19 O 25 '25 300w

"One must pay homage to M. Lucas-Dubretton's literary skill; yet one need not therefore agree with him that he has turned it to the best use. For surely here, if ever, the evil that Pepys did lives after him, the good has been interred with his bones. Even for a miniature this portrait is too small." W. C. Abbott

+ Sat R of Lit 2:431 D 19 '25 450w

"Possibly because the interpreter is a Frenchman, whereas Pepys is English of the English, one comes away from this delightfully amusing book with the feeling that though it is clever, often particularly felicitous in expression and apt in its illustration, here we have not quite the Samuel we know from his diary. One feels that in thus reconstructing the life of the most famous diarist the world has known [the author] has done something less than justice to his memory." Stanley Alden

+ Spring'd Requibican p7a N 1 '25 600w

"M. Lucas-Dubretton writes in a very sprightly manner; he has a pretty wit and a gift for vivid and jocular phrasing. But he has nothing fresh to tell us about either Pepys or his period."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p872 D 18 '24 150w

LUCKIESH, MATTHEW. Foundations of the universe. (Lib. of modern sciences) 245p il $3 Van Nostrand

530.1 Matter—Constitution. Universe 25-8571

Dr Luckiesh discusses in a readable way the wonders of modern physics—the known facts and, to some extent, his own speculations upon them. He is concerned chiefly with such fundamental physical aspects of the universe as matter, mass, energy and forces—the whole mechanism of the physical world. Contents: Men, atoms and stars; Matter and motion; The realm of molecules; The nature of light; What is in space; The velocity of light; The epoch of Einstein; The elements of matter; The electron theory; The evolution of elements; Inside the atom; The quantum theory; Atomic structure; The fateful unknown; The growth of knowledge; Units and magnitudes.

"This new book from Dr. Luckiesh's trained and versatile pen is neither a development of scientific material nor a textbook, but is rather an arrangement of our present knowledge according to its reactions on the writer. Therein lies its peculiar merit and such demerit as it may have. To the reader who has never tried to arrange present day scientific concepts as a basis for his own interpretation of the world about him the book should prove not only interesting but stimulating. To the reader who has already attempted his own philosophical arrangement the book may even prove a source of irritation. However, this latter class of readers is small and its influence is likely to be directed towards a wide dissemination of Dr. Luckiesh's treatment." J. M.

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:768 J1 '25 360w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:22 Ap '25

"The intention 'to present popularly and systematically the picture of the foundations of the universe as it now appears' from the point of view of advancing science has been worthily fulfilled."

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 6 '25 180w

"The title of Mr. Luckiesh's book is aptly chosen, for he does get down to the foundations of the universe. . . This is done in an entirely popular manner, but not at the expense of completeness." Frank Thone and James Stokley

+ Sat R of Lit 2:372 D 5 '25 200w

LUDOVICI, ANTHONY MARIO. Lysistrata; or, Woman's future and future woman; with foreword by Norman Haire. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 110p $1 Dutton

396 Woman—Social and moral questions. Feminism 25-15240

Mr Ludovici's argument runs like this: that the breach between men and women is continually widening thru the influence of puritans and feminists, aided by disillusioned married women who have become embittered against love and marriage; that the woman movements, led either by spinsters or unhappy married women, express this growing hostility to the male; that the men themselves, thru generations of exhausting toil and neglect of their bodies, have declined in ability and masculinity and are no longer the masters. The author draws an horrific picture of the world that is likely to result from the extreme consequences of these tendencies. He sees disaffected women invading every branch of industry and finally gaining control of it, celibacy among women increasing and men becoming superfluous. Regeneration must come, he thinks, thru a new breed of masculine men who will re-assert the old mastery.

LUDOVICI, A. M.—Continued

Booklist 22:54 N '25

Boston Transcript p6 S 9 '25 300w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 115:218 Ag 22 '25 520w

J Home Econ 17:727 D '25 70w

"Mr. Ludovici is the original 'old man of the tribe'—but his tribe seems to have got lost."

— Nation 121:201 Ag 19 '25 400w

"There are a good many fallacies in Mr. Ludovici's chain of syllogisms but the underlying one is common to him and his predecessors—an induction based on too narrow grounds. As Mrs. Russell points out 'he has based his thesis and his strictures on observations that do not go beyond the bounds of upper- and middle-class people, barely run beyond the bounds of the night club or the suburban dance-hall.' The most serious view that can be taken of Mr. Ludovici's evidence emphasizes the tendency of the human race to die at the top—a tragic situation, in its continuation fatal to progress, but one which can be dealt with so long as the broad base of human life remains solid." R. W. Lovett

— New Repub 43:350 Ag 19 '25 920w

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson

— N Y Times p1 Ag 9 '25 1000w

"Mr. Ludovici, beginning with a single idea, and that a fallacy, has created a whole set of airy worlds with god-like nonchalance and lack of forethought." K. A. Porter

— N Y Tribune p14 N 8 '25 620w

"Supposedly antifeminist in tone. In reality his insistence on woman as solely a creature of sex is strangely in accord with Mrs. Russell's harang. It is, however, a more workmanlike and immeasurably better written dissertation. The lurid extravagance of the author's forecast is proof of its insincerity; it lacks sanity either as science or satire."

— Springf'd Republican p10 JI 29 '25 150w

"The prophecy of a completely feminized world is too absurd to be taken seriously. Ludovici does not even try to understand what the Feminists are seeking, has never read the conclusions of modern psychology and does not believe in the essential goodness of human nature. By itself this book would be the dismal regret of a man who may not be old in years, but who writes like an old gentleman, remote from the life of the twentieth century." G. H.

— World Tomorrow 8:232 S '25 380w

LULL, RICHARD SWANN. Ways of life. 365p il $3 Harper

575 Evolution 25-10156

A restatement of the evidences for the evolution theory by the professor of paleontology, Yale university, and director of the Peabody museum. In Part one he describes the genesis of the universe, adaptation to environment, the struggle for existence and natural selection. Part two deals with prehistory—the events in the evolution of inanimate nature as the paleontologist reads them. The final chapter is an account of the historical development of the science of evolution.

"As complete as it is a lucid statement of what the scientist knows of the origin and history of living things."

+ Bookm 61:708 Ag '25 80w

"There is nothing in it that can not be found in the early chapters of Wells's 'Outlines of History,' even tho Osborn dismisses Wells as an arm-chair philosopher. On the other hand, the book is very readable and full of facts for those who care for facts. It will not convert a Stratton or a Bryan, for 'scientific evidence' means nothing at all to such gentlemen; but it will strengthen the conviction of many a one inclined to doubt that the idea of evolution is a potent factor in the growth of the universe and all that is in it." B: Harrow

+ — Int Bk R p130 Ja '26 280w

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

New Repub 44:75 S 9 '25 650w

Reviewed by Harold Callender

N Y Times p7 JI 19 '25 900w

N Y World p4m Je 28 '25 100w

Outlook 140:342 JI 1 '25 20w

"The kind of a work you would sit up late reading. At the same time it is serious and will make you think—unlike some of the superficial wonder books of nature which choose only the frosting of the cake. Certain it also is that Professor Lull embodies nothing that is in the nature of mere 'attractive theory' his feet stay on the earth." A. G. Ingalls

+ Outlook 140:469 JI 29 '25 200w

"Prof Lull keeps close to scientific data and probable deduction, but the details are selected so as to clarify, rather than confuse, the subject for the nonscientific reader of average education."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 JI 17 '25 360w

"Professor Lull, a well-known American paleontologist, with a happy gift of popular exposition, has produced a serious and luminous exposition of evolution."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p786 N 26 '25 220w

LUMLEY, FREDERICK ELMORE. Means of social control. (Century social science ser.) 415p $3.75 Century

301 Social psychology 25-20721

In every group there are individuals who vary from the group, who depart from the standard pattern. When these departures take the form of anti-social behavior, the wrongdoer must be brought into line again. The book considers how this is to be done. This interesting and readable discussion leads from Rewards, Praise and Flattery, to Threats, Commands, and Punishment as the means of social control.

"What Professor Lumley has done is to re-classify, on the basis of his careful observations, some, not all, of the means of social control, and to describe his classification in a style that is almost always highly pleasing. The general reader, for whom the book is intended, will find much of it of interest, some of it fairly stimulating, and most of it rather entertaining reading." M. M. Willey

+ N Y Tribune p15 N 29 '25 650w

"The book is arranged as textbook for classes in psychology, but it is unusually stimulating reading for anyone who is at all interested in public opinion in its broadest sense."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 25 '25 420w

LUMMIS, CHARLES FLETCHER. Mesa, cañon and pueblo; our wonderland of the Southwest, its marvels of nature, its pageant of the earth building, its strange peoples, its centuried romance. 517p il $4.50 Century

917.8 Southwest—Description and travel 25-18070

The author knows and loves the American Southwest as perhaps few other writers do, having travelled over it extensively and widely explored its deserts, canyons and rivers. He has written much about the marvels he has seen, and one of his earlier works, "Some strange corners of our country," forms the nucleus for the present large and copiously illustrated volume. Bits of history, legend, and description from the pen of other writers are scattered thru the book along with the author's own description of the romantic region and its people.

Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 380w
Cleveland p114 D '25

"A most interesting account of the natural wonders of the Southwest and of the Indians and Mexicans who have lived there. The book is splendidly illustrated and provided with maps and extremely useful bibliographies."

+ Ind 115:451 O 17 '25 60w

"The author emphasizes the historical and exploratory side rather than the natural beauties of the places visited, his knowledge of the Spanish conquerors making the chapters on their exploits extremely interesting. Best of all are the accounts of strange customs among the various Indian tribes." J. M. Thornton

+ Lit R p9 O 31 '25 360w

"In this thick volume, with its many excellent photographs, Mr. Lummis shines out still as a fortunate youth. One of the rarely fortunate who learned to know the Indian and Spanish Southwest in the innocent days before the Pueblos sold inferior pottery along the highways, or dreamed that the immemorial rices of the corn might be construed as 'obscene.' It must be said that in the matter of archaeology and ethnology the book is less authoritative in its sense of the present than in its sense of the past." E. S. Sergeant

+ N Y Tribune p7 D 6 '25 750w

"Mr Lummis writes easily, and except when he disagrees violently with the rest of the world on some subject upon which he appears to be poorly informed, is very interesting. To those who wish a vivid and colorful picture of the Indian peoples and the natural scenery of the Southwest, the volume may be recommended."

+ Springfield Republican p14 S 30 '25 150w

LUMSDEN, ERNEST S. Art of etching. (New art lib.) 376p il $6 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

767 Etching. Etchers [25-11553]

The subtitle describes the book as an "illustrated description of etching, drypoint, soft-ground etching, aquatint and their allied arts, together with technical notes upon their own work by many of the leading etchers of the present time." Written for the beginner, the book describes the elementary tools, materials and processes and provides a brief survey of etchers and their chief plates up to the year 1800. There are 208 illustrations.

"A handbook which will appeal preeminently to the student."

Booklist 22:20 O '25
Cleveland p117 D '25

"This is the best small textbook on the art of etching that has been published since that by Sir Frank Short. For the first time an Englishman has admitted that there are other means and other methods than the cast-iron ones employed by early Britons, which, in turn, were taken from the Dutch through the French." Joseph Pennell

+ N Y Times p10 My 24 '25 2400w

"We have rarely read a more comprehensive and lucid work than his on the complex and difficult technique of etching."

+ Sat R 139:593 My 30 '25 180w

"Mr. Lumsden's handbook cannot be said to be written in any literary style. It has no pretensions of the kind, but it has, for this very reason, a more valuable quality. It appeals directly, and in the plainest possible terms, to the one person for whom it has come into being—the intelligent, ambitious, enthusiastic, and industrious student."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p249 Ap 9 '25 760w

LUNN, ARNOLD HENRY MOORE. Roman converts. 275p $3.50 Scribner

282 Catholic church. Newman, John Henry, cardinal. Manning, Henry Edward, cardinal. Tyrrell, George. Knox, Ronald Arbuthnott. Chesterton, Gilbert Keith [24-29944]

Studies of the five most famous English converts to the Roman Catholic church, with an analysis of the appeal Rome made to each. The men studied are Cardinal Newman, Cardinal Manning, George Tyrrell, Ronald Arbuthnott Knox and Gilbert Keith Chesterton.

"Witty and epigrammatic. Will not be pleasing to Catholic readers."

Booklist 22:100 D '25

"Perhaps the chief feeling of many Catholic readers who peruse this volume will be acute annoyance, and they may be tempted to throw the book aside impatiently. However, it would be a pity that this should be the case, for there are some excellent things in the book." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 122:418 D '25 750w

"He writes with humor and with such cleverness and brilliancy as sometimes put him near to the class of Chesterton and Belloc. His book will have rare interest for those who are intrigued by religious problems and discussions."

+ N Y Times p20 O 4 '25 450w

"The preposterousness of Catholicism is emphasized to such an extent and with such cavalier disregard of fact, that the reader who accepts the indictment seems likely to doubt either the sincerity or the sanity of the converts. Studies in moral obliquity or in pathology were not apparently what Mr. Lunn intended to write, and his effort consequently misses fire." T. L. Riggs

— Sat R of Lit 2:410 D 12 '25 1050w

LUTES, MRS DELLA (THOMPSON). Home of your own. 424p il $3.50 Bobbs

747 House decoration. Home economics 25-8709

Mrs Lutes, who is housekeeping editor of the Modern Priscilla Magazine, includes in her book not only the building, decoration and equipment of the home, but living in and running it. Excellent illustrations.

Boston Transcript p8 My 23 '25 950w

"The volume is written in a vivacious, readable style and it carries a bibliography of eight pages listing books on all phases of home-making."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 26 '25 420w

"That she is an able authority on all house-keeping questions is proved by this book, which will undoubtedly have a wide use as a text in college home economics courses. Unfortunately, Mrs. Lutes's sense of humor has found expression in almost fatuous phrases, which, scattered heavily throughout, make somewhat tiresome work of seeking out the really valuable material she presents." Lettie Gay

— + N Y Tribune p8 S 27 '25 250w

"A practical although sometimes a terribly systematized book with fine illustrations. The text is printed upon poor paper."

+ Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 30w

St Louis p344 S '25

LUTZ, EDWIN GEORGE. Practical graphic figures. 184p il $2 Scribner [8s 6d Batsford]

741 Drawing—Instruction. Caricatures and cartoons 25-8418

"Mr. Lutz adds another to his list of books for students and beginning practitioners of art and in it demonstrates again his peculiar faculty for clarifying and simplifying underlying principles and making the beginner understand their importance. This book is devoted to instruction in the drawing of figures for ephemeral use, such as comics, fashions, advertisements, explanatory purposes, cartoons, and can be used for self-instruction by any one who has had sufficient practice in drawing from casts and life."—N Y Times

LUTZ, EDWIN GEORGE—Continued

"It is not too technical for the beginner who must work alone, clearly showing each step in the processes."

+ Booklist 22:20 O '25

"The text is lucid, practical and suggestive. Any one can follow it, and one need not be a professional artist to gain instruction from its pages." H. W.

+ Lit R p9 Ap 25 '25 170w

"He lays down sound, essential principles, and develops and applies them so clearly and simply that the student can hardly fail to find the book very helpful. The illustrative figures and diagrams, of which there are great numbers, are an important feature."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 12 '25 250w

N Y Tribune p12 My 17 '25 170w

Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 60w

LUTZ, GRACE (LIVINGSTON) HILL (MRS FLAVIUS J. LUTZ). Not under the law. 336p $2 Lippincott

25-9636

Goaded by the unkind taunts of her cousin and his wife, Joyce leaves home in the night. She wanders to a distant town and buys a little shack that has served as a real estate land office. There she supports herself by such work as she can get until the long coveted position as teacher is open to her. When the hardest days come, Joyce sings a hymn to keep up her faith and courage. Meanwhile the family have been searching in vain for her, and her old friend Darcy is accused of abducting and murdering her. In the nick of time Joyce arrives to clear him of the charge. And then to justify her simple faith, everything comes out all right. A story for the teens.

"A novel by Mrs. Hill is like a crystal-clear brook. Clarity, freshness, and rest are in both, and each has a singing undertone of happiness and good-will. This is a novel, as is usually the case with this author's works, where each character is clear-cut and logical." W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 580w

"There is very little plot to this simple religious story, but it is told with a practiced hand, and the sweet heroine for all her Victorian principles and old-fashioned standards, is a delightful person and a rounded creation, who breathes the breath of everyday life, even if the air immediately surrounding her is somewhat rarefied." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p7 Je 13 '25 320w

"Miss Hill is an accomplished story-teller, and never fails to make good her claim on the reader's sympathy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p601 S 17 '25 180w

LUTZ, HARLEY LEIST. Public finance. 681p $4 (18s) Appleton

336 Finance

24-24704

A comprehensive text covering the nature, classification and control of public expenditure, taxation and other sources of public revenues, the nature and uses of public credit and financial administration and legislation. References are given at the end of each chapter.

"A well-balanced volume of broad scope in which the complex data of the subject are handled with skill and judgment. In so far as it is possible to give adequate consideration to some three hundred topics in the scope of less than 700 pages, Professor Lutz shows a masterful hand. As an introduction to the subject, and particularly for the general reader, this new volume will be most useful."

+ Am Pol Sci R 17:218 F '25 120w

"This book covers the whole field of public finance in the traditional way. There is nothing extraordinary about either its content or substance. The book, however, is by all odds the best handbook on public finance now in print. The text is clear and the style is direct."

+ Ann Am Acad 117:301 Ja '25 50w

Harvard Business R 4:126 O '25 100w

"A straightforward, comprehensive account of the various aspects of public finance with valuable bibliographical references." H. H. Fisher

+ Ind 114:189 F 14 '25 800w

"His treatment is, on the whole, well-organized, well-proportioned, and follows in the main the standard outlines. He has included a few brief, well-chosen statistics, but has not yielded to the temptation to burden his text with numerous long tables which most students pass over. With all of its good features, however, Professor Lutz has not produced such a complete and perfect treatise that the teacher of public finance will have nothing left to do. He has been left not only plenty of opportunity to supplement and illustrate, but also to disagree, criticize, and correct, if so inclined." R. G. Blakey

+ J Pol Econ 33:569 O '25 750w

"On the topic [of taxation] this book takes a unique place in the completeness and symmetry with which it treats the science and art of raising and spending public funds." E. A. Bradford

N Y Times p10 Mr 8 '25 1250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p827 D 4 '24 60w

LUXEMBURG, ROSA. Letters to Karl and Luise Kautsky from 1896 to 1918; ed. by Luise Kautsky and tr. from the German by Louis P. Lochner. 238p il $2.50 McBride

B or 92

25-9787

An article sent to the Neue Zeit led to a warm personal attachment between Rosa Luxemburg and the editor, Karl Kautsky, and his wife. These letters, written to them during the time of her greatest political activity reveal a striking and many-sided personality—the tender and devoted friend, the keen and witty observer of men and nature, and the fiery revolutionist capable of kindling in other hearts an ardor equal to her own. An introduction by Frau Kautsky summarizes the life and views of her brilliant socialist friend.

Bookm 62:349 N '25 200w

"Personally we think that the average reader will be what you might call 'thrilled' by these letters. To our way of thinking Rosa Luxemburg could not be her best biographer. Her letters are but avenues of approach for an imaginative, yes, a romantic, person who could take her exciting life and mould its events into a book of detective fiction. Such of course has not been the purpose of this collection and we must wait a while yet for the ultimate appreciation and final discourse about the 'bloody' revolutionist. The book at hand must rest upon its own merits, and it has many." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 15 '25 1200w

"This is a significant and an important book. It accomplishes a real purpose for the student of current history and of modern socialist movements—it reveals the unofficial mind of one of the most widely known leaders of revolt, a true high priestess of Marxian socialism." C. P.

+ Cath World 122:278 N '25 350w

"What gives to the letters of Rosa Luxemburg their highest quality is the sense of their being fragments of life, parts of a whole to which she was constantly reaching out and which at the same time had its spirit within her." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 43:325 Ag 12 '25 1300w

Reviewed by Rose Lee

N Y Times p9 Ag 16 '25 1850w

Reviewed by Grove Wilson

N Y World p3m Jl 19 '25 250w

"Madame Kautsky has rendered an important and distinguished service to students of International Socialism and its history by making public a collection of letters written by Rosa Luxemburg. At the same time, by her careful annotations to the letters and her tender and illuminating introduction, she has produced a singularly beautiful and worthy memorial to one of the most remarkable women the International Socialist movement has ever produced." J. Spargo

+ Sat R of Lit 2:41 Ag 15 '25 1300w

"Written with so little possible thought of publicity that they would constitute a human document of intense interest to the psychologist even if the life they describe had not achieved historical prominence by the tragic end of the writer." Bruno Lasker

+ World Tomorrow 8:218 Jl '25 300w

LYMAN, ROLLO LA VERNE. Mind at work in studying, thinking, and reading. 349p $1.60 Scott

370.1 Study. Books and reading 24-17563

"A source book and discussion manual for students of the high-school and college level, designed to introduce the student to effective methods of reading, studying, and thinking. It consists of readings, reading suggestions, questions, and class projects, and valuable lists of laboratory materials. Unlike the usual book on the subject, it is not made up of useful hints and encouraging advice, but it lays a foundation of general principles. It contains, for example, such selections as: 'The Nature of Study,' by F. W. McMurray; 'The Formation of Good Habits,' from William James; 'The Analysis of an Act of Thought,' from John Dewey, and 'Accuracy in Observation and Statement,' by Charles W. Eliot."—Int J Ethics

"The Mind at Work should appeal to high-school teachers, normal-school teachers, and others as a source of excellent lessons 'in mental truth-seeking and truth-telling.'" W. L. Uhl

+ El School J 25:390 Ja '25 750w

"Professor Lyman has organized his material skilfully and filled in the gaps with sections of his own which are not the least valuable part of the work. The readings are selected with an eye to literary style and appeal to the imagination, so that it can be read and enjoyed by students of all levels." E. T. Mitchell

+ Int J Ethics 35:320 Ap '25 170w

"In addition to furnishing in very convenient form carefully chosen materials on the mental activities of studying, thinking, and reading, the book contains the clearest analysis of the difficulties encountered by students in study and the best exercises for providing practice in the application of the principles of study of any treatise in the field." W. C. Reavis

+ School R 32:634 O '24 540w

LYNCH, ELLA FRANCES. Beginning the child's education. 202p $2 (7s 6d) Harper

372 Education of children 25-7239

In this correspondence between a teacher and the mother of a three-year-old child a plan of home education is developed by means of which even the busiest mother, giving but a few minutes' daily instruction, can prepare her child for successful school work.

"Progressive parents will find it wanting, but much of it is plain common sense suggestively applied to concrete problems."

+ — Booklist 21:361 Jl '25

"A thinly disguised plea for the reinstatement of the ancient and lately dishonored switch in the home. Miss Lynch's pernicious doctrine permeates her books to such an extent that the value of all her excellent suggestions about beginning the child's education at home by training in observation, etc., is practically nullified." E. v. B. Hansl

+ — Bookm 61:591 Jl '25 580w

Cleveland p91 S '25

"The letters convey definite suggestion, not merely general exhortation. It is a good idea, in the mother's part of the correspondence, to raise the precise questions of the child's dawning perception and constant interrogation of the universe. The range of the subject matter is wide. It is to the advantage of the reader that Miss Lynch has tested her theories in the laboratory of a school room, where the parent is welcomed, not as interloper, but as friend and assistant." Fullerton Waldo

+ Lit R p9 Mr 28 '25 300w

"To have educational wisdom poured out to you in personal letters is a most attractive way to receive it, and readers will share some of this mother's pleasure at the graphic way in which advice is given. With many sound and penetrating suggestions there are, however, suggestions of a less commendable kind. At some points Miss Lynch does not reveal a very thorough understanding of what present-day psychology has disclosed in regard to the mental processes and attitudes of children." W. D. Lane

+ — N Y Tribune p8 Jl 12 '25 480w

Outlook 140:71 My 13 '25 20w

Sat R of Lit 1:918 Jl 18 '25 150w

LYND, ROBERT (Y. Y., pseud.). Peal of bells. 223p $2 Appleton [6s Methuen]

824

25-6086

Essays by the middle-writer of the New Statesman in which nearly all of them originally appeared. Contents: The peal of bells; The mouse; The street preacher; The sixth of December; Seaside; Continued; Hotel; A good hiding; Horses; In defense of patent medicines; Looking for an ancestor; Heat; Experiences of a voter; On being cruel; Puzzles; The Christmas present; School; On going to Scotland; The collar; This body; Change; Worry; In the Casino; The quarrel; Laziness; Solitude; Farewell to tobacco.

Booklist 21:333 Je '25

"His essays are well within the English tradition. Suave rather than sprightly, his humor and fancy play about the well known truths with a gentle lambent glow that saves him from extinction without quite flashing into distinction."

+ Bookm 61:716 Ag '25 100w

Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '25 300w

Cleveland p105 N '25

"Mr Lynd's interests are broad and un-academic; his talk is well-seasoned and easily digested."

+ Dial 79:352 O '25 80w

Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 60w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

Lit R p5 Ap 11 '25 420w

Living Age 324:625 Mr 14 '25 450w

New Statesman 24:210 N 22 '24 750w

"For the most part, his book is one of graceful, airy trifles. It is but infrequently that the serious thinker finds himself unable to keep in the background or off the stage entirely and strides forward with some degree of solemnity in his pace. The whimsical jester occupies the shining space behind the footlights by far the greater part of the time."

+ N Y Times p14 Ap 12 '25 1500w

LYND, ROBERT—Continued

N Y Tribune p14 Ap 19 '25 100w

"There are no frills of style in his writing; no marching in serried ranks of allusions and references. Observation and reflection, quaint and humorous, are the qualities he brings to the essay." Harry Salpeter

N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 500w

"It is a book that one may read often and each time with a fresh enjoyment."

+ Outlook 140:266 Je 17 '25 420w

"It would be a hard task to pick out the best essays in this volume. But two of them, one on 'Street Preachers' and the other a vivid picture of a disconsolate bookmaker in the essay entitled 'Worry,' exhibit both the range of interest and the human sympathy which Mr. Lynd commands; they are good to begin on, and will inspire a search for something as good or better—a search which will be its own reward." W. F. Stead

+ Sat R 139:58 Ja 17 '25 400w

"The Peal of Bells is charming, for his style is elegant, he is often witty, and his generalizations give evidence of experience and reflection." A. Williams-Ellis

+ Spec 134:47 Ja 10 '25 500w

"The Peal of Bells' shows an essayist attaining style by writing the English language with the utmost limpidity. Every essay has the saliency, clarity and self-completeness of a well-cut diamond."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 1000w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p845 D 11 '24 850w

Wis Lib Bul 21:141 My '25

LYND, MRS SYLVIA (DRYHURST). Mulberry bush. 278p $2.50 Minton, Balch & Co.

25-8241

These are penetrating studies of life written with charm and humor. The sketches are of English folk in an English environment, but so universal are these scenes and characters that they have no narrow locale. They are glimpses of life amongst any people, in any place. Contents: The mulberry bush; Exile; Eat, drink, and be merry; Vengeance; Two old bachelors; Gooseberry; The guilty passion; The sixth act; Fish sale; Journey's end; A day in town; The Sybarite; Romaunt de la rose; Out of the wind; Tact; Story for ornithologists; Adversaries; The intruder; Worth the money; Getting the sack; A conversation in wartime; Night and morning.

"The author possesses a fund of mild irony, some rather conventional whimsicality, and a fairly large amount of insight. Her word sense is good and occasionally she achieves a really telling bit of characterization."

+ Bookm 61:711 Ag '25 160w

"Sylvia Lynd has zest and fearlessness, an understanding of people and the courage to reveal them as they are. She knows bitterness but it is a healthful bitterness which invigorates. Her book is wholesomely irritating." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 800w

"The Mulberry Bush' is a book of beautifully wrought chapters from life which, in the absence of a better term, must be called sketches. They are that rarest of all things, feminine essays, for they are not variations upon a theme which a man might have written, but the play of a woman's wit, imagination, and tenderness—the expression of a woman's mind as authentic as the essays of Lamb or of Robert Lynd himself are a reflection of masculine humor and fancy." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 114:533 My 9 '25 1200w

"Simple and delightful sketches." S. A. Co-blentz

+ Lit R p8 My 23 '25 470w

"Every line has significance; the effect is delicate but in no degree precious."

+ Nation 121:174 Ag 5 '25 80w

"Though she is occasionally sentimental, especially in her pictures of family life, and sometimes gives one the impression of enjoying too comfortably both her pleasant and her painful scenes, when she sets out to write a disagreeable tale, she is very effective indeed." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:326 N 28 '25 70w

"Pathos, humor, satire, wistful yearning: in fact, all around the Mulberry Bush. An excellent collection. One hesitates to hail Mrs. Lynd as Miss Mansfield's equal; but that is because these stories belong to a different botanic order and grow out of a different soil, nearer Dickens than Chekhov." L. Mumford

+ New Repub 43:132 Je 24 '25 300w

"The personages who move through these tales are English, and it is with a high degree of discernment that Mrs. Lynd describes their characteristics and their reactions to their immediate milieus. There is delicacy and a subtle adjustment of analytic values perceptible in the best of these stories, stories that sometimes faintly suggest the Chekhov method of offering not a slice, but a bit of life without beginning or end and letting the reader make what he will of it."

+ N Y Times p25 Ap 12 '25 600w

"Moments of humorous or of sorrowful understanding, touches of grace, phrases handsomely turned—these are in evidence. Yet by itself each story is wanting in sufficient point, while the aggregate is an inharmonious jumble." Fitzhugh Gray

+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 14 '25 580w

"In this book, Mrs. Lynd has, with a curious charm and admirable economy of words, given us glimpses into the lives of a number of people, all of them very English, most of them very human and recognizable."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:748 My 9 '25 260w

LYNDE, FRANCIS. Cruise of the Cuttlefish. 2 284p il $1.60 Scribner

25-16604

Three boys make a cruise in a sea going motor boat from Philadelphia to the lower Mississippi. Their object is to deliver the Cuttlefish to a plantation owner who has offered to buy the staunch and beautiful little craft. The three friends have between them just enough knowledge of seamanship and navigation to attempt the cruise, but the perils that lie in wait tax their courage and hardihood. They escape from pursuing bootleggers, recapture their boat from thieves, weather a twister in the open sea and win thru other dangers to an unhopd-for reward.

"As well put together and serviceable as a good pair of shoes and just about as original. Boys will read it, like it, and forget it." H: Boston

Ind 115:350 S 26 '25 40w

"While 'The Cruise of the Cuttlefish' can be warmly recommended as a gift-book for boys, it is so far above the average adventure story that it will help many an 'old boy' to forget his rheumatism and other troubles that the years have brought, recalling, as it may, their own care-free days." M. A. E. White

+ Int Bk R p61 D '25 450w

"A rollicking good sea story for boys."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:352 N 28 '25 100w

LYNDE, FRANCIS. Fight on the Standing Stone. 248p $2 Scribner

25-7669

The story of a fight between two competing railroad companies working against time to complete a pass thru the mountain leading to new gold discovery. The hero of the story is Claiborne Stannard, chief engineer of the S. L. & P., a young Missourian, whose love of work and high sense of honor are obstacles in the way of his competitors. Stannard's problem is complicated by his love for Anitra Westervelt, niece of the vice-president of the rival company. At the instigation of Westervelt, bribery and theft enter into the game, and even violence is used to thwart his competitor, but the Missourian wins out in the end.

Booklist 21:383 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p5 J1 3 '25 500w

Cleveland p82 J1 '25

"It takes 250 pages to get the matter straightened out but Mr. Lynde does it in a most interesting way. His characters are all flesh-and-blood people." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p11 Ap 11 '25 220w

"The story, told in a straightforward fashion by Mr. Lynde, is for the most part plausible, but for a lesser portion exciting. There are few thrills or high lights, and the book's best asset is rather its continuously mild interest."

+ N Y Times p27 Je 14 '25 320w

"Mr. Lynde, writing with the authority of a man who has been in the railroad game himself, has told another corking good tale and has trimmed his chapters with love, machine guns, scamps and a proper assortment of thrills."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 110w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 10w

"Mr. Lynde brings to the making of strenuous frontier fiction something more than the usual equipment of most specialists in that well filled field. His plots are well built, although on standardized patterns: there is an ample supply of fighting, and he makes free use of the situations one expects. Yet the result manages to be unhackneyed chiefly because he avoids too much extravagance and does not allow his people to overplay their parts."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:713 Ap 25 '25 170w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 130w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

LYNDE, FRANCIS. Mellowing money. 293p $2
Scribner

25-15844

Thrust dishevelled and dirty from a moving freight car on to the cinders at the side of the track, there was nothing in Griffith's return to his home town to suggest the welcome of the prodigal son. Almost at once he is arrested as a vagrant and put on a street-repairing gang for thirty days. By a curious chance the meanest and wealthiest man in town, dying from the results of an attack by two of his hard pressed debtors makes Griffith his heir. How the sudden possession of wealth, a man's friendship and a woman's faith convert a misanthrope into a philanthropist, an outcast into a local hero, is the story of "Mellowing money."

"Even in his first and indeed thrilling little scene, Mr. Lynde contrives to tell his story well. He gets his readers into the heart of the situation quickly and with no waste motion. The dialogue is consistently well chosen and compressed. But Mr. Lynde has other advantages also. He enjoys his own tale. Moreover, he ferrets out the psychology of even a fist fight and makes one see clearly the manner in which strength and weakness prevail against one another in unexpected manner."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 250w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"The author does not stir the reader to any interest or enthusiasm. 'Mellowing Money' has redeeming features, but on the whole it only attains the level of the almost-negligible." J. H. P.

+ Int Bk R p66 D '25 300w

"This novel is written in a rather stiff, old-fashioned way, and the small town scene is the customary one even to the old gossiping spinster and the durn constable. But the author has something real to say, and a sane, mature point of view." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p3 N 14 '25 350w

N Y Times p22 S 27 '25 360w

N Y Tribune p13 O 18 '25 130w

"A readable story with too good a moral. At least the moral or idea, is too insistent. The author keeps rubbing in his grand truth; to wit, that while sudden wealth is supposed to ruin a man, it may sometimes work the other way." H. W. Boynton

+ Outlook 141:126 S 23 '25 120w

LYSAGHT, SIDNEY ROYSE. My tower in Desmond. 527p $2.50 (7s 6d) Macmillan

25-18054

Ireland is the scene of this long and leisurely story which follows the fortunes of an aristocratic family of County Cork thru a quarter of a century or more, culminating with the Easter uprising in 1916. The strong connecting thread of a somewhat discursive narrative in which many characters appear is the devoted friendship of two cousins, Nicholas Quinn and Brian Barry, begun in their childhood days in Ballyquin, strengthened thru various adventures of their early manhood and kept steadfast even under the strain of growing political differences.

"The reader who will harmonize his mood with Mr. Lysaght's will be richly rewarded, for in this novel there is a pervasive and contagious quality of kindness and tenderness towards the whole of the created world. 'My Tower in Desmond' may be recommended with this reservation; its slowness of pace and lack of superficial energy may blind many to its quiet and profound delights." R. B. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 19 '25 500w

"Mr. Lysaght, on the testimony of this book alone, seems to prove himself a novelist of strong individual gifts." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p5 D 5 '25 560w

"The author tries to be fair both to the claims of the idealists who desired complete independence for Ireland, and to the realists, no less benevolent in intention, who set their wills against it. All this is admirable; yet the book is almost a complete failure. A humane conventionality of judgment has no doubt a high social utility and may be a necessary ingredient in civilized intercourse; yet it has no validity in a work of art, except as subject-matter, and this Mr. Lysaght seems to ignore." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:119 O 17 '25 450w

"Mr. Lysaght is content with lay-figures for his chief characters; but his incidental folk are full of life—Uncle de Courcay, for instance, weak-minded and skilful. And though Mr. Lysaght allows himself, in this long book, a good deal of dull and conventional narrative and some rather heavy moralising, he says fine things and draws notable pictures." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:727 O 10 '25 150w

"Mr. Lysaght has marred what would otherwise have been a delightful book by overabundant detail. This is not to say that 'My Tower in Desmond' lacks interest. Many will find it a welcome relief from staccato sex outpourings. But it would have been really first rate had it been compressed about a hundred pages and some of the side interests eliminated."

+ N Y Times p9 Ja 10 '26 380w

"Mr. Lysaght beautifully remembers and comprehends the adventurousness and unquestioning happiness of childhood. He understands that a child's mentality is deliciously a part of the world in which it lives. But he fails to understand that his child becomes adult, must make the world, through all his experiences, a part of his mentality; that the mind and soul of the 'grown-up person' are enriched and modified and incessantly changed by their sensitiveness to every manifestation of life. A tower may be 'a fine private place,' but there are, in our brief adventure, treasures to be found outside it."

LYSAGHT, SIDNEY ROYSE—Continued

+ — N Y Tribune p11 N 8 '25 620w

"Its movement is too slow for fiction, and its characters are done in the fashion of biography rather than with the selectiveness of a novel, but as chronicle it has the merits of background, emotion, personality, the very elements which history so inevitably omits. It is leisurely narrative fully documented with humanity. But it is as a study of the Irish mind that Mr. Lysaght must have conceived of his story, and this will be its interest and its essential value. More brilliant narrative than this is coming out of Ireland, but very little history, very few memoirs that one can trust." H: S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 2:210 O 17 '25 450w

"Written in a quiet, discursive, autobiographical style. The early scenes are described with much charm, and the account of the Easter Rebellion of 1916 is written, obviously, from first-hand knowledge."

+ Spec 135:723 O 24 '25 100w

"How far the veiled autobiography—in which episodes, that have issued from the memory rather than the changing imagination, are so quietly rounded towards their close, in accordance with the agreeable necessity of fiction, that we cannot at will separate fancy from life—may please, must be a matter of individual taste. By such a middle form, Mr. Lysaght, in the imaginary person, or double, perhaps, of Nicholas Quinn, has become a calm witness to his own generation, and shown us the moulding forces of Irish nationalism from a gracious angle."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p669 O 15 '25 480w

LYTTTELTON, DAME EDITH SOPHY (BALFOUR) (MRS ALFRED LYTTTELTON). Faculty of communion. 126p $1.50 (4s 6d) Longmans

134 Psychical research 25-9592

Accepting communication with the dead as a demonstrable fact, the author urges for the practice a more reverent consideration, and a more general attempt at its use. The Roman Catholic church has already sanctioned it by permitting prayers not only for but to the dead. The book asks for a further step that the church authorize and encourage investigation of the subject and thru a clergy specifically endowed and trained for the purpose, regulate and control the conditions of communion.

"This is a most difficult book to review. It is so, because of its courage, simplicity, and want of artifice. The writer has not been restrained by doubts, or fears, or by a worldly anxiety as to hostile criticism and comment. I mean the anxiety lest people should call her credulous, or 'cranky,' or suffering, if not from delusions, at any rate from illusions. She has dared to tell us all that she really believes, instead of only half truths, the truth, that is, told with deliberate omissions, for fear of being misunderstood, or again confuted by great names, or scientific principles, or fashionable theories." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 135:17 J1 4 '25 1500w

"Both in her contention that these practices are valuable for religion and in her argument that they are reconcilable with a progressive interpretation of accepted Christian principles. Mrs. Lyttelton opens deeply controverted issues. It is only fair to admit that she conducts the discussion throughout on a high spiritual plane, and that what appeals to her instincts in the usages she defends is always their presumed effect in elevating and deepening the religious consciousness, never a vulgar thaumaturgic or utilitarian enticement."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p403 Je 11 '25 250w

M

M. M., pseud. See Magnus, M.

MABINOIGION. Island of the mighty; being the hero stories of Celtic Britain retold from Mabinogion by Padraic Colum; il. by Wilfred Jones. 265p $2.25 Macmillan

398.2 Colum, Padraic

24-23614

Padraic Colum has here retold some of the stories found in the Mabinogion. The names of the characters have been simplified and several stories having separate existence have been woven into one plot sequence called The Hunting of the Boar. In the second group, under the general title 'The Dream of Ron-abbway' are given tales of chivalry and knight-errantry.

Booklist 21:156 Ja '25

"Padraic Colum has done excellently well in condensing and simplifying the stories of The Mabinogion."

+ Dial 78:336 Ap '25 120w

"The spirit of the stories is well carried out in the excellent illustrations and decorations of Wilfred Jones and the type is large and clear. May many boys and girls who have not as yet heard the Birds of Rhiannon, the birds of Celtic enchantment, listen entranced to the music of their song!" E. S. Smith

+ N Y Tribune p6 Ja 18 '25 520w

MACADAM, GEORGE. Little church around the corner. 347p il $3.75 Putnam

283 Church of the transfiguration, New York city. New York (city)—Churches. Houghton, George Hendric. Houghton, George Clarke 25-5621

"This volume is primarily the life history of a church. It is also the biography of Dr. George Hendric Houghton, founder and rector of the church for fifty years, and of his nephew and successor, Dr. George Clarke Houghton. Into this story Mr. MacAdam has woven a cross-section history of certain aspects of Old New York from before the Civil War to the present time."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:334 Je '25

Ind 114:503 My 2 '25 50w

"Earnest and interesting volume."

+ Int Bk R p335 Ap '25 1150w

Reviewed by R. M. Crouse

Lit R p6 S 19 '25 350w

"As a piece of constructive editing, it is an admirable work, carried out with accuracy, insight and understanding."

+ N Y Times p5 Ap 5 '25 1250w

"It is as informal as it is fascinating."

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 8 '25 220w

St Louis 23:426 D '25

"Mr. MacAdam has made a highly readable story of it, making full use of papers prepared by the late Dr. Houghton, recording many anecdotes and quoting freely from letters. It is well illustrated, and has value as local history but is even more worth-while as a 'human document.' It is to be regretted that it has no detailed index—which should be supplied in later editions."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:650 Ap 4 '25 400w

"A book of vital interest. It is full to overflowing with those stories of 'human interest' that writers of fiction seek."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 14 '25 1100w

MCALLISTER, ALISTER (LYNN BROCK, ANTHONY WHARTON, pseud.). Deductions of Colonel Gore. 316p $2 Harper

25-9751

Colonel Gore, an officer and gentleman just returned from twelve months in Central Africa where the record of his adventures and expeditions had been written, arrives at the London home of his friend, Dr Melhuish, to become involved in a sinister tragedy. A murder occurs which is traced to the doctor's home, and Gore, to shield Barbara Melhuish, runs to ground every possible clue. In the course of events he brings to light an infamous blackmailer and morphine addict—but the identity of the actual criminal brings the story to a thrilling close.

"Seldom is a trail (and one peculiarly dark and tangled) leading to so unexpected an end as skilfully devised. Subtly keen also are the analyses of the contrasting characters of the little group of gently bred Londoners, whom Barrington's death vitally effects and who are thus drawn into the maelstrom of its mystery. Indeed, the craftsmanship of the story is too notable for any sophisticated reader to need the assurance given on the slipcover that it is written by a well-known author."

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 18 '25 360w

Cleveland p84 J1 '25

Ind 115:364 S 26 '25 40w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 40w

"The present book adds a well written story, as full of deductions as a nut is of meat." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p17 D 5 '25 130w

"Colonel Gore is a virile, attractive type of person, but without any of those little idiosyncracies which we expect in a master of deduction."

+ Nation and Ath 36:589 Ja 24 '25 180w

"This tale belongs to that kind of mystery stories, so many of which have appeared within the past few months, well written tales of plausible incident and motive, flesh and blood characters, and logically worked-out plots."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 28 '25 660w

"The sleuthing interest is retarded in spots, but perhaps increased in the long run by rather fuller characterizations and more detail than is usual in the mystery tale of commerce."

+ N Y Tribune p10 J1 19 '25 200w

Reviewed by Gerald Gould

Sat R 139:273 Mr 14 '25 200w

"A thoroughly competent detective story."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:936 J1 25 '25 300w

MACAULAY, ROSE. Orphan island. 319p $2
Boni & Liveright [7s 6d Collins]

25-4603

Like Miss Macaulay's "Told by an Idiot" this is a social satire on the Victorian age. Miss Charlotte Smith set forth in 1855 to take some fifty orphans from London to San Francisco. The ship was wrecked in mid-ocean. Abandoned by the crew, Miss Smith and her orphans, the ship's doctor and a nurse were marooned on a desert island. Here, seventy years later they are discovered by a rescue party headed by a Cambridge don, descendant of the deserter captain. The rescuers find a miniature community consisting of two sets of offspring, those of Miss Smith who had married the doctor, and the numerous progeny of the orphans who, as they grew up, had intermarried. A mid-Victorian class system is in control, with the Smiths as the aristocrats and governors of the island and the orphans as workers. Miss Smith is the ruler, and in her senility fancies herself to be Queen Victoria. The social and moral ideas governing the island are those which Miss Smith brought with her from England seventy years before.

"A more delectable piece of fooling than Orphan Island would be hard to find. This tale is made up of preposterous episodes recounted with the most matter-of-fact gravity, and of satire like the fire of machine-guns." E. W. Hawkins

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ap '25 500w

Booklist 21:275 Ap '25

"It is excellent satire, and if to youthful readers it seems inapposite, that is because they can't visualize the object. Their elders will enjoy it." Isabel Paterson

Bookm 61:84 Mr '25 500w

"A most entertaining novel which may justly exceed its predecessors in popularity. 'Orphan Island' is a step upward in the progress of a writer who is rising rapidly in the ranks of novelists. Seldom if ever, since the time of Swift, has England been so adroitly and so sweepingly satirized." B. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 14 '25 500w

Cleveland p31 Mr '25

"The fragments of Queen Victoria left by Mr Lytton Strachey are here pounded into rather vulgar dust; there now seems nothing left of the once sainted figure."

Dial 79:76 J1 '25 60w

"Clever, amusing, and original. Her satire is not harsh, but it is extremely effective."

+ Ind 114:274 Mr 7 '25 150w

"There is a good deal of clever writing in the book, and genuine vitality in the portrait of that remarkable female, Miss Smith."

+ Int Bk R p284 Mr '25 580w

"It is an England in miniature, an England of the 1850's, that Miss Macaulay draws, and she does it with a skill and intimacy that betoken close study. But, then, readers of 'Told by an Idiot' know how well Miss Macaulay knows her England of the immediate past. So large is the deposit of fact beneath the light and facile satire of 'Orphan Island' that the book becomes more than a mere means of mirth. It is no less than a sociological document, but what a sociological document! It would have made Thomas Carlyle laugh." H. S. Gorman

+ Lit R p3 Ja 31 '25 800w

Nation 121:146 J1 29 '25 200w

"The book is casual and formless and it is necessarily so because it has not been imagined as a whole, and is, indeed, unimaginable. Miss Macaulay's wit, more ready than subtle, compensates a little for the absence of elementary, indispensable qualities, but it can do nothing against a primary failure of construction." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 36:418 D 13 '24 530w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 42:134 Mr 25 '25 520w

"My discontent with this study in arrested development is not merely that the process of squeezing out the fun is too elaborate; it is more fundamental. One is overcome by a sort of shame in watching so much intelligence so trivially employed. I hope that Miss Macaulay will not rest long at this stage of compromise with her problems, where the position can only be maintained by forcing liveliness until it degenerates into pertness." J. Franklin

— New Statesman 24:269 D 6 '24 200w

"If 'Orphan Island' is a little too small a compass for her genius, her talents make it at least a landmark of her outward voyage, and it is only our memory of the towering headlands that we weathered in 'Told by an Idiot' that makes us a little impatient with the soft airs and diversions of this tropical, topical island." J. Carter

+ — N Y Times p9 F 1 '25 1550w

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p1 F 15 '25 2300w

"'Orphan Island' is a spot most certainly not to be neglected in the season's literary itinerary."

+ Outlook 139:272 F 18 '25 450w

Pratt p37 spring '25

"Miss Macaulay's last book, 'Told by an Idiot,' though witty was tragic: in 'Orphan Island' she has allowed herself a holiday, and, as her readers will enjoy it almost as much as she appears to have enjoyed it herself, they would be churlish to grudge her the escapade." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 138:551 N 29 '24 900w

"What she has done in 'Orphan Island' is to write a rollicking tale which plays skilfully with her favorite themes and which is, from the standpoint of pure amusement, the best of her books. Frankly adopting an extravagance of manner which is almost burlesque she abandons all attempt to make her favorite Victorians real people living in a real world and allows them to become fantastic figures inhabiting a Victorian Utopia as absurd as Erewhon or Wonderland. Here they disport themselves for our easy ridicule." J. W. Krutch

MACAULAY, ROSE—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 1:555 F 28 '25 1000w

"Miss Macaulay has a threefold opportunity—she satirizes Victorianism, modernity, and general human nature with an equal vigor. It is true that there are missed chances, and after all, the invention is more remarkable for quantity than for quality but it is a charming, acute, laughable, gentle book with no airs or artificialities to it." Andrew Carey

+ Spec 133:788 N 22 '24 1300w

"In satire for its own sake, illuminating or capriciously superior, gayly intellectual in its detachment and unconcern, Miss Macaulay delights. Her wit, her quiet assurance, her occasional flashes of irony or character, are the measure of the reader's enjoyment. 'Orphan Island' is at once the most original and most sustained of her novels."

+ Springfd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 900w

"Miss Macaulay has let contempt for the culture of the Victorian age spoil the consistency of her fable. Her portrait of Miss Smith, tipping fermented juices in her stuffy hut and dragoning her subjects with mingled craft and bluster, is bitter and unlovely. There is relief in the beauty of the nature descriptions, during which the author seems to lay by awhile her satiric aim. But the work is not characteristic of Miss Macaulay, who seldom takes her judgment ready-made."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p794 N 27 '24 670w

Wis Lib Bul 21:90 Mr '25

MCBRIDE, ROBERT MEDILL (ROBERT MEDILL, pseud.). Finland and its people. 118p il $1.50 McBride

914.71 Finland—Description and travel 25-10594

A traveller's guide to the new republic of the north—its history, scenery, industries and resources, government, and economic progress. Separate chapters are given to its principal city, Helsingfors, and to the trio of Finnish cities, Abo, Viborg and Tammerfors. There is a chapter also on the great cataract of Imatra.

Booklist 22:69 N '25

Boston Transcript p5 J1 18 '25 700w

"Mr. Medill's book aims to be informative in a general way, but his real purpose is provocative. He wants to awaken one's wanderlust in the direction of Finland and he contrives to attain this objective in most readable fashion."

+ N Y Tribune p13 S 20 '25 150w

Outlook 140:595 Ag 26 '25 10w

"Mr. Medill tells us all this in the manner of a schoolmaster reading a geography to his pupils. The lesson is rather dull and soon over, but we left it with our ignorance on the subject largely dispelled and not without feelings of gratitude for our enlightenment."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:91 Ag 29 '25 160w

MCCARTHY, JOHN RUSSELL. For the morning. 138p $2 Doubleday

811

25-7769

A book of poems by a disciple of John Burroughs and Walt Whitman who draws his inspiration from nature and his love of all things living.

"We are inclined to feel that, good as his work is, Mr. McCarthy has not quite found himself as yet, and that we can count on his next book being even better than the one before us, which, however, we recommend highly to lovers of nature and of semi-modern verse." J. H., jr.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ag 22 '25 380w

"The artist does not quite keep pace with the essential poet. Though there are fresh felicities of phrasing in the book, the diction is often casual when it might, with no loss of sincerity, be choice. The meter is generally good, but not often magical." K. L. Bates

+ — Lit R p5 Mr 28 '25 400w

"It is a book which will give a great deal of pleasure to many persons. It requires a peculiar, and a very rarely found type of genius to catch and fixate in a line or a stanza the fleeting moods, the sparkle, the lyric overtones of the multifarious objectification around us which we lump together—most clumsily—under the single appellation 'nature.'" P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p24 Mr 22 '25 250w

MCCLINTOCK, MILLER. Street traffic control. 233p il $3 McGraw

352.7 Traffic regulations 25-11813

Mr McClintock's aim, according to the preface of his book, is "to analyze the causes of existing street traffic difficulties, to summarize the experiences of the greater American cities, and to present the conclusions of the foremost practical experts."

"Clear, detailed, scientific."

+ Booklist 22:55 N '25

"Commendation is due the author for having pioneered so ably in bringing out the first book in a field of rapidly growing importance."

+ Eng N 95:108 J1 16 '25 280w

MCCLURE, MRS MARJORIE BARKLEY. Bush that burned. 361p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

25-19169

Morton and Harmony fell in love at first sight, and shortly became engaged. They still had a good deal to learn about each other. Both had strong wills, and in one matter at least, opposite opinions. This was the question of drink. Harmony's most poignant memories were scenes of terror and despair that even as a child had turned her into an involuntary crusader against the habit. On the other hand, the Trench fortunes were founded on a distillery, and Morton was certainly not ashamed of his cellar. Tho they were honestly in love, neither could yield to the other, and the marriage was postponed. It came to an impasse between conviction and love. The dénouement may have surprised the lovers, but it does not astonish the reader.

"Not as good in workmanship and character-drawing as High fires but a very readable novel."

+ Cleveland p124 D '25

"The inherent artistry, the essential interest of the story itself and the air of good breeding that permeates each page, saves the book from being classed as mere temperance propaganda. Moreover, the author boasts a blessing denied to most propagandists—a sense of humor."

+ — N Y Times p8 O 11 '25 660w

"Since it utilizes the W. C. T. U. as a benign background, 'A Bush That Burned' may be said to have already a certain public awaiting it with approval. Hardly an extended tract, 'A Bush That Burned' yet belongs with propagandist fiction."

N Y Tribune p13 D 27 '25 160w

"The breath of life, which should rush into the story freely, so live a person is the author, comes only in gasps, throttled by an arbitrariness (carelessness?) in its telling."

+ — N Y World p7m Ja 10 '26 150w

MACCLURE, VICTOR. Golden Snail; a fantasy of London (Eng title The boost of the Golden Snail). 270p $2 Bobbs [3s 6d Har-rap]

25-22451

Being the blithe adventures of an artist fellow who, believing sincerely in himself, persuades others to believe in him, to the advantage of all concerned. He revivifies the dying trade of that excellent restaurant the Golden Snail, finds valuable antiques for the man who wants them, to whom he sells them—at a price—plays a heroic rôle for a damsel in distress, paints some creditable pictures, and in short becomes a benevolent friend, a famous artist and a very happy husband.

"Whimsical, swiftly moving fantasy."

Boston Transcript p8 N 25 '25 150w

"The Golden Snail," designed purely for entertainment, moves at a brisk tempo and is serenely guiltless of characterization."

N Y Times p16 N 22 '25 550w

"Victor MacClure deserves extremely well of all those in search of that innocent merriment which is all too infrequently bred in a book."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ja 3 '26 230w

Springf'd Republican p5a Ja 10 '26 260w

"A pleasantly inconsequent story which gets along at a rattling pace."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p353 My 21 '25 200w

MCCREARY, FREDERICK R. Northeast corner, 93p $1.25 Houghton

811

25-14228

Poems of the earth, which follow the turn of the seasons from April sowing to the coming of winter. The title-poem is a song to the hills of New England.

"One poem, 'Fiddles,' with a jiggling metre and rhyme, has an interest which most of the others in the book lack. The poems, singly, may be mildly interesting; in quantity, they are decidedly dull."

+ Bookm 62:349 N '25 100w

"Most of Mr. McCreary's poems are songs of nature. He has portrayed nature in all her moods and with the gentleness and love of one who knows her intimately. So in spite of the monotone of subject, there is no monotony of treatment. Although a deep-rooted and powerful love of earth is much in evidence throughout the book, the poet is never overwhelmed by this love; he never becomes maudlin and never loses his clean, clear vision. His most admirable quality is his dignity." W. T. T.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 3 '25 600w

"The work is not flawless. Many poems conclude on a flat note; fail to survive anti-climax. The sentimentality of Whitman is echoed, as well as his strength. But the durable impression of the book is one of beauty—the beauty of the poet's native place—serene and severe."

Babette Deutsch

+ Lit R p2 O 24 '25 350w

"Mr. McCreary's poems have in lesser degree dynamic values like those of Whitman, who was obviously his master."

N Y Tribune p4 Ag 23 '25 180w

"Only in its cumulative vigor and tenderness does this new voice express itself—a voice which, once heard, haunts the listener after many older and louder accents are blurred. No reader with an ear for sensitive communication will forget the warm, woody timbre which distinguishes 'The Northeast Corner.'" L. Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 2:135 S 19 '25 420w

MACCUNN, FLORENCE A. Mary Stuart. 318p il $3 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]

B or 92 Mary Stuart, queen of Scots

The latest life of Mary Stuart is sympathetic but impartial. She is represented as the product of her heredity, witty and intelligent, knowing men and affairs, gracious and generous, reckless and passionate.

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 3 '25 850w

"Miss Maccunn's book adds nothing in particular to the records of history, enters no controversies, but tells the tale well."

Ind 114:246 F 28 '25 80w

"It is a genuine pleasure to recommend to all lovers of glorious even if tragic tales Florence Maccunn's new study of the life and death of the unhappy Queen." A. W. Porterfield

+ Int Bk R p304 Ap '25 1500w

"With the exception of her attitude toward the Darnley murder and the Bothwell marriage, Miss Maccunn's book is a delightful piece of writing, and should introduce many readers to the life of one of the most fascinating, as well as one of the most tragic, figures in history." C: W. Coit

+ Lit R p4 Je 6 '25 720w

"Dramatic as this book is (despite its white still style), it is quite impartial. The two great antagonists, Mary and Elizabeth, are painted without partisanship and with full allowances for the inevitability of their opposition and even of their acts." C: W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p15 F 1 '25 2650w

N Y Tribune p8 Mr 15 '25 200w

"This is a life of the much-written Mary of Scotland, told by a woman from a woman's point of view, and well and simply constructed. It contains no new material, new theories, or new interpretations, but is by no means a mere compilation. Readers who wish a competent biography, which does not assume pre-knowledge of the woman and the period, will find this book acceptable. The style is easy and the characterization excellent."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:483 Ja 24 '25 70w

MACCURDY, GEORGE GRANT. Human origins; a manual of prehistory. 2v 440:516p il $10 (42s) Appleton

571 Man, Prehistoric. Man—Origin. Archeology 24-20653

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Professor MacCurdy's account of prehistoric man does not always make clear the part that rests upon indisputable evidence, and the part where the insufficient evidence has been pieced with hypothesis and conjecture. In this respect it will present grave difficulties to beginners in prehistory, not yet familiar with the nature of the supporting evidence. On the other hand, the exceptionally ample and accurate lists and classifications of sites given throughout the text and in the appendices are invaluable, not only to beginners but to everyone who has occasion to verify localities or references. . . Both Professor MacCurdy and the readers of 'Human Origins' are to be congratulated on this new, vivid, and scholarly reconstruction of the life and environment of prehistoric man." C. D. Matthew

+ Am Anthropol 27:451 J1 '25 2300w

"A convenient, authoritative, well proportioned and balanced handbook of prehistory, primarily cultural in scope but with due regard to the organic and geological factors involved, and covering the entire stretch from the first beginnings of genus Homo to the end of the undocumentary period of the Iron Age in Europe—to the threshold of history in the narrower sense, in short." A. L. Kroeber

+ Am Hist R 30:568 Ap '25 1100w

"Dr. MacCurdy's book has the merit of both opportuneness and fullness. Exploration has advanced to such a stage in recent years in Europe that a coherent presentation of the prehistoric period of man's story may now be written. By personal inspection of many of the sites and much of the material recovered from them, he is able to organize a comprehensive account of many of the significant steps in the evolution of human culture." C. A. Kofoid, M.D.

+ Am J Pub Health 15:153 F '25 950w

"A very important contribution to European archaeology." Fay-Cooper Cole

+ Am J Soc 30:481 Ja '25 700w

"The fruit of nearly thirty years of study. Human Origins, particularly the volume on the Old Stone Age, will be a reference work for students for many years to come, and the care shown in its preparation and publication, together with the many excellent illustrations, makes it a particularly attractive one." Lorine Pruette

MACCUDY, G. G.—Continued

+ Am R 3:371 My '25 2500w

Booklist 21:221 Mr '25

Cleveland p71 J1 '25

"Dr. MacCurdy's book is a monument of painstaking research and analysis of the evidence on Prehistoric Man. It is one of the most notable contributions to the science of human paleontology since Osborn's 'Men of the Old Stone Age,' and should be in every public and scientific library." Madison Grant

+ Int Bk R p511 J1 '25 2400w

J Geol 33:188 F '25 160w

"While there are chapters which make delightful reading, on the whole the work is what it is called, a manual." M. J. Herskovits

+ Nation 120:670 Je 10 '25 820w

"The book is well written, and the easy style carries the reader along splendidly." W. J. Perry

+ Nation and Ath 36:445 D 20 '24 1000w

"Dr. MacCurdy is well qualified to produce a student's manual of prehistory with first-hand information, and his two handsome volumes now before us will be widely welcomed. He is cautious—perhaps too cautious—in expressing opinions of his own, but his work is most exhaustive in summarising the conclusions of the authors quoted by him." A. S. W.

+ Nature 116:273 Ag 22 '25 600w

"Should be read by all who take keen interest in the gaining science of anthropology." A. G. Ingalls

+ Outlook 140:470 J1 29 '25 60w

"The illustrations are many and good and they, no doubt, explain the kind of paper used which makes the books far too heavy. The author has had a very wide experience as an excavator in France and in other parts of Europe; he is well acquainted with the collections of prehistoric material in European museums; and his knowledge of physical anthropology is that gained through many years of study. He is thus one of the few men qualified to give us an authoritative book upon the complicated subject of man's origin." A. M. Tozzer

+ Sat R of Lit 1:579 Mr 7 '25 650w

"Two delightful volumes." J. K. H

+ Survey 53:483 Ja 15 '25 300w

"The present work is masterly as regards the classification and co-ordination of very diverse material under a well-devised system of heads. The student will therefore find it invaluable as a book of reference—more especially as it is supplemented with two appendices, of which the one deals exhaustively with the stratigraphy of palaeolithic sites, while the other catalogues the known examples of the art of that period, each list being equipped with a full bibliography. If one had any fault to find with this admirable digest, it would be merely on the ground that the author's personal opinions are all too discreetly veiled."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p861 D 18 '24 1100w

Reviewed by H. F. Osborn

Yale R n s 15:167 O '25 850w

MACCUDY, JOHN THOMPSON. Psychology of emotion, morbid and normal. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 589p $7.50 Harcourt [25s K. Paul]

157 Emotions 25-5218

"In non-technical language, and with remarkable fullness of detail, it deals with all forms of mental aberration, from mere states of mental anxiety or depression to insanity itself, appeal being made for the conclusions reached to a large number of case histories. The subject is dealt with from both psychiatric and psychological points of view, and the author outlines his own psychological hypothesis as that of mental processes which in continuous operation not merely parallel consciousness, but actually support and nourish it."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 22:58 N '25

Boston Transcript p11 Mr 28 '25 580w

"The author's effort to describe mental symptoms in terms of common speech is not successful. His elaborate glossary shows that. But the verbatim reports are certainly interesting." Woodbridge Riley

+ Nation 121:668 D 9 '25 450w

"The analysis of one of the largest clinical groups together with the wealth of case material make the book invaluable to the psychologist who has not had the opportunity of studying psychopathology at first hand. A clear and useful glossary is appended for the use of those unfamiliar with the technical terminology, and the book may be understood by the general reader as well as by the professional psychologist."

+ Nation and Ath 37:302 Je 6 '25 160w

"The author expresses a hope that his readers may be drawn not only from psychiatrists and psychologists but also from laymen interested in psychological problems. If this hope be fulfilled, the ranks of the former will be recruited from the latter. A person who has read and understood this book and studied the work of the authorities referred to in it can scarcely be styled a layman thereafter. Should he find his interest flag, the short but excellent chapter on treatment may be relied on to revive it."

Nature 116:535 O 10 '25 280w

Reviewed by A. Coralnik

N Y Times p12 J1 12 '25 450w

"An extremely important book in the quantity of 'case-histories' it gives"

+ Spec 134:202 F 7 '25 140w

MCCUTCHEON, GEORGE BARR. Romeo in Moon Village. 344p $2 Dodd

25-18357

The rollicking adventures of a Romeo at large. When Eulora sent a hasty note changing her plans on the very night of the elopement, Romeo Egerton felt quite justified in changing his. So rather than wait the appointed nineteen days as his late love directed, he took the train to Moon Village and there embarked on a lively career as factotum to the five Barrons. Lively and alluring, these exacting young creatures put Eulora from his mind, until in due course she reentered the scene and claimed her Romeo.

"A very readable tale, active and blithe. The fact that it has no serious significance does not in the least detract from its entertaining qualities." H: H. Balos

+ Int Bk R p822 N '25 400w

"There has always been a delightful streak of whimsicality in Mr. McCutcheon's books, but in this, his latest, he has given it full play. In fact one punctuates the reading with a series of chuckles and snorts and has a real good time." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p9 N 7 '25 220w

"Mr. McCutcheon has written, as is his habit, another good-natured and readable novel. A bit quaint, well spiced with romance and colored with broad, jovial humor, 'Romeo in Moon Village' slips through the reader's imagination with gratifying ease and celerity."

+ N Y Times p26 N 29 '25 450w

"George Barr McCutcheon brings humor, often near farce, to bear on the tale of an errant lover in 'Romeo in Moon Village.'"

Sat R of Lit 2:264 O 31 '25 20w

"Mr. McCutcheon must have sat up nights to invent both Moon village and its inhabitants and there's a surprise for the reader just around every corner and a chuckle in between."

+ Springf'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 200w

MACDONALD, EDWINA LEVIN. Lady of New Orleans. 314p $2 Macaulay

25-16899

There is a legend that trouble follows the black-eyed, yellow-haired Beauséants. Joan, youngest of the house and last of the line, is to prove the truth of the legend once more in the turbulent course of her life. On her wedding day, while all New Orleans holds festival and the Madri Gras is at its height, the first blow falls. Her lover takes another bride. The shock to her pride is great, for Joan is a Beauséant, but the blow to her heart is greater. On an impulse she cannot control, she goes one night to Albert and they flee together to California. Their stolen love does not bring unalloyed happiness. Quarrels grow more frequent, reconciliations less ecstatic. Then Albert goes back to his wife and Joan is left to fend for herself and her son. She makes a wild bargain with fate and is on the point of losing when true love appears and the spectre of trouble is banished.

N Y Times p9 S 6 '25 500w

N Y Tribune p14 O 18 '25 160w

"Is a crude and weepy variation of 'She Loved Too Well.'"

— Sat R of Lit 2:164 S 26 '25 100w

Springf'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 150w

MACDONALD, JAMES RAMSAY. Wanderings and excursions. 319p $3 Bobbs [6s J. Cape]

910 Voyages and travels. Scotland—Description and travel. England—Description and travel. Europe—Policies and government

[25-16150]

Sketches of wayfaring in the Scottish highlands, England and Wales and memories of travel further afield—in Europe, the Near East, India, Egypt and South Africa. These are full of the author's love of the open road and his appreciation of nature. The politician speaks only in the last part of the book, where are gathered some recollections of the International, impressions of Jean Jaurès and Keir Hardie and a sketch of socialism during the war.

Booklist 22:110 D '25

"A book so different from anything that any previous Prime Minister could have written. Here we are shown a man whose most genuine delight is in the solitudes of wild nature, or in passing unobserved among strange peoples. The men who can think and write like that can never become the ordinary dull politician or economist." H; W. Nevins

+ Nation 121:sup428 O 14 '25 1500w

"Colourful and tender impressions. In them the politician has, for the most part, doffed his politics and taken to the open road—with, as we dare to suspect, a George Borrow in his pocket and a Scottish ditty on his lips."

+ Nation and Ath 37:300 Je 6 '25 560w

"The collection, while interesting, is singularly ill-balanced. It would obviously have been preferable to confine this book to the subject-matter of the non-political articles, and to have reserved the political ones for a further collection of the same kind. One would then have had, within the compass of the present volume, a coherent book which many of the author's political opponents could have read with delight; for Mr. MacDonald is excellent company whether on a walking tour at home with knapsack and stick—his favorite recreation—or travelling further afield."

— + New Statesman 25:486 Ag 8 '25 300w

"This book has charm. To begin with, Mr. MacDonald knows how to write. He would have taken high rank among English men of letters if he had not chosen to be a minority statesman. Reading the present volume by bits here and there one might be inclined to criticize Mr. MacDonald as a phrasemaker and arranger and polisher of words which when strung together sparkle a little too brilliantly and obtrude their artifice. Reading straight through or in longer instalments the impression of artifice drops away and one perceives that the colorful language never in fact overdone, is only the natural expression of a mind curiously sympathetic for this age with colorful things in nature, with history and legend, and with common happenings about." W; MacDonald

+ N Y Times p1 S 6 '25 3000w

Outlook 141:203 O 7 '25 30w

"Apart from the adventitious interest which is conferred on them by Mr. MacDonald's position in the world of politics, they are not very striking. The best are those which describe a number of walking tours in the Highlands, the Lake District, and other regions lying 'away from the clamour and offence of cars.' These show a pleasing sensibility to the charms of wild nature, though they would be easier to read if the author had not so frequently taken refuge from a possible charge of egotism in the editorial or pontifical 'we.'"

Sat R 139:498 My 9 '25 200w

"Frankly, it is a curious pleasure to find a politician enjoying a life other than the political. And the pleasure is magnified considerably if, like Mr. MacDonald, he is able to tell his adventures with considerable grace and gusto."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:247 O 24 '25 260w

"It is not quite easy to define the charm of this book. That it has charm is certain, for it has many grave defects and yet is so pleasant and readable that it must have a compensating charm. If there is any reader of this paper who feels at all weak in his political allegiance, we would warn him earnestly against this book. It would infallibly make him—or her—impatient to serve under so charming a leader."

+ Spec 134:978 Je 13 '25 360w

"If holes may be picked here and there in the political opinions expressed in these letters of foreign travel, who can fail to be diverted by the author's description of immediately post-war Paris as reminiscent of a 'second-hand clothes shop' or his comparison of the street odours of Alexandria with 'the air of a long-lost haggis?' In his sketches of political activities Mr. MacDonald has a lightness of touch and a humorous outlook which may well surprise the bourgeois reader of this book who has not been accustomed to read his articles in Labour publications."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p293 Ap 30 '25 920w

MACDONALD, PHILIP. The rasp. 299p $2 Dial press

26-152

"The story is the vehicle for detailing the cleverness of Anthony Gethryn, amateur detective, in a case where a cabinet minister (the story is laid in the country near London) has been mysteriously killed with a rasp, an implement not well known. Naturally such an unmitigated mystery yarn would limp, were it not accompanied by a romance, wherein not everything runs too smoothly. The hero is cast, for a time, as the villain, while, also for a time, the heroine of the second romance seems likely to become implicated in crime. The amateur detective, besides being endowed with continuous sense of humor and high spirits, has considerable to his credit in the late war, which left him a colonel with a slight limp."—Springf'd Republican

"Here is a mystery story that is as refreshing as a mountain spring. It fairly bubbles over with mystery. The plot is believable. The style of the writer is clear, and he writes with an evident realization of the importance of what he is doing. It is, in fact, a charming discovery to find a workman who does not take himself too seriously when entertainment only is his aim."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 7 '25 250w

MACDONALD, PHILIP—Continued

"It is a clever story and full of thrills."

+ Lit R p7 S 12 '25 50w

"A detective story of high rank."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 220w

MCDOWALL, WILLIAM. Indestructible union; rudiments of political science for the American citizen. 249p $2.50 Little

320.1 Nationalism and nationality. United States—Politics and government. Political science 25-6394

A discussion from a distinctly conservative viewpoint of the nature and meaning of a nation, the value of nationhood, the extent to which the United States has achieved national unity and the influences which have worked for and against the preservation of unity in America. Professor McDougall is an apologist for the patriotic and nationalistic attitude as against the more extreme ideals of internationalism. In his concluding chapter he discusses the question of American participation in world affairs.

"Mr. McDougall's style makes it easy to read even those portions of the book with which the reader may most violently disagree. The book, however, is in no real sense a contribution and will certainly not add to the author's reputation." L. W. Lancaster

— + Ann Am Acad 122:272 N '25 230w

Booklist 22:103 D '25

"The most striking feature about the book is its moderation of statement and its well-founded and logical inferences therefrom. Through his work in social psychology at Harvard Professor McDougall is peculiarly fitted to pass upon these questions, and in addition to his technical knowledge he is able to write in a simple and lucid manner. The result is a work that is readable as well as socially important." E. B. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 18 '25 1200w

Reviewed by H. L. Pangborn

Lit R p5 Ag 8 '25 230w

"Professor McDougall's book is a disappointment to anyone who looks to philosophers to bring a judicious and scientific calm into political discussion. Perhaps it is the publishers rather than the author who are responsible for its presentation with sentiments commonly called klannish on the paper jacket. But surely no one but the great psychologist himself is to blame for foggy mysticism in discussing the ethics of nationalism and for conumelious treatment of all opinions contrary to his own." Lyman Bryson

— + New Repub 44:131 S 23 '25 1100w

"For normal persons there is inspiration in the account that Professor McDougall gives of nationhood in general and of the United States in particular." C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 221:759 Je '25 750w

"The book may be recommended almost without reservations as in a very high degree instructive and interesting."

+ Outlook 140:70 My 13 '25 600w

Pratt p8 autumn '25

"A most timely and important message."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:744 My 9 '25 480w

"The Indestructible Union" through its examination of nationalism as a way of life for both states and individuals, should help to arouse to fruitful effort the latent American desire steadily to improve the methods of living."

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 1300w

Survey 55:243 N 15 '25 100w

"The attractive style is at once easy to follow and stimulating to think about. As regards subject matter, the merit of the book is very unequal in different parts. Those which deal with history are generally good; those which deal with political science are less satisfactory. A presentation which is on the whole clear, fair, and sensible." A. T. Hadley

+ — Yale R n s 14:788 Jl '25 1100w

MCDOWALL, ARTHUR SYDNEY. Rumination. 180p $2 Houghton [6s Heinemann] 824

Written in the leisurely, meditative manner of the older essayists these well-named "ruminations" are the reveries of one who laments the rapid tempo of the age. This theme is the undertone of his book, well illustrated in his second essay, an appreciation of the contemplative and tranquil cow. Contents: The starers; Cows; The church on the hill; Saturdays; Sundays; A new order? "Foreknowledge absolute"; Travellers' joy; An afternoon in the marshes; The quarters; A cosmopolitan parson; A contrast in travel; Autobiography as art.

"This is so good a book of essays that it makes us almost resolve not to read anything but essays for a whole month." J. R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 19 '25 650w

"The reflection of a quiet, cultured mind, fond of the byways of literature. They are highly independent and individual—essays' beyond all possibility of cavil."

+ Nation and Ath 38:sup256 N 14 '25 300w

"Mr. McDowall is at his best when describing ordinary people and ordinary things, since his sympathy and penetration make them interesting and even romantic. The three studies in literary history with which the book closes are in a sense less interesting, though admirably done."

+ New Statesman 26:340 D 26 '25 580w

"Because the essays contain more thought than comment, they reveal personality less directly, though none the less surely. They have besides something of Lamb's power to seize the subtleties of a mood, the essence of an atmosphere. This power, combined with a fine descriptive pen, reproduces the seeming eternal changelessness of the marshes and the different changelessness of a church on a hill. There is, too, the charm of a rich literary background skilfully and easily handled." Ruth Seinfeld

N Y Tribune p11 D 13 '25 200w

"Mr. Arthur McDowall, an English essayist of some charm and originality, evidently writes to satisfy his occasional need for authorship and not as a matter of professional habit or necessity. Thus he has chosen, gracefully enough, the essay form, and in it he is never without something to say."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:343 N 28 '25 280w

"He writes with much care and at times with an ironic humour on many entertaining subjects, but somehow we never feel that we have been brought into any close acquaintance with him. Without this sense of personality, the book remains somewhat tame and trivial fare."

+ — Spec 135:722 O 24 '25 100w

"It is in the quality of Mr. McDowall's reveries to draw the reader into the magic circle with him; the ruminatory mode is infectious."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p615 S 24 '25 1050w

MACELWEE, ROY SAMUEL. Port development. 456p il $5 McGraw

380 Harbors

25-10000

"This new book by the author of Ports and terminal facilities covers the reasons for port development, its value to the nation and the port city, a comparison of general features of many of the world's ports, an analysis of the various physical features of a port that may make it more attractive to shipping, balanced cargoes, tonnage market, grain exports, rail and water rates, cost and service at the terminals of switching, lightering and carting and a discussion of the advantages of free ports."—Publisher's note

Booklist 22:10 O '25

"Dr. MacElwee's work as a whole is well done. His wide travel and large experience enable him to present Hamburg and Seattle as intimately as Charleston. Ports are treated according to their physical and traffic advantages in a way which is clear alike to the harbor commissioner, the railroad president, the steamship owner, and the individual in Bushville who occasionally exports a little freight." M. W. Williams

+ Eng N 94:1027 Je 18 '25 680w
N Y New Tech Bks 10:38 Jl '25
Pratt p18 autumn '25

MCREE, INEZ NELLIE (CANFIELD) (MRS
² M. M. MCREE). Young people's cook book, or, How the Dayton's cooked at home and in camp. 290p $2 Crowell
641 Cookery 25-15973

The Dayton children, already familiar to young readers of Mrs McFee's books, here invade the kitchen and learn to cook. They also learn something about foods, what a balanced meal is and how to prepare it, and later joyously apply their knowledge to preparing picnic lunches and meals in camp.

J Home Econ 18:47 Ja '26 50w

"This is really a cook-book for the whole family—an able, almost indispensable reference-book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:283 N 7 '25 230w

MCREE, WILLIAM. Sunlight in New Granada.
275p $3.50 Doubleday

918.6 Colombia—Description and travel.
Colombia—Social life and customs 25-21781

Mr McFee discards the political name of Colombia and revives the name of New Granada by which the old viceroyalty was known. His idea is to reveal in a series of pictures the character of the land and its people, which he sees thru a veil of romance.

"The style is that same steady, virile, and altogether charming medium of Mr. McFee's fiction."

+ Booklist 22:157 Ja '26
Cleveland p114 D '25

"The book is easily read; facile in style, a series of light and often brilliant chapters dealing with episodes, places or people. It has, too, a subsoil of long-considered, sagacious, and often poignant comprehension of the nature of the Colombians, a closeness to their earth and their problems, that will make a second reading productive of an increased entertainment and of stirring deductions not perhaps apparent at first glance." F. O'Brien

+ Lit R p3 D 5 '25 280w

"It is a sympathetic and penetrating book: there is something of the quality of first-rate fiction in its detached, good-humored point of view, the selective handling of the material, and the fascination with which characters and local colour are pounced upon and brought home as trophies."

+ New Statesman 26:supxii D 12 '25 450w

"The casual reader will follow Mr. McFee with delight; and while this sort of book escapes the lecturer on salesmanship, McFee's could be read by him, and by his pupils, as a profitable handbook on the psychology of the Latin-American."

+ N Y Times p3 O 25 '25 1200w

"If you are of the statistically minded, if fancy and a cultivated poetic prose irritate you as out of place in travel narratives, then Mr. McFee's book is not for you, and you are here-with advised to stick to the ponderous encyclopaedic variety." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p24 D 6 '25 820w

Reviewed by W: Johnston

N Y World p7m N 15 '25 160w

"The Colombia depicted is a country seen through the eyes of a romantic novelist, who has 'striven to breathe life, not only into the figures that pass over the pages, but into the landscape, the great river, the vast white stillness of the distant snow peaks, the breathless heat and filth of the river town, the bleak mediævalism of the high plateaux.'" Earle Walbridge

+ Outlook 141:448 N 18 '25 130w

"'Sunlight in New Granada' is by no means the ordinary dull travelogue of the professional tourist, but is written with all the charm of Mr. McFee's fiction style. Indeed, it is doubtful whether Mr. McFee can write anything else but fiction, so strong is his urge to romanticize even the common facts of daily experience and human intercourse." E. E. Paramore, jr.

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:256 O 31 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p825 D 3 '25 680w

MCREE, WILLIAM. Swallowing the anchor.
311p $2 Doubleday
824 25-11219

"A revised and enlarged collection of notes made by an engineer in the merchant service who secured leave of absence from his ship to investigate and report upon the alleged superiority of life ashore." (Subtitle) About a third of the essays, mostly reprinted from periodicals, are book reviews.

Booklist '22:23 O '25

"This is a book which I can recommend with complete heartiness." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:586 Jl '25 100w

"Rarely in a book of this sort is so much discoverable of its writer's experiences, observations and personality. It deals with life itself as well as with the things of the soul and the body that are the essence of life. It is, as Mr. McFee calls it, 'a report upon the alleged superiority of life ashore,' but it is also a report upon the blending of the life of the sea and the life of the land. It forms an excellent supplement to his fiction." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 23 '25 1450w
Cleveland p105 N '25

"Life ashore, like life at sea, covers a multitude of human experiences. This book is Mr. McFee's comment on some of them. It is well worth reading, being both the work of an artist and a man of letters who writes with the racy wisdom of sea-going men who have learned their trade and meditated on many things."

+ Ind 115:220 Ag 22 '25 160w

"Whether 'Swallowing the Anchor' is as good a piece of work as the author's earlier 'Harbors of Memory' or 'An Ocean Tramp,' is an inconsiderable item of relative values. It is a more critical William McFee who charms us with his capacity for human understanding, and perhaps his regard for the land to which he has been temporarily wedded has clouded the fresh horizon of his vision. Essentially, he is himself—a seaman on books and a bookman on the sea." C. M. Purdy

+ Lit R p2 Jl 3 '25 700w

"Objectively Mr. McFee has little to say, in spite of wide experiences and extensive travels. Subjectively he has much to communicate—of which there is evidence in the twenty-seven essays, mostly on literary topics, collected in this book."

Nation 121:146 Jl 29 '25 150w

"Most readers will find his memories of travel and of the merchant marine interesting."

Nation and Ath 38:sup256 N 14 '25 80w

New Statesman 26:90 O 31 '25 120w

"Throughout the book, along with great unevenness of manner, there is a deal of shrewd observation and an abundance of pungent philosophizing." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p5 My 24 '25 2550w

"A book conceived not in the library but out on the open deck. It goes with a stiff breeze and a pipe, and one may as well admit that under such conditions, Mr. McFee may talk to his heart's content, for he will always please his listeners." Harry Hansen

+ N Y Tribune p3 Je 21 '25 850w

McFEE, WILLIAM—Continued

"All the papers deal with McFee's two great preoccupations; literature and the sea. There are golden words on the subjects of learning a trade; of becoming an author; of traveling. In the latter paper one rubs one's eyes to discover the irascible engineer advising a young correspondent to take French leave of a ship. He is very human." Hulbert Foothier

+ Sat R of Lit 1:909 J1 18 '25 700w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p738 N 5 '25 480w

MACGOWAN, ALICE, and NEWBERRY, PERRY. Shaken down. 309p $2 Stokes

25-3545

Jerry Boyne, Patrolman 732, is again the central figure of a detective story. While on his beat in the Nob Hill section of San Francisco, Jerry is startled by a piercing scream. A cab dashes down the street, and a few feet away a woman's figure crumples to the ground, dead. She is the nursemaid of four-year-old Jamie Claiborne, who has mysteriously disappeared and whose millionaire father refuses to be "shaken down" by paying the child's ransom. This is the problem which Jerry takes into his own hands and which his courage and resource finally solve.

"Lest one be deceived into believing the story true, from the circumstance, perhaps, that the San Francisco catastrophe, mentioned in it actually happened, the authors have prefaced their book with a confession that 'this story is, in its detail, pure fiction.' Their statement is quite unnecessary: no truth could be stranger than 'Shaken Down.' The authors must, however, be complimented on their ability to crowd within the limits of three hundred-odd pages so much excitement."

Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '25 320w

"If you want a thrill, read 'Shaken Down.' You'll never guess how it ends until it comes to the very last page." Madelin Leof

+ Lit R p9 F 21 '25 200w

N Y Times p9 F 15 '25 500w

N Y Tribune p12 Je 21 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p481 J1 16 '25 100w

MCGRANE, REGINALD CHARLES. Panic of 1837; some financial problems of the Jacksonian era. 260p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press]

332 Panics. Finance—United States 25-2083

From 1830 on, a period of reckless expansion swept the country East, South and West. Real estate boomed, bank abuses sprang up, and every sort of enterprise found ready backing. Collapse was inevitable. The book surveys these causes leading up to the panic of 1837, the crisis itself with its attendant results, and the long struggle for rehabilitation in which the political and financial leaders of the day were involved.

Reviewed by A. P. Usher

Am Econ R 15:490 S '25 650w

"Obviously this little book is not meant to be a definitive study of politics and finance in the 'thirties. It is a good beginning of what can be made a notable contribution to the literature of American history. One could wish that the author had avoided prejudice by delaying publication until he could present the matured results of his research with more comprehensive and exhaustive treatment. In ranging about his central theme, he has not been able to give adequate consideration to any one of his problems. He has brought out side-lights, but they have blurred the vision of the reader. They are stronger than the main stream of illumination."

A. B. Darling

+ Am Hist R 30:866 J1 '25 420w

"One looks in vain for a searching analysis of such fundamental problems as the relations between credit and prices, loans and deposits, or the reactions of the security market to the industrial conditions of the country. The book also fails to supply us with the necessary statistical information without which the economist finds it almost impossible to work." Herman Silverman

— Lit R p13 Ap 11 '25 250w

"His book is a contribution of notable value." W: MacDonald

+ Sat R of Lit 1:881 J1 4 '25 920w

MACGRATH, HAROLD. Cellini plaque. 252p $2 Doubleday

25-21764

A Cellini plaque, an exquisite bit of carving in chrysoprase? The American collector scoffed. But the Italian dealer persisted. And so it came about that Ellison, seeing and handling this rare antique, made a headlong effort to buy it. Peruzzi, the old Italian artist and connoisseur who owned the piece, was reluctant to sell. But there were his debts at Monte Carlo to consider, and there was of course his daughter. As soon as Ellison met the lovely Betta he could consider nothing else, and even the discovery of the colossal fraud her father had perpetrated did not deter him from making her his wife and taking her away from the hard old man to America. Peruzzi was still resourceful. He followed, only to capitulate at last to another Peruzzi. The story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Booklist 22:163 Ja '26

"With a very slightly lighter touch, with the good taste to make the scoundrel a little more lovable, this would have been a masterly, bit of writing. But as it is, it is not half bad."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 11 '25 260w

"It is a pleasant, lively little tale, light as thistledown, but well told and amusing. Signor Peruzzi's whimsical humor, his delighted appreciation of his own skill in 'rooking' the credulous, his daring and his restless mentality are all entertainingly portrayed." L. M. Field

+ Lit R p6 D 19 '25 350w

"It is a fascinating yarn, swiftly and cleverly told."

+ N Y Times p25 Ja 10 '26 420w

MACGREGOR, MRS MARY ESTHER (MILLER) (MARIAN KEITH, pseud.). Gentleman adventurer. 301p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

24-30857

The Hudson Bay territory furnishes the background for the adventures of Charles Stuart, a stalwart young Scotchman who casts his lot with the Hudson Bay company for a term of five years. His adventures date from the day he starts his trip across the ice-bound seas and his rescue of Marie Rose, a charming half-breed girl, from an icy death. After being stationed at York Factory for a time an unscrupulous factor banishes him to a bleak post on the outskirts of civilization. Charles undergoes hardships which severely try his mettle but he returns to his friends a hero.

Booklist 21:303 My '25

"The Gentleman Adventurer' moves surely; and it breathes a spirit of health and youth, youth without horned spectacles and mental complexes. It deals with simple, robust qualities—loyalty, gratitude, righteous indignation, playing the game. It is a good novel to put in the hands of a boy, and a novel which should appeal to the adult whose palate has not been vitiated by pathological fiction." M. G., jr.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '25 450w

Cleveland p83 J1 '25

"A Gentleman Adventurer' is a notable piece of work. There is no better memorial of the Hudson's Bay Company that I know of." Austin Bothwell

+ Int Bk R p210 F '25 600w

"In the first place, it has all the earmarks of verity, which is an excellent thing in fiction.

The characters are well drawn, whether of Scot, Indian or half-breed, and they all act like human beings."

+ Lit R p10 Ja 31 '25 250w

N Y Times p22 F 1 '25 650w

"A stirring tale stirringly told."

+ N Y World p9e Ja 25 '25 140w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p157 Mr 5 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

MACHARD, ALFRED. Wolf man (The were-wolf). 319p $2 Clode [7s 6d T. Butterworth]

25-10059

"The wedding feast of Vincent Paroli and Louisa Babulard in the village of Nogent is interrupted by a strange cook and a suspicious chumamender, who turn out to be sleuths. As Vincent is in reality none other than Leon Bernier, an escaped convict, he flees with his young son, Boubou, the offspring of a former marriage. The pair escape from the wolf-man only to fall into the hands of a villainous brotherhood known as 'The Links in the Chain,' and it looks for a time as though they might be sacrificed to the law. Coffins, corpses and cut-throats follow in swift succession, and the reader hopes that the bridegroom did not really murder M. Malvinat, the tax collector of Ploubalet, after all and that he may soon return to Louisa."—N Y Tribune

"The final situation is unforeseen and immensely clever. We perceive clearly that Mr. Machard will go far, perchance, even, till one sees the shadow of Victor Hugo's mantle hanging above him."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 8 '25 300w

"M. Machard goes in for uncompromising realism and applied brutality. He is not sentimental about his rogues, and they are genuine horrors." Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 150w

N Y Times p7 Ag 2 '25 320w

"Despite the ecstatic and sentimental manner of the yarn, it is well spun of its kind and easy reading."

+ N Y Tribune p8 J1 19 '25 180w

"A man hunt is always interesting reading, and this account of the hunting of a French ex-convict is no exception to the rule. The book reads like a translation, but, nevertheless, carries the interest of the reader on through the various adventures of the unfortunate Bernier and his little son Boubou to its happy but rather inevitable conclusion."

+ Spec 134:603 Ap 11 '25 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p157 Mr 5 '25 160w

MCHEHRY, A. DORIS, and COOPER, MARJORIE M. Diabetic diet, a handbook for diabetics; with a preface by J. A. Gilchrist and F. G. Banting. 62p $2 Harper 613.2 Diabetes. Diet in disease 25-4976

"The problem confronting all diabetic patients is the necessity for a rigid adherence to a carefully weighed and prepared diet, and at the same time to obtain a sufficient variety in food to prevent the dietary restrictions from becoming irksome. The use of Insulin is a safe and satisfactory procedure only when coordinated with strict dietetic supervision. The purpose of this book is to present to the diabetic in the simplest form the information which will enable him to understand his disease from the standpoint of diet, and which will aid him in carrying out the necessary restrictions in diet prescribed by his physician."—Preface

"Will be of assistance both to those in charge of diabetic patients and to the patients themselves." Lettie Gay

+ N Y Tribune p12 Ap 26 '25 130w

"A very valuable handbook for diabetics with recipes that are recommended by Dr. F. G. Banting, the discoverer of the insulin treatment."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:195 J1 '25

MACINNES, CHARLES MALCOLM. British commonwealth and its unsolved problems. 175p $1.75 (5s) Longmans

942 Great Britain—Colonies. India—Politics and government. Imperial federation

25-8764

The author devotes the first three chapters of the book to a consideration of Dominion status, the fourth explains the principles of trusteeship as applied to Malaya, Africa and the West Indies. The bulk of the book discusses the problems of India, her struggle for self government at home and the racial conflicts in her settlements abroad. A short concluding chapter suggests means by which mutual sympathy and understanding within the Empire may be promoted.

"It is easy here and there to disagree with Mr. MacInnes, even violently, and to point out a few minor errors; but his book may be confidently recommended to people of all views as a brief, vivid, and stimulating study of matters of great importance to all citizens of the British Empire." H. H. Wrong

+ Canadian Hist R 6:245 S '25 500w

"No book of this size could contain an adequate treatment of the Britannic Question, nevertheless it is a very useful and readable introduction to the subject." A. G. D.

+ Hist Outlook 16:286 O '25 250w

"An excellent book, carefully balanced, based on much thought and study, and illuminated by a clear vision of present and future alike."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p371 My 28 '25 200w

MCINTYRE, JOHN THOMAS. Young man's fancy. 174p $1.50 Stokes

25-8270

Day after day he paused before the window and gave silent greeting to his lady. Day after day, fresh joys, fresh pangs, for tho she seemed more lovely each time he saw her, it was not at Pickering that she gazed, nor toward him that she held out her little hand. She was only a brown-eyed lady of wax, this goddess of his, one of a group in a downtown display, but Pickering was a poet, and poets are like that. Ultimately Pickering had his reward.

"'A Young Man's Fancy' is gossamer stuff, heart-warming and humorous, and a complete delight." J. F. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 16 '25 400w

"'A Young Man's Fancy' is as whimsically delightful—well, as John T. McIntyre's own personality. There are a sweetness and warmth behind the delicacy of touch that bring a throb to the heart." J. C. Kofoid

+ Lit R p4 Ap 25 '25 350w

"Structurally, the story is excellent. Its only drawback is its plain, naïve style, that infant 'American' style Dr. Canby describes. So fanciful a tale demands a vivid yet dainty touch-and-go flavor, such as is found in Kipling's 'Brushwood Boy.'"

+ N Y Times p24 Je 7 '25 280w

N Y Tribune p8 Je 14 '25 100w

"It is soft, sweet stuff, but gracefully written, and should provide appropriate reading for those who have lately parted with their belief in Santa Claus."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:828 Je 13 '25 260w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

MACKAIL, DENIS GEORGE. Greenery street. 273p $2 Houghton

25-15761

The story of Greenery street, that Mecca of home hunting lovers, with its thirty-six trim little houses just big enough for two, is naturally the story of one of its young married couples. They are the Fosters, real young people, likable, laughable, and dear—winsome, impractical Felicity and her clean, upstanding Ian. They have no problems save one of cooks and accounts, and there is no vexing sex question to dim their gaiety or mar their mutual trust. The shadow of unhappiness falls briefly over Felicity's loved sister and her husband, but tragedy is averted and serenity restored to Greenery street.

MACKAIL, DENIS GEORGE—Continued

Booklist 22:118 D '25

"Never before has he written anything half so entrancing and distinguished as this latest book, in which boisterous jesting would have wrecked the picture, and a rattling story would have been out of place." J. F. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 29 '25 380w

"A pleasant and well-written story."

+ Ind 115:304 S 12 '25 60w

"Here are the short and simple annals of newly-weds—charmingly reminiscent for some, frightfully instructive for others. We wouldn't have missed them for worlds—these two stupid, but entirely lovable, persons." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p4 Ag 29 '25 200w

"Mr. Mackail has not colossal genius. 'He has gifts, certainly. If he had not, his book would scarcely call for comment. He has a pleasant humour, occasionally sharpened into wit: he has an air of grace, tolerance and leisure. But he is going down-hill; the humour grows less, the sugariness more.'" P. C. Kennedy

— + New Statesman 25:452 Ag 1 '25 320w

N Y Tribune p18 O 18 '25 220w

"It is a pleasure to praise this cheerful and humorous story."

+ Outlook 141:29 S 2 '25 60w

"To all who cannot afford to take a castle in Spain or a villa on the Riviera I warmly recommend Mr. Denis Mackail's new novel, 'Greenery Street.' I have spent half a day in Greenery Street; no more than half a day, and yet I feel as refreshed as if I had enjoyed a week-end in the sun-baths of Madiera." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 140:45 J1 11 '25 500w

"They are peerless beyond compare, and all prizes for stupidity, ignorance, and incompetence should at once be awarded to these prattling newlyweds who pass their idyllic first year in the quaint seclusion of Greenery Street."

— Sat R of Lit 2:128 S 12 '25 100w

"Mr. Mackail makes a charming addition to the fiction which describes in detail the first year of a happy marriage."

+ Spec 135:276 Ag 15 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p462 J1 9 '25 500w

MCKENNA, STEPHEN. An affair of honour. 304p $2.50 Little [7s 6d T. Butterworth]

25-8664

A group of carefree undergraduates plan to revive the circulation of their host's paper, The Oxford Post, by trumping up for it a sensational story. During the evening's merriment, two of the guests give vent to their opinions on the character of Queen Elizabeth. A pretended quarrel follows and the means for reviving the Post is at hand. The performance of their "story" however, is interrupted by the sudden arrival of the police who take it all too seriously. But the Oxford Post is assured of a new lease on life.

Booklist 21:340 Je '25

"The first third of 'An Affair of Honor' is planned in the best manner of light popular romance. It is gracefully and brightly written. The ball is set a-rolling with evident zest on the part of the author. But unfortunately, it does not, as it should, gather momentum as it travels." J. F. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 My 2 '25 600w

"On the whole, Mr. McKenna's lighter vein is his best. One hopes he will continue in the manner of 'An Affair of Honor.'"

Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 80w

"Mr. McKenna's present humorous novel seems to have been extended to a length beyond the limits into which its materials could have been comfortably fitted. Although the tale seems to move rapidly enough, that illusion is produced by the sheer brilliancy of writing with which the author conceals the fact that but for the incessant buzzing of his characters, after they have been given a flying start, his action remains almost stationary until within eighty pages of the close." E. C. Beckwith

— + Lit R p4 My 16 '25 570w

Reviewed by Edwin Muir

Nation and Ath 37:79 Ap 18 '25 50w

"'An Affair of Honour' is an affair of no great importance, but the story, a fantasy, as Mr. McKenna himself suggests, is entertaining, related in a pleasant, often amusing manner, well constructed, and will do very well for a steamer basket or a vacation special."

+ — N Y Times p9 My 3 '25 300w

"It is a thin, long-drawn, perfectly well bred bit of divertissement."

N Y Tribune p12 My 24 '25 300w

N Y World p3m Ag 16 '25 100w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 140:264 Je 17 '25 180w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"The elements of the novel are admittedly inconsequential; but in the inconsequence of the book is to be found its chief attraction. Mr. McKenna possesses the 'light hand' requisite to delectable confectionery, and he has exercised it to no little effect." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 1:755 My 16 '25 550w

"It is an adventure such as must colour the dreams of many undergraduates, and as an example of farce skillfully constructed it should find many readers."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p241 Ap 2 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

MCKENNA, STEPHEN. Tales of intrigue and revenge. 296p $2.50 Little

25-7204

In this collection of short stories, previously published separately, the writer runs the gamut from the romantic to the fantastic, and from the humorous to the grimly tragic. They are English stories, having with one or two exceptions, an English locale. Contents: The acid test; Local rules; The awakening; A daughter of Pan; Poetic justice; The man who made good; The Payton tradition; "Barnzo"; Strike-bound; The charity that continued abroad; Myrtle; The powder-puff; A Mister Blenkinsop, a diarist; Temper; Retribution and Mrs Meyrick; "Before the guards came through."

"Mr. McKenna is no de Maupassant, but a pleasant and competent writer who tells his tale deftly, but not greatly. A volume which passes the time as agreeably as one could wish."

+ Ind 115:276 S 5 '25 40w

"How is it possible for an author who turned out the excellent 'Sonia' to have become so uninteresting? Here—most of the tales are merely so many words strung along about rather unimportant events and indifferent people, and the method of stringing is tame. There are two very readable stories in the collection."

J: V. A. Weaver

— + Int Bk R p728 O '25 1050w

"Here are short stories that approach very close to the classic ideal of what a short story should be. Mr. McKenna arrays his discreetly amusing plots in perfect patterns and irreproachable prose. They are suave, agreeable, charming. They are probably exactly what the wellbred man will read next season." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p3 S 26 '25 300w

"Though Mr. McKenna has been rather casual about making the most of his opportunity, he has at any rate contrived to put sufficient sting into his skit to make it somewhat memorable."

N Y Times p14 S 13 '25 400w

"Mr McKenna is a virtuoso of exceeding brilliance. What a delight it is to follow him through his deftly turned sentences! I like the language, I like a man who can use it, just as I like to listen to a nimble pianist playing aimlessly with the keys; that is, of course, for not too long at a time." Leonard Cline

+ N Y Tribune p12 S 27 '25 620w

"This volume of stories in this reviewer's estimation, has too little of either intrigue or revenge to make it noteworthy. It is our belief that the title was chosen merely to catch the patronage of those beaming gentlemen who dote upon 'a good, rousing mystery tale.'"

— N Y World p4m O 4 '25 130w

"The sixteen stories are as undistinguished as they are facile."

Sat R of Lit 2:243 O 24 '25 160w

"In practically every story the principal personage is scored off in a manner which, while it is amusing, is generally rather irritating."

Spec 133:848 N 29 '24 60w

Springfd Republican p7a O 4 '25 180w

MACKENZIE, AGNES MURE. Half-loaf; a comedy of chance and error in three acts. 160p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Heinemann]

Is half-love better than no love at all? Harry Brodie thought so and married Olivia gladly tho she could not give him her heart. Harry was sure his love would win her, and it did. But he misread her diffidence for dislike, and in his answering dismay Olivia saw only an increasing coldness. They were mutually mistaken and wretched. And each, with no thought of self, planned deliverance for the other. So runs this tender little tale of crinolene days in Scotland to an ending that is different.

"The tale is one of those delicate and clear-cut vignettes that come every so often from the pen of some author who realizes that romance can still be made attractive in a quiet setting. It is as refreshing and zestful as a breeze from its own Scottish Highlands."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 31 '25 260w

"Somehow, in the way Olivia is presented, the reader's sympathy is not roused; and not being roused the sheer chill of the work continues on through the prettily illumined pages. There is no lack of graceful writing, no barrenness of exquisite word sketching as descriptions flow lilingly by."

— + N Y Times p25 N 1 '25 400w

"The story has the far-away charm of another age. Though the emotions of its characters are not unconvincing, they are too gracefully expressed, or repressed, to be taken very seriously." Ruth Seinfel

+ — N Y Tribune p14 O 18 '25 350w

"The Half-Loaf,' her second novel, and within its narrow limits an almost perfect thing, is remarkable for no surface brilliance; the story is simple in the extreme and has been told a hundred times before; the style is smooth, precise, straightforward, never calling attention to itself. The quality of the book resides in the perfect harmony between narrative and narration, its delicate flavor of pastiche, the fresh charm of its Victorian atmosphere." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 139:529 My 16 '25 350w

"It is astonishing to find so direct a story in this intellectual age; it is simple and mild and very quiet."

+ Spec 134:896 My 30 '25 160w

"Miss Mackenzie boldly seizes upon this simple and familiar story and endows it with singular freshness and appeal. To its original naivety is added the faint flavour of pastiche. Set in the Crinolene Period, this 'Comedy of Chance and Error' (in the author's phrase) itself possesses something of the staid charm of a crinolene."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p350 My 21 '25 350w

MACKENZIE, COMPTON. Coral. 299p $2 Doran [7s 6d Cassell]

25-16484

The sequel to "Carnival" tells the story of Frank Abel, son of the dead actress, and Coral Avery, daughter of the man who loved and left her. Ignorant of the old romance between their parents Coral and Frank, who is her father's chauffeur, profess their love. It meets with stern opposition from Coral's father. At this point Frank learns the story of Maurice Avery's shabby treatment of his mother. An instinct for revenge darkens his love as he determines to punish Avery thru his daughter. He succeeds, but not without misery to himself. His inventions fail, he is desperately poor, and when he forbids Coral to approach her father for help, she leaves him. When the chastening is complete, he is restored to happiness again.

"It is impossible not to be interested in Coral and the fight she makes for the man she loves." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 21 '25 1000w

"The only hopeful end we can imagine the present book may serve is perhaps to direct the attention of readers who have hitherto overlooked it to the existence of 'Carnival.' Its mediocrity is relieved by brief, occasional flashes of first-rate writing." E. C. Beckwith

— + Lit R p3 O 17 '25 220w

"All the possible fine shades of the relationship are lost. And the writing is very far from Mr. Mackenzie's best. His phrase-making is never less than clever: here it is no more. But you might put the book on your library-list: it is easy to read." P. C. Kennedy

— + New Statesman 25:168 My 23 '25 400w

N Y Times p8 S 13 '25 900w

"Coral' may be no more than a passable English love story to a great many people, but my hope for Mr. Mackenzie cannot survive the riven hearts of the lady and the chauffeur, and 'Coral' is not merely another passable English love story to me. It is high tragedy." Frances Newman

— + N Y Tribune p15 N 1 '25 700w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Sat R of Lit 2:192 O 10 '25 420w

Spec 134:898 My 30 '25 120w

"One feels in 'Coral,' even without dipping again into the earlier book, that in comparison it is jejune, that the immediacy is not there, and that, for all the accustomed smoothness of the author's workmanship, the story was constructed rather than felt. Yet what safely raises this novel above common novels of sentiment is the old Dickensian touch. Mr. Mackenzie is as excellent as ever in catching the sharp tang in the conversation of all the Raeburn family."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Ap 2 '25 450w

MACKENZIE, COMPTON. Santa Claus in summer. 298p il $2 Stokes

25-19315

"Once upon a fairy time"—Santa Claus came down from the North to the summer-land where the fairies lived. There he met Puck, and they went adventuring together, meeting the story book and Mother Goose favorites of little children everywhere, and having a most wonderful time. There are many amusing illustrations by A. H. Watson.

MACKENZIE, COMPTON—Continued

"Whimsical, fanciful, and altogether fascinating tale. It is surprising that the author of Sinister Street, and other novels, could have spun this tale for the little folk. It is as delicate as a gossamer web, full of humor, and action, and with a very definite plot. A. H. Watson's illustrations add much to its charm."

+ Cath World 122:428 D '25 120w

"A book with all the charming fantasy of the fairy tale and all the suspense and intense reality of the adventure story. 'Santa Claus in Summer' unquestionably belongs in the classics of the nursery, and none of the old residents of nursery land who appear therein need feel demeaned in their new service."

+ N Y Times p11 O 25 '25 1100w

"The story naturally impresses one by the ingenuity with which the well-known characters and episodes are woven into a coherent narrative rather than by its imaginative power. The world which the author has created is the product not of imagination but of artifice. Yet there is plenty of fun here, plenty of movement, variety, and excitement to make the tale enjoyable to children say between five and eight. The one serious flaw is Mr. Mackenzie's predilection for puns and plays upon words." C: A. Bennett

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:271 N 7 '25 350w

MACKENZIE, JEAN KENYON. The venture. 44p $1.50 Houghton

811

25-7505

Only a small group of Miss Mackenzie's poems is connected with her African exile. The others are chiefly love lyrics.

"There is a rippling lyrical note about her work that is unforced and charming in itself. 'The Venture' is a book of distinct limitations, an unimportant offering, but it is both musical and pleasing." H. S. Gorman

+ — Bookm 61:597 J1 '25 200w

"This is a thin volume but the lover of verse will find more than usual refreshment between its covers. Although the verses that follow do not quite live up to the promise of the first fine sonnet, they are nevertheless written with spirit and feeling." H. W.

+ — Lit R p11 Ap 18 '25 160w

"They are songs, almost all of them, small, crisp, well-formed poems, each with a single kernel of meaning. Each mirrors sharply some inner emotion, often by means of a distinct, well-rounded figure." G. H. Busey

+ N Y Tribune p10 My 3 '25 100w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman

Outlook 140:113 My 20 '25 100w

MACKINSTRY, ELIZABETH. Puck in pasture. 2 79p il $2 Doubleday

811

25-23301

A book of fairy verse, with illustrations by the author.

Reviewed by D. F. Gilman

Boston Transcript p7 N 18 '25 200w

"No artist could have illustrated her work more fittingly. The life and motion of the elfin pictures blend completely with the weave of the poems, and both in their narrative course, sing the same song of ever-young Fancy." Laura Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 2:339 N 28 '25 320w

MACKWORTH, JOHN DOLBEN. Axe is laid. 287p $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

25-6080

A scientist, head of an extensive Bolshevik organization conceives the diabolical scheme of destroying the English kingdom by means of infection. His first victims are people holding positions vital to their country's welfare, among whom is Catherine Ashdown, a typist in the employment of the Home office. To her care are given some valuable Russian documents. An unnecessary interest in these papers on the part of an official, and the sudden illness of a fellow-worker, are the first intimations of impending evil. With the help of Maurice Hamilton of Scotland Yard, Catherine tracks the scientist to his laboratory, where after some terrifying experiences, the inventor of germs comes to the end of his infamous career.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 22 '25 250w

"A good detective story, or, more properly classified, perhaps, a good adventure story. The plot is not so intricate that it wearies one with guessing, nor so simple that interest fails."

Oliver Claxton

+ Lit R p10 Ap 4 '25 220w

N Y Tribune p7 Ap 26 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p204 Mr 19 '25 140w

MACKWORTH, JOHN DOLBEN. Broadcast. 285p $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

25-20030

A thrilling adventure story in which a young Englishman and his German friend rescue an old Russian professor and his wife from torture and death at the hands of the Bolsheviks. Their chief oppressor, the inhumanly cruel Kolontai, is the central figure in an international intrigue. Under different circumstances and at different times the young Englishman, his fiancée, and Von Laer the aviator come to grips with Kolontai, whose ruthless power is cut short with his tragic end.

"Fitted out with up-to-date machinery for the movement of its plot, Mr. Mackworth's story unfolds with speed and precision and carries the reader through its thrilling events with such rapidity as to keep him well-nigh breathless until the end."

+ N Y Times p26 N 29 '25 400w

"The whole story is full of dramatic incident."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p837 D 3 '25 300w

MCLAREN, AMY. Dominie's Hope. 316p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Murray]

25-3947

After the death of her uncle, Barbara Dalrymple goes for a needed rest to Peel towers, his Scottish estate, which in the event of no nearer claims is to become her own. While waiting for possible claimants to appear, Barbara becomes interested in the quiet little town. She learns about Hope, the fairy ward of the good Scotch dominie, and about the simple kindly border folk whose quaint humor enlivens her days. She learns too, a good deal about her own heart, and in all of this Andrew Fenwick, her lawyer friend, is of the greatest possible assistance.

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 7 '25 80w

"A well-told story of pleasant people, with a good bit of plot to it."

+ Ind 114:563 My 16 '25 50w

"The Scotchiness of 'Dominie's Hope' is its chief beauty. Interesting in characterization, weak in plot, it spins light mystery and love from a dreary house in London to quaint land-holdings in Scotland." H. B. A.

+ — Lit R p8 Mr 28 '25 200w

"The best thing in the story is its description of various Scottish customs, while some of the Scottish characters are amusing."

N Y Times p19 F 15 '25 500w

"A thin, amiable, innocent sort of story, unobjectionable and negligible."

+ N Y Tribune p15 Mr 15 '25 280w

"Miss McLaren has tried honestly to write a clean story and should be commended for her courage. But her writing lacks style, and most American readers will gag upon page after page of nearly unintelligible Scotch dialect."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:810 Je 6 '25 220w

"A pleasantly written story. There is sympathetic understanding as well as humor in the descriptions of the humbler Scottish characters."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p778 N 20 '24 100w

MCLAUGHLIN, ALLAN JOSEPH, and TOBY, JAMES ALNER. Personal hygiene; the rules for right living. (National health council. National health ser.) 63p 30c Funk

613 Hygiene 24-5440

"Simple, practical suggestions for attainment and maintenance of physical health, presented concisely in a booklet of 63 small pages."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:414 J1 '25

MACLAURIN, CHARLES. Mere mortals. 291p $2.50 Doran

920 Biography 25-9535

A continuation of the medico-historical studies of prominent men of the past, begun in "Post Mortem." (Book Review Digest, 1923) Dr MacLaurin reduces these historic figures to something less even than "mere mortals." They become in his analysis simply products and disseminators of disease. Contents: Dr Johnson; King Henry the saint; The tragedy of the Tudors; Ivan the terrible; Luther's devil; Henry Fielding; King James I; King Charles I; King Charles II, Catherine of Braganza and Nell Gwynn; Henri Quatre and Marguerite de Valois; Frederick the Great; The children's crusade; Some epidemics of social importance; F. W. Nietzsche; Arthur Schopenhauer; Baruch Spinoza.

Bookm 61:599 J1 '25 260w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p5 Je 6 '25 1300w

New Repub 45:225 Ja 13 '26 110w

New Statesman 25:510 Ag 15 '25 400w

"To the average reader it may appear that there is no such thing as a new way of looking at historical characters. Most personages of importance have already been dealt with by a thousand methods and from a thousand points of view. . . But probably not until the advent of Dr. MacLaurin did it occur to any one to study the great historical characters exclusively through the medium of their diseases. Yet, as Dr. MacLaurin clearly demonstrated, such diseases are not unworthy of investigation for their influence upon history as much as upon the lives of particular men. It is not unlikely that some physical falling or ailment in some influential figure has more than once turned the course of human affairs."

N Y Times p5 My 10 '25 1550w

"Kings and queens particularly attract our author, who may well be regarded in high places as a new and significant menace to the purple. Indeed, he reduces royalty to an exceedingly bourgeois collection of cricks and stitches, germs and shooting pains, and history itself to just one bacterium after another. The psychic incisions of the purely mental analysts rank at worst as adventurers in the pastoral-comical beside these essays in the historical-pathological—painful." Will Cuppy

— N Y Tribune p10 My 17 '25 1150w

"It is a disagreeable subject, but Dr. MacLaurin is never dull, and he hates sham and humbug." Edmund Pearson

Outlook 141:29 S 2 '25 180w

Sat R 140:239 Ag 29 '25 450w

"These studies are written with knowledge, imagination, humour, and vigour, and implicitly point some valuable if familiar morals."

+ Spec 135:311 Ag 22 '25 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 S 3 '25 250w

World Tomorrow 8:286 S '25 180w

MACLAY, EDGAR STANTON. History of American privateers. new ed 519p il $3 (12s 6d) Appleton

973.3 Privateering. United States—History—Revolution. United States—History—War of 1812 25-1779

"This is a new printing of Mr. MacLay's work, which was first published in 1899. In the quarter of a century that has elapsed since then nothing has appeared to supplant or even to rival this contribution to a phase of our history that is still too little known and appreciated."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 21:243 Mr '25

"It is a record of gallant, hazardous adventure, full of stirring episodes told in straightforward, clean style, and abundantly illustrated from drawings, paintings and old prints. The book is one that may be called indispensable to any student of our history." H. F.

+ Lit R p10 O 25 '24 280w

"The narrating of the incidents of several hundred engagements without falling into monotonous repetition is in itself no small achievement. Numerous drawings, old prints, and maps add to the interest and value of the book."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:402 D 20 '24 320w

MACLEAN, ANNIE MARION. Modern immigration, a view of the situation in immigrant receiving countries. (Lippincott sociological ser.) 393p $3 Lippincott

325 Immigration 25-21689

In considering the immigration problem of the United States, the author studies briefly each of the racial groups which enter the country, in the light of the following questions: Who are they? Whence and why have they come? What do they bring? What do they get? What laws are made to regulate their coming? The British Empire and South America face the same problem with inherent differences in each case. These differences are brought out, and in a separate chapter the aims and problems common to all these countries are considered. The several appendices contain immigration and naturalization laws of the United States.

Am Pol Sci R 19:864 N '25 80w

"It is a very clear and well compounded treatise which can well fill an important place in a study of the subject and is a fine authority for references. Beyond this the book cannot go, as it is logically a compounding of references."

+ Boston Transcript p5 70w

R of Rs 72:559 N '25 80w

"A study of the general aspects of the present immigration situation, as they present themselves in all immigrant receiving countries is most timely and valuable. Doctor MacLean has furnished such a study in compact and convenient form."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:417 D 12 '25 450w

"No such collection of reliable data concerning the situation, the legislation and practice in these various countries has hitherto been available. . . The reviewer, grateful as he is for the help offered by studies such as this, feels that a somewhat different treatment of the material is needed—and a good deal of additional material—to clear the air." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 55:379 D 15 '25 650w

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD. Pot of earth. 45p $1.25 Houghton

811 25-9355

A poem symbolizing the springing of life from death and decay.

"In 'The Pot of Earth' he tells a love story in simple yet at the same time vastly involved measures. He is a fine poet. If I find him oc-casually difficult, that quality does not dim my admiration for him." J. F.

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD—Continued

+ Bookm 61:696 Ag '25 150w

"Probably 'The Pot of Earth' marks a considerable distinction, even an advance over the poet's earlier book, 'The Happy Marriage.'"

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 25 '25 150w

"Considered for its ideas or technique, the poem is a dilution of The Waste Land, but it retains more blood than water. We have here another example of Eliot's amazing power to influence other poets without leading them to surrender their own personalities. As for MacLeish, there is much to be admired in his free handling of metres, the vigour of his images, and his ability to write an intelligent narrative in this age of numskull lyrics. Few poets of his generation have achieved more in their second volume."

Dial 79:261 S '25 180w

"Few readers will follow or understand just what Mr. MacLeish is thinking and saying. Partly, that will be their fault; partly, it is his. His last volume, 'The Happy Marriage,' was not obvious to the multitude, but it was crystal clear compared with this one. Mr. MacLeish hovers constantly on the edge of superb accomplishment. He has not achieved it in 'The Pot of Earth.'"

+ Ind 114:591 My 23 '25 100w

"Is there any young American poet today better worth watching than Archibald MacLeish? As in his earlier book, so in this he is probing deeper into the hidden heart of life than thought has often dared to go. Mr. MacLeish presents his theme by deft suggestion, interweaving human fate with the sowing and the reaping. His touch is delicate, shifting light and gloom." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p5 Je 6 '25 250w

Nation 121:77 J1 8 '25 30w

"The framework is nicely elaborated in an adequately controlled structure, an arrangement of detail in a beautifully suggestive subordination and emphasis. One is occasionally disturbed by an attenuation of metaphor that escapes the pattern and disrupts the unity of attention; but this fault usually attends the formation of an idiom. Mr. MacLeish is evidently in process of inventing a distinguished poetic language. He has written an interesting poem; it is probable that he will write an important one." Allen Tate

+ New Repub 44:209 O 14 '25 220w

"There can be no doubt that Mr. MacLeish is a poet, and one to be regarded expectantly. His 'The Happy Marriage' brought him a commendation which is certain to be reinforced by 'The Pot of Earth.' He is a difficult poet, his earlier work provoking the comparison that he was 'more subtle than Meredith,' and that conclusion also is likely to be sustained by his new poem."

+ N Y Times p5 Je 7 '25 450w

"Mr. MacLeish's three small volumes have exhibited a remarkably swift development both in the deepening and subtilizing of subjective experience and in technical originality. It seems extremely probable that he will do more and more notable things as time goes on." Newton Arvin

+ N Y Tribune p5 Je 14 '25 700w

Outlook 140:269 Je 17 '25 20w

MACLEOD, ALEXANDER BENJAMIN. Mental hygiene as taught by Jesus. 138p $1.50 Macmillan

232 Jesus Christ—Teaching. Mental hygiene 25-8801

The thesis of the book is that thruout his ministry Jesus taught and exemplified the principles of sound mental hygiene. Mr MacLeod here outlines these principles in the teaching of Jesus.

J Religion 5:442 J1 '25 20w

"It must be remembered that there is danger in the process of reading into any text, even by supporting testimony, meanings which have been previously and definitely created by any writer. Having stated thus much, merely as a mild caution, let us now say at once that this book is good. We have no doubt that it will be found extremely useful to many who are seeking a new light on Jesus." T. L. Masson

+ N Y Times p11 J1 19 '25 600w

Outlook 140:115 My 20 '25 20w

"Whether or not one can accept all his psychological conclusions, the work exhibits insight and sympathy as well as a modern outlook."

Spring'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 430w

MACLEOD, HAMISH, pseud. Across the moon. 364p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-11365

When Dickie was five he fell from a height and struck on the back of his head. Afterward, the doctor said, "It is not good for so young a child to retreat into himself like this." But ever after when life hurt unbearably Dickie was to withdraw into his dreams. Something in his mind would click, like a door closing on pain and opening on beauty. The war settled over him like a black cloud. The days were a phantasm of pain from which he emerged, himself again, in a mental hospital. He returned to his anxious family, and later met little Joyce whom Stuart, the idolized younger brother, had wanted him to know. They loved. Life was as happy as his dreams for a time. Then when it began to push and pull and crush him again, the door in Dickie's mind closed on pain forever.

"Dickie is never for an instant beyond the pale; he is never inhuman. He is a supremely living and lovable person, who makes us doubt a little the fineness of our own sensitivity, puts pity to shame, and calls forth all our tenderness. This is a clutching book, that reaches deep and high and wide with an amazing grasp and gives one an appalled sense of what may happen in life." Eva Goldbeck

+ Lit R p3 D 19 '25 300w

"Mr. Macleod believes in his characters with such intensity and shows them with such pride that it would be cruel to question them. It is a bit odd that with so many wires twisted he should choose to end his novel on the flattened note of mother's approval." R. M. L.

New Repub 44:79 S 9 '25 200w

"The author chooses to affect a wantonly disjointed style. He reduces language to abrupt fragments of sentences, to words incoherently muttered, to a fine powder which is only so much dust in the reader's eye. His habit of suggesting rather than stating is acceptable up to the point at which one tires of this vagueness and begins to suspect that he has somehow persuaded his reader to write his book for him. The characters are not definitely established, but they are ably suggested." Fitzhugh Gray

+ N Y Tribune p14 O 4 '25 480w

Outlook 141:102 S 16 '25 20w

"To Hamish Macleod must be accorded the achievement of a unique and satisfying transcription of what seems throughout to be an authentic human document. The sadness of lunacy is lost in this narrative; there remains only pity and, now and again, envy for poor Richard."

Sat R of Lit 2:91 Ag 29 '25 200w

"A somewhat chaotic story, containing a number of elements, but wholly original."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a S 27 '25 400w

MACMECHAN, ARCHIBALD MCKELLAR. Old province tales. ltd ed 345p il $2 Doran; McClelland & Stewart

971.6 Nova Scotia

25-17453

"These true tales are drawn from the romantic past of Nova Scotia, and have been studied from authentic documents. . . The various episodes here gathered together illustrate the history of Nova Scotia. They are arranged in order of their occurrence." (Preface) Contents: The slaying of Aeneas; The Payzant captivity; A ransomer of Montcalm's; Trials of a sympathiser; Tonge at Petit de Grat; At the harbor mouth; Godfrey of the Rover; The glory of the Shannon; The Saladin pirates; The Sarah stands by; The saga of 'Rudder' Churchill; The Lennie mutiny.

"The tales are written in an easy, swiftly moving style of narration, a treatment well adapted to the nature of the subjects. The volume delves into a supply of interesting, varied and richly heroic material that has not before undergone general literary exploitation." + Boston Transcript p5 My 23 '25 360w

"Aside from the story interest of these tales, much is to be gathered from them as to the early routes and modes of travel, both provincial and oceanic, much as to the rôle of this particular maritime province in peace and war, and as to the ways of sailing craft and sailormen. And the adventurous quality of these tales, which so picturesquely vivify the past, is not annulled, but rather enhanced by their authenticity and by the scholarly care of the author to keep the distinction clear between supposition and accredited fact." R. G. Trotter

+ Canadian Hist R 6:77 Mr '25 800w

"Every one of these 'Old Province Tales' makes interesting reading. Instructors in the history of this continent may well peruse these footnotes to the longer story. They provide the human quality which official records, as a rule, omit. It would be hard indeed to imagine the boy who lucky enough to possess Professor MacMechan's absorbing new volume, would not take it to his heart." F. F. Bond

+ N Y Times p19 Je 14 '25 1350w

"Mr. MacMechan is clear-eyed and presents astonishing things with restraint, and grace and charm. Of all men interested in romantic rascals he is the one to do a book on two subjects of most intense interest which have been neglected. I refer to the tale of the wreck of the Medusa and the story of the mutineers of Pitcairn Island. It would be an interesting experiment." C. J. Finger

+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 7 '25 550w

"His work is excellently done; friends of Nova Scotia and her rugged past are deeply in his debt."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:750 My 9 '25 180w

MCMURTRIE, DOUGLAS CRAWFORD. American type design in the twentieth century; with an introd. by Frederic W. Goudy. 64p $1.75 R. O. Ballou, 6148 Ellis av., Chicago 655.2 Type and type-founding 25-3223

"Briefly sketches the source of type faces in use in American printeries from the time of the earlier presses. The impetus given to printing by the efforts of William Morris, the Doves Press, and others in the Nineties directed American attention to the need of a housecleaning in type cases; and it is to this development that Mr. McMurtrie limits his brief but excellent treatise."—Bookm

Bookm 60:647 Ja '25 230w

"The book is an excellent record of the work that is being done by contemporary type designers and by the manufacturers of typesetting and typesetting machines, who are lending their full aid to the maintenance of the fine tradition that is the heritage of typography."

+ Lit R p11 Ja 24 '25 200w

"Mr. MacMurtrie's handsomely made little volume will afford much pleasure and will also be of practical value because of its reference material."

+ N Y Times p20 Ag 10 '24 330w

"A book of inestimable value for all interested in typography and printing. Every printer and teacher of printing should have this book, and editors of school publications will be greatly helped by reading it."

+ School Arts M 24:adv15 N '24 180w

MACNAMARA, RACHEL SWETE. Marsh lights. 299p $2 Small [7s 6d Hurst & B.] 25-11591

"Any novel that begins with a charming and beautiful lady in evening attire throwing herself into the arms of an innocent would-be artist whom she meets by chance on a deserted London street, and who marries her the next day, cannot be considered as other than a fairy tale. When her name is Jessamy and Yule Amber is the hero, the illusion is carried still further. Of course, as in all fairy tales, there is a villain, and in this case a highly polished one, and a villainess who plays her hand almost too well. The villainess is Jessamy's stepmother, and she has reasons of her own for marrying Jessamy to the villain. It is because simple Jessamy begins to see through their plot that she runs into Yule's arms. For a time it looks as though those arms were not going to be strong enough to hold her but there is more to Yule than she suspects."—Lit R

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 260w

Lit R p5 S 5 '25 160w

"Less a novel than an illustrated homily on the common decencies of life, in a fashion which strongly suggests Berta Ruck's wholesome lessons. Miss Macnamara, however, has nothing of Miss Ruck's spirited sallies of mild wit and but little of Miss Ruck's gift for dashing narrative. She has a pleasant sense of character, which has insufficient scope in the setting of somewhat stale moral observation and clumsy unfolding of situation."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 16 '25 700w

"Miss Macnamara's treatment of passionate passages is akin to that of E. M. Hull."

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 6 '25 160w

"Barring infrequent lapses into sentimental gush, the book is respectably written, and its people evolve logically the succession of incidents leading to the critical summit of their three-cornered love affair."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:142 S 19 '25 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p325 My 22 '24 100w

MCNEIL, EVERETT. Tonty of the iron hand. 357p il $2 Dutton 25-13301

A story of La Salle's exploration of the Mississippi. A ten year old boy is kidnapped from a country estate in France and carried aboard a ship bound for the New world. He is taken to the seminary of St Sulpice at Montreal where the secluded life is little to his liking. Several years later La Salle visits the retreat. The great explorer and patriot tells the priests of his dream of a new empire for France. The lad overhears and determines to share in the glorious enterprise. He escapes from the seminary and joins the explorer's party. He acquits himself well in a number of perilous adventures, witnesses the death of his mysterious kidnapper, and is at last restored to his mother in France.

"It is not only a thrilling tale, but one that contains many historical facts that all boys should know."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 200w

"Here a timeworn plot and a style based on the 'gadzoos' technique are well and craftily handled by a professional who knows the tricks of his trade. I like its sympathetic understanding of the courage and imaginative quality of the men who sought to found New France." H: Boston

+ Ind 115:350 S 26 '25 100w

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p48 D '25 80w

MCNEIL, EVERETT—Continued

"Certainly the book can be recommended as offering, by historical description and background, a great deal more than the ordinary adventure-tale of fiction."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:245 O 24 '25 230w

MCNEILE, HERMAN CYRIL (SAPPER, pseud.). Out of the blue. 283p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-8907

Out of the blue is the first and title story of the collection. Basil Pender's carefully laid plans for the murder of his friend carry thru perfectly, up to the last detail. The detail is, to him, an important one. He murders the wrong man. Of the other stories, some are brutal and diabolic, others merely humorous with a touch of the fantastic. Contents: Out of the blue; The strange passing of Pierre; The film that was never shown; A funny little man; The downfall of young Thompson; The valley of the shadow; Uncle James's golf match; Mark Danver's sin; The missing line; Stubby; Bulton's revenge; Coincidence; The porterhouse steak.

"Exceedingly clever little stories."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 29 '25 380w

"All of these thirteen tales are interesting and several contain the thrill that made the author's 'Bulldog Drummond' a success as a novel and a play."

+ N Y Times p13 J1 12 '25 600w

"Subtlety is not one of 'Sapper's' strong points, but surely short stories may exist without that particular quality. Despite this fact, Mr. McNeile has a following that will welcome his latest volume of tales."

+ N Y Tribune p8 J1 19 '25 100w

"The first story is very good; some of the others are pretty good; one or two attempt too much and are plain duds."

+ Outlook 141:29 S 2 '25 50w

"It must be owned that these stories are not a little commonplace."

+ Spec 134:733 My 2 '25 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Mr 19 '25 160w

MACNEILL, JOHN GORDON SWIFT. What I have seen and heard. 320p il $4.50 Little B or 92 [25-14526]

A collection of lively reminiscences of notable men and events in which the witty intercourse of friends is mingled with the thrust and parry of parliamentary debate. There are many illuminating sidelights on Britain's political history in the last half century.

Reviewed by J: H. Sedgwick

Boston Transcript p4 S 5 '25 2250w

"Mr. Swift MacNeill has too lively a reputation for his reminiscences to be of that class which seems to be written by dullards for dullards. He has scarcely a page that is not touched with wit or that does not illumine some person or matter of public interest. He is not garrulous, he has sifted and selected with the pains of a man who dreads being considered a bore and the residuum contains not one recollection too many."

+ New Statesman 25:supiv My 23 '25 650w

Sat R of Lit 2:179 O 3 '25 420w

"Though upon the whole What I Have Seen and Heard must be accounted very light literature, no criticism of it would be fair which left out of account the remarkable facility of the author for suggesting serious and even tragic situations. The later days of Mr. John Bright in the House of Commons make a sad picture, and the majestic figure of Mr. Gladstone abashes the present-day student of newspaper politics. The enthusiastic admiration which Lord Peel and Lord Ullswater drew from this 'Irish member' by their justice and impartiality may well fill Englishmen with pride."

Spec 135:110 J1 18 '25 500w

MACNICOL, NICOL. Making of modern India. 236p $2.50 Oxford [7s 6d Milford]

915.4 India—Politics and government. India—Religion. India—Social conditions

25-10482

"Two opening chapters on political affairs set in contrast the situation as it was in 1908, when Indian Nationalism was new, with the situation of last year, before the release of Gandhi from prison. Three chapters on the social and religious unrest are followed by short studies of certain dominant religious ideas and practices, and these again by a group of character studies. Dr. Macnicol writes of some Indian women poets and some notable Indian Christians. He gives a good account of Devendranath Tagore, the remarkable father of the poet, and does a serviceable job in summarizing the career and achievement of Ram Mohun Roy, the first great Indian modernist."—New Statesman

Booklist 21:376 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 7 '25 340w

J Religion 5:330 My '25 60w

"The topics treated in this excellent little book are not only extremely varied, but are all alike handled with knowledge and discrimination."

+ New Statesman 24:456 Ja 24 '25 250w

"A fascinating book on India." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p1 F 8 '25 3000w

"The first two articles are entitled the Situation in 1908 and the Situation in 1923, and as very brief sketches they are not unmeritorious. If they lead the reader to a fuller study and amplification, benefit may ensue from their inclusion. If they were omitted and the book retitled by some such name as An Appreciation of Religious India of Today, the buyer would get a far clearer guide as to the nature of his purchase." Helena Normanton

+ Sat R of Lit 1:578 Mr 7 '25 1350w

"It is not very easy to discover why Mr. Macnicol has called his work 'The Making of Modern India,' inasmuch as he deals mainly with a single aspect of her evolution. There is much in the book with which it is possible to disagree. But Mr. Macnicol is a thoughtful writer who has also the gift of expressing himself in graceful language."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p188 Mr 19 '25 540w

MACORLAN, PIERRE. On board the Morning Star; tr. from the French by Malcolm Cowley. 126p il $2.50 A. & C. Boni

25-3199

"Narrates the life of a young French lad, who, parentless, grows up a pure environmental product. His schooling begins with a group of old mendicants with whom he lived in a deserted stone quarry on the outskirts of a little French village. After committing his first murder, the picaresque hero flees to a Brittany seaport. There he is taken in hand by members of the crew of the Morning Star, and turned over to George Merry and McGraw, who become his chief tutors in the business of shaping him for the noble career of a gentleman of fortune. He leads an agitated but unquestionably alluring existence, and partakes of all the pleasures of a corsair's life, as the ship ranges over her cruising ground, which extends from the Newfoundland Banks to the Spanish Main."—Boston Transcript

"From a mass of old eighteenth century documents and manuscripts, Mr. MacOrlan culled the material for the framework of his tale. His imagination enriches the story and gives it a descriptive vividness that at times becomes almost lurid." N. R. C.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 31 '25 520w

"A suave translation of a suave pirate story, written not for children, but for 'sophisticated people who are capable of enjoying grotesque, cruel and supernatural adventures.' MacOrlan is a literary man. His effects are hot-house and technical. His sadism, debauchery, perversions, and outbursts of lyric are not meant to carry as such beyond the page; even his plagues and murders are purely decorative."

Dial 78:246 Mr '25 100w

"Though the book has perfect passages, its harmony is not sustained. It sometimes attains to Baudelaire, but the next moment it barely escapes in sensationalism the penny terrors of a Maurice Level. The rendering of the book into limp English prose by Malcolm Cowley is in itself an achievement." F. V. Roman

+ — Nation 120:297 Mr 18 '25 450w

N Y Times p16 D 21 '24 600w

"An extremely good translation of one of the most amusing modern French extravaganzas."

+ N Y Tribune p7 D 21 '24 80w

"This little book is worth knowing for its prose, for the manner in which it is written; it may take a rather strong stomach to gain equal pleasure from the horrid phantoms that inhabit it. It is also translated with discrimination by Malcolm Cowley, and finely illustrated with woodcuts by Daragnes." Harrison Smith

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ja 18 '25 1500w

"The slender little book leaves a sense of bombastic and grandiose Byronism. It has, however, an authentic and full-bodied lyricism, and is charmingly illustrated." J. W. C.

+ — N Y World p9e N 30 '24 130w

"By no means MacOrlan's cleverest or most successful book, but it is an excellent choice with which to introduce him to the American public; for it has all the lyricism, sophistication, deftness, and originality of his best work, with none of the eroticism and social bitterness which rather disfigure some of his books."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:714 Ap '25 300w

MCRAE, MILTON A. Forty years in newspaperdom. 496p il $3 (15s) Brentano's

B or 92 Journalism 24-25208

"Milton A. McRae, a great newspaper surgeon has spent forty years bringing dailies into the world, restoring them to health, performing the wondrous modern operation known as consolidation. Mr. McRae's book of reminiscences, a simply written, intimate recital of his life's doings and recollection, tells us a good deal about the kind of personality and the level of effort that go to the achievement of journalistic success. It not only contains clear glimpses of a score or so of the chief newspaper owners and builders of recent years, including the writer's own associates in the Scripps-McRae group, but it presents the views and principles of the author himself."—Sat R of Lit

"Straightforward, personal and popular."

+ Booklist 21:195 F '25

"Mr. McRae's reminiscences are, frankly, disappointing." O. G. Villard

— Nation 120:158 F 11 '25 130w

"This book shows history in the making. It should be read and preserved, if possible, as a permanent souvenir of the thought and progress of our time." W. E. Woodward

+ N Y Tribune p3 N 16 '25 1250w

N Y World p9e N 30 '24 100w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

"The book contains many judgments and data that will give it permanent value for the student of our journalistic history."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:464 Ja 17 '25 350w

"A useful contribution to the history of journalism in America. Except for its service in this respect, this would not be an important book, for the author's chronicle of travel and of personal contact with various notable men, American and foreign, is dull and unilluminating."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p470 J1 16 '25 550w

MACREADY, SIR NEVIL, bart. Annals of an active life. 2v 336;345-694p il $12 Doran

B or 92 Great Britain—History, Military [25-4993]

The writer of this autobiography, a son of William Charles Macready, the actor, is a British soldier who has seen service in India, Egypt and South Africa, and during the World war. The greater part of the second volume is given to his experiences as commander-in-chief of the British forces in Ireland during the Sinn Fein rebellion.

"Much in these two volumes has to do with military politics as well as military campaigns in the field, and they are a storehouse of pen portraits of the political and military celebrities of nearly forty years." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 27 '25 1700w

Reviewed by H: E. Armstrong

N Y Times p11 Ag 9 '25 2300w

"The last few hundred pages were distinctly worth writing. Like the rest of the book, they suffer from a restricted outlook and are rather monotonous reading, but for those already acquainted with the general subject matter they present a viewpoint that has perhaps been too generally neglected." W: L. Langer

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Ag 23 '25 1200w

Spec 134:244 F 14 '25 260w

MACSELF, ALBERT JAMES. Flowering trees and shrubs. 224p $2 Scribner [6s T. Butterworth]

715 Shrubs. Gardening [25-26558]

"The present handbook tells the amateur how to plant, prune, care for, and propagate all the varieties which will repay his trouble—fine old subjects like magnolia, catalpa, ailanthus, or the tulip-tree, the new discoveries and hybrids in the cytusus, and pyrus tribes, and some rather unaccountably neglected species such as paulownia, garrya, or chimonanthus."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 21:369 J1 '25

"The pitfall which will prevent this book from reaching its full measure of usefulness here is the fact that it is of English origin and that it has, unfortunately, not been edited sufficiently to meet the requirements of the American climate. There are many climatic differences between England and America which must be taken into account in successful gardening, and these should be considered in adapting an English book to the American market, especially when the book has as much of potential value to contribute as has the one in question. Even in its present form it gives much practical advice as to the methods of best cultivating various shrubs, while its suggestions as to varieties, even though not as practical as we might wish for the reasons stated, are inspiring and suggestive." A. L. Hill

+ — Lit R p16 My 9 '25 350w

Nation and Ath 36:864 Mr 21 '25 150w

"Mr. Macself is a fluent and occasionally clumsy writer, but always clear in his instructions. Those concerning cutting back, planting and leaving ample room are particularly useful."

+ — New Statesman 24:638 Mr 7 '25 200w

"Those who are ready to work for a beautiful garden will find here descriptions of the habits of flowering trees and shrubs and vines, thorough directions for their care and most explicit instructions for pruning, budding and propagating."

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 7 '25 120w

"The directions are clear and concise, and are based on searching knowledge of the qualities and habits of the many families dealt with, making an excellent guide to a subject rather overshadowed by the vogue of herbaceous and rock gardening."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p106 F 12 '25 150w

MACY, JOHN ALBERT. Story of the world's literature. 613p il $5 Boni & Liveright
809 Literature—History and criticism

The purpose of this book as stated by its author is "to give an account of the books of the world that are of greatest importance to living people." It claims to be no more than a one-man view of its vast subject and is naturally fuller in regard to English and American than to other literatures. The survey omits some literatures of Europe which have not sufficiently broken thru the barriers of nationality and language to become recognized as a part of the world's literary heritage. The illustrations consist of color portraits and sketches in black and white.

"The work is sound and vigorous—no hint of pedantry here—and its value is greatly enhanced by the fine pictures of Onorio Ruotolo."
+ Booklist 22:151 Ja '26

"No such comprehensive conspectus of the broader developments of the literature of all times and places, at any rate none so meet for the use of those whose needs in this field may be thought of as urgent, has been published in our time. The whole matter of omissions, selection, and proportion (for the book is over-balanced on the side of England and America and the nineteenth century, as Mr. Macy himself informs me) is one that no author could possibly have handled to the satisfaction of the entire population." Will Cuppy
+ Bookm 62:608 Ja '26 1350w

"It may be easily read, for the type is large and wide spaced and the chief figures in its progress through the centuries are portrayed by means of black and white drawings by Onorio Ruotolo. For reading and for reference purposes it is alike notable and it is evidently designed to companion Hendrik Van Loon's volumes of similar title, 'The Story of Mankind' and 'The Story of the Bible.'" E. F. E.
+ Boston Transcript p5 O 28 '25 720w

"It will doubtless have the reception to which outlines are doomed. His Spanish chapters will not disappoint specialists in Russian, but readers like Aubrey Bell will protest at the omission of all Portuguese literature since de Camoëns, while the English and American sections will be open to attack from those who think that the foreign literatures are well done. For my own part, I do not see how such a work could avoid laying itself open to objections which are always answerable by reference to exigencies of space, but are nevertheless, unanswerable in the sense that an outline is always an outline. Mr. Macy has worked hard and acquitted himself as well as any of his predecessors." Ernest Boyd
+ Ind 115:532 N 7 '25 480w

"Taken all in all, it is hard to see how Mr. Macy could have filled out his vast outline with greater success, for not only does he do full justice to all the great literatures, and all the great writers, but there is scarcely a lesser writer who has really 'arrived' who is not given his place in the story." R: Le Gallienne
+ Int Bk R p34 D '25 2300w

"I know of no history that equals Mr. Macy's for successfully compressing so much in such small space or for sanity of judgment and nice literary discrimination." G: W. Douglas
+ Lit R p2 D 5 '25 580w

"To save 'Alice in Wonderland' and 'The Bab Ballads' I would gladly throw overboard a good deal of very important literature," says Mr. Macy. And it is an admissible point of view. Moreover, it is a point of view which, if Mr. Macy had continued to hold it, would have made for a volume not only lucid and unaffected—as his is—but literally unassailable. But Mr. Macy did not hold it." Mark Van Doren
+ Nation 121:517 N 4 '25 750w

"Mr. Macy has undoubtedly literary and critical talents; his sympathetic mind warmly responds to all noble and constructive ideas. But he has attempted too much. His enthusiasm outweighs his capacity. If he had realized his natural limitations, and concentrated his admirable gifts on a narrower range, he might have achieved much more." E. P. Horowitz

+ New Repub 45:117 D 16 '25 450w

"Mr. Macy would have to be omniscient to condense all the literatures of the world into an adequate residue contained in 561 pages. He is not omniscient and his book is not final, but there is no reason to cavil at him because he is no more than mortal. . . . The book in itself is excellently conceived. It should have its audience, for it is inferior only to the first of the outlines." H. S. Gorman
+ N Y Times p4 O 25 '25 1700w

"A history of the literature of the world reduced to 560 pages, less considerable space taken up by illustrations, even when safeguarded by the sweeping limitations imposed at the start and carefully explained by the author, is a tour de force of doubtful value. So far as is possible to make such a work readable and usable by the people for whom it was made, Mr. Macy has unquestionably gone." F. L. Pattee
+ N Y Tribune p3 N 8 '25 1500w

"Mr. Macy has been enabled to keep from falling into the perfunctory habits which many literary historians fall into. At the same time, he is neither capricious nor irresponsible. He has chosen a large theme, has carried it out on a large scale, and has achieved a large result." Carl Van Doren
+ N Y World p6m N 1 '25 900w

"Here is one of the fine books of the year. Mr. Macy tries to tell about the world's literature in five or six hundred pages; so he has to slight much and skim over some rather important authors. But he touches all the great figures, and writes of them with the enthusiasm of a lover, the balance of a man of good sense."
+ Outlook 141:676 D 30 '25 180w

"Mr. Macy's book is banal because he has not enough interesting ideas to advance and not enough original comments to make. The best thing that can be said of 'The Story of the World's Literature' is that the author has toiled industriously to summarize and string together the records of hundreds of writers, with an obvious effort to be fair and liberal. It is an honest four years' work, but not a brilliant one; there is not a touch of genius in the book." P. B. McDonald
+ Spring'd Republican p7a D 27 '25 1000w

MADDOX, JOHN LEE. Medicine man; a sociological study of the character and evolution of shamanism; with a foreword by Professor A. G. Keller. 330p il $2.25 Macmillan

Shamanism. Medicine, Primitive 23-8086

"Medicine in Indian usage has only incidental reference to even primitive pharmacopoeia or the healing art. As the primitive home-maker is carpenter, blacksmith, potter, farmer, hunter, etc., all in one, so the medicine man or shaman is healer, diviner, rain-maker, soothsayer, prophet, priest, etc. and often chief or king. So that in the differentiation of his functions these various professions arose. Dr. Maddox makes a comprehensive survey of the shaman or medicine man all over the world, and relates him to his psychological environment—the superstitions, fears, and hopes of his fellows. Chapters deal with primitive thought, with the making of the medicine man and woman, with his aids, offices and methods, and with the history of some medical remedies." (Homiletic R) "The treatise has been written partly with the object of showing that the conditions which produced the medicine man among the North American Indians produced the shaman of the Yakuts, the mulogo of the Uganda tribes, the ganga of the Zulus, and the angakok of the Eskimos." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

"In a very substantial way [this essay in ethnography is] a chapter in the great-man theory of social development. From another standpoint it is a rich detail in the study of progress from magic to science. The author's attitude is distinctly sympathetic to his subject. . . The great bulk of the book is in excellent scientific spirit and is a real contribution. Dr. Maddox is right in his enthusiasm for the contributions of the medicine man in social evolution, but he must be aware of making his 'great man' the whole show." A. J. Todd

+ Am J Soc 31:121 J1 '25 400w

"Like all other social functions, those of the physician and the priest have also been 'evolved,' and the story of their evolution, as told in this book with the aid of ample references, makes a fascinating study." B. N.

+ Boston Transcript Je 2 '23 550w

"It is a good book, fascinating and worth while."

+ Homiletic R Ja '24 150w

"John Lee Maddox is exceptionally well equipped to write about the medicine man and shamanism. He has not only studied ethnology and sociology under the best modern teachers. He was formerly a captain in the United States Army. His travels gave him first hand information about shamanism among our native Indians, and the Filipinos."

+ N Y Herald Je 10 '23 600w

"Dr. Maddox has given an excellent picture of the medicine man, both in his primitive power and in his diminished but discernible influence today. The training required of medicine men made them the leading minds of their community, and began the study which has produced all science. Dr. Maddox is especially interesting in the section that deals with medical treatment, showing how much of modern methods rises directly from the efforts of the savage medicine man to stimulate a trance (possession) or to drive out the evil spirits. Suggestion (faith) is nine-tenths of the fight in exorcism, almost as much in medicine, and more in Christian Science."

+ N Y Call Ag 25 '23 950w

The Times [London] Lit Sup J1 2 '25 130w

MADELEVA, SISTER MARY. Chaucer's nuns, and other essays; foreword by B. H. Lehman. 215p $1.50 Appleton

820.4 English literature—History and criticism 25-6095

"There are five essays in her book, and they include discussions of 'Chaucer's Nuns,' 'The Prose of Francis Thompson,' 'The Religious Poetry of the Nineteenth Century,' 'Where are You Going, My Pretty Maid?,' (concerning Edna St. Vincent Millay's poetry), and 'The Familiar Essay in College English.'"—N Y Times

Booklist 22:23 O '25

"The book is marked by grace, charm, and insight as well as by scholarship and critical judgment." J. J. R.

+ Cath World 121:282 My '25 200w

"Written in an engaging and tolerant manner the comments of Sister M. Madeleva reveal a keen understanding of letters. Three of the essays have a religious basis, but this religious element is so finely controlled and interestingly displayed that one is never under the impression that theological exposition in literature is the main subject." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 15 '25 650w

"The opening essay, which gives its title to the collection, is serene and well considered; it illuminates a phase of Chaucer which has been given minor attention."

+ N Y Tribune p14 My 3 '25 160w

"Sister M. Madeleva brings scholarship and artistic wisdom to the service of literary interpretation. The most interesting, as probably the most important, of her five essays deals with the Nuns of the Canterbury Tales. To the elucidation of their characters her intimate knowledge of the religious life contributes unquestionable authority as well as sympathetic insight." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 1:852 Je 27 '25 120w

Springf'd Republican p8 S 3 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p318 My 7 '25 100w

MAGNUS, MAURICE. Memoirs of the Foreign legion by M. M.; with an introd. by D. H. Lawrence. 296p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Secker]

940.48 France—Army—Foreign legion. European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives. Army life 25-6630

An eighty-page introduction by D. H. Lawrence explains the circumstances by which the manuscript of this book fell into his hands on the death of its author whose path curiously crossed and re-crossed his own during a year in Italy, 1919-1920. The book is an account of the unnamed author's experiences as a Legionary in North Africa and France, experiences so foul that he fled from them and became a deserter. His "Memoirs" belongs with Dos Passos's "Three soldiers" as a description of the horrors of war and army life, to which Mr Lawrence in his introduction adds some pages of powerful indictment.

Bookm 61:358 My '25 200w

"No doubt these Memoirs may be informative, but they are certainly not pleasant. The redeeming feature lies not in them but in the preface of Mr. Lawrence, who tells an interesting story of M.'s erratic career." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 28 '25 600w

Cleveland p99 S '25

"Mr. Lawrence chose with accuracy and detail to tell the story of his acquaintance with M. M. and to dissect and expose him in a character study as clear, as brilliant, and as pitiless as anything of the kind I have ever read. It is Mr. Lawrence at his brilliant best—an amazing combination of accuracy and passion. To this eighty-four-page introduction the feeble document of M. M. is merely an appendix, a full and ample illustration of the justness—if not the mercy—of Mr. Lawrence's analysis." D. R.

Ind 114:245 F 28 '25 1250w

"If war is to be made impossible, it will be because people know what it is, what it means. These Memoirs of M. M., found for us by D. H. Lawrence, are an instrument for our coming to know. They present the alternative of the human soul against death." H. J. Seligmann

Lit R p7 D 27 '24 760w

"What was M. M. really up to in the legion and in his life? He is insincere in the worst way of art, or else he simply has nothing to tell. But the fact remains that never has D. H. Lawrence written such pages of marvelous prose suffused with a light and color peculiarly his own." Donald Douglas

Nation 120:270 Mr 11 '25 920w

New Repub 42:80 Mr 11 '25 1300w

"It deserves to be read and probably it will be—less, however, for the melodramatic qualities of M.'s narrative than for Mr. Lawrence's extraordinarily fine portrait, at once passionate and delicate, of the man who wrote it."

New Statesman 24:19 O 11 '24 1150w

N Y Times p3 Ja 25 '25 3700w

"Throughout this objective history, one waits for the character of M. M., as described by Lawrence, to emerge; but one waits in vain. The author has merely added one more black page to the Book of War, and a page more or less matters little in such a volume." B. R. Redman

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 8 '25 750w

N Y World p6m Mr 1 '25 450w

"As an exposure of conditions in the Foreign Legion and an arraignment of the horrors of war the book is full of special pleading and must be read with a full-weight grain of salt. But even at that it leaves behind enough indisputable matter to make the reader feel the crucial necessity of putting an end once for all to war and militarism."

+ Outlook 139:349 Mr 4 '25 230w

MAGNUS, MAURICE—Continued

"The prose of Mr. Lawrence is full of beautiful perceptions, of acute sensibility in description, while the writing of the deceased M. M. is sodden, slipshod, no better than that of the average police reporter." T: Boyd

Sat R of Lit 1:598 Mr 14 '25 750w

Spec 133:565 O 18 '24 1050w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p619 O
9 '24 950w

MAGONIGLE, HAROLD VAN BUREN. Nature, practice and history of art. 314p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Scribner

709 Art

24-27653

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:266 Ap '25

"A beautifully illustrated discussion of what art is and what it attempts to do." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:50 Je '25 250w

"Mr. Magonigle attempts to cover too much ground. About one-third of his volume is devoted to the nature and practice of art, the remainder to a rapid sketch of art history. The first is far superior to the second."

+ Hist Outlook 16:231 My '25 820w.

"He writes with intelligence and vigor; but the result is of course only a guidebook, illuminated here and there by perceptions which deserve a better setting. A useful book if treated as an introductory syllabus, to rouse investigation rather than to satisfy it."

+ New Repub 43:107 Je 17 '25 150w

"It is, indeed, a full and overflowing measure that he offers, a richly satisfying epitome of the story and the significance of the fine arts."

+ N Y Times p23 F 8 '25 450w

"Here and there are brilliant pages, but they are rare and lost among characterizations often perfunctory and frequently incorrect. Up to the historical portion, the book will be useful to beginners." F. J. Mather, jr.

+ N Y Tribune p5 F 15 '25 420w

"Mr. Magonigle knows his subject and has things to say about it that were worth saying, had he allowed himself time and space to do more than hint at them."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 Ja 23 '25 280w

"This American work, despite its ambitious title, is not one which fills any gap in the British art student's library. It is in the nature of a textbook distilled from elementary lectures on the subject. Its very numerous illustrations (with explanatory notes) are a good feature of the book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p41 Ja 15 '25 80w

Wis Lib Bul 21:140 My '25

MAIS, STUART PETRE BRODIE. Eclipse. 338p $2 Brentano's [7s 6d G. Richards] 25-18696

"The story that Mr. Mais has to tell is how Martin Wyvern, cartoonist and husband of the successful actress and duke's daughter, Lady Ursula Wyvern, made the acquaintance of one Jill, a mannequin, fell in love with her, spent many platonic week-ends with her in English beauty spots, dined at many restaurants, danced at many clubs, and finally married her in spite of Lady Ursula's objections to divorce."

—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '25 300w

"Mr. Mais keeps up a running satiric fire on modern journalism as it hardly exists, on publicity-seeking as it does, for amusement rather than from any moral resentment."

Nation and Ath 37:82 Ap 18 '25 180w

"This novel by an English critic bears more of the marks of the critic than of the novelist. The critic turned novelist is prone to apply his intelligence to the wrong places, and Mr. Mais lavishes on dialogue and comment a sparkle which cannot hide the basic non-existence of the characters."

New Repub 44:185 O 7 '25 150w

"His picture of Fleet Street is as odd as usual, but there is more plot and significance in 'Eclipse' than in anything I have read of his for many years. I think it is probably his best book. It is certainly readable, and in parts something more than that." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:389 Ap 11 '25 80w

"His dialogue is remarkable for its fluency, but also for its entire want of characterization, and it is a pity that he always has the air of complaining about something."

—+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p254 Ap 9 '25 150w

MAIS, STUART PETRE BRODIE. Perissa. 395p $2 Brentano's [7s 6d G. Richards]

"Tells the story of an English gentleman who had no trade or profession or capital when he mustered out of the expeditionary force; who had to take what he could find in the way of work, but was able to be discriminating in love. He can dance and he has an Oxford education. He is charming and good-looking and a man of character. He dances through a short season as a professional in a variety show, then teaches school for the rest of the year that the story fills. In the course of his adventures he wins the love of two women. One of them is the wife of a landed proprietor; the other, the hero's dancing-partner on tour. Let the reader discover in the last pages of the book which of these inamorata he finally makes happy."—Sat R of Lit

"In the hands of a less capable artist we might have had a sordid story; indeed I am not sure but we have one as it is, although the sordidness is relieved by brilliant descriptions, stimulating talk, exceptionally well drawn characters, and situations that pique one's curiosity so that we have a most interesting story." C. R. Woodruff

+ Lit R p4 Jl 18 '25 300w

N Y Times p14 Ap 5 '25 500w

"It is all very bothersome, but somehow not very lifelike. The book is brightly written. In description it is excellent and in style much above the average. But in plot it is wellnigh unbelievable." Lisle Bell

+ N Y Tribune p14 My 31 '25 680w

"Here is a lively book—a bright, swiftly flowing narrative with plenty of good feeling and good sense in it. It is not only an unusually entertaining novel, but a very wholesome one."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:748 My 9 '25 400w

MAJOR, CHARLES (EDWIN CASKODEN, pseud.). Rosalie. 331p $2 Macmillan

25-10882

"By malignant villainy an English doctor, already hounded by jealous doctors as a homeopath (this was a century ago) is convicted of murder. He escapes by Rosalie's help, they go to Canada in the same ship, are wrecked, live an innocent, double, Robinson Crusoe life, and later go through strange experiences among Indians and priests. The doctor's moral question is whether as a man under the shadow of the gallows he ought to marry Rosalie. In the end love, justice and honesty prevail."—Outlook

"Readers of 'When Knighthood was in Flower' and 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall' will be disappointed in the latest story from this author. It has not the same stir, not the same coloring and the romance which so filled the other is worn rather thin in 'Rosalie.'"

—Boston Transcript p6 Jl 22 '25 300w

"The plot is thin for the material, but you recognize the practised hand." Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p566 S '25 100w

"Mr. Major made of it a perfunctory tale. He painstakingly reared a structure that stands but between whose boards many cracks are to be found. It is like a house built by an amateur carpenter as compared to one put together by an expert."

— N Y Times p9 Je 14 '25 850w

N Y Tribune p12 Ag 2 '25 560w

Outlook 140:433 J1 22 '25 100w

"In one aspect the book merits criticism, and in another an opportunity is suggested and then lost. We refer first to the dialogue, which is stilted and inadequate; surprisingly so for any author who handles plot outlines so easily. The lost opportunity is that of the suggestion of the background of another century with which the book opens."

Sat R of Lit 2:89 Ag 29 '25 200w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 23 '25 260w

MAKEEV, NICHOLAS, and O'HARA, VALENTINE. Russia; with an introd. by H. A. L. Fisher. (Modern world) 346p $3 Scribner [15s Benn]

947 Russia—History. Russia—Politics and government [25-21903]

One of the authors is a Russian, the other an Englishman long resident in the old Russian empire. Both have suffered imprisonment, the first by the Tsarist government, the other by the Bolsheviks. They start their history of Russia with its earliest civilization but more than half the book is given to the revolution of 1917 and the Soviet régime. The conclusion reached by their survey of its organization and administration is thus summed up: "The Communist dictatorship is at present not only the greatest obstacle to the economic and cultural revival of Russia, but is a menace to peace, order and economic stability in Europe." The authors are hopeful of the new forces in formation and believe there is every reason to look forward to the complete restoration of Russia politically, economically and culturally.

"Whether in full or with a few clear strokes, every pertinent event bearing on the Revolution is orientated with regard to the whole, and a vivid picture is presented of many outstanding personalities."

+ Ind 116:79 Ja 16 '26 200w

Reviewed by Kingsley Martin

Nation and Ath 38:408 D 12 '25 520w

"It is incomparably the best book on that country which has appeared in English since the Bolshevik Revolution. Mr. H. A. L. Fisher, the editor of the series, claims with reason that the attempt of the two authors to tell the truth about Russia, and to enable an accurate judgment to be formed as to the essential factors in the historical growth and political condition of this vast country, is obvious upon every page."

+ New Statesman 26:244 D 5 '25 920w

"So far the only country that has seriously attempted to give effect to Marxian theories is Russia, and an extremely interesting account of the process and of the results will be found in a book written by Nicholas Makeev and Valentine O'Hara." Harold Cox

+ Sat R 140:393 O 10 '25 750w

"We have no hesitation in earnestly recommending the volume, Russia, to all who seriously wish to understand the Russian revolution. It is as impartial a book on an extremely complex subject as could possibly be written. It is only a pity that its price makes it less accessible to the many readers who, we take it, are deeply interested in the Russian revolution and in its lessons."

+ Spec 135:sup706 O 24 '25 650w

"The book is a useful survey of recent happenings and contains much information, clearly presented, about Bolshevik organization and administration. The writers show a tendency, however, sometimes to generalize from insufficient data. The expert may be inclined to disagree with some of their findings, but for the general reader there is at present no safer guide to the events of the first quarter of this century in Russia."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p722 O 29 '25 200w

MALET, LUCAS, pseud. See Harrison, M. St L.

MALLET, SIR CHARLES EDWARD. History of the University of Oxford. 3v v1-2 448:502p il $15 Longmans [42s Methuen]

378.42 Oxford university [25-486]

These, the first two volumes of a three-volume work are a scholarly history of Oxford university from its origin thru the seventeenth century, with complete sketches of its colleges and buildings. The author has had the help of distinguished Oxford scholars and access to valuable printed and manuscript records.

"His book is certain to remain for many years the best guide to the bibliography of Oxford academical history." H. H. E. Craster
+ Eng Hist R 40:458 J1 '25 950w

"There is much to remind one of present-day educational procedure in the repeated tinkering of the courses of study and the efforts to engraft upon the time-honored foundation of classics, mathematics, and philosophy subjects which even then seemed modern 'sides.' Here, again, Oxford was England in little. It was not and could not be a place apart. Its fortunes were tied to the fortunes of the state, and as men lived outside the gates, so students lived within them or about them. It is to Mr. Mallet's credit that, will all his painstaking elucidation of details, he has shown us Oxford in its setting at this point as at others." W: MacDonald
+ Nation 121:258 S 2 '25 1100w

"It was a huge and formidable task. The amount of material is enormous. The dangers of pedantry were very great. To keep the sense of proportion must have been, as he says, one of the most difficult parts of the undertaking. But Sir Charles has succeeded in producing not only a learned and important work, but a very readable one too."

+ Nation and Ath 36:332 N 29 '24 980w

"The history of the University is only now being adequately written, and every Oxford man worth calling such will feel that Sir Charles Mallet has bankrupted him in gratitude twice over. First by telling in such faithful and delicate detail the history of each man's own College; painting with the finest of camelshair the dainty miniature of his most kindly nurse, every line of which is precious; and secondly by setting out with such a wealth of learning and understanding the great pageant of Oxford in history."

+ New Statesman 24:510 F 7 '25 1250w

N Y Times p11 J1 5 '25 1000w

"The work is a scholarly labor of love." A. B. Maurice

+ N Y Tribune p4 Je 28 '25 1300w

"Here are two delightful volumes about a university which others than her sons may know and love, a university that was here some time before we were and may, God willing, outlast several centuries yet." F. S. Barr

+ Sat R of Lit 1:872 J1 4 '25 500w

"It is a fascinating story and most ably told; but the truth is, the whole book is a mass of learning and yet so full of good matter that it is a book almost impossible to skip." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 133:843 N 29 '24 3150w

"It is indeed both a learned and a delightful history of the ancient University."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p677 O 30 '24 2050w

MANINGTON, GEORGE. West Indies. 319p il $4 Scribner [15s L. Parsons]

917.29 West Indies—Description and travel [25-22364]

"Historical and descriptive chapters on the

MANINGTON, GEORGE—Continued
West Indian islands, with added chapters on British Guiana and British Honduras."—Outlook

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p14 S 6 '25 780w

"There are but two excuses for a travel book. Either it should be useful as a guide to those who may follow in the author's footsteps or it should be so entertaining as to bring a delightful picture of the lands visited to those who remain at home. This volume serves neither purpose. Its information is hardly more complete than Aspinall's Pocket 'Guide to the West Indies and it weighs three times as much."
H: K. Norton

— N Y Tribune p10 O 18 '25 420w

"'The West Indies' might well serve as a guide book of the islands." J. E. Clanson
N Y World p7m O 18 '25 720w

Outlook 141:168 S 30 '25 20w

"Patiently documented, well written and illustrated, the book runs to three hundred odd pages of sound, painfully-acquired information."

+ Spec 135:498 S 26 '25 130w

MANN, ERNEST EDWIN. Introduction to the practice of civil engineering. 296p $2.50 (7s 6d) Macmillan

620 Civil engineering [25-1590]

"A small book making no attempt to present theory or principles, but written with the very useful purpose of endeavoring to give the young civil engineer some idea of the office routine and the field methods and equipment which he will encounter in the application of his technical training. Based on British practice."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:418 J1 '25

MANN, THOMAS. Death in Venice; tr. from the German by Kenneth Burke. 284p $2.50 Knopf

25-4777

Three long short-stories, psychological studies of the artist and his relation to the exterior world. "The title story, 'Death in Venice,' is the study of a man who for fifty years has made fetishes of discipline and of the success to which such discipline should lead. At no time has he lost control of himself, and the expected success has not failed to come in the form of a firmly established public reputation and a knighthood to boot. . . But one day fatigue overtakes him, and in a spell of unusual surrender to external influences he runs away to find rest in Venice. There, on the sands of the Lido, fate overtakes him in the shape of a classically beautiful Polish boy—and love, that has touched him so lightly before, takes full possession of his entire being under a form generally condemned as perverted. For months he lives a painfully ecstatic existence in his yearnings, never even speaking to the object of his passion, and when separation is in sight at last, he dies as the flame of a lamp dies when the last drop of oil in the wick has been burned out." (Lit R)

Booklist 21:340 Je '25

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd
Bookm 61:354 My '25 180w
Cleveland p81 J1 '25

"It is very beautifully wrought." Cuthbert Wright

+ Dial 78:420 My '25 2300w

"The stories of the volume fail in their effect. We are conscious of a power and purpose in the author—and that is just about all."

— Ind 114:331 Mr 21 '25 120w

"The theme [of the title-story] is a daring one, indeed. The telling of it leaves you with a sense of immaculate purity. It is art at its highest. Right and wrong, moral and immoral, are terms not involved. . . 'Tristan' the second story, is even more delicate in its suggestive penetration of soul depths not frequently plumbed. It is the more effective because told in a vein that sometimes borders on the farcical. . . . One of the most remarkable features of both these stories is that they deal with more or less abnormal twistings of natural instincts without ever descending to that all too common suggestiveness which our would-be censors are so prone to condone." Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p3 F 28 '25 1050w

"The three romantic stories which compose the new volume by the author of 'Buddenbrooks' are controlled from beginning to end by an intensely self-conscious art, and the effect not only of every incident but, one may almost say, of every word is carefully calculated. The very title 'Death in Venice' evokes immediately the gravely sensuous mood which pervades the book, and each story, dealing as it does with the physical or spiritual death of an artist in the midst of the failing splendors of his art, is a sort of death in Venice." J. W. Krutch

Nation 120:330 Mr 25 '25 750w

"Given the theme of the first story, it should in fairness be added that it is written with exquisite tact and delicacy and that its implications will only be misunderstood by the coarse and literal mind."

+ N Y Times p9 F 22 '25 980w

"'Death in Venice' shows Herr Mann objectively building a flawless story and sustaining it, at once, with vigorous strokes and careful nuances, till its inevitable conclusion." L: Kronenberger

+ Sat R of Lit 1:851 Je 27 '25 520w

MANNIN, ETHEL E. Hunger of the sea. 344p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Jarrolds]

[25-2468]

Fanhaven, a small, drab fishing village with its dilapidated cottages, its jersey-clad men, and loud-voiced women furnishes the background for this tale of the sea. To one of these tumble-down cottages comes Mary Simley, a sorrowful little drudge, to keep faith with her lover, Jan Anderson, a burly fisherman. In the eyes of her neighbors Mary is looked upon as a town woman until Jan makes her his wife. Gradually the idle tongues of neighbors weave a web of lies around Mary and her husband which brings bitterness and sorrow into their home. With the declining years their love is centered in their son Peter who in his early manhood became a sacrifice to the hunger of the sea.

"It strikes us as diluted Hardy. But it is good for a girl of twenty-three." D. R.

— Boston Transcript p1 Mr 14 '25 460w

"'Hunger of the Sea' is a strange composite of modernism and Victorian sensibility. With the author's feeling for romance goes a realistic vision that is modern in spirit. Her soundest characterization is the product of modern psychology. It is the occasional specious romanticism that leads her to the expansiveness that is fatal to her novel. It runs on in careless writing full of clichés that vitiate the force of her narrative."

+ N Y Times p25 F 8 '25 700w

"The novel is ably constructed and develops harmoniously from the first to the last chapter and Miss Mannin may be congratulated on a fine piece of work."

+ Spec 134:252 F 14 '25 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p732 N 13 '24 300w

MANOLA, ADELAIDE, pseud. See Hughes, A. M.

MARBLE, ANNIE (RUSSELL) (MRS CHARLES FRANCIS MARBLE). Nobel prize winners in literature. 312p il $3 Appleton

928 Authors. Nobel prizes

An account of the Nobel award and its donor is followed by biographical and critical studies of the prize winners in literature: Sully-Prudhomme, Mistral, Mommsen, Eucken, Björnson, Carducci, Kipling, Selma Lagerlöf, Heyse, Hauptmann, Maeterlinck, Tagore, Rolland, Heidenstam, Pontoppidan, Gjellerup, Spitteler, Hamsun, Anatole France, Echegaray, Benavente, Yeats, Sienkiewicz, Reymont. Bibliographies of the writings of the several prize winners are included.

"I should say that the average reader would have some difficulty in describing the life and work of more than half a dozen. Mrs. Marble has come to the aid of that average reader, leaving to specialists the task of more elaborate exposition." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 115:741 D 26 '25 1150w

"Mrs. Marble has written and compiled an interesting and valuable volume." H. B.

+ Lit R p9 D 12 '25 200w

"The essays on the various winners of the award, while they have small literary value, will prove useful to literary clubs desiring Nobel Prize programs, and handy to students because of their compact biographical information and their bibliographies. The book is probably what its author intended it to be—not penetrating, but informative."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:468 Ja 2 '26 160w

MARCHANT, SIR JAMES, ed. British preachers: the men and their message, 1925. 303p $1.75 Revell

252 Sermons (25-16006)

"This book is presented by its editor as 'the first of an annual volume of sermons which it is proposed to publish.' The collection includes the work of twenty-one clergymen of Great Britain. A few of these preachers are famous in religious circles throughout the world—as, for example, Dean Inge, of St. Paul's; Reginald J. Campbell, once of the City Temple, and L. P. Jacks, editor of the 'Hibbert Journal.' Others are known for special reasons here in America—as, for example, John Kelman, who succeeded Dr. Jowett at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church; F. W. Norwood, who preached last year with notable success at the Broadway Tabernacle, and Miss Maude Royden, whose recent tour in this country is still a matter of vivid memory."—N Y Tribune

"Such a volume cannot fail to have its influence and to constitute a real contribution to religious literature." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 62:xxviii S '25 120w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 5 '25 320w

Reviewed by Augustine Birrell

Nation and Ath 37:sup343 Je 13 '25 1100w

"With a single exception, all the preachers here represented are dependent upon a biblical text. A lay reviewer, accordingly, finds himself driven to ask how a teacher of religion can expect modern men and women to take him seriously so long as he is afraid to stand up in his pulpit and speak to his congregation upon any one of the greatest of all themes, without trying to fit his discourse to a detached sentence from something written ages ago in another world. The one exception is Miss Royden, who also is the only one in this group addressing herself to a definite human problem—how to think of, and to meet, middle age."

+ — New Statesman 25:674 S 26 '25 650w

N Y Times p16 JI 19 '25 320w

"Such preaching is Christianity in its beautiful but impotent decadence. Had the Apostles and their successors preached thus to Rome, our age, if it had been here at all, would never have heard of Christ and his gospel." J: H. Holmes

— N Y Tribune p15 O 11 '25 480w

Outlook 141:30 S 2 '25 20w

"No Roman Catholic preacher appears in the list, and there is apparently no representative of the distinctively Anglo-Catholic school of theology. With these exceptions the sermons are fairly representative of outstanding British preachers, and deal mainly with the corollaries of Christian faith in experience and service."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p287 Ap 26 '25 100w

MARCHANT, SIR JAMES, ed. Survival. 199p $1.75 (7s 6d) Putnam

134 Psychical research. Future life

[24-32093]

A collection of essays on the continuance of life after death. All of the contributors have long been interested in the investigation of psychic phenomena, and some of them are scientists of international repute. Each discusses a separate phase of the subject of survival, in some cases recording personal experiences and the deductions resulting therefrom. Contents: The rationality of survival in terms of physical science, by Sir Oliver Lodge; Supernormal faculties in their relation to survival, by Stanley de Brath; Metaphysics and human survival, by Lady Grey of Fallodon; Spirit communications, by Prof. Camille Flammarion; Experiences with automatic writing, by Sir Edward Marshall-Hall; Psychic experiences, by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle; Ectoplasm as associated with survival, by F. R. Scatterd; The philosophy of survival, by David Gow; Religion and survival, by Rev. C. Drayton Thomas; Psychical evidence for survival, by J. Arthur Hill; Metapsychic science and survival, by Prof. Charles Richet; On behaviour to the dying, by the Hon. Mrs. Alfred Lyttelton.

Booklist 22:6 O '25

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

— New Repub 42:322 My 13 '25 450w

N Y Times p15 My 17 '25 2800w

"The subject is met from many angles with persuasive logic and testimony; the discussion is scholarly and earnest."

+ N Y Tribune p12 My 24 '25 180w

"The names of the twelve contributors make a very impressive list but the essays are of singularly unequal value. The reader with some knowledge of the field will find something of interest and value, particularly in the contributions of Sir Oliver Lodge, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, and Professor Charles Richet."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:468 Ja 2 '26 220w

"A symposium of balanced and expert opinion on the subject of spiritualistic experiments which it is impossible to disregard. The limits of an article do not permit comment on the facts recorded, some of them of a very startling nature, but we are grateful for the reasoned and moderate contribution of Sir Oliver Lodge, and we would draw special attention to the article by Mr. David Gow."

Spec 134:536 Ap 4 '25 850w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 50w

MARIE, queen consort of Ferdinand, king of Rumania. Country that I love. 175p il $4.50 Brentano's [15s Duckworth]

914.98' Rumania—Description and travel. Rumania—Social life and customs [25-14845]

"Written by one Queen and illustrated by another, this book will appeal to many. The first twelve chapters were originally published at intervals during the exile at Jassy, when the Roumanians were driven by their enemies into the last small corner of the kingdom. Their mission was to cheer the spirit of the soldiers, the wounded and the sick. It was a happy inspiration that led the author to choose the one subject which would most interest them, the story of the country they had left and feared never to see again, and for which they were homesick beyond words. The later chapters, not written under the same heartbreaking conditions, are not so convincing, but there are shrewd character-sketches of the late King and Queen, whose enforcement of an iron etiquette made life so hard for the English princess of seventeen, who could only give rein to her high spirits by galloping for hours on horseback through the country she soon learned to know and love."—Sat R

MARIE, queen of Rumania—Continued

Booklist 22:113 D '25

"There is sincere feeling throughout the book. The simplicity and appeal in certain descriptive passages have the charm of a folk song, but not the strength, ruggedness, and directness. These qualities have been lost in an unsatisfactory sentimentality."

— + Bookm 62:620 Ja '26 160w

"This is the first time that her little stories have been published in English, in which language they were written. While, as the author admits, they may not awaken one quarter of the interest which they then aroused in the hearts of the stricken Roumanians, they stand as a reminder of those almost hopeless days and breathe a spirit of patriotism which will always remain a pleasing memory to the people of that land. Several new chapters have been added, and the book contains interesting illustrations by Queen Elizabeth of Greece."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 320w

Cleveland p114 D '25

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson

N Y Times p6 S 6 '25 2350w

"Queen Marie's note of glowing patriotism adds rather than detracts from the delight of this royal travel book."

+ N Y Tribune p10 O 11 '25 160w

"An unexpected quality in the book is the simplicity, the frankness and the directness of Queen Marie. Here is no formality of rigorous etiquette."

+ N Y World p7m N 29 '25 230w

"With an eye quick to perceive the natural beauties of her country, she has chosen many pleasant pictures of Roumania to set forth in her book."

+ Sat R 140:193 Ag 15 '25 280w

"The author is no mere royal novice with the pen, for her faculty of description, her accomplished and exact discretion in word values, the delicate but colorful charm of her prose, attest the work of a practiced and intelligent mind."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:247 O 24 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p409 Je 18 '25 500w

MARION, FRANCES. Minnie Flynn. 384p $2
Boni & Liveright

25-8731

"Minnie Flynn is a story of the motion picture world. Its heroine is a foolish slip of a girl whose only equipment for stardom is beauty, but who is so efficiently exploited by a canny director and a temporarily intrigued capitalist that the public acclaims her as one of filmdom's immortals. Minnie Flynn cannot stand prosperity; she is betrayed by the inevitable crew of sycophants and poor relations into a series of blunders that wind up her sensational career at precisely the place where it began—utter obscurity."—Publisher's note

"Miss Marion, herself a writer of successful scenarios and a film editor, puts into her novel all the dramatic interest of her craft. The chapters run off like scenes; the action never lets down. For the reader, there is no putting aside the book till it is finished." C. H.

Boston Transcript p4 My 23 '25 400w

"[The book] is not conspicuously well-written; the style is not better than serviceable at its best. Here and there are moments of excellent drama. Lovers of the best fiction will find in it some good realistic touches, but its great appeal is, of course, to those who seek their entertainment on the screen." H. B.

— + Lit R p9 Je 13 '25 280w

"Miss Marion writes with a facile pen and her novel, although trite and somewhat sensational, is nevertheless well done."

+ — N Y Times p24 My 31 '25 250w

"Miss Marion tells the story of the beautiful but unintelligent little ephemerid of the films with an honesty and simplicity of thought and workmanship that are not always associated with the inhabitants of movieland."

+ N Y Tribune p10 My 17 '25 250w

"The novel is as solid a production as can be made with rather shoddy material. It runs from the reader's memory like water off a duck's back, but while it is pouring over him the sensation is pleasant." E. G.

— + N Y World p4m Je 7 '25 580w

"This book is a fine performance: kept well in hand, almost austere in its restraint, safely avoiding the pitfall of nastiness for its own sake, yet dealing without squeamishness with things that under less skilful handling would be merely repulsive, and always keeping the elements of the story in a due proportion. Its narrative is fluent, orderly, developing inexorably to the final tragedy that one foresees from the start."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:796 My 30 '25 380w

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 5 '25 250w

MARKS, JEANNETTE AUGUSTA. Genius and disaster; studies in drugs and genius. 185p $3 Adelphi co.

151.1 Genius. Narcotic habit. Authors, British 25-21026

"Essays on Poe, De Quincey, Coleridge, Rossetti, James Thompson, Swinburne, Francis Thompson, Ernest Dowson, and other writers who were at one time or another addicted to the misuse of drugs or of alcohol."—Outlook

Bookm 62:508 D '25 130w

"If one or two points are too complex to be assimilated by the lay reader, we must not blame Miss Marks. It is inevitable that to one so deeply interested in a problem the importance of its byways comes to be more obvious than to one who has regarded that problem only on its surface. In 'Genius and Disaster' much will be found to cast light on the thought-processes of those unfortunates whose powers have been sapped in a particularly affecting manner." R. B. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 O 28 '25 380w

Reviewed by Lillian Whiting

Int Bk R p118 Ja '26 1500w

"A very suggestive book on a subject alike of deep social importance and of dark fascination." R: Le Gallienne

N Y Times p7 O 4 '25 2350w

"These are interesting speculations; it is well to remember that much of it is guesswork."

Outlook 141:244 O 14 '25 120w

"Let us state at the outset that we are not in sympathy with Miss Marks's views. It is our conviction that all these writers mentioned would have written the same sort of literature if their daily diet had been peanut butter or milk chocolate. However, whether you agree with Miss Marks's views or not, you will find this an exceedingly brilliant piece of creative criticism. The book is absorbing. It grips the reader's interest and holds it to the last page. Furthermore, it is beautifully written." Carty Rank

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:366 D 5 '25 520w

"A brilliant and absorbing work."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 4 '25 1200w

MARKS, PERCY. Martha. 338p $2 Century
25-5459

As a little child, Martha Baker learns from her squaw mother's lips that her father is a white man. Young as she is, she thrills to the discovery, and when later she is taken into the kindly, cultured home of the reservation agent, the determination to renounce her Indian blood becomes the ruling passion of her life. Beautiful, intelligent, unsophisticated, but dominated by her desire to be recognized as white, she marries the first man who asks her, a brute to whom marriage is a compromise and a last resort. Martha is speedily disillusioned. The story of her heroic struggle against her social environment forms the main theme of the book.

"This story he conceives and rounds in an expert manner. It is fundamentally dramatic, fundamentally interesting. He sees his characters and paints them well. But, unfortunately, he writes it as if he were writing a dime novel. He makes it cheap." C. B. O.

— + Boston Transcript p6 Mr 21 '25 450w

"It has a dash of temperament and no little fluency. But there lingers a suspicion that Mr. Marks has genuflected too heavily toward Art." J. W. Crawford

— + Int Bk R p552 Jl '25 350w

"This is a brisk and absorbing tale—but not just because it is centered about race prejudice. Mr. Marks has indeed entered upon a new field. His characters move upon a background I believe I have never before seen in a book. It gives freshness to a theme which is old enough and rich enough for any novel." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p5 Mr 14 '25 580w

Nation 121:174 Ag 5 '25 80w

"The author has a fine feeling for the beauties of a country which, it is quite evident, he knows at first hand. The free, devil-may-care life which had not yet learned that its picturesqueness was a commercial asset is drawn by him with a skillful hand. His theme, fine as fate, is the pathos of a lovely and loving girl brought low by the traitor that lurked in her very blood. This alone is sufficient to lift 'Martha' immeasurably above the ruck of Western fiction, of which it has all the best of the atmosphere, without any of the cheap attendant 'thrills.'"

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 19 '25 800w

"'Martha' will be popular with the people who enjoyed the 'petting' and the 'jazz' in 'The Plastic Age.' It will be a distinct disappointment to those who considered the first book more seriously. Mr. Marks has fallen below his own standards." R. F. Bartlett

— + N Y Tribune p12 My 10 '25 480w

Reviewed by Dorothy Borg

N Y World p7m Mr 8 '25 350w

"The author of this book can 'write,' but he cannot yet create. Here he has done up an idea—worse, a conviction—in the package of the novel. His types are no doubt verifiable, but his people are not alive, and his story is hardly more than a long (and rather dull) parable." H. W. Boynton

— Outlook 139:580 Ap 15 '25 250w

"Such material as this is obviously dramatic. There is no reason why it should not be worked into a novel of extraordinary depth and poignancy. 'Martha' will perhaps make excellent cinema-fodder. It will not win him any increase of critical respect." Bernard De Voto

— Sat R of Lit 1:687 Ap 18 '25 580w

MARQUAND, JOHN PHILLIPS. Black cargo. 270p $2 Scribner

24-5383

This is a tale of the stirring days when ship owners of New England coast towns carried on brisk commerce with the Indies, and grew rich from honest trade, or, with suitable conscience, suddenly richer from the forbidden traffic in black cargo. Eliphalet Greer had indeed, for such purposes, a very suitable conscience. It permitted him to send Charles Jervaille to Java or thereabouts, on an errand of violence, and it did not stand in his way when he sought to murder Charles for failing. And yet it did bring the gaunt Eliphalet often to his knees to wrestle earnestly for forgiveness from a vengeful God. Charles and his romance, Murdock and his daughter, and always Eliphalet's black deeds and his conscience.

Booklist 21:384 Jl '25

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

Bookm 61:348 My '25 200w

"The faults of the present story—and of these faulty planning and lack of balance are the chief—forbid unreserved praise. On the other hand its many virtues, including a pleasing, fluent, and colorful style, plenty of excitement, and excellent character drawing in the two leading personages, render it more than usually entertaining." J. F. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Mr 21 '25 400w

Cleveland p68 Je '25

Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 120w

"It is just about the finest story of its kind as yet written by a young American author." Donald Douglas

+ Int Bk R p587 Ag '25 120w

"Mr. Marquand in 'The Black Cargo' has written two kinds of a book, and done it very well. The psychology fuses smoothly and effectively with the sustained note of adventure; indeed, it heightens the story's excitement." Margaret Widdemer

+ Lit R p4 Mr 21 '25 500w

"Everything that false romance has been doing Mr. Marquand has herein undone. Here you will not only find none of Stevenson's fine avoidance of women and death, but you will find the complete absence of what Mr. Wells calls Conrad's florid mental gestures. No one else except Mr. Marquand, so far at any rate, has been able to use so incomparable a narrative art wherein the frame of events holds reflected within its shining surface the indecision, cruelty, fury, gentleness, and disillusion, at once sacrificial and sadistic, of the soul caught into the nets of action and the blind stabbing thrusts of fate." Donald Douglas

+ Nation 120:667 Je 10 '25 900w

N Y Times p8 F 22 '25 900w

N Y Tribune p11 Mr 15 '25 200w

"The plot does not so much matter. Any one could have invented that plot and many did. It is doubtful if any one but Mr. Marquand could have told the story with so shining and incorruptible a distinction." Donald Douglas

+ N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 460w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 40w

Outlook 140:302 Je 24 '25 520w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"Whether he is writing of the struggles of men or of their minds, philosophizing or describing action, Marquand uses a poetic, swinging style. The intellectual reader who may chance upon this novel will remain fascinated to the very end, and he will not need to apologize to himself for his interest, since there is nothing to insult the intelligence or strain the credulity of the discriminating."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:649 Ap 4 '25 330w

Spring'd Republican p7a Mr 22 '25 400w

"This might have been 'A very fine pirate story' had the author elected to tell a tale about his pirates in their prime. Unfortunately he makes the worst of them an elderly man who has come home from the sea, and afflicts him with a belated and somewhat inefficient remorse in his respectable retirement. He might have told of slave-trading along the Guinea Coast and a marooning in the Pacific, but insists on confining his action to New England, when the worst that happens is a misfire over an attempt to 'shanghai' a captain into his own ship. The whole effect is rather disappointing."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p434 Je 25 '25 120w

"A well told and always absorbing story."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:201 Jl '25

MARQUAND, JOHN PHILLIPS. Lord Timothy Dexter of Newburyport, Massachusetts. 378p il $3.50 Minton, Balch & co.

B or 92 Dexter, Timothy

25-19573

In a flamboyant style well suited to his theme Mr Marquand tells the story of the preposterous Yankee eccentric who styled himself

MARQUAND, J: P.—Continued

"first in the East, first in the West, and the greatest philosopher in the western world." By fortunate speculation in depreciated continental currency the poor leather dresser acquired a fortune, bought a showy house, assumed the title of Lord Dexter and indulged in all kinds of extravagances. Unable to step into the rôle of an established gentleman he tried to call attention to himself by curious vagaries which outraged his fellow townsmen of Newburyport. Among his conceits was an elaborate rehearsal of his own funeral and the erection in his garden of colossal statues of famous men, including himself.

Booklist 22:159 Ja '26

Reviewed by W. A. Macdonald
Boston Transcript p5 O 24 '25 1050w

Reviewed by J. E. Chamberlin
Boston Transcript p7 N 25 '25 40w

"While the present work falls wholly within the category of fantastic biography, it is both a highly desirable book and one that leaves little to be desired. Mr. Marquand portrays his unheard-of hero with just the amount of inflated gravity and sympathetic insight that he deserved." R. F. Dibble

+ Nation 121:676 D 9 '25 780w

"Mr. Marquand writes this biography with imagination and spirit. His fault (a reviewer must point out at least one or lose the confidence of his reader) is in trying to direct and interpret too much a story which should tell itself; but it is a fault easily forgiven for his having written the story at all." E. Vincent

+ New Repub 44:337 N 18 '25 820w

"As a vastly entertaining study in egotism, Mr. Marquand had to hand material which would have satisfied a Ben Jonson. Except in Ben Jonson's comedies, and in their Latin prototypes, the like of Timothy Dexter will not be found. To the reviewer's thinking Mr. Marquand, in common with others, overplays a fancied likeness between Dexter and Don Quixote." N Y Times p5 S 27 '25 1400w

"A book which is at once good biography, delicious satire, and loyal appreciation of the place and the times." Edmund Pearson

+ Outlook 141:160 S 30 '25 1500w

"The story is told with gusto and sympathetic merriment." Meade Minnegerode

+ Sat R of Lit 2:212 O 17 '25 550w

MARQUIS, DON. Awakening, and other poems. 104p $2 Doubleday

811 25-16895

There is presented here not the Don Marquis of Areyh and Mehitabel, but a poet writing in serious vein poems of beauty and power.

Bookm 61:696 Ag '25 200w

Boston Transcript p6 J1 29 '25 950w

"Less interesting as poetry than as a revelation of Don Marquis; but there is a sort of pseudo-Biblical impressiveness about 'The Awakening,' and a thrill of genuine, if not wholly original, thought in such poems as 'The Name' and 'The God-Maker Man'—and there is always admirable workmanship." B. E. Stevenson

+ Int Bk R p659 S '25 500w

"A delight unprecedented in literary annals attended the reading of 'The Awakening,' by Don Marquis: we found more, by a book-weight of melody, than we anticipated; we approached a notoriously canny columnist and found a poet of no negligible achievement." Virginia Moore

+ Lit R p3 J1 11 '25 280w

Reviewed by Robert Graves

Nation and Ath 85:542 J1 26 '24 150w

"Some serious verse of rather more than the usual competence, the usual well-meant emotions, the usual insignificance—there is the futile; at the tail of the book comes its sting, and its real individuality, in the satire of 'Savage Portraits'—and there is the vulgar." F. L. Lucas

+ New Statesman 23:622 S 6 '24 200w

"This book is not impressive as a collection of poems, but it is interesting as the expression of the author's philosophy." Babette Deutsch

+ N Y Times p4 Je 21 '25 800w

"We hope that in his next volume he will have sufficiently purged himself of bitterness and violence to submit his notable technique more often than here to creative impulses."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p423 J1 3 '24 260w

MARQUIS, DON. Dark hours. 155p $1.75 Doubleday

812 Jesus Christ—Drama 24-32210

"A drama on the betrayal, trial and crucifixion of Jesus. Don Marquis has thoroughly dramatized the chief narrative of the New Testament, developing with marked originality several of the principal characters, notably Judas, and freely inventing incidents and speeches for subordinate figures, yet—without striking a single note which is not perfectly in harmony with the tone and atmosphere of the Gospels. In the case of the central figure, he attempts no interpretation that deviates a hair's breadth from the Christian tradition. The character and personality of the Son of Man, the Son of God, are left quite inviolate." —N Y Tribune

Booklist 21:270 Ap '25

"The Dark Hours has overleaped many intermediate grades of excellence and touched a surprising height of power, reverence, and beauty." A. McC. S.

+ Cath World 120:711 F '25 300w

Cleveland p89 S '25

"If one may judge by a careful reading, 'The Dark Hours' is thoroughly actable. It may be given without fear of offending the sensibilities of the most orthodox. As a manifestation of the manysidedness of Mr. Marquis' genius the play has added value." H. B.

+ Lit R p9 F 28 '25 350w

"Mr. Marquis has wrought sincerely and well. More cannot be asked of any man." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 25 '25 1350w

"'The Dark Hours,' even silently read, is of a seizing and transporting reality. Its tremendous dramatic stress is intensely felt. It puts one there—in ancient not modern Palestine." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 F 8 '25 4000w

"It is terror-striking; it is inescapably moving; and when emotion has passed, the revelation of something unique—as every person is unique—remains. But in the first scene is, for one reader at any rate, the climax of the play, its progression from beginning to end is not thereby halted nor weakened. Progression here depends on the cumulative pressure of atmosphere, and that is sustained perfectly." Eva Goldbeck

N Y World p7m F 15 '25 350w

Outlook 140:224 Je 10 '25 20w

"Whether the play will ever be presented on the stage the future alone can tell. At first sight there seem to be inherent difficulties, the chief of which is the author's device of keeping the great Protagonist 'a Voice' throughout. But for the reader, at least, a rarely moving and wholly reverent Passion Play has been the result of Mr. Marquis's meditation upon the greatest tragedy in history." H: L. Stuart

+ Sat R of Lit 1:726 My 2 '25 850w

"As for literary performance, a drama written for closet and fireside, 'The Dark Hours' undoubtedly has a measure of power and beauty. The arrangement of scenes, the menace of mob hatred and the psychology and personality of Peter and Judas, for instance.

are effective. Yet the dramatic form as here employed adds little to the plain simple narrative of the Gospels."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 25 '25 370w

"If we accept the necessity or even the desirability of telling again a tale once supremely told, Don Marquis has achieved in The Dark Hours a noble and impressive tragedy. The development of the character of a very modern Judas is interesting if not convincing, while the other figures in the drama are ably and logically presented."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 9:774 N '25 250w

MARRIOTT, CHARLES. Modern English architecture. (Universal art ser.) 267p il $7.50 Scribner [21s Chapman & H.]

720.9 Architecture, English 24-13262

"Written by a layman for a lay public, to present the subject in broader outline and more familiar language than the usual technical or historical treatise. It tells who designed a large number of important buildings in London and the provinces. Eighty-three excellent photographs of many various types of buildings add greatly to the book's attractiveness. Bibliography."—Booklist

Booklist 21:59 N '24

"Mr. Marriott's book may be commended to all those who wish to understand modern English architecture. Indeed, the average architect could wish for no more discriminating and friendly critic to convince the public that some buildings of to-day are worthy of comparison with the great masterpieces of the past."—Martin Briggs

+ Nation and Ath 35:124 Ap 26 '24 900w

"Contains, at least the latter half of it, much which should sharpen our eyesight. I cannot say the same of the first half, which is a second-hand, and rather offhand, discussion of the architecture of the past."

+ — New Statesman 24:43 Ap 19 '24 170w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p245 Ap 24 '24 3100w

MARSH, CHARLES FIELDING. Shelter. 345p $2 Appleton

25-20832

A story of Norfolk county, England, where men turn to seafaring or farming for their livelihood. Bob Amies, being a sailor, has a way with women that Ezra, the quiet-tempered farmer lacks. And so it is to the former that Phoebe becomes engaged. With the wedding but three weeks off, the young couple are swept by a sudden tide of passion and surrender to it. In the revulsion of feeling that follows, Phoebe realizes that she does not and cannot love Bob. The brawny sailor, angered by the leering remark of a tramp who has seen too much, kills the man, and is sent to jail for manslaughter. Frightened and humiliated Phoebe turns to her patient farmer lover for protection and shelter. She tries to make her confession, but Ezra loves her too much to listen. They are married while Bob is in prison, and when Phoebe's child is born Ezra does not dream that it is not his own. Wholly in love with her husband and fearing to lose him, the wife does not now dare to tell him the truth. With Bob's release from prison the situation is brought to a climax and a conclusion.

"Throughout the novel is a continuous series of soul revelations and at the same time it is a well high perfect story, a pleasure in the reading. It loses nothing because it is a psychological study; in fact, it gains thereby."—E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 7 '25 1300w

"Those whose minds naturally classify books will put 'Shelter' top in a second class, if not actually low in the first, and those whose vice does not happen to be classification will agree that it is a fine, sound novel."

+ Nation and Ath 38:268 N 14 '25 220w

"It is well written, with just enough use of the Norfolk dialect and Norfolk names of things to give it color, and a touch of quaintness, well and smoothly developed. The book is one of those novels which have both atmosphere and dignity, and it is real enough and interesting enough to make one wonder what happened afterward, when the last page has been turned and the last paragraph has been read."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 3 '26 550w

"A limping book. The characters never have the breath of life in them. Their perils do not concern us; they leave us as indifferent as the rain that follows stage thunder."

— N Y Tribune p13 N 15 '25 320w

"A sound and sincere novel. The story is an excellent piece of local color as to the English Norfolk coast. Mr. Marsh has qualities that are by no means common among writers of fiction."

+ Outlook 142:30 Ja 6 '26 130w

"The story loses the unity and power which it might have had; and the beginning of the ironic tragedy, and not the end, is the highest point which Mr. Marsh reaches. He has written a good novel, but it promised to be something more."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p830 D 3 '25 460w

MARSHALL, ARCHIBALD. Mystery of Redmarsh farm. 370p $2 Dodd

25-26437

A long and rather involved mystery story concerned with the kidnapping of the three-year-old son of the master of Redmarsh farm and the disappearance, at the same time, of a large sum of money. The young squire of Cliffthorpe Hall, who is in love with little Tony's sister, undertakes to clear up the mystery. The search for its solution takes him around the world and unwinds a pretty coil of mystery and rascality.

Booklist 21:341 Je '25

Reviewed by L. Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 80w

"The plot is very much involved, and a part of its mystery dates back many years. It is a fairly ingenious tale, but not one which can be ranked among the best detective novels of the year."

+ — N Y Times p9 My 3 '25 800w

"Although the book is delightfully written the story seems a little over-long."—Ruth von Phul

+ — N Y Tribune p11 My 17 '25 150w

N Y World p7m My 3 '25 90w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 140:264 Je 17 '25 100w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"The plot of 'The Mystery of Redmarsh Farm' is halting and diffuse, moving in Archibald Marshall's characteristically slow measure. Only with great difficulty can the reader follow the story to its end."

— Sat R of Lit 1:841 Je 20 '25 120w

Spring'd Republican p7a Jl 5 '25 250w

MARSHALL, BERNARD GAY. Redcoat and minuteman. 278p il $2.50 Appleton

24-24807

Richard Delaroche, nineteen, writes of his part in the war of the revolution. His story tells how he became a captain under General Washington, discovered a spy, escaped from death, met his own double and found his heart's true love.

Booklist 21:158 Ja '25

Cleveland p10 F '25

"Mr. Marshall has made a good workmanlike job of this, especially in the clean, clear simplicity of his narrative. It is entirely free from the inflation and manufactured excitement that so often reduces such tales of adventure to the level of the melodrama and the screen."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:618 Mr 21 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:114 Ap '25

MARSHALL, BRUCE. This sorry scheme. 321p
$2 Harcourt [7s 6d Harrap]

25-4206

"Said to be a prize novel, 'This Sorry Scheme' is apparently the first book of a young writer. Its plot is the familiar yet usually interesting triangle, its hero a married man of 45, hard working, ultra-respectable, who falls in love with a girl twenty years younger than himself and falls in love for the first time in his life. The effect of their love upon themselves and other people, all more or less victims of 'This Sorry Scheme,' makes up the story, which has also a religious element, the old haunting question of 'the grand Perhaps.'"—N Y Times

"Thoroughly unpleasant story."

— Boston Transcript p6 F 11 '25 420w
Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 70w

"Mr. Marshall is more successful in descriptive analysis than in incident or dialogue. His book is too long, but is interesting, often thoughtful in its comments, actual or implied, on the world of today."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 1 '25 660w

"A strictly made-up tale, ingenious and ingenious, colorful and melodramatic, though 'This Sorry Scheme' doesn't come under the head of pure literature, it is certainly something to read—good entertainment."

+ — N Y Tribune p8 Ja 25 '25 720w

"There is an underlying note of vitality which runs through 'This Sorry Scheme' and sweeps the reader along with the tide, so that without being particularly exciting at any one point, it holds the attention from cover to cover."

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 360w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p633 O 9 '24 150w

MARSHALL, EDISON. Ocean gold. 383p il $1.75
Harper

25-17281

There was a family legend that old Joseph Mann had struck it rich in the north, and had hidden the treasure somewhere in western Alaska. A rough map found in an old suit of clothes gave a possible clue to the treasure. Backed by Judge Mann, old Joseph's son, four boys set out ostensibly on a hunting trip to the north, but actually in search of the lost "ocean gold." They meet with expected hardships in the frozen wilds and with others, unexpected, but in spite of the rigors of the cold and dangers from man and beast, the boys persist and at the moment of greatest discouragement they find what they seek.

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p746 O '25 80w

"The book is written honestly and simply, and while one cannot truthfully say that it should take its place alongside 'Treasure Island,' still it stands out with unusual vigor and spirit among a group of boys' adventure books."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:349 N 28 '25 100w

MARSHALL, EDISON. Sleeper of the moonlit ranges. 311p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

25-8267

The scene of this story is Alaska—and its interest is centered in the lives of three people, two men whose destinies in the course of events are completely reversed, and a girl who plays a large part in their lives. Grace Crowell and her fiancé, Paul Fieldmaster, come to Alaska in quest of Paul's brother, a half-caste. Fate plays into their hands a guide, Bert Breed, of great physical strength and strangely complex nature. It is very soon apparent that Paul and the guide are to be pitted against each other in a struggle for the love and honor of a girl and the redemption of a man's social status. The high spot of the story is reached in the volcanic eruption of Mount Pavlov.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 150w

"Not so good, this story of the moonlit ranges. However, the trick and craft of a genuine story teller make it readable." C. M. M.

— + Lit R p9 J1 3 '25 200w

"Alaska with the same old setting of Big Brute Outdoors, the ragged tricks of conventional story writing done all over again in the same tiresome fashion."

— N Y Times p9 Je 7 '25 500w

"The appetite of the 'best-seller' public for this particular story seems to be insatiable: and it is really a good story."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:780 My 23 '25 160w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p546 Ag 20 '25 180w

MARSHALL, LEON CARROLL. Story of human progress; an introduction to social studies. 548p il $1.48 (6s 6d) Macmillan

301 Civilization

25-4979

"This work by the Professor of Political Economy, Chicago University, is intended to give to the pupil of junior high-school age a coherent view of the main factors involved in living together in society. Its different sections deal with primitive man, with the conquest of nature, development of communications, and the progress of economic and social ideas."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Other allied social studies may complain that economics has taken and held the right of way, but they will gladly give the book a first place in a literature greatly in need of contributions from scholars." H: Johnson

+ Am Hist R 31:158 O '25 420w

Reviewed by A. W. Small

Am J Soc 31:104 J1 '25 140w

"The book is written in an interesting fashion and is carefully illustrated."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:866 N '25 60w

"Almost every page has a picture, most of them new and the majority made particularly for this work. We cannot stop these social-studies people; they represent the main intent and reason for public schools and public expense. If they all do as well as here they'll win the field speedily." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:51 Je '25 200w

"One of the outstanding books of the year in the social sciences. The book is the result of a long period of work on the part of the author and his assistants. The materials have been tried and revised until their value is fairly well known."

+ El School J 25:795 Je '25 250w

St Louis p403 N '25

"This linking of the tangible and intangible elements of progress is achieved with lively intelligence and a good grasp of pedagogical method. The whole work represents the aim of many educators today to disseminate a constructive rather than a static instruction and utilizes that method of attack with skill and discretion."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 1 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p572 S 3 '25 70w

MARSHALL, THOMAS RILEY. Recollections; a Hoosier salad. 397p il $5 Bobbs

B or 92

25-23326

In his volume of recollections, which he has called a "Hoosier salad," Mr Marshall quotes the excellent and time-worn advice to the salad maker to be "a spendthrift for oil, a miser for vinegar." The man who as vice-president of the United States was called upon to preside over the Senate for the eight years from 1913 to 1921 might have been excused for mixing some vinegar in his ingredients, but he has refrained. Instead, he has used the oil of humor in sketching the men who sat before him, as well as the many personalities whom the war years called together in Washington.

"A book such as this, largely anecdotal, written exclusively from memory (Mr. Marshall kept no diary), is likely to be characterized as random. It is no more random than life itself. Full of delicious humor, of thoughtful philosophy quaintly expressed, it can for the complete enjoyment of any reader be picked up anywhere; but it cannot so easily be laid down." Martha Bayard

+ Bookm 62:611 Ja '26 520w

"A volume which makes us mourn his loss far more than we did before. And apart from his interesting politics, this delightful book is well worth reading for its anecdotes on American life and social customs of a great period. It is always amusing, full of quaint turns of phrase and homely tales, it tells its story with an English which will become literature, and it is, already, a great human document. It is good he has written his own memorial; none other could have done it nearly so well." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 5 '25 920w

"His recollections are vitalized by the personal attitude, by his comment on men and events. This book will be read with great appreciation and enjoyment as an authentic product—made in America."

+ Ind 115:590 N 21 '25 100w

"These recollections cast a valuable and informal light on the most suggestive side of political life: the human qualities of the men engaged in shaping policy. Regarding his own career, he is modest, amusing and never pompous."

+ N Y Times p5 Ja 3 '26 560w

"The chief significance of these 'Recollections' is in their portrayal of the mind of a country lawyer raised suddenly to a position of prominence. Philosophical observations, sometimes homely, sometimes keenly penetrating, are scattered through the book. But the chief philosophy of the book is that of humor." F. L. Mott

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ja 10 '26 850w

"No new light is thrown on the dramatic incidents of an heroic day. . . In these entertaining stories, reflections and meditations, however, the student will find a full length portrait of Marshall himself. In these appear the individuality, the whimsicality, the wit and humor, the political and personal philosophy of a unique personality." C. G. Bowers

+ N Y World p6m D 13 '25 640w

"The autobiography of a remarkable, almost a unique man."

+ Outlook 142:30 Ja 6 '26 100w

"It was genuine good fortune that permitted the memoirs of former Vice-President Marshall to be completed by his own hand only a few days before his final illness. As written and published, they embody the personality of the author—his shrewdness, humor, wit and all-around good sense."

+ R of Rs 72:662 D '25 140w

Springf'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 320w
Springf'd Republican p8 D 12 '25 360w

MARTIAL (MARCUS VALERIUS MARTIALIS). Twelve books of Epigrams; tr. by J. A. Pott and F. A. Wright, with an introd. by the latter. (Broadway translations) 402p $5 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

877.6 Epigrams

[25-8303]

"The chief value of Martial's Epigrams, disregarding for the moment their literary excellence, lies in the picture they give us of Roman society towards the end of the first century A.D. . . . There is hardly any incident however trivial which will not serve Martial as the subject for an epigram. He is a realist, and one of the most extreme of that school; he shrinks from nothing, dull, coarse, and disgusting though it be; and consequently many of his pieces are extremely offensive to a delicate reader. But the blame for them, if blame must be allotted—in this volume they are mostly left in their original Latin—does not rest solely with Martial; part must be assigned to the realistic method, part to the Roman character, and part to life itself."—Intro.

"It is a pity that Mr. Pott did not live to complete his work, for he had a defter touch than his successor; his rhythms are clearer and more decided; he was more of a poet. Yet the two together give a fairly accurate notion of Martial's clever quips, though not of his versification." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 4 '25 530w

"Presented in a form that would please the salty old fellow, if he could return to see it. But if he did, he would starve to death. No one would print him if he were writing today in English."

Ind 114:419 Ap 11 '25 70w

"The epigrams proper, are, of course, best taken in small doses, some half-dozen after meals; when they pall, relief can always be found in the longer and less artificial pieces, such as the poet's charmingly detailed descriptions of country life, or his praises of his native Spain."

+ New Statesman 24:422 Ja 17 '25 1000w

"The translators of the present volume have been remarkably successful in making a number of Martial's verses sound like original poems in English. They have wrought miracles in the way of modernizing allusions, softening grossness and preserving wit. Much of the delicate preciousness of Martial is lost in translation, some of his indelicate frankness is best veiled in the original Latin. The book is not as light to the hand as Martial wished his works to be, but it is eminently light reading and probably will never be superseded as a whole." G. F. Whicher

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ap 26 '25 420w

"The epigrams of the Roman satirist translated into English verse. In this translation many are given as literally as possible considering the fact that this is a rendering into verse. A few have to be left in the original sin of the language in which the author wrote them. If anybody despairs of our civilization, let him—if he can construe Latin—read a few of the lines left untranslated in this book."

Outlook 141:129 S 23 '25 150w

Spec 134:162 Ja 31 '25 180w

"The translations of both Prof Pott and Prof Wright are admirable, being crisp and unfailingly well-turned."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Je 23 '25 380w

MARTIN, HELEN (REIMENSNYDER) (MRS FREDERIC C. MARTIN). Challenged. 284p $2 Dodd

25-2963

Raleigh Leinbach, after obtaining a degree in a large Eastern university returns to his birthplace, a small college town, to take a professorship there. He is an exceedingly good-looking youth but is obsessed with his own importance. His plans include marriage to the most distinguished girl in town, Georgianna Lovell, but he is really in love with Evvy Smith. The plot has to do with his problem of choosing between them.

"This is in every sense a remarkably clever book. There is a great deal in it besides the story."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 13 '25 370w

"The story is another dealing with life among the Pennsylvania Germans, in depicting which Mrs. Martin has at times been very successful. This time, however, she has missed the mark both in characterization and in plot." R. L. Kurzman

— Int Bk R p356 Ap '25 400w

"No doubt Helen Martin thought when she wrote her new novel that she was writing a contribution to pacifism and academic freedom. What she did write is a contribution to the eternal challenge of sex to sex." C. R. Woodruff

— Lit R p6 F 21 '25 280w

MARTIN, HELEN—Continued

"The clash between capitalism and repression on the one side, and the ideals of democracy and freedom on the other might well engage sympathy if the book were more skillfully done. Unhappily it is a little too much like Upton Sinclair, in his less inspired moments, or like those familiar cartoons in which wealth always wears a high silk hat and dollar signs."

— + N Y Times p22 F 8 '25 670w

"There is a shrillness of hysteria in Mrs. Martin's tone; she weakens her own case by overstatement. And yet, after the worst has been said, Mrs. Martin remains a natural story teller, with the gift of making her novels go. They may be crude, but they are never really dull." Isabel Paterson

— + N Y Tribune p10 F 8 '25 520w

Sat R of Lit 1:620 Mr 21 '25 380w

MARTIN, HERBERT. Formative factors in character; a psychological study in the moral development of childhood. 346p $1.40 (6s) Longmans

136.7 Moral education

A contribution to the study of character building in childhood. The book surveys first the child's own equipment for moral development, its instincts, physical condition, inherited tendencies, and mental processes. The final section studies the social and institutional factors which condition character development from without, the home, the school, work, play, and religion.

"The book has many commendable features. It is readable. It represents a comprehensive point of view which will appeal to sound judgment. The examples and quotations are numerous, well placed, and to the point. Teachers and parents will find much in the book that is worth while and stimulating." F. D. McClusky

+ El School J 26:311 D '25 300w

"The volume is readable throughout. Although dealing with a subject that is both philosophical and psychological, the writer has the happy faculty of expressing himself interestingly, understandingly, and nearly always convincingly." J. O. Engleman

+ School R 33:792 D '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p643 O 1 '25 50w

MARTINEAU, ALICE (VAUGHAN-WILLIAMS) (MRS PHILIP MARTINEAU). Gardening in sunny lands; with an introd. by Edith Wharton. 296p il $5 Appleton [15s Cobden-Sanderson]

716 Gardening 25-8838

A guide to the planning and planting of southern gardens based chiefly on the author's gardening experiences in the Riviera, with a chapter on California gardens. The climatic conditions are carefully explained to the beginner and the varieties of plants adapted to different soils and sites, with suggestions for harmonious design and schemes of color combinations. The gardens described are mostly those planned on the grander scale.

"Mrs. Martineau speaks in terms of a flowery plenitude which may well stir in the hearts of her readers a desire to join the invasion of the French and Italian Riviera."

It is time that she learned the modern classification of irises, for it is with something of a shock that one finds her referring to Iris 'Germanica': in his recent work upon the subject Mr. Dykes has fully explained the newer classification."

+ New Statesman 24:supviii N 8 '24 320w

"Mrs. Martineau is an excellently qualified instructor: her learning and experience of the weather, soils, and flora are put at the learner's service in compact and lively form."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p708 N 6 '24 500w

MARX, MAGDELEINE. Romance of new Russia. 225p $2 Seltzer

914.7 Russia—Social conditions 24-29212

During six months in Soviet Russia the author tried to penetrate the spirit of the people. She visited schools, universities, hospitals and prisons, spent days with the workers in factories and sat in the people's court. Her book is a series of sketches and pictures showing Russia as it revealed itself to her—thru the eyes of students, workers, soldiers, children and in talks with people of various conditions. To her the new Russia is a happy and inspiring country where something miraculous is happening.

Am Pol Sci R 19:423 My '25 50w

"It is rather too difficult to accept so rhapsodical an account as hers. True, she has not overlooked the hunger, the cold, the poverty which still are widespread in Russia—nor has she left unmentioned the filth, the vermin, the disease. But such a tale of spiritual greatness—of a whole people rising superior to an environment—is too incredibly good to be true. The jacket says that the book is 'something like a work of fiction.' So it is."

— Bookm 61:98 Mr '25 170w

"The problem of describing the Russia of today is a gigantic one, but the author has adopted an ingenious manner of presentation and the result is pleasant." J. Ferris

+ Lit R p5 J1 11 '25 120w

"There is always so lovely and breathless a quality about this tour of Russia it would be graceless, with a strawberry-tart in hand, to complain that Magdeleine serves so little bread of scientific report."

Nation 120:634 Je 3 '25 200w

"Magdeleine Marx is the author of several novels; she spent six months touring Russia, and then returned and wrote another, The Romance of New Russia! It is as biased in favor of Bolshevism and the Soviets as the anarchist writers were against them. By reading both and then trying to reconcile the two, one may get some parts of the truth." Jerome Davis

New Repub 43:213 J1 15 '25 60w

Reviewed by J. D. Adams

N Y Times p26 F 1 '25 60w

"Mlle. Marx went to Soviet Russia and found romance, a little deliberately in some instances, one believes, yet she does a fine thing in discarding social theories to picture peasants, workers, and students as they are living under what many are pleased to call a politically preposterous system. The book reads like fiction, for Mlle. Marx writes with color and vigor."

+ N Y World p8e D 7 '24 120w

MARY ANGELITA, SISTER. Starshine and candlelight. 100p $1.50 Appleton

811 25-23083

The lyrical quality is as marked as the spiritual in these poems of a Catholic nun. Poems of nature and of childhood find a place among those devoted to religious themes, and a few translations are included.

"So many thin volumes of poetry win only a casual glance and are cast aside to be forgotten immediately, that it is a treat to find on each of the hundred pages of this one a polished gem. The purely religious poems naturally carry strong appeal to all Catholics, but in those and in all the others everyone who really loves and appreciates poetry will enjoy this volume." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '26 500w

"The poems of Sister Mary Angelita are deeply spiritual. The mysteries of religious faith are finely woven with the beauties of nature." V. T. McC.

+ Cath World 122:569 Ja '26 300w

"'Starshine and Candlelight' is frankly devotional. The poems are a clear and pleasing though not remarkable expression of mild delight in nature, memories of home and religious sentiment. Sister Mary Angelita has a sense of form. She can recognize a poetic idea and outline it sharply, but she is likely to mar it with worn phrases and words forced for the rhyme's sake." Garreta Bussey

+ — N Y Tribune p9 Ja 3 '26 170w

"Opens with a devotional poem of genuine distinction. It seems to us her most striking poem, though there is charm elsewhere, and the beauty of simple devotion." W: R. Benét

+ Outlook 141:675 D 30 '25 40w

MASCHWITZ, ERIC. Taste of honey. 270p $2
McBride [7s 6d Constable]

25-2659

The theme of Mr Maschwitz's first novel is the love of two women for the same man. The man is Jerrold Freyne, an author, who in his novel strongly defends the sacrament of marriage. While Freyne himself at the age of twenty-seven is engaged to a sweet and gently-bred girl, he has never experienced a profound passion for any woman. Then he meets Gerda Masklyn. The conquest of this beautiful woman, her accidental death, and Jerrold's return to his fiancée furnish the drama of the story.

"The plot is rather absurd and far-fetched, although it is invested with a certain realism that disguises the great coincidences. The author certainly has a pleasant style, writes with a certain amount of wit, seems to know what the public wants."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 450w

Reviewed by H. L. Pangborn
Lit R p12 My 9 '25 150w

Nation and Ath 35:600 Ag 9 '24 190w

Reviewed by J: Franklin
New Statesman 23:648 S 13 '24 170w

"It is an achievement of no small consequence, as fiction goes, written very seriously, with a charm and polish of style rather unusual in these days when novices and experts rarely take time to try for finish, accuracy and grace of diction. Mr. Maschwitz seems quite lacking in the sense of humor and inclined to take with terrible seriousness not only life in general and in reality but also the figments of his imagination. But he does have a sense of beauty that permeates all his story and adds greatly to its interest."

+ — N Y Times p8 Je 7 '25 400w

"There is some first rate writing in Eric Maschwitz's first novel, and a good story."

+ N Y Tribune p9 My 3 '25 160w

"This first novel does not cut more than half an inch or so below the surface, but the pattern it does trace is a lively and entertaining one. Mr. Maschwitz can tell a story, and when he disengages himself from the embrace of the long arm of coincidence he will tell a better one."

+ — N Y World p7m Ap 12 '25 180w

"The book has the faults—and the freshness—of a first attempt; it is high-flown, ingenuous and gesticulatory; but it shows power and promise." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 138:173 Ag 16 '24 170w

"The plot and characterization are alike conventional, and the flight of the vampire lady is not even convincing. But much may be forgiven for the sake of the romantic setting."

+ — Spec 132:330 S 6 '24 60w

"At present Mr. Maschwitz pays too much attention to the surface of his story at the cost of the realism of his characters. We are left feeling that Freyne was a very ordinary man and his affair commonplace in spite of its romantic atmosphere. The reserved and only apparently stupid Elspeth would have been worth closer attention."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p524 Ag 28 '24 300w

MASEFIELD, JOHN. Trial of Jesus. 116p $1.75
Macmillan [6s Heinemann]

822 Jesus Christ—Drama 25-20163

Mr Masefield depicts in a three-act play the closing scenes of the life of Jesus, the betrayal by Judas in the garden, the examination by the high priests and by Pilate and the passing of the sentence of death.

Cleveland p120 D '25

Ind 115:743 D 26 '25 120w

"It is a difficult task for any author to play up to such a colossal theme. On the whole, 'The Trial of Jesus,' which should resemble nothing but itself, is usual, after the manner of Masefield's other dramas, but not so well done and not so esthetically satisfying." Laura Benét

+ — Int Bk R p106 Ja '26 420w

"On the dramatic side, except, of course, when the interest is centered in the title figure—it is not particularly strong, but it is rich in passages of literary and imaginative distinction. On the choral parts Mr. Masefield has put some charming poetry and, for those who choose to look for it, some significant symbolism." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p2 N 28 '25 550w

"It is difficult to see how any modern writer could treat this theme. Mr. Masefield hits on a compromise which at moments grates on the teeth like a slate-pencil. The badinage of Herod is terrible. He shuns rhetoric, except where it is sanctioned by the Bible, yet he preserves these rhetorical, almost allegorical, poetic images which mean nothing except a vague woolliness to the mind. If this is poetic drama, heaven help us. If this is the whole tragedy of Christ, heaven help us too."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:152 O 24 '25 220w

"There is, undoubtedly, a certain amount of experimentation in 'The Trial of Jesus,' and this is especially unfortunate, for it is not a subject for experimentation. Mr. Masefield should have been entirely sure of himself before undertaking the task. Nevertheless, one can but be profoundly moved by the sincere conviction apparent in the drama, and the manifest power with which, on the whole, the tragedy is developed and handled."

+ — N Y Times p5 O 4 '25 1600w

"The beauty of even Mr. Masefield's verse and prose bleaches a bit before the immortal phrases of the Scripture with which the dialogue is dotted. Yet the criticism is minor. John Masefield has written a personal and cuttlingly common-sense Passion Play." Wells Root

+ — N Y World p7m D 20 '25 200w

"The play is written throughout in a mixture of styles; and it becomes distressing to read, though, we have no doubt, Mr. Masefield's intentions were excellent."

+ — Spec 135:551 O 3 '25 200w

Spec 135:1048 D 5 '25 300w

Springf'd Republican p5a O 11 '25 120w

"There is something gripping about the stark realism of John Masefield's 'The Trial of Jesus.' It lacks the exalted feeling of Don Marquis's 'The Dark Hours'; in conception it is dispassionate by comparison. Yet it has its poetic reaches." E. M. J.

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 27 '25 600w

"The strength of Mr. Masefield's play is not in his handling of the story; and still less is it in the literary or artistic clothing, the style and atmosphere of the work. Its strength is simply its spiritual purpose, the unfeeling earnestness and sincerity by which it is inspired. We have no doubt at all that Mr. Masefield's consistent aim in composing his drama has been to vitalize religion, to break the web of conventional devotion which so often impedes practice, and to give Christ back to us as a sublime but intelligible hero, renewing so his claim upon us."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p671 O 15 '25 1150w

"This masterly poetic drama gives fresh living portraits of the judges of Jesus. The eternal conflict of institutions and worldly power is done with a perfection of subtlety."

+ World Tomorrow 8:384 D '25 40w

MASON, MICHAEL HENRY. Arctic forests. 320p il $6 Doran

919.8 Arctic regions. Alaska—Description and travel [25-8952]

The author, an adventurous young Englishman, lived for two years in the wilderness of the Alaskan Arctic. He found it, if not exactly a "friendly Arctic" at least habitable and pleasurable. He writes of the Indian tribes inhabiting the region, of the early discoverers, of his camp life with the white population and of the natural history of the Arctic. He gives some account of his travels and stories of the hunters and fur-traders he has met. The whole is illustrated with 120 photographs taken by the author and his friend.

"A remarkably vivid and informing account of his experiences within the territories of the Yukon, the Porcupine and the Mackenzie rivers." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '25 1200w

"The book perhaps attempts too much, in that it ranges from anthropological classifications through true and thrilling stories of camp life to imaginative tales of death and disaster. Each section is well written, but cannot claim its full effect when side by side with the others, and indeed conveys the impression of a guide-book compilation, which it is not. But the author most certainly succeeds in his purpose of giving an 'accurate general idea' of the country, and will doubtless convert many readers to his firm belief in its future." F. Debenham

— + Nature 115:411 Mr 21 '25 220w

"The volume is beautifully illustrated with 120 pictures. Its simple and attractive style and its abundant racy incident make it a fascinating book for boys as well as for their fathers." C. L. Skinner

+ N Y Tribune p16 S 13 '25 820w

"To the Canadians and the British, it is an appeal that ignorance be removed so that colonization may progress along natural lines. To the mere reader, it is a travel story, unique in spots, frequently interesting and sometimes thrilling, although the author never sees himself as any more of a hero than you are when you dodge through street traffic." V. Stefansson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:237 O 24 '25 1850w

"Almost any travel book is readable, and some few are very good. The Arctic Forests is among the best."

+ Spec 134:598 Ap 11 '25 230w

"Rather a mixed bag, and—to name two points only—this book would have been improved if all element of fiction had been reserved for another, and if the sketches of the hardships and fascinations of Arctic travel at all seasons had been cast in a less abrupt and fragmentary form. Yet there is much here to delight lovers of adventure and to interest others in the strange present and, as the author believes, the prosperous future of this Arctic borderland."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p28 Ja 8 '25 520w

MASON, WILLIAM LESLEY. Practical business English. 485p $2 Putnam

808 English language—Business English. Commercial correspondence 25-14389

This textbook for junior and senior high schools covers every type of commercial correspondence, with letters illustrating what is and what is not good business English. There are appended lists of frequently misspelled words, similar words often confused, foreign words and phrases, synonyms, antonyms, etc.

"The best feature of this useful manual is that it is written to meet the business man's requirements from his own point of view." L. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 450w

Outlook 141:166 S 30 '25 10w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 6 '25 150w

MASON-MANHEIM, MADELINE. Hill fragments; with a preface by Arthur Symons. 59p $2.50 Brentano's [6s C. Palmer]

821

"'Hill fragments' is a volume of verse that contains many of the elements of fine poetry." (Bookm) "Her subjects adhere closely to nature or to life in the abstract. She veers away from topics touching on the crowded city with its problems of dwarfed humanity. Often Miss Mason-Manheim grows deeply philosophical with a philosophy that questions the inner reasons of things. She ponders mainly on the subjects of repression, silence, unexpressed love and disillusionment." (Boston Transcript)

"The author writes with imagination and individuality; she exhibits a keen responsiveness to beauty and a lyrical poignancy and passion that are rare; she can shape words into natural albeit occasionally crude rhythms. And yet, when all is said, she gives an impression of ragged edges and incompleteness, as though she had seized upon the subject matter of poetry without kneading it perfectly into poetic form."

— + Bookm 62:95 S '25 150w

"Many of her ideas are decidedly and definitely original. Some have a quaint piquancy about them. Others are possessed of an elusiveness and there are those which bespeak our own highly praised Edna St. Vincent Millay." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Jl 11 '25 500w

"Here we have the delight of finding poetry presented not only in dignified dress but with adornment. The publishers have done their part in all that goes to making of an exquisite volume, and the five drawings by Kahlil Gibran, especially the frontispiece, haunt the mind with a mystical appeal beyond that of the poems themselves. Yet these are worthy of a welcome for their freshness and purity of youth. Their sponsor is no less subtle a critic than Arthur Symons, whose comment, however, is curiously veiled in literary allusion and figurative phrase." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p3 Ag 22 '25 500w

"Beyond a certain felicity of phrase she does not get very far, and in spite of Mr. Symons's assertion that 'her verses are musical in the highest sense of the word' there is ample room for argument as to her quality. In spite of splendid trapping, no less than an introduction by Arthur Symons and a series of drawings by Kahlil Gibran, 'Hill Fragments' is a mediocre book." H. S. Gorman

— + N Y Times p14 Je 28 '25 280w

"'Hill Fragments' is not definite enough even in words. There is much reiteration of 'silence,' 'shadows,' 'gloom,' of 'the Infinite,' of 'O Life' and 'O my soul.'" Margaret Evans

— N Y Tribune p9 S 20 '25 180w

"They have rhythm, free rhythm. She is a celebrant of beauty and a familiar of sorrow, a young girl and a rhapsodist; but there is certainly no particular distinction of phrase or epithet, no true mastery of style, and only a very faint flavor of personality." W: R. Benet

— + Sat R of Lit 1:932 Jl 25 '25 200w

Sat R of Lit 2:229 O 17 '25 40w

"Much of Miss Mason-Manheim's verse is vague and rhapsodical for want of that very 'kind of psychology which goes deep down into the very roots of things' which Mr. Symons claims for her. At her best she can evoke mystery and make it palatable. Too often her ecstasy wastes itself in words."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p303 Ap 30 '25 350w

MASSINGHAM, HENRY WILLIAM. H. W. M.; a selection from the writings of H. W. Massingham, ed. with a preface and notes by Harold John Massingham. 368p $4 Harcourt [12s 6d J. Cape]

B or 92

[25-19719]

"This book can best be described as a study of the personality of the late Mr. Massingham and of his work as a journalist and man of letters, based upon reprints of a number of his ablest articles. It also contains studies of his achievements as a publicist by distinguished men in his own and allied professions who were his intimate friends: Mr. Bernard Shaw, Mr. Brailsford, Mr. Hammond, Mr. Nevins, Mr. Tomlinson, and Mr. Vaughan Nash. They write introductory essays to the various sections of the book, and the whole work is edited and annotated by Mr. Massingham's son, Mr. H. J. Massingham."—Spec

"A stimulating impression of a brilliant English editor which is conveyed by selections from his own writings."

+ Booklist 22:151 Ja '26

Reviewed by K: Schriftgiesser

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 29 '25 1650w

"This is a very noble tribute to a fine, sincere, and able journalist."

+ Ind 115:363 S 26 '25 150w

"His son, in editing, has done well to include fragments of verse and prose from private letters and other informal sources, but not so well in appending to some of the most brilliantly intelligible passages notes either of interpretation or of appreciation." J. A. Hobson

+ Nation 121:283 S 9 '25 850w

"An extraordinarily interesting book, but particularly to anyone who worked under Massingham. One gets an extremely vivid picture of Massingham from these essays." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 37:296 Je 6 '25 1000w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

N Y Times p1 J1 5 '25 1750w (Same as Spec)

"The scheme of the book has been admirably carried out, though it has been condemned by critics who were perhaps, moved to hostility rather by their jealousy than by their critical sense." H: W. Nevins

+ N Y Tribune p1 S 13 '25 1300w

"Massingham was a fiery and dynamic soul. Those Americans who read the London Nation while he edited it will feel that a great part of his personality is not captured or expressed in this book at all. But it gives us enough to be a very valuable book." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p3m Ag 23 '25 820w

Sat R 139:678 Je 20 '25 720w

"A very interesting and very stimulating book. I hope I shall not be thought over-critical if I say that in spite of these virtues it is not a very well planned book. By that I mean that the scheme of the book necessarily renders it scrappy, if not, indeed, chaotic. As a book, the volume has too many cross-currents to produce a consecutive whole." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 134:1055 Je 27 '25 1900w

"Nearly all this matter is very good reading, but it does not enthrall us as a connected biography might have done—especially a biography aglow throughout with letters like those which by their scarcity tantalize us here."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p359 My 28 '25 1700w

MASSON, THOMAS LANSING. Why I am a spiritual vagabond. 351p $2 Century

240 Spiritual life

25-7866

This book is addressed to the people without a creed who are yet seeking God and the spiritual life in their own way. The thought underlying all the book is the destructiveness of materialism, the supreme importance of the spiritual. Mr. Masson firmly believes that with the absolute surrender of self and the casting out of the material, the spiritual life will have a chance to unfold itself and will be found to furnish an "all-absorbing occupation."

Booklist 21:358 J1 '25

"As a 'religious book' this one is certainly unconventional, but as a discussion in Mr. Masson's style of 'how a man shall live in the midst of common affairs a life that is conscious of eternity and not be unworthy of it,' the book is both an entertainment and an inspiration." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv Je '25 150w

"Mr. Masson has studied comprehensively the field of religious mysticism and metaphysics, and while his book reveals the fruit of this research, it is written in terms intelligible to the layman and in a style delightfully readable."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 29 '25 250w

"Perhaps there is nothing in literature so interesting as the few records of spiritual experience it contains. This is true of the experience of any man, however humble his standing in the world. When it comes to one who has held conspicuous and influential positions the appeal has a measure of authority." Basil King

+ Lit R p8 My 16 '25 1100w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p16 Je 21 '25 1100w

"His book might have been much better written and composed. It is not a clearly formulated creed. It is not a coherent and illuminating piece of spiritual autobiography. It is a loose, discursive, groping miscellany of rather commonplace comment on things in general, partially redeemed by a faint little thread of genuine religious experience." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p2 Ag 9 '25 300w

"Mr. Masson writes with simplicity and directness, and his book will probably reach the large audience for whom it is intended."

+ Outlook 141:166 S 30 '25 180w

"Unless we are much mistaken, some who are already counted as members of the household of faith may derive not a little profit from Mr. Masson's straightforward and simple message."

R of Rs 71:559 My '25 150w

St Louis p334 S '25

"The book should stir into activity souls apt to get lethargic from too much bridge-playing and motoring."

Springf'd Republican p10 My 5 '25 350w

"The writing is a sort of bombastic journalism, with the snippy sentences and short paragraphs and exaggerated emphasis learned from the advertising pages of ephemeral periodicals. But in so far as this humorist has risen to give his testimony and is moved by a desire to share with the rest of us some moving and beautiful spiritual experience, he is wholly admirable. There is need for many sorts of interpreters for so universal and many-sided a realm as modern religion." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 54:500 Ag 1 '25 360w

"Will be helpful and stimulating to those interested in trying to think out a plan for spiritual growth."

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 J1 '25

MASTERS, DAVID. New cancer facts. 67p il $1.25 Dodd [2s 6d Lane]

616.994 Cancer

25-17596

The book is a brief study of the researches of Dr Louis W. Sambon concerning the origin of cancer, the results of which were embodied in a paper read last year before the Royal society of medicine. The conclusions to which his investigations point are that cancer is a parasitic disease and is not due to diet, irritants or any of the other causes which popular belief holds responsible.

Booklist 22:147 Ja '26

St Louis p405 N '25

"It is inevitable that popular works on cancer should make their appearance, and that being so it is fortunate that an explanation of the progress of research should have been undertaken by a reasonable and lucid writer like Mr. Masters."

+ Sat R 140:267 S 5 '25 250w

MASTERS, DAVID—Continued

"Sir James Cantile in an introduction testifies to the importance of Dr. Sambon's work, and believes that he has proved that cancer is a parasitic disease and that its control is within our reach."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p450 J1
2 '25 200w

MASTERS, EDGAR LEE. Selected poems.
2 411p $2.50 Macmillan

811 25-18498

Mr. Masters has himself selected these poems from eight volumes of his published verse.

Booklist 22:152 Ja '26

"Mr. Masters in a brief introduction remarks that he has put into this volume poems which show his range and quality, without dependence on other poems. It is naturally of great interest to reread many of the verses, now that they may be regarded coolly. Mr. Masters's lyrical brutality and keen interest in the unfortunate bits of human driftwood make some of his phrases seem stark rather than beautiful."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 28 '25 450w

"The 'Selected Poems' of Edgar Lee Masters should be welcomed by many whose acquaintance with the poet is limited to the 'Spoon River Anthologies'; it should be no less welcome to those of more pretentious erudition who have not infrequently suffered uncertainty in the face of the many and singularly unequal volumes of his making. For in more ways than one this edition is an epitome." J: W. Gassner

+ N Y Tribune p15 N 22 '25 500w

"The volume hums with a vast cerebral noise and emotional repercussion, until the layman would drown with the prophet. Truth tumbles and flashes in instantaneous bolts of hot conception. But for the most part, the heavens are troubled and there is no light."

Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p7m N 1 '25 420w

"His roses, such as they are, have been scattered at intervals on the face of a desert of verse. Haste has taken the edge away from his rhythms and language; his poetry is traced on sand instead of being engraved on brass. Even his most successful poems are scarred with the wounds of careless haste; they cry for revision, that final moulding caress of the artist hand which can be observed in almost any original manuscript of the good poems of his predecessors, from Herrick, through Blake to Tennyson. Mr. Masters has eloquence, vitality, variety, and forcefulness but he is not the master of his medium." E: Davison

+ Sat R of Lit 2:443 D 26 '25 550w

"If form and diction alone are concerned, there is a good bit of material in the new collection that would satisfy the prejudice of a conservative. One gets here the many-sided Masters, and any reader will be hard to please if some samples do not strike a responsive chord."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a N 22 '25 220w

MATHEWS, JOHN MABRY. American state government. 660p $3.75 (16s) Appleton

353 State governments 24-24058

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Am Econ R 15:93 Mr '25 220w

"American State Government is written in a clear style and with careful attention to details. Aside from a few inaccuracies, the book deserves high praise and should be ranked with the standard works of Holcombe and Dodd."

R. H. Wells

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:196 F '25 550w

"Those who have profited by Professor Mathews' earlier work on State Administration will find again in this book the same admirable qualities of logical arrangement, clarity in expression, and breadth of bibliographical references."

+ Ann Am Acad 177:295 Ja '25 350w

Booklist 21:259 Ap '25

"The book is now the most comprehensive and thoroughly up-to-date text on state government. It has made little pretense to criticism, being content merely to set forth somewhat fully the arid but important details of government in our forty-eight commonwealths." R. C. M.

+ Pol Sci Q 40:329 Je '25 180w

"This is a bulky book, but a thoughtful and helpful one, respectful toward history, generous in the citation of court decisions and well equipped with bibliographies. If anything, its aim is too comprehensive."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 10 '25
200w

Reviewed by Walter Nelles

Survey 54:115 Ap 15 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 20:288 D '25

MATHEWS, SHAILER. Faith of modernism. 182p $1.50 Macmillan

230 Modernism, Christianity 24-25304

Dr Mathews shows that the difference between modernism and dogmatism is not one of mere theology, but a struggle between two types of mind. He explains the attitude of the modernist toward the Bible and toward Jesus Christ and the compulsion that he feels to project, not simply to defend the Christian faith.

Booklist 21:181 F '25

"This is no mass of negations, no mere denial of cherished beliefs, it is an affirmation of faith that does not fear freedom of speech, but speaks to the longings of restless hearts who are seeking something that they can tie to. It sheds light rather than generates heat. Fundamentalists will pronounce it anathema, but men of scientific mind will welcome its honest confession."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 20 '24 300w

"An exceptionally thoughtful interpretation of the religious movement today which is seeking closer relationships with the thinking characteristic of our day."

+ J Religion 5:107 Ja '25 60w

"Dean Mathews' book is one which no student of modern religious issues can afford to pass by. Its spirit in general is irenic and its aim constructive, though one might question the right to characterize the confessionalists as those who enforce the traditional 'without serious recognition of moral imperatives.' (p. 17)." H. F. Rall

+ J Religion 5:196 Mr '25 1100w

"The denatured Christianity of Dean Mathews can no more save human society from dissolution in the twentieth century than the abstract morality of Seneca and the pious meditations of Marcus Aurelius could arrest the dissolution of Roman society in the second century." A. S. Crapsey

+ N Y Tribune p1 D 21 '24 350w

"To have a book on the modern point of view from one so competent both as to scholarship and as to the possession of a sense for living values is indeed a privilege." J. S. Bixler

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 15 '25
1500w

MATHEWS, SHAILER, and others. Contributions of science to religion. 427p il $3 (12s 6d) Appleton

215 Religion and science. Science 24-28230

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:217 Mr '25

"Decidedly important volume." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 60:adv Ja '25 150w

Int J Ethics 35:320 Ap '25 280w

"A valuable book for those interested in the present effort to relate science and religion harmoniously."

+ J Religion 5:107 Ja '25 40w

"Robert A. Millikan, the Nobel Prize winner, writes a chapter on The Structure of Matter, an epitome of his great book 'The Electron.' Of course this chapter is the last word in physics, and it is fascinating. It is illustrated by diagrams of the hypothetical orbits in which the electrons disport themselves within the atom. But they fail to magnetize toward religion. The fact is that the famous scientist says not one single, solitary word about it. John M. Coulter, the celebrated botanist, writes a chapter on Plant Life. I feel deeply grateful to Mr. Coulter for the most enlightening discussion on the art of scientific investigation it has been my good fortune to read for many a day. But not a word on religion. Edwin B. Frost writes an essay on The Structure of the Cosmos which should be obligatory reading in every college. The magnificent photograph of The Great Gaseous Nebula in Orion distinctly fascinates. But not a word on religion." B: Stolberg

+ Nation 120:329 Mr 25 '25 900w

"I have found the book informing, stimulating and amusing. . . For in the universe which it reveals there is no place for a personal Creator nor a special Creation. What we see is a play and interplay of forces of which we can see no beginning and can foretell no end. Religion is only one of the products of this play and interplay of forces." A. S. Crapsey

+ N Y Tribune p9 F 15 '25 420w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p59 Ja 22 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:139 My '25

MATTHEWS, BRANDER, and LIEDER, PAUL ROBERT, eds. Chief British dramatists, excluding Shakespeare. 1084p $4 Houghton

822 English drama—Collections. Drama—Collections 24-27697

A "severely sifted" selection of twenty-five plays from the middle of the fifteenth century to the end of the nineteenth, written by British dramatists and acted on the stage with prolonged success. Appendices contain notes on authors and plays, a reading list and an index of characters. Contents: The theater in England; The Brome Abraham and Isaac; The second shepherd's play; Ralph Roister Doister, by Nicholas Udall; The Spanish tragedy; or, Hieronimo is mad again, by Thomas Kyd; The troublesome reign and lamentable death of Edward the second, by Christopher Marlowe; Every man in his humour, by Ben Jonson; A woman killed with kindness, by Thomas Heywood; Philaster; or, Love lies a-bleeding, by Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher; The Duchess of Malfi, by John Webster; A new way to pay old debts, by Philip Massinger; The plain dealer, by William Wycherley; All for love; or, The world well lost, by John Dryden; Venice preserved; or, A pilot discovered, by Thomas Otway; The provoked wife, by Sir John Vanbrugh; The way of the world, by William Congreve; The beaux' stratagem, by George Farquhar; She stoops to conquer; or, The mistakes of a night, by Oliver Goldsmith; The school for scandal, by Richard Brinsley Sheridan; Richelieu; or, The conspiracy, by Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton; London assurance, by Dion Boucicault; Caste, by T. W. Robertson; Pygmalion and Galatea, by W. S. Gilbert; Lady Windermere's fan, by Oscar Wilde; The second Mrs Tanqueray, by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero; The liars, by Henry Arthur Jones.

Cleveland p89 S '25

"With the possible exception of one or two instances, they have exercised a most sagacious discrimination. The publishers, too, are to be congratulated upon the achievement of including so great a mass of reading matter in a single volume, which is comparatively easy to handle, without resorting to flimsy paper or illegible type. From every point of view, literary and mechanical, the workmanship is excellent." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p4 Ja 10 '25 400w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p6 D 14 '24 2400w

"The wide scope of this list, its exceptional balance and the emphasis it places on the acting side of the drama will be favorably observed."

+ N Y Tribune p14 Ap 19 '25 400w

"The compilers of this volume, whose names are a sufficient guarantee of their competency, may be said to have fairly accomplished their main purpose." J. R. Towse

+ Sat R of Lit 2:258 O 31 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p765 O 29 '25 700w

MATTHEWS, WALTER ROBERT. Gospel and the modern mind. 188p $1.75 Doran

230 Theology

25-7296

"This little book is an essay in popular theology. It is meant to interest educated men and women, who, without being experts in science or philosophy, have adopted what we vaguely call the 'modern' view of the world."—Preface

"It gives a readable apologetic for the important doctrines of Christianity."

+ J Religion 5:447 Jl '25 80w

"In a day certainly of considerable confusion, religious and theological confusion as well as philosophical and political confusion, Dr. Matthews gives us the impression of a man who, in a remarkable way, 'keeps his head.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p552 Ag 27 '25 750w

MAUCLAIR, CAMILLE. Claude Monet; tr. by J. Lewis May. (Masters of modern art) 40p il $1.75 Dodd [5s Lane]

759.4 Monet, Claude

25-26325

Claude Monet, patriarch of impressionism, was long denied the recognition he deserved. An ardent lover of nature, he spent his life painting nature as he saw it, inventing when necessary, the means that seemed to him best suited to his purpose. The author of this monograph sets forth the artist's principles of light and color as they are deduced from an investigation of his work.

"It is an interesting story, well told, and followed by an analysis on philosophy of Monet's method, though the painter himself was no enunciator of theories."

+ Living Age 326:338 Ag 8 '25 200w

"On the whole, offers the lay reader a most interesting and accurate introduction to one of the leading figures of contemporary painting, and the illustrations are beautifully printed in colotype." T: Craven

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p475 Jl 16 '25 1150w

MAUGHAM, WILLIAM SOMERSET. Painted veil. 289p $2 Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

25-7084

Pretty, empty-headed, selfish and vain, bored by her husband and his endless laboratory experiments, Kitty Fane finds ready distraction in an affair with Charlie Townsend, the most accomplished flirt in the European colony at Hong-Kong. It is astonishingly easy. The servants see everything but, in the accepted fashion of the Orient, know nothing; Dr Fane, absorbed in his biological research, is relieved to have Kitty amused. And then suddenly, startlingly, he discovers the truth. In the painful and bitter experiences that follow Kitty loses herself and finds her soul.

"There is no flaw in the structure of the story, but there is a lack. It does not touch the springs of emotion; but it rivets attention, and compels admiration for the austere excellence of the workmanship. It is an emotional situation scrutinized by the cold light of reason." Isabel Paterson

MAUGHAM, WILLIAM S.—Continued

+ — Bookm 61:346 My '25 450w

"Mr. Maugham is capable of better work than 'The Painted Veil.'" B. P. H.

— Boston Transcript p6 Ap 11 '25 760w
— Cleveland p66 Je '25

"The characters are superficially drawn and the theme is pulled awry by a husband who is a little too bad himself to point a moral for his wife, but barbarous action together with Mr Maugham's power to employ and entertain our intelligence results in a grown-up midnight tale of terror."

+ — Dial 79:173 Ag '25 80w

"Mr. Maugham's latest book is a splendid story, superbly told. Anyone seeking diversion need look no further; anyone searching for thought-pabulum has found it." Joseph Collins
+ Int Bk R p405 My '25 1200w

"'The Painted Veil' is neither an important nor an agreeable book. There is too much paint and too little veil." S: H. Adams

— Lit R p3 Ap 11 '25 600w

Nation and Ath 37:246 My 23 '25 200w

"A peculiarly sordid and brutal episode of English life in China, relieved by the art with which it is told." E. M. Lovett

— + New Repub 42:243 Ap 22 '25 120w

"The end of The Painted Veil is the silliest ever inflicted by a brilliant writer on a brilliant story. But, up to the last few pages, the book is so good that I should doubt whether the whole year will show more than two or three novels fit to be mentioned beside it." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 25:106 My 9 '25 380w

"Mr. Maugham is no stylist in the usual literary sense; he is no Pater or Meredith, choosing every word deliberately, arranging for rhythm as well as color. His style is sharp, quick, subdued, casual. It never heaps his story with efflorescences; it is neither rank nor cultivated. It tells a story. And, after all, is that not style?"

+ — N Y Times p7 Mr 22 '25 2000w

"All the hackneyed epithets are rightly applicable to this story; it really is absorbing, gripping, tensely dramatic. So great is the virtue of restraint in art. So great, indeed, that it hardly matters whether there is anything to restrain. Better not look behind the painted veil—on the last page, where the author suddenly emerges—into rank sentimentality." Isabel Paterson

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Ap 12 '25 580w

"This story is intensely interesting on account of the ingenious twist which the author has given to a commonplace situation, as well as for the admirable characterization of the three individuals who form the points of the triangle; but really Mr. Maugham is rather cynically unpleasant when, having led us to believe that we are dealing with a reformed and virtuous heroine, he throws her again without warning into the arms of her rather ridiculous paramour. This is a physical episode that leaves one with a sense of physical disgust." Stanley Went

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:611 Mr 21 '25 600w

Spec 134:850 My 23 '25 600w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p332 My 14 '25 280w

MAULSBY, WILLIAM SHIPMAN. Getting the news. 310p $2.25 Harcourt

070 Journalism. Reporters and reporting. 25-4306

A practical textbook by the professor of journalism in the University of Iowa. It describes in detail the theory and make-up of the newspaper and its news-gathering organization —the whole process of assembling and writing up the news, reporting and interviewing, handling a beat, etc.

Booklist 21:256 Ap '25

Reviewed by J. M. Lee

Bookm 61:479 Je '25 150w

"The book is written with such thorough understanding of the perplexities of the newspaper beginner that a knowledge of its contents will go a long way toward making a competent reporter."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 14 '25 300w

Reviewed by O. G. Villard

Nation 120:160 F 11 '25 200w

"While the work is compendious for its length and full of suggestions valuable to a beginner, it adds little to what had been written previously."

+ — N Y Times p2 F 22 '25 680w

St Louis p121 My '25

"If it is meant as a text book, its material is poorly arranged; no illustrating examples of writing or headlining are given, and the exposition is far from clear. The general reader will find the style dull and the information not of great interest. Such merit as the volume has lies in its upholding of certain standards of good journalism."

— Sat R of Lit 1:620 Mr 21 '25 150w

"Discloses no little fresh insight and reasoning in setting forth the fundamental aims and methods of a newspaper's news-gathering organization. While the work is not confined strictly to getting the news, it is the technic of news gathering which fills the bulk of the informally-written and sprightly pages."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 30 '25 500w

Wis Lib Bul 21:108 Ap '25

MAURICE, SIR FREDERICK BARTON. Robert E. Lee, the soldier. 313p $4 Houghton

B or 92 Lee, Robert Edward

25-8686

Written by a British military authority who has given years of study to his subject, this book is an appreciation of Lee's generalship. General Maurice makes an examination of the field of each one of Lee's battles and of the literature relating to his campaigns. In his summing up of Lee's generalship and place in history, General Maurice puts him as a general above Wellington.

Reviewed by Eben Swift

Am Hist R 30:840 Jl '25 750w

"The book is written in a clear and vigorous style and the technical details have been handled in such a manner that the narrative of military events is not tiresome to the lay reader."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:847 N '25 230w

"The singular value of General Maurice's book consists in his own large military experience, and above all in his bringing the most intimate observation and knowledge of the great European War to bear on Lee's career and military achievements." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '25 500w

Booklist 21:380 Jl '25

"A valuable contribution to the vast body of authoritative works devoted to the military career of the great Virginian. But the present volume is, happily, more than an unbiased valuation of Lee's campaigns and battles, for it contains as well a singularly eloquent conception of Lee, the man."

+ Bookm 61:607 Jl '25 100w

Boston Transcript p3 My 9 '25 420w

Cleveland p113 D '25

"Remarkable for its clarity, conciseness, and style. Every person interested not only in a straightforward account of the military events in which Lee played a part, but in a more intimate acquaintance with the sterling character of the great Confederate leader, should read this book."

+ Hist Outlook 17:38 Ja '26 550w

"General Maurice's book is not only valuable and informative. It is interesting, well written, and sympathetic—a tribute from one officer and gentleman to another." D. R.
+ Ind 114:562 My 16 '25 1000w

"The volume is a brilliant study, not a biography but an analysis of the grand strategy of Lee. Yet it gives the main outlines of Lee's life, with many charming and personal touches." Archibald Henderson
+ Int Bk R p538 Jl '25 1250w

"The study is eminently sane and honest. General Maurice is no blind partisan of the Confederate chief. As he considers the successive campaigns, he does not hesitate to point out such shortcomings as Lee exhibited or to assign to him his due share of the responsibility for failures. But with equal poise and pertinence he inquires what other general who commanded for three years in the field made fewer mistakes." Garland Greever
+ Lit R p2 My 9 '25 680w

"This soldierly monograph on a great soldier is praised, partly because the book is so readable, partly because its hero is made so humanly appealing."

+ Living Age 327:76 O 3 '25 1250w

"It is a remarkable volume, not only for its conciseness but also for its admirable style, its clearness, its extraordinary tearing away of technical details in order to present the narrative of military events in such a way that the lay reader can follow with ease." O. G. Villard
+ Nation 120:696 Je 17 '25 1000w

"Of the general merit of his work there can be no two opinions. It is an illuminating and most readable contribution to the study of war, and a fitting tribute to a man whom Lord Wolseley described as 'one of the few men who ever seriously impressed and awed me with their natural and inherent greatness.'"
+ Nation and Ath 37:438 Jl 4 '25 520w

"Stonewall Jackson found the perfect biographer in the Sandhurst professor of strategy, Colonel Henderson. General Maurice, even better qualified to do for Lee what Henderson did for Jackson, has not fully grasped his opportunity, and has given us a work which while engrossing and inspiring is sketchy instead of final. Yet it is the best analysis of Lee's generalship that has appeared, and for this reason it is valuable." H. J. Eckenrode
+ New Repub 43:327 Ag 12 '25 380w

"Sir Frederick Maurice has limited himself to an outline sketch, but his clarity of expression and power of concentrating on essentials make the book a valuable addition to military history."

+ New Statesman 25:580 S 5 '25 420w

"He has planned his work as if it were a military campaign, driving straight toward his objective, massing skillfully his facts to be brought to bear and refusing to be diverted by engrossing excursions into personal biography or argument on the civil aspect of the conflict of 1861-65. If he shows a complete lack of harmony with the type of statesmanship embodied in Jefferson Davis, he feels no urge to construct an imaginary Tyburn and drag out Lee's bones to be dangled on a gibbet as Cromwell's were after the Restoration." A. S. Will
+ — N Y Times p6 My 10 '25 1550w

"This excellent book is presented in a form worthy of its contents. The maps and sketches are adequate and the printed page has the same sober dignity and clearness as the author's words." Albert Guerard
+ N Y Tribune p6 My 31 '25 1000w

"This book is a study of the military technique of a great soldier discussed by another soldier talking, however, not to specialists but to the general reader. That is immensely valuable. But the general reader must not expect more than it attempts to give. For one thing, he must not expect very much in the way of historical perspective, of the political and international significance of events." N. W. Stephenson

N Y World p6m Ap 26 '25 1150w

Outlook 140:565 Ag 19 '25 320w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

"Because of the verve and vigor of the narrative as told by General Maurice, this story of the greatest figure of the Confederacy appeals almost as strongly to the civilian as to the soldier."

+ R of Rs 71:557 My '25 120w

Sat R 139:620 Je 6 '25 60w

"Everything that Sir Frederick Maurice writes on the art of war is masterly in conception and brilliant in execution. His new essay on Lee, the greatest of American generals, forms no exception to this well-established rule."

+ Sat R 140:16 Jl 4 '25 750w

"It is a simple and vivid account of Lee's campaigning rather than a biography in the usual sense. The military history of the American Civil War always makes strangely good reading, even for the layman, as well as very valuable reading for the military student."

+ Spec 134:934 Je 6 '25 80w

"General Maurice presents a fascinating portrait. Though General Maurice's sympathies are doubtless more with Lincoln and the North than with Jefferson Davis, and the South, Lee in the great conflict is his military hero. He treats him throughout in a way which shows that his close study of the facts has made him feel for the Southern General as a lover or a child. Yet his admiration never degenerates into mere idolatry. Though he places Lee amongst the greatest of the Lords of War, he sees his faults as well as his virtues." J. St L. Strachey
+ Spec 135:197 Ag 1 '25 1850w

"The reader gets fresh thrills all along these 300 pages, for Gen Maurice is a good story-teller, in addition to being a careful historian."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Je 28 '25 920w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p407 Je 18 '25 950w

Wis Lib Bul 21:198 Jl '25

MAURICE, SIR FREDERICK BARTON, and ARTHUR, SIR GEORGE COMPTON ARCHIBALD. Life of Lord Wolseley; with a foreword by General Sir R. Wingate. 375p il $6 Doubleday [25s Heinemann]

B or 92 Wolseley, Garnet Joseph Wolseley, 1st viscount [25-3015]

Tho he fought no important wars, Lord Wolseley's name is the most prominent in British military history during the fifty years between the Crimean and the Boer war. He directed many small campaigns and commanded the Gordon relief expedition but his chief work was the reorganization of the British army, of which he was commander-in-chief from 1895 to 1900. The biography is an account of his achievements in war and in army administration.

"We see the distinguished military leader sharply delineated on every page. His letters to his wife, his official messages, his home life, his quiet literary tastes, his love of country and of people, his courtesy and consideration of others, his strong religious nature, all serve to place the book on a high plane of biographical excellence." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 7 '25 950w

"The story of his life is admirably told by Sir Frederick Maurice and Sir George Arthur, who were ideally suited not only by experience, but by temperament, to undertake the task."

+ Nation and Ath 36:420 D 13 '24 2100w

"As a history of that hard-fought campaign against stupidity and ignorance this book is of permanent value; admirably proportioned, ably written, dignified without being dull, it has an interest for the general reader no less than the specialist."

+ New Statesman 24:778 Ap 11 '25 600w

MAURICE, F. B., and ARTHUR, G. C. A.

—Continued

Reviewed by H. E. Armstrong
N Y Times p3 J1 19 '25 1450w

Reviewed by W. MacDonald
N Y Tribune p11 My 10 '25 1050w

R of Rs 71:558 My '25 150w

"Admirably written and commendably brief biography... The biographers have the advantage of long and intimate knowledge of their subject. The authors have also the advantage of being able to omit all personal history not bearing immediately on their theme, thanks to the adequate presentation of this side of Wolseley's career in the recently published collection of his correspondence with his wife."

+ Sat R 138:608 D 13 '24 670w

Spec 134:467 Mr 21 '25 1450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p783 N 27 '24 2300w

MAUROIS, ANDRE. Captains and kings. 155p
$1.50 Appleton [5s Lane]

848 Leadership

25-12183

In the form of three dialogs between a young lieutenant and his old friend the philosopher, the author of "Ariel" discusses the quality of leadership—the spirit that makes the great soldier and leader of men.

"Thought-provoking, spirited, and distinguished, though not notably profound."

+ — Booklist 22:65 N '25

"Wit, logical subtlety, and at some points beauty distinguish the dialogues. They will be prized most by specialists in the art of war, although their significance, by virtue of the large philosophical and metaphysical questions proposed, extends far beyond so circumscribed a territory. Those who do not care for the dialectics should find entertainment in the numerous anecdotes of eminent fighters."

+ Bookm 62:218 O '25 280w

"This is a spirited piece of literary sword-play. It is pleasant to meet two Frenchmen of Mr. Maurois who accompany their give and take with so much wit. One is a soldier, lieutenant on leave from his post in the East, and the other a professor of philosophy in a Paris lycée. The variance between the points of view of these two amiable duellists in words is irremediable, as Mr. Maurois knows. When they shake hands at parting, their 'au-revoir' is tinged with the promise of future discussions from which each will leave off unconvinced by the other's words. But this in no way detracts from the charm of Mr. Maurois's discourse." C. H.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ag 1 '25 620w

"The young officer is a devout believer in the legend of military genius, while the professor represents a more skeptical attitude, but with none of Pierefeuf's wit and aptness in technical illustration which lent so much weight to the thesis of 'Plutarch Lied.' Here all the technical experience is one-sided, and the lieutenant is constantly ready with some allusion, usually vague, to an incident at the front which proves his point. He descends from romantic generalities to concrete instances only to cite obscure occurrences as to which there are no data but his own." Ernest Boyd

Ind 114:729 Je 27 '25 1250w

"The first reaction one has to this book is: What a waste of good writing! But that is only because one is justly aware of the inconsequence of the proving whether a war-leader is a genius or not, so long as what he does with his ability is wrong. But these dialogues turn into larger significances than operations of generals; they become brilliant exchanges of thoughts upon the characteristics of leadership and utilize in their coruscations (not simply the polish of sword-blades) parallels and tangents that tighten the references and expand the scope. M. Maurois has balanced the play of wit and thought without revealing where he stands, which is excellent indication of his having seen both sides of the debate." H. A. P.

+ Lit R p5 S 19 '25 150w

"M. Maurois happily, aided as he has been by a more than adequate translator, succeeds in keeping his imaginary disputation between a young Lieutenant of Dragoons and a middle-aged teacher of philosophy on a high level of vivacity. If not particularly profound these dialogues upon the nature, place and scope of Leadership in War and Peace are both interesting and provocative. The dialogues are rendered all the more interesting from the fact that their argument is continually fortified by apt illustrations from literature and history, the majority of them being taken from the tactics and strategy employed by the French Commands during the Great War."

+ New Statesman 25:54 Ap 25 '25 300w

"In dialogue, one or the other of two characters must be subordinated; however skillfully disguised—and here skill is everything—one must act in the nature of a 'feed,' otherwise there is no definite issue to the argument, no single and forcible impact is made by the dialogue. In 'Captains and Kings' the reader is pulled first one way and then the other, never certain where to award the crown. As a result he suffers a little from boredom, and runs the risk of rating the Frenchman's attempt lower than it really deserves."

N Y Times p5 J1 5 '25 1300w

Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 20w

Reviewed by T. J. C. Martyn

Sat R of Lit 2:177 O 3 '25 550w

MAVOR, JAMES. Niagara in politics; a critical account of the Ontario hydro-electric commission. 255p $2 Dutton

380.16 Niagara Falls, Ontario. Hydro-electric power commission 25-23832

Professor Mavor makes a sharp distinction between government ownership—the right of eminent domain—and government operation of industries. His book is an indictment of the latter. In reviewing the history of the Ontario hydro-electric commission Professor Mavor charges that its conduct has been illegal thru-out. The commission has controlled the provincial government to such an extent that it has made and repealed laws at its pleasure. The book strengthens the case by pointing to the prosperous state of industries on the American side of the Falls where government operation is unknown.

Boston Transcript p7 D 19 '25 750w

"The high scholarship of this author and the deadly array of facts which he presents combine to make a book which cannot be disregarded in any argument on Government ownership and operation of public utilities." Arthur Pound

+ Ind 115:742 D 26 '25 1000w

MAXWELL, WILLIAM BABINGTON. Life; a study of self. 269p $2 Doubleday

170 Conduct of life 26-944

The novelist turns philosopher and reflects on life and its fulfilment. His creed is thus expressed: "Life is the only thing that matters. And the only real crime is not to live to the full. . . It is death in life, not death after life, that we should fear."

"Although the philosophy is 'merely some private thinks' of Mr. Maxwell, it sounds reasonable enough and is not too sermony." W. G. M.

Boston Transcript p7 D 12 '25 650w

"It is a book rich in observation of life and character and very fine understanding, and compassionate in its discernments and interpretations."

+ N Y Times p18 D 13 '25 350w

"Observations de senectute and on getting up in the morning alternate with intimations of morality and advice on domestic relations, the last variety of hints containing nothing that is not eminently conservative."

N Y Tribune p13 Ja. 10 '26 280w

MAYER, EDWIN JUSTUS. The firebrand; a comedy in the romantic spirit. 223p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-3438

A romantic comedy in three acts, the scene of which is laid in Florence in the sixteenth century. The story is based on an incident in the life of the dashing young genius and lover, Benvenuto Cellini, who is the central character of the play. It tells of Cellini's adventure in love with the beautiful Angela, his model.

"Delightfully written with spirit and wit about the character of Benvenuto Cellini—the dashing braggart, genius and lover. Unusually good reading."

+ Booklist 21:270 Ap '25

"He is as yet too much concerned with the tricks of the theatre. He is as yet too fashionable, and to be clever is the fashion of the day. It is perfectly true that Congreve seems to be coming into his own again. But it must be remembered that Congreve had his tradition to rely upon even when he was pulling its tail. Mr. Mayer, to be more polite, should pull the tail of his own tradition a little more."

Edwin Seaver

N Y World p4m F 1 '25 300w

"The dialogue is written with dash, humor, and poetry, showing Cellini as a most attractive mocker. With all its satire of a past age, it is a comedy that will appeal to the tempo of the present." M. J. Moses

+ Outlook 139:458 Mr 25 '25 100w

"Now and again Mr. Mayer's dialogue seems a trifle too 'literary,' though for the most part it moves with vigor, ease, and swiftness. Devotees of sixteenth century Florence may take exception to its rather modern flavor, but most readers will only be grateful for the vitality and freshness the author has added to a glamorous old tale." Rachel Field

+ Sat R of Lit 1:660 Ap 11 '25 120w

Spring'd Republican p7a S 6 '25 350w

MAYNE, ETHEL COLBURN. Enchanters of men. 358p il $5 Putnam

920.7 Woman—Biography

Biographical sketches of twenty-three women whose fame rests upon their power to fascinate men. Contents: Diane de Poitiers; Bianca Capello; Gabrielle d'Estrees; Marie Mancini; Lola Montez; Tullia d'Aragona; Ninon de Lenclos; Sophie Arnould; Jeanne du Barry; Henriette d'Orléans; Marie-Antoinette; Marie-Caroline, duchesse de Berry; Pauline Borghese; Louise de Stolberg, countess of Albany; Adrienne Lecouvreur; Maria-Felicita Garcia; Marie Taglioni; Jenny Lind; Teresa Guiccioli; Evelina Hanska; Mathilde Mirat (Madame Heine); Adah Isaacs Menken; Index.

"It is her gift of a pretty humor even more than her talent for austere research which gives solid value to her histories."

+ Bookm 62:220 O '25 200w

"The author seeks to reconstruct the surroundings and the influences which made these women. She seems to have felt something of the influences of Gamaliel Bradford's superlative methods, and the results of her efforts are always interesting and sometimes notable."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 17 '25 450w

"The accounts are violently unequal in style, in treatment. Miss Mayne writes best when the subject is French. Her Diane de Poitiers, Gabrielle d'Estrees, Du Barry and Ninon de Lenclos, are the volume's masterpieces. They crackle with brilliant quotation, they have their own charm and pungency and their narrative, and even poetic, eloquence." Stark Young

+ New Repub 45:167 D 30 '25 750w

"Whether or not one cares for royal mistresses, there are plenty of reasons for Miss Mayne's handsome volume, notably her own qualities of humor and penetration, which give a novel and pleasing twist to the open secrets of twenty-four enchanters." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p12 S 6 '25 1250w

"Miss Mayne is well—too well—qualified. She is familiar with history, memoir, biography; she is acquainted with the sources, even in foreign tongues; she possesses a facile pen from which flow the apt phrase and quotation; her knowledge, main and tributary, is almost disconcerting; she is, perhaps, the greatest living authority on Byron and a writer of excellent short stories—but, emotionally, her sex disqualifies her." H. S.

— N Y World p4m S 20 '25 650w

"A rare and delightful thing at once scholarly and charming, with its carefully drawn pictures of women whose names spell glamor and romance."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 S 21 '25 520w

MAYNE, ETHEL COLBURN. Inner circle. 208p $2 Harcourt [6s Constable]

[25-9991]

"The eleven brief tales contained in the collection are conceived somewhat in the Katherine Mansfield manner. There is the same meticulous groping after psychological cause and effect with the same ruthless and soul-exploring probe and scalpel." (N Y Times) Contents: The latchkey; The shirt of Nessus; Black magic; Stripes; White hair; Campaign; Lavender and Lucinda; The picnic; Still life; Dialogue in a cab; Franklin's problem.

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 11 '25 300w

Dial 79:260 S '25 120w

"A remarkable book. Miss Mayne's method is to take an apparently trifling incident, enter into it, and find in it an almost inexhaustible significance. The danger of this method is that in finding so much one is sometimes tempted to find more than is there; in other words, one sometimes becomes sentimental. Miss Mayne is sometimes sentimental." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 37:51 Ap 11 '25 300w

"Miss Mayne's touch upon reality is delicate, reserved, withdrawing, feminine." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 43:242 Jl 22 '25 500w

"The stories are subtle and delicately cynical; yet one has the feeling that the writer is always in sympathy with her brain children, no matter how tortured and morbidly introspective their reasoning may be."

+ N Y Times p8 My 3 '25 600w

"Occasionally a woman writer can give the illusion of objectivity, but Miss Mayne is not one of these. Her work is delicately felt, complex and finely controlled, but it has the colors of her personality, the intimacy of her private reactions, until each story seems to represent some phase of her experience. This may be a deliberate thing, a desire to create with each character a deep intimacy and personal feeling, but it is not successful because one forgets the stories and thinks of Miss Mayne, sees her, a sad, eager woman whose intelligence is diligently cramping her wistfulness." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p4 Je 14 '25 550w

"A majority of Miss Mayne's stories show exquisite pains addressed to essentially inconsequential themes." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p4m My 17 '25 380w

"Miss Colburn Mayne seems to me lacking in restraint. But perhaps this is a personal inability of my own to appreciate her manner. It is the manner, not the matter, that is unrestrained: indeed, one might fairly say that the former calls attention, by a very violence of virtuosity, to the tact and self-denial with which it is restraining the latter." Gerald Gould

MAYNE, ETHEL COLBURN—Continued

— + Sat R 139:363 Ap 4 '25 200w

"What is chiefly disappointing in stories that show so much art and understanding and concern for true values, is the meagreness of their effects. A fine equipment is used up on analyses that are poor in significance. For all their unquestionable mastery of a particular technique their subtle irony, their assured penetration, the stories are only dissections. They pant for lifeblood; they are wanting in magnitude."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:809 Je 6 '25 560w

"Her stories are stories of introversion and an almost pathologically tender sensitiveness. None the less they are extremely good; Inner Circle is a notable volume."

+ Spec 134:819 My 16 '25 180w

"They are exquisite little lace-like tales, tenuous but temporarily notable because of their subtle and exacting art."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 29 '25 320w

"It would be hard to find among the short stories of the moment any which have a more subtly finished design than Miss Colburn Mayne's; and it is interesting that among writers of her quality there is no one, perhaps with a more feminine vision. We realize this not merely because almost all the stories of Inner Circle as in her last book, have their centre in a woman's feelings; it is manifested, still more expressively, by the smaller touches of incident and atmosphere."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p220 Mr 26 '25 500w

Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

MAYO, KATHERINE. Isles of fear; the truth about the Philippines. 372p il $3.50 Harcourt
919.14 Philippine Islands—Politics and government 25-5538

Miss Mayo has brought to this work of volunteer investigation some previous experience in field investigation of the Pennsylvania state police. She claims for her book that it presents without color or favor a report of the social and political conditions under which the Filipino people live and of the American administration of the islands. The book is an unqualified endorsement of the administration of General Leonard Wood, an indictment of his predecessor, Francis Burton Harrison, and testimony to the effect that the Filipinos themselves, except the politicians, are neither ready for nor desirous of independence.

Booklist 21:377 Jl '25

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '25 1300w

"An experienced field investigator, Miss Mayo examined Filipinos of all classes at first hand and alone. She has reached definite and strong conclusions both as concerns the natives of the islands and the failures and successes of the American administrations."

+ Ind 114:432 Ap 11 '25 200w

"The writer uses the sort of journalese which has become familiar to us in the cinema captions. Such a style is dangerous, because it goes a long way towards destroying the faith of the reader. . . . Miss Mayo attributes every failure on the part of the Filipino Legislature, not to inexperience, but to a fiendish cynicism. This is grotesquely unjust."

— Nation and Ath 38:500 Ja 2 '26 760w

"Thanks to her skill as a trained observer, and to her ability as a writer, Miss Mayo has given us a book that is at once one of the most readable and informing volumes about the Philippines yet published." N; Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 5 '25 2350w

"It will be said that this is the view of the American merchants and capitalists who have invested in the islands. If it is, very well. They have made out a most excellent case. It has placed a burden of proof on the Filipino politico which he will have to overcome by something more than the mendacity which Miss Mayo proves he has been all too ready to use upon Congress and the American people in the past." H; K. Norton

N Y Tribune p11 My 3 '25 650w

"As a sober piece of investigation this is a scream. It is just that. Its 'material,' aside from a few scattered facts and figures available in any library, consists mainly of page after page of anonymous quotations dressed up to suit the thesis of the book and presented under the pretense of deadly peril to the theoretical speakers if their names were disclosed." H. E. Gaston

— N Y World p7m Ap 12 '25 520w

"The volume is unusual for the fine combination of technical thoroughness, literary and dramatic skill, and intensely vivid and vital appeal to human interest, with which it has been prepared. Miss Mayo has looked up her facts, and she gives them, every one, with explicit citations of volume and chapter and verse; and in doing so she has performed, for both this nation and its wards, one of the outstanding services of our time." W. F. Johnson

+ No Am 221:560 Mr '25 670w

R of Rs 71:670 Je '25 220w

"I can recall no other book on the Philippines which would convey to the average lay reader such a vivid and true picture of the general milieu in which our most important colonial venture is being carried on. A most interesting and illuminating volume." Norbert Lyons

+ Sat R of Lit 1:873 Jl 4 '25 850w

"Her rather hysterical headlines and titles and sometimes her too buoyant mannerisms suggest an excessive surrender to popular taste; but it would be a pity and a mistake if in the minds of any English reader these were taken to indicate any deficiency of balance or excess of sentiment in the investigator. She gives a true picture of politics and society in the Philippines."

+ — Spec 135:1099 D 12 '25 900w

"We venture to believe that it will leave its mark on America's thinking about the Philippine problem and in due time on England's thinking about India and Egypt too. . . . It is vividly written with that objectiveness and disregard of abstract theory which is characteristic both of the feminine and the American mind. It is a book which no serious student of British Imperial problems can afford to ignore."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p891 D 24 '25 1050w

Wis Lib Bul 21:141 My '25

MEANES, LENNA LEOTA, and HATHAWAY, ESSE VIRGINIA. Exercises for health. (National health council. National health ser.) 71p 30c (1s 6d) Funk

613.71 Exercise 24-23133

"Sets forth very briefly the merits of physical exercise, and describes and illustrates exercises adapted to various types of occupation. Special attention to exercise for women. The leading author is medical director, Women's foundation for health, inc."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:414 Jl '25

MEARNS, HUGHES, ed. Creative youth; with a foreword by Dr Otis W. Caldwell, and an anthology of the high school verse. 234p $2.50 Doubleday

811.08 American poetry—Collections. Poetry 25-18405

The first half of this book tells of the interesting results achieved in the Lincoln high school, New York city, in making a school environment which sets free the creative spirit of the pupils, allowing their imaginative power to develop and express itself. In the second part are reproduced about a hundred and fifty of the poems which have been written under this stimulus, during the last five years.

"Cleverness has not been the chief aim of the founders of the Lincoln School poetic tradition. Though they are capable of epigrammatic satire and of gallantry spiced with wit, the chief note that runs through this anthology is an almost Franciscan feeling for the moon, the clouds, trees, strange persons—in a word, nature—the pathetic fallacy, if you like. Very strong, too, is the personal element. Here is a group of poets—adolescents—who know each other and are writing for each other." R. H. A.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 22 '25 780w

"The verses seem to be, as compared with the verse of grown-up professionals, like the wonderful pictures and toys that the Cizek children made in Vienna when that inspired teacher coaxed the genius in them to express itself. Mearns' preliminary essay is a beautiful piece of work: a charming narrative of the way these youngsters are schooled." W. McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:226 N '25 320w

"No one interested in young people or in literature can read Mr. Mearns' narrative without an answering thrill to the daring of the experiment—daring as compared with the usual methods of teaching literature—the eager response of the pupils and the splendor of the success achieved. For those so interested it is a truly exciting book, although its holding quality is partly, no doubt, due to the vivid and often dramatic style in which Mr. Mearns tells his story. But the story itself is so vital and so significant that it would take a very dull and technical writer to destroy its appeal."

+ N Y Times p17 Ag 9 '25 350w

"The volume presents its own unbiased evidence—and it is a volume not only for pedagogues but for people." L. Untermeyer

+ N Y Tribune p3 O 18 '25 1100w

"The finding of creative ability where none was dreamed of is the heartening story of Creative Youth. The poetic products of some of the pupils are admirable." R. L. Lyman

+ School R 33:788 D '25 300w

Survey 55:258 N 15 '25 70w

"In spite of a faintly purring sound, as of complacency, Creative Youth provides a vital thrill. For it seems that when teachers let children read poetry for pleasure, they do read it for pleasure, and even write plentiful poems themselves." S. N. C.

+ — World Tomorrow 8:387 D '25 50w

MEARS, ELIOT GRINNELL, and others. Modern Turkey; a politico-economic interpretation, 1908-1923 inclusive, with selected chapters by representative authorities. 779p il $6 (25s) Macmillan 914.96 Turkey—Politics and government.

Turkey—Economic conditions 24-31069

In this study of present conditions in Turkey, the author has had a number of collaborators. Mr. Mears writes the general introduction and chapters on racial characteristics, transportation, forest resources, commerce, concession-hunting, the Armenian and the Arab question, and the Nationalist movement. Paul Monroe writes the chapter on education, Howard C. Butler on archeology, Mary M. Patrick on women, and Gertrude Knox on government, while various Turkish authorities have contributed chapters on politics, press and the Young Turk movement. Appendices contain the text of various documents. Bibliography. Index.

"Of first importance for students of sociology are the chapters dealing with the radical characteristics and religious division of this very composite population." R. E. Park

+ Am J Soc 31:401 N '25 450w

Booklist 21:298 My '25

Bookm 61:486 Je '25 200w

"Nobody can examine this volume without gaining the impression that it presents a wonderfully clear and impressive picture of a little understood nation." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 7 '25 1000w

"A volume packed with information. Many of the chapters dealing with special subjects are by well-known authorities, Turks, or foreigners. Throughout, the book is stamped with an open-mindedness, fairness, and freedom from prejudice or propaganda for which Mr. Mears must be responsible."

+ Ind 114:219 F 21 '25 160w

New Statesman 24:754 Ap 4 '25 170w

"This book is an almost burdensomely authoritative, authentic, impartial and complete account of the new Turkey. It is uniformly, honestly and capably written. As a composite description of the greatest transformation that has ever come over any part of Islam, in one phase of history, the sum of its information is as just as it is exhaustive, and it has the right to be regarded as one of the really invaluable source books of our time." G. L. Harding

+ N Y Times p12 Mr 1 '25 2600w

"The volume is destined to become a standard book of reference for students of the Near East, and as such will find a ready welcome in every library which professes an interest in international relations." E. M. Earle

+ N Y Tribune p1 Ja 18 '25 1000w

N Y World p9e Ja 18 '25 160w

"The book is encyclopædic and authoritative. The reader is advised to chuck overboard his miscellaneous cargo of misinformation about Turkey and reload from this book."

+ Outlook 139:275 F 18 '25 120w

R of Rs 71:222 F '25 200w

St Louis p112 Ap '25

"This is by all odds the most compact, comprehensive compendium of information concerning modern Turkey that has yet appeared. It is admirably documented and indexed. Of especial value are the statistics and general data concerning economic and financial conditions."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:798 My 30 '25 180w

"The book contains several maps, a good bibliography and an especially valuable chronology of events from 1918 to 1923. The volume as a whole is a most valuable compendium."

+ Springfield Republican p7a S 6 '25 1100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p206 Mr 19 '25 620w

MEDILL, ROBERT, pseud. See McBride, R. M.

MEIGS, CORNELIA LYNDE. Rain on the roof. 308p il $1.75 Macmillan

25-20974

While the rain pattered on the roof of his attic workroom, John Selwyn carved marvelous ship models and told stories to his little audience of three. There were Christopher, a visitor to the New England coast town; Phyllis, John's little cousin; and Timmy Peters who helped with the models. There was some mystery connected with the old house in which Timmy and his grandfather lived, and John Selwyn was determined to solve it. With the help of a very old book and a staunch little ship model all the mystery was cleared up and Timmy and his grandfather were made happy.

"Has all the literary quality that we have learned to expect from this author, and is a good story as well." Marcia Dalphin

+ Bookm 62:461 D '25 160w

"'Rain on the Roof' does not reach the high level of 'The New Moon,' which she published last year, but it does show Miss Meigs' power to discern forgotten and romantic elements in the lives of everyday people and little towns. It is filled too, with reflections of her love for our great ship-building past." A. M. Jordan

+ — Ind 115:560 N 14 '25 250w

MEIGS, C. L.—Continued

"There is perhaps in Miss Meigs's work a carefulness of style, a refinement and prescience that a little dims the vigor of the stirring events and makes her a romancer for girls rather than for boys." L. St J: Power

+ — N Y Tribune p6 N 29 '25 320w

"'Rain on the Roof' besides having one of the most delectable titles in the world, is one of those rarely encountered juveniles that does not seem to be written down to children. The author takes it for granted that they will enjoy atmosphere as well as action, and the result is a book to delight both boys and girls, particularly those in the difficult stage between fairy tales and fiction."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:352 N 28 '25 250w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 6 '25 200w

MELLER, WALTER CLIFFORD. Old times; relics, talismans, forgotten customs, and beliefs of the past. 264p $3.50 Brentano's [10s 6d W. Laurie]

394 Manners and customs. England—Social life and customs

"A book of the forgotten lore and customs of our ancestors, it is a record of English relics, talismans and antique beliefs. It carries chapters on old bede-houses and hospitals, the old stone crosses of Britain, sanctuaries, holy wells. There is a delightful paper on English bells—hand bells, small bells, sacrament bells, passing bells—one on 'carols and their environments' and another on legend makers."—Lit R

"Charmingly bound, beautifully illustrated with all manner of quaint and enchanting things, it is a volume to appeal to those people who want to know things, but far more to those more rarified souls who prefer to have their mind uncluttered with bourgeois knowledge and filled with a few rare and precious pieces."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 320w

"The whole is mellowly written and in a leisurely manner. A refreshing and picturesque book for winter nights, to send the fancy roving into the colorful nooks and crannies of the past."

+ Lit R p12 D 12 '25 100w

"Mr. Meller in dealing with 'Old Times' wanders agreeably among the traditions, records, and survivals of the past, more or less at random."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p795 N 26 '25 1350w

MELVILLE, LEWIS, pseud. See Benjamin, L: S.

MENCKEN, HENRY LOUIS, ed. Americana, 2 1925. 321p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d M. Hopkinson] 917.3 United States—Social conditions. National characteristics, American

"Compiled from contributions sent to the American Mercury by its readers. Most of the selections are clipped from country newspapers, the remainder from newspapers of large circulation. No state of the Union is spared. The purpose in compiling this collection is fundamentally serious; namely, to wage a war of ridicule against certain organizations that try to standardize American thought, using their own words as boomerangs."—Cleveland

"An amusing book, but not quite so representative as Mr. Mencken would have us think." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '25 420w

Cleveland p114 D '25

"The book will doubtless be read chiefly for its humor, for it is excruciatingly funny; but Mr. Mencken himself regards it in his preface as a source-book for the study of American life—and as such, too, one can hardly read it without recognizing its authenticity. . . . Individually each incident is trivial or even ludicrous; in the aggregate they become a gigantic panorama, at once lurid and somber, of the pride, stupidity, and folly of mankind." G: Genzmer

+ Nation 121:665 D 9 '25 320w

Sat R of Lit 2:401 D 12 '25 780w

"Marvellous opinions are expressed on every page and they are expressed, too, in marvellous language. Mr. Mencken has his eye on that, and every one who loves English will be grateful to him. Broadly taken, the impression the book leaves is that there is room for everything in the United States."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p821 D 3 '25 1000w

MENCKEN, HENRY LOUIS. Prejudices: fourth series. 305p $2.50 Knopf 814

24-28241

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

Bookm 60:632 Ja '25 1400w

"The best article in this entertaining collection is the first. To appreciate Mr Mencken's Prejudices at their wittiest and gayest, one must read the Meditations in the Desert in this volume."

+ Dial 78:249 Mr '25 130w

"The writing, I sincerely believe, exhibits pages of descriptive prose of the very highest order. There is glitter, glamour, charm and precision. After all, many of the ideas of which he treats have no more than a passing significance. But I think that Mencken, by virtue of his phrase, gives some of them an abiding interest." L. M. Hussey

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:297 N 22 '24 2700w

"One gets terribly tired of the drums and tambourines, of the Menckonian Gospel Hymns and the glib reiterated phrases. Here and there, in this Fourth Series of his 'Prejudices,' he seems to be getting tired of it himself." Bliss Ferry

— Yale R n s 15:189 O '25 180w

MERCY-ARGENTEAU, ROSALIE FRANÇOISE ADELAIDE CAROLINE EUGENIE MARIE, comtesse de. Last of a race. 312p il $4 Doran

B or 92

25-8509

The author of this autobiography is a descendant of the famous Belgian house of Argenteau, having been born in the historical castle of that name. Princesse de Montgylon tells her story in a candid and conversational manner. Her lonely childhood fostered in her a spirit of independence. When very young she was married to a man she scarcely knew and was naturally very unhappy. She secured a divorce and in seeking forgetfulness of a subsequent disappointment in love, becomes a drug addict. In middle age, estranged from her son, the princess sailed for America to find her half-brother, with whom she finally settled in California.

Bookm 61:604 Jl '25 180w

"There is real charm and personal interest in this story."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 300w

"There is more action in this book than you will find in most fiction and it is told more dramatically than it is in most fiction. The chapters dealing with her childhood and education are fascinating and help to explain the mad pace of her life after its restraints were removed. Altogether, a vivid and racy history—with the movement and glitter of a circus parade."

+ N Y Tribune p8 Ap 26 '25 250w

"As a personal record, the book is admirable for honesty and emotional control. It is free from pretense, spite and self-pity. The author has, almost objectively, shown the skeletons in her own life's cupboard; but, except by implication, society goes scrupulously unscathed. This, we fear, will, in the eyes of many, damage the book's readability, so that it is almost certain to be a kind of mamma's pet, meaning much to its creator and next to nothing in the world. On the whole, this is just, for it is of no literary and of little sociological value. Nevertheless, this seems a sorry fate for a document so candid and decent." E. G.

+ — N Y World p6m Mr 8 '25 250w

"The book is both disagreeable and depressing."

— Outlook 140:371 J1 8 '25 200w

Spring'd Republican p10 My 27 '25 780w

MEREJKOWSKI, DMITRI SERGIEEVICH. December the fourteenth; tr. from the Russian by Nathalie A. Duddington. 319p $2 International pub. [7s 6d J. Cape]

[23-10699]

An historical novel of the Decembrist revolution in Russia in 1825, following the accession of Nicholas I. The rebellion, which ended in tragic failure, was the first blow struck against the autocracy. With the events of the rebellion is linked the tender love story of Mária Pavlovna and Prince Golitsin.

Cleveland p123 D '25

"In its primitive vigour and poetically visioned reality, December the Fourteenth, is as a tale and as literature, a most satisfactory novel."

+ Dial 79:515 D '25 80w

"A man of wide culture, a fine scholar, and a diligent compiler, Merezhkovsky assembles his mosaics at times even a little too meticulously. Possessed of a keen sense for the dramatic, he makes many passages vibrate with passion and beauty. His chief fault is that he has a theological ax to grind. As a result of his religious prepossessions Merezhkovsky sometimes presents historical motivation in the wrong light. Furthermore, the lengthy metaphysical discussions clothed in the idiom of medieval scholasticism make the meaning of Merezhkovsky's novels in parts rather obscure, except to the initiate. Strange esoteric symbols speckle his writings. Yet, despite the faults which 'December the Fourteenth' shares with the rest of Merezhkovsky's works, it is one of the most absorbing historical novels in Russian literature." Joshua Kunitz

+ — Nation 121:547 N 11 '25 680w

"Merezhkovsky, with apparently complete faithfulness to what is recorded of the revolt, penetrates the inmost hearts of his chief figures, and presents us with a living gallery of quite extraordinary people. This may be an accident, but at all events, willingly or unwillingly, Merezhkovsky has succeeded in drawing a most excruciating contrast between the intense reality of mental conflict and the remoteness of physical action. His portrait of the Emperor Nicholas is one of the clearest reconstructions of the kind ever made, at once terrifying, hateful and sympathetic." Robert Littell

+ New Repub 44:313 N 11 '25 200w

"One of Merezhkovsky's weakest novels. The tragic-comical end of this noblest and most senseless revolution in history, with dead bodies on the square and with the titled revolutionists expecting arrest even without thinking of flight, constitutes one of the best chapters of the book."

+ — N Y Times p17 D 20 '25 550w

"Of profundity and cosmic comprehension there is no lack; but here as elsewhere in his work there are only flashes of the novelist's major art of human analysis. Yet it is only just to add that if anywhere at all it is in 'December the Fourteenth' that he stands on the brink of superior characterization."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:300 N 14 '25 420w

MERRIAM, CHARLES EDWARD. New aspects of politics. 253p $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press

320 Political science 25-17442

Professor Merriam discusses the new scientific approach to politics and the direction which politics must take if it is to answer the challenge of these new times. Contents: The foundations of the new politics; Recent history of political thinking; Politics and psychology; Politics and numbers; Politics in relation to inheritance and environment; Political prudence; The next step in the organization of municipal research; The tendency of politics; Index.

"He talks like a man seeing a big job that must not be slighted. You will profit by every page of him. He is direct, definite, specific, and decidedly interesting."

+ Educ R 70:278 D '25 400w

"The reader seeking a new treatise on the American political system will not find it in this little book. But one who is interested in expanding the horizon of political knowledge will find many suggestions in it which are both stimulating and useful." R. C. Atkinson

+ Hist Outlook 16:403 D '25 520w

"Authoritative, illuminating and courageous." Lyman Bryson

New Repub 45:24 N 25 '25 800w

"This little book intended as a survey of the future of politics is doubly important: first, because of the influence of the author and secondly, because of the views it embodies. It will occupy for Mr. Merriam's school the high place of authority that Dewey's Reconstruction in Philosophy has maintained in philosophy." H. McD. Clokier

+ Survey 55:254 N 15 '25 650w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p623 S 24 '25 100w

MERRIAM, CHARLES EDWARD, and BARNES, HARRY ELMER., eds. History of political theories; recent times; essays on contemporary developments in political theory, contributed by students of the late William Archibald Dunning. 597p il $4 (17s) Macmillan

320.1 Political science

24-23282

"This memorial volume to Professor Dunning by thirteen of his former students brings up to date the account of political theories from where his three-volume history left it—the last quarter of the nineteenth century." (Int J Ethics) "It consists of essays on various types and phases of recent political thought and on the contributions to political theory of sociology, psychology, anthropology and anthropogeography." (N Y Tribune)

"As a whole the volume makes a decided contribution to the study of political doctrines. Valuable reference material appears at the end of the chapters and in foot-notes. A useful index, which includes the three earlier volumes of Dunning, is appended." R. G. Gettell

+ Am Hist R 30:574 Ap '25 850w

"The book emphasizes consistently that most important turn in the affairs of political theory which has brought it into closer touch with the sciences and made the novel range of the volume both possible and plausible. It is in a manner its main thesis and principal significance. . . The greatest single pleasure of the book—if style and wit still count for anything in political science—is Professor Hankins' chapter on 'Race as a Factor in Political Theory.'" J. Grierson

Am J Soc 31:102 J1 '25 850w

"The experiment is, on the whole, very successful in providing both teachers and students of modern political theory with a useful text. It should encourage other and more extensive symposia in fields which to a single researcher are almost impossibly vast." W. Y. Elliott

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:178 F '25 1100w

"The compilation is no doubt the best book on political theories coming out in recent times. The authors of the various chapters write with lucidity and each knows his field. There is a good index. The selected references at the end of each chapter are ordinary."

+ Ann Am Acad 121:190 S '25 300w

Booklist 21:183 F '25

MERRIAM, C. E., and BARNES, H. E., eds.

—Continued

"The change from a unitary to a multiple authorship and the growing complexity of the times have together succeeded in procuring for political theory a more concrete orientation than Professor Dunning himself was able to achieve." T. V. Smith

+ Int J Ethics 35:312 Ap '25 1150w

"It is accurate, learned, and judicious. But it represents, I believe, a mistaken ideal in scholarship. For it attempts to analyze the history of political ideas in themselves." H. J. Laski

+ New Repub 42:163 Ap 1 '25 1100w

"The contributors to the present volume on the whole maintain Prof Dunning's standards of objectivity. Their purpose is to expound and analyze, not to advocate or oppose, and if some of them occasionally indulge in expression of personal opinion it is never at the expense of fair and candid exposition." R. L. Schuyler

N Y Tribune p5 Ja 25 '25 800w

No Am 220:372 D '24 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p204 Mr 19 '25 80w

MERWIN, SAMUEL. Moment of beauty. 313p $2 Houghton

25-5849

The scene is a mid-western city where every summer a famous theatrical manager, Mills Henley, tries out plays. For the sake of the experience many well-known actors and actresses join the company each year. Hence Ethel Eden, a fascinating young actress of whom New York is only vaguely aware, welcomes the chance to join Henley's company, even tho she thinks she is only to play ingénues. Once there Ethel's big chance comes when she plays opposite Henry Bainbridge, one of the most famous actors of the day. Starting with an intense mutual hatred, they progress rapidly to friendship, love, then marriage. They have their moment of beauty which is swiftly followed by disillusionment, and steps for a divorce. Ultimately they decide to go on together.

Booklist 21:304 My '25

Cleveland p37 Ap '25

"Mr. Merwin's novel of stage life is written with exceptional patience and carefulness of detail. It is not what would be termed a strong novel, but it is sincere and engrossing." Dorothy Osgood

+ Int Bk R p559 Jl '25 200w

Reviewed by Dawn Powell

Lit R p3 My 16 '25 700w

"The story, as a story, is slight, and at least one vein, clearly indicated in the beginning, is never followed up. But the book is interesting, an earnest plea for a more intelligent sympathy, a better understanding of the theatre and its people."

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 22 '25 900w

"While some readers may feel that Mr. Merwin has failed to convey any suggestion of the alleged ravings of genius in the personages credited with the divine fire, they must thank him for a lively yarn."

+ N Y Tribune p11 Mr 29 '25 180w

"It is an escape novel for those whose young Lochinvars have not come out of the West."

+ N Y World p7m Ap 5 '25 60w

"We do not recall any novel about the life of the theater better than, or even as good as, this by Mr. Merwin. It avoids sensationalism and vulgarity; it is obviously extremely well informed; it gives us, as contrasted types, the ambitious, hard-working actress of talent and the brilliant, temperamental actor of genius who has the common weakness of genius—lack of self control"

+ Outlook 140:194 Je 3 '25 100w

"It is a slender story, not unpleasant or unpleasing, and compared with other work by Mr Merwin is frankly of the pot-boiler variety."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 17 '25 320w

Wis Lib Bul 21:113 Ap '25

MEYNELL, ESTHER HALLAM (MOORHOUSE) (MRS GERARD LUKE MEYNELL). Little chronicle of Magdalena Bach. 183p $2 Doubleday

Bach, Johann Sebastian—Fiction. Bach, Anna Magdalena (Wülken)—Fiction

25-20260

Thru the mouth of his gentle wife Magdalena, his helpmate of nearly thirty years, Mrs Meynell tells the story of the life and music of Sebastian Bach and of a marriage singularly blest with happiness. Magdalena Bach was the ideal ministrant to genius. Her husband was to her "my all of good", and his music was woven into the texture of her life. In a brief note appended to her story Mrs Meynell acknowledges that certain episodes in her book are imaginary.

"Mrs. Meynell has done more than to give in the form of 'historical picture' a remarkably clear interpretation of the life and deathless life work of Johann Sebastian Bach. She has brought out of the shadows veiling her for two centuries a personality too little known, but never now to be forgotten, by those who read her 'little chronicle.'"

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '25 480w

"Simply written, naïve, understanding, alive with worshipful affection, this quiet, tender chronicle makes a very moving story, soul of the great musician and of the gentle soul of his wife."

+ N Y Times p20 O 4 '25 320w

"As a literary tour de force Esther Meynell's 'Little Chronicle of Magdalena Bach' has a subtle and quiet charm. It is written in a style that sustains skillfully and not too archaically, its tone of other times and manners. But the story told in this slender volume is not that of Anna Magdalena Wülken, Bach's second wife, but of the mighty Johann Sebastian himself."

Pitts Sanborn

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 22 '25 500w

"In the absence of any more dramatic material, the author has woven out of the facts of Bach's life a tender and graceful domestic idyll. In its broad lines, this small volume, which deals only casually with Bach's music, suggests convincingly and very pleasantly the atmosphere of domestic and social life in the old, legendary Germany."

+ Spec 134:939 Je 6 '25 280w

"There are plenty of historical facts, all the anecdotes, and considerable artistic and psychological insight; and the whole result is decidedly attractive. There is, however, occasional inaccuracy of detail."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p318 My 7 '25 250w

MEYNELL, LAURENCE W. Mockbeggar. 315p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Harrap]

25-3546

A sophisticated novel of English society life. A lady of surpassing loveliness, Rachael Mas-singer, is the center of a group of "gay and gallant Georgians" whom she triumphantly queens with her beauty and her wit. The slight story is strung on the thread of a succession of sparkling and artificial conversations between Rachael and the youths who worship at her shrine. It all ends in disillusion, with the gay company dispersed, and Rachael reaching out her empty hands for life.

Boston Transcript p4 F 21 '25 1100w

"An extraordinarily clever story thrust through by poignant touches and culminating in tragedy."

+ Cleveland p81 Jl '25

"The book is at best a series of brilliant fragments, charmingly free from narrative interest, and dependently upon the interaction of characters who build up situations with their words, their clothes, the menu."

Nation 120:634 Je 3 '25 130w

Nation and Ath 36:124 O 18 '24 230w

"In the comments that embroider every page of the story, Mr. Meynell is usually more or less facetious, frequently flippant and quite often piffing. But much of it is amusing, and occasionally some of it is decidedly clever in both idea and phrasing."

+ N Y Times p9 F 8 '25 450w

"Mr. Meynell writes with undoubted facility, and he has his moments. He hits off his people brightly, and they certainly have momentum, but gradually one becomes aware of the fact that they are moving in circles, and that their brightness is only that of varnished surface."

+ N Y Tribune p11 My 3 '25 160w

N Y World p7m F 15 '25 320w

"In some ways this story is ultra-modern, but it deals under the surface with the eternal verities of passion and character."

Outlook 140:31 My 6 '25 130w

"The manner of presentation is extremely affected, and the style, or the hand-book of Georgian styles, is as satisfactory as rococo at its worst. Nevertheless, the book is clever, diverting, and written with dash." J. Carter

+ Sat R of Lit 1:574 Mr 7 '25 720w

"There is a certain gayety in the narrative, and the spectacle of care-free but refined young men who graduate from the university into a round of pleasure-seeking in the capital is not without vitality and even grace. But the sense of strain is apparent. The Michael Arlen model has been too obviously followed. The author is evidently forced to be smart when he would prefer to be sane. In its fundamental conception, the book is sane, and the real values of life are not obscured, but, if anything illumined, by the uncanny refraction through which they pass."

+ Springfield Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 370w

"Artificial but cleverly constructed novel."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p614 O 2 '24 140w

MEYNELL, VIOLA (MRS JOHN DALLYN). Young Mrs Cruse. 272p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d Arnold]

25-9144

Short stories which secure their effects by delicate and subtle means and more by implication than by assertion. Contents: Young Mrs Cruse; The letter; Pastoral; Ten minutes; The girl who was liked; La Figlia; We were just saying. . .

Booklist 21:384 Jl '25

Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 260w

"Miss Meynell composes in a mood of warm tranquillity, avoiding rather than seeking climax, so that her stories are handled with an unvarying detachment. When occasion requires, she is sympathetic, but never partisan. Each of the half-dozen tales in this volume has distinction."

+ Dial 79:77 Jl '25 100w

"Delicate, sure writing by a distinguished artist."

+ Ind 114:423 Ap 11 '25 80w

"Deft sketches, delicately and subtly drawn with fine, sure strokes and soft, scarcely perceptible shadings." L. M. Field

+ Lit R p3 My 29 '25 700w

"These stories, most of them of love, are subtly felt and formed, delicate and ironical. The result is satisfying—artistically and emotionally—with the exception of one short tale whose mechanics are not concealed with the skill of the others."

+ Nation 121:261 S 2 '25 70w

"Miss Viola Meynell's volume of short stories is very unequal. The title story is exquisite. When Miss Meynell forsakes the English landscape and the English character she seems to lose all her sense of reality." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 36:302 N 22 '24 160w

"Miss Meynell's delicacy of perception is carried to such an extent, as in the title story, that the point itself sometimes is almost lost behind film upon film of nuance. . . In Miss Meynell's stories there is an echo of the quiet tragic beauty one finds in the old Scots ballads." L. Mumford

+ New Repub 43:133 Je 24 '25 180w

"Pleasant, sad, mostly domestic tales, with no very strong features either for attraction or repulsion." J. F.

New Statesman 24:supx D 6 '24 50w

"Miss Meynell's characters seem to stand on opposite sides of an invisible wall. Their communications are parallel streams that may never converge. They murmur apparently inconsequential things to one another. It all seems to be tending nowhere, save toward rather pleasant arrangements in atmosphere, yet there is a lurking conviction of accumulating drama. Suddenly a magnificent flash of insight into the very vitals of these people is vouchsafed the reader, and it is all over. Yet the impression endures. Their patrician fastidiousness has faltered only for a second, yet it is sufficient for Miss Meynell to impale them for all time. Her finesse of understatement, her oblique instigations of calamity, and her pervasive allusions are wholly delightful."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 29 '25 600w

"So quietly are these stories written that their depth, like that of clear water, is constantly surprising. They seem to tell themselves. But let not the reader be deceived; that effortless grace marks a degree of comprehension and skill on the part of the author that seldom come together." Mary Ross

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ap 12 '25 450w

"Decidedly it is a work of distinction. Her unique ability to intimate rather than describe and her especial power of divination and insight make her book a work of singular talent, even of genius. It is in reflection, in afterthought, that the full meaning and point of her stories are brought out."

+ N Y World p6m My 3 '25 250w

"The sincerity and fineness of perception, the mastery of form and the delicate exactness of effect achieved by Viola Meynell in her volume of short stories, Young Mrs Cruse, are unmistakable." C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 222:169 S '25 400w

"Her delicacy of perception and the effortless music of her style give full value to what is written, conveying the unwritten message in overtones. Her volume contains seven tales: in one of them, the last and the least successful, she condescends to the grotesquely horrible; for the rest, all is pale, fine, fragile, remote, withdrawn." Gerald Gould

Sat R 138:578 D 6 '24 350w

"The form of Miss Meynell's stories is not the swift skilful conte. Her figures never appear to be thrown off by chance from a mind working at a brilliant but distorting speed. She has, rather, a patient vision that constructs from partial aspects, themselves in no way remarkable, her characters and their scene. Every moment is clean and credited, as though she knew these people not only in the brief moments of her story, but quite surely at all other moments in their lives." Louise Bogan

Sat R of Lit 1:703 Ap 25 '25 650w

"Miss Meynell has arranged her volume of short stories very oddly. There are two excellent stories; one is put in the middle and one at the end. Now, since Miss Meynell's prose is lifeless and sober, we are not prepared at all for the shock of excellence. Her prose becomes adequate when there is passion and thought behind it; but we find it discouraging when she is merely being intelligent or slightly complex." Andrew Carey

MEYNELL, VIOLA—Continued

— + Spec 133:748 N 15 '24 300w

"The whole book is warm with a sympathy which is not sentimental, with human beings struggling with the incomprehensible forces affecting their lives." R. H. E.

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 500w

"There is an individuality in her writing which we cannot afford to miss; and 'Young Mrs. Cruse,' although not a novel but a book of stories, is as individual as one could expect, in atmosphere and manner unlike any one else's."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p706 N 6 '24 460w

MICHAELIS, LEONOR. Effects of ions in colloidal systems. 108p $2.50 Williams & Wilkins

541.345 Ions. Colloids 25-8857

"This little book is based on a series of lectures given by the author last year in this country. It deals with the colloid chemistry of aqueous solutions, largely from the viewpoint of the adsorption of ions. Some of the topics considered are the origin of electric double layers, the adsorbent properties of charcoal, the flocculation of colloids by electrolytes, the Donnan equilibrium and the lyotropic effects of ions. The discussion is based on experiments taken, for the most part, from the author's own work."—Am Chem Soc J

"The book represents a good attempt to bring order out of chaos in a field where order is greatly to be desired. It should be of value to all those, whether their interests are mainly biological or inorganic, who are trying to apply chemistry to the study of colloids." D: I. Hitchcock

+ Am Chem Soc J 47:2254 Ag '25 380w

Am J Pub Health 15:1008 N '25 150w

"Familiarity with chemical terms or frequent recourse to a chemical dictionary are necessary to an understanding of this otherwise clearly written and illuminating book." R. S. Weston

+ Eng N 95:848 N 19 '25 220w

"The reviewer finds the theoretical views of the author a bit vague. It is hard to find out exactly what he believes on any given point. The book, however, is well worth reading for some of the facts that the author gives." W. D. Bancroft

+ J Phys Chem 29:1196 S '25 1450w

MICHELbacher, GUSTAV FREDERICK, and NIAL, THOMAS M. Workmen's compensation insurance, including employers' liability insurance. (McGraw-Hill insurance ser.) 503p il $4 McGraw

331.25 Insurance, Employers' liability. Employers' liability 25-4883

"In Workmen's Compensation Insurance, Messrs. Michelbacher and Nial have brought together a mass of information and statistical data on the subject of accidents, their prevention, insurance, and legal status; and have explained and shown the derivation of existing practices by an unusually complete and dispassionate account of their historical development. The book is divided into three parts and an appendix. The first section deals with injuries and their prevention; the second, with methods of indemnification; the third, with workmen's compensation and employers' liability insurance; while the appendix contains a collection of data and forms among which are the report forms which provide the bases for rate-making, examples of experience-rating, injury report forms and insurance policy and agency contract forms. The writers have drawn liberally from widely varying sources, and much of the most interesting material appears as excerpts from other writers."—Harvard Business R

"The authors write in an unusually fresh and vigorous style on the subject of industrial accidents and workmen's compensation. . . For the most part the book avoids controversial questions, merely describing the functions and operation of insurance companies and their methods. In many cases, however, the advantages and disadvantages of certain policies are set forth. . . With this limitation, the book is an excellent study of the present status of workmen's compensation and employers' liability and of insurance covering these subjects." R. M. Woodbury

+ Am Econ R 15:551 S '25 520w

Am J Pub Health 15:1038 N '25 400w

Booklist 22:10 O '25

"A course of study based exclusively on the contents of this book would give the student an inclusive understanding of the subject of workmen's compensation as it exists today in the United States. The book is a veritable mine of reference data on all phases of the matter. . . Its treatment, throughout, is dispassionate. In fact, its authors have so far restrained themselves from uttering opinions of their own, that the reader feels he misses the valuable comments which might have been added by men who were so obviously masters of their subject."

+ Harvard Business R 3:506 J1 '25 650w

MIDDLEBROOK, LOUIS FRANK. Maritime Connecticut during the American revolution, 1775-1783. 1td ed 2v 275;300p il $10 Essex inst.

974.6 Connecticut—History. United States—History—Revolution 25-12440

"A collection of historical data of over three hundred privateer and state vessels of Connecticut. Records of naval exploits are given in detail. Letters, ships logs and illustrations add greatly to the interest of these volumes."—St Louis

"By far the most comprehensive of the valuable marine publications offered to date by the Essex Institute of Salem. Prepared with scrupulous attention to historical detail and with thorough knowledge of the intricacies of the book-maker's art, it takes rank with the more important volumes of the literature of the sea and slips into the bookshelves very naturally beside Samuel Morison's 'Maritime History of Massachusetts.'" D. W.

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 26 '25 800w

"Another splendid contribution to American Marine History."

+ Ind 115:52 J1 11 '25 120w

St Louis p362 S '25

MIDDLETON, ARTHUR, pseud. See O'Brien, E: J. H.MILLais, JOHN GUILLE. Far away up the Nile. 254p il $10 (30s) Longmans

916.2 Sudan, Egyptian. Hunting—Africa 25-9312

A fresh and lively account of the Sudan, its people, scenery, animal life, resources and big game hunting, including a brief history of the Sudan and of Nile exploration. An account of the history and daily life of each of the native tribes is given, and of British colonization methods. Illustrated with some fine drawings by the author and his son, and with photographs.

"This book by the son of the great painter is not at all the ordinary kind of travel book. His interest in Africa is more in the animals themselves than in the hunting, and the pictures with which the book is plentifully illustrated are drawings of animals which he and his son saw during their months in Africa. Some of these are studies of heads, some of single animals, some are pictures of animals in action. A few, moreover, are studies of natives and especially of natives on camel back. This gives the book a unique interest."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 29 '25 300w

"We do not question the sincerity of Mr. Millais; but his cocksure, 'common-sense' attitude, with its insistence upon the governing capabilities of the public-school athlete, and its ridicule of 'narrow-chested theorists,' provokes a spiritual, if not a rational, disagreement. It would be unfair, however, to dwell too much upon the political aspect of this extraordinarily lively and fascinating book. Merely as an entertaining record of adventure, full of humor and high spirits, it is deserving of the warmest praise."

+ Nation and Ath 36:529 Ja 10 '25 400w

"The second half, with its account of hunting in the Nile swamps, far out among Shilluks, Dinkas and the rest, vastly exceeds the first in interest; and what Mr. Millais tells us in print is a pale thing beside the reproduction of his drawings."

+ Spec 134:468 Mr 21 '25 180w

MILLE, PIERRE. The monarch; tr. from the French by Faith Chipperfield. 178p $2 Greenberg

25-9200

"The Monarch' is a collection of various tales concerning the hero of a certain village in Provence. He was the king of the countryside—in spirit—a great hale and hearty egotist whose boasts were his livelihood. He was the red-cheeked ruffian who ruled the land, for all the village people loved him and welcomed him. He drank and laughed and sang, with not a serious care in the world. Once his boasting got him in trouble, but that was with a woman, and he quickly conquered her. She possessed money and what other way was there of winning her than by fabulous stories of his own extensive estates. If she objected later to his exaggerations, what of it? Then was the time to worry."—Springf'd Republican

"Pierre Mille tells his story in a manner reminiscent of the folk tale. His language is simple, his style unembellished. The characters he draws are delightfully naive, depicted simply and with realism." B. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 27 '25 520w

"A good translation. An amusing book; it is difficult to translate either its language or its atmosphere into English. Miss Chipperfield has done well in this instance, except occasionally when she slips into the annoying habit of using American slang to make French conversation colloquial."

+ Ind 114:421 Ap 11 '25 80w

"An extremely entertaining book."

+ N Y Times p22 My 3 '25 800w

Sat R of Lit 1:920 Jl 18 '25 250w

"The Monarch' is an amusing character, if somewhat obviously patterned upon Daudet's Tartarin and traditional heroes of ancient comedy. He reflects the attitude of the laughing, sunny, south of France."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 180w

MILLER, ALICE (DUER) (MRS HENRY WISE MILLER). Reluctant duchess. 175p $1.75 Dodd

25-17122

Jacqueline was never told anything. Her stepmother arranged things and expected her to acquiesce. She arranged the Duke of Dormier's visit, and while she did not exactly arrange his proposal and Jacqueline's acceptance, she certainly expected both. For the first time in her seventeen years Jacqueline was happy. She was loved and of importance to someone, and she really liked this shy quiet man who looked so little like a duke, and became so quickly her trusted friend. Then the poor child discovered that it had all been arranged between her stepmother and the duke before ever he came to visit them. There was nothing to do but break off the engagement, and nothing to insure the break but to propose to Paul. The duke, however, was equal to the occasion and did not surrender his duchess.

Booklist 22:118 D '25

"Humorously told, the adventures of Jacqueline and her duke make delightful telling."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 23 '25 280w

"A diverting tale with the humor and spontaneity that one always finds in Miss Miller's stories."

+ Ind 115:332 S 19 '25 40w

Reviewed by R. W. Thompson

Lit R p4 S 19 '25 200w

"It won't take you long to read it. You will be well repaid for your trouble, for more than half the joy of the story is in the manner of its telling."

+ N Y Times p9 S 20 '25 520w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p15 N 8 '25 380w

"The Reluctant Duchess' will make no enormous dent in literature, but as a confection it deserves a place in that dry, bright American sun which colors so many of the days in the story."

+ Outlook 141:243 O 14 '25 100w

"There isn't enough substance here to provide even a third rate movie scenario. It is disappointing that Mrs. Miller, who has unquestionable ability as a novelist, should descend to the boiling of such stale, thin tripe."

— Sat R of Lit 2:164 S 26 '25 120w

MILLER, BERNARD ERNEST. Painting of railway equipment. (Railwaymen's handbook ser.) 127p il $1.50 Simmons-Boardman

698 Painting, Industrial. Car painting

24-29986

"Practical book on the preliminary work and finishing processes in the painting of passenger and freight cars and of locomotives. Includes also fundamental information on tools and materials."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:411 Jl '25

MILLER, DAVID HUNTER. Geneva protocol. 279p $3.50 Macmillan

341.6 Disarmament, Arbitration, International. League of nations 25-8102

The Protocol of Geneva with its proposal to outlaw aggressive war, forms an important chapter in the history of the League of nations, the fifth assembly of which, in 1924, unanimously recommended its acceptance. Mr. Miller presents a legal interpretation of the document, taking it up section by section and showing what the effect of its provisions is likely to be.

Reviewed by C. E. Hill

Am Pol Sci R 19:626 Ag '25 220w

"On some of the significant points Mr. Miller has undoubtedly made a real contribution. As for the protocol as a whole, his discussion leaves one rather with the impression that those responsible for it were too sanguine, and that, with the existing system of national states it is simply impossible to work out an adequate scheme which will be satisfactory to the fifty-odd nations whose approval is necessary for its successful working." W: L. Langer

+ N Y Tribune p12 S 13 '25 800w

"It is fortunate that so competent an authority, both by experience and training, as David Hunter Miller, should give us a thorough commentary on its legal implications. His 'The Protocol of Geneva' performs that service admirably."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 19 '25 420w

MILLER, EDWARD DARLEY. Fifty years of sport; with a foreword by Sir Beauvoir De Lisle. 350p il $6 Dutton [21s Hurst & B.]

B or 92 Sports

A well known figure in the international world of sports looks back over years of sporting adventures in many countries, hunting, riding and racing in England, pig-sticking in India, big game shooting in Africa, and polo

MILLER, E. D.—Continued everywhere. One chapter contains reminiscences of the great war, and the last one talks of polo in America today.

"Especially for one interested in horses and field sports, a thoroughly entertaining volume." R. H.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 14 '25 360w

"You do not have to be a devotee of sport to find interest in Colonel Miller's work. He takes his reader on a most delightful world-ramble. He does it in the leisurely, unassuming manner of the true British sportsman and introduces you to many other all-around men of his own type, several nations and regiment after regiment of the old British army." Paul Neumann

+ Lit R p9 O 31 '25 200w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 37:545 Ag 1 '25 400w

"The variety of the book makes it pleasant reading. If you skip you are tempted to go back. Fifty Years of Sport is a good specimen of its kind, written naturally, with unpretentious directness, and sprinkled with good stories."

+ New Statesman 25:644 S 19 '25 150w

Spring'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 230w

"This book may be regarded as an informal history of British polo."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 J1 23 '25 800w

MILLER, HERBERT ADOLPHUS. Races, nations and classes. (Lippincott sociological ser.) 196p $2 (9s) Lippincott

323.1 Race problems. Nationalism and nationality. International law and relations. Social psychology 25-1668

The thesis of the book is that national and international peace must be secured, not by the old methods of prohibition and repression, but by the application of psychological laws to social relations and by developing ideas and sentiments which make for harmony between groups. Professor Miller analyzes the influence of religion, language, race and nationality in group relationships and describes some conspicuous cases of political domination which have proved disastrous.

"The book deals with many interesting themes but the historical generalizations are sometimes faulty."

Am Pol Sci R 19:423 My '25 80w

"This book is most timely, for the interest in races, nations and classes was never greater perhaps than now, and the need for sound thinking along these lines is also paramount." E. S. Bogardus

+ Ann Am Acad 119:152 My '25 520w

Booklist 22:10 O '25

Reviewed by E. F. Young

Int J Ethics 35:438 J1 '25 550w

"This is by far the best job in the very creditable Lippincott series of sociology. The only thing that mars it is Professor Hayes's 'editorial introduction.'" B. Stolberg

+ Nation 121:627 D 2 '25 880w

N Y World p8e Ja 25 '25 200w

Reviewed by S. A. Rice

Pol Sci Q 40:293 Je '25 1300w

"Of all nationalities in the world today, Americans are in the most urgent need of attending to the problems presented and discussed in this little book. A great part of Professor Miller's book is the result of personal contact rather than the exploitation of what other men have written. Professor Miller insists that there is no way of understanding the people who make up conflict groups except by sincere human association."

R of Rs 71:222 F '25 180w

"Well arranged and simply told, this exposition of 'the psychology of domination and freedom' is a valuable addition to the literature of race relations." B. L.

+ Survey 54:363 Je 15 '25 360w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p288 Ap 26 '25 100w

MILLER, WARREN HASTINGS. Camping out. 322p il $2.50 Appleton

796 Camping

25-9638

The author is a camper of long experience and his book covers a wide range, from the elaborate camping of the man who can afford the finest outfit, to the explorer's and hunter's camping where the minimum of weight is essential. Between the two extremes are variations such as the canoeist's trip, the lone hike, a go-light beach hike, automobile and winter camping, all of which are included in this book.

"A book as valuable and stimulating as a good seed catalogue is to an amateur gardener; which is to say, it is full of expert and practical counsel, except that this is leavened with bits of informal narrative." T. R. Coward

+ Bookm 61:707 Ag '25 120w

"The illustrations are many and practical and the text is a clever combination of narrative and advice."

+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 7 '25 100w

Pratt p25 autumn '25

MILLER, WILLIAM JOHN. Introduction to physical geology; with special reference to North America. 435p il $3 Van Nostrand

551 Geology. Physical geography 24-28604

"Prepared as a companion volume to the author's 'Introduction to historical geology,' and intended as a college text-book."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:162 Mr '25

MILLIN, SARAH GERTRUDE (MRS $2 PHILIP MILLIN). God's stepchildren. 319p $2 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d Constable]

24-22676

"God's stepchildren" are the half-castes of South Africa—the Bastards. The tale covers four generations, starting with the poor English missionary who settles in a miserable Hottentot village and in his loneliness, weakness and fanaticism marries a native girl. He dies in squalor and wretchedness but he has started a new generation marked with a color-streak. The fortunes of the daughter, the grand-daughter and the great-grandson of the Rev Andrew Flood make the tragic story.

Booklist 21:275 Ap '25

"Technically the volume is excellent. It is no small task to make four generations live before our eyes—generations we must sympathize with, more or less—yet from the other side, were these people as introspective as Mrs. Millin would have us believe? Were they ever considering their color? Putting aside such a question, or answering it in the affirmative, this novel may take rightful place, for it is well planned, thoughtful, absorbing to a degree—the more remarkable since few of us know so little of modes, manners and morals African, and must be persuaded."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 4 '25 320w

Cleveland p32 Mr '25

"A powerful, sincere, and essentially dignified book; it will be offensive to a few who cannot face facts, but will win the respectful admiration of those who appreciate conviction and artistic integrity."

+ Ind 114:246 F 28 '25 60w

"A remarkable piece of work, a book whose largeness of scope, whose excellence of construction and of characterization, whose vividness and terseness, balance and pervasive feeling of reality, make one long for space to comment on its every detail. It is a novel which should and probably will arouse much discussion, and attract a very large number of readers." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p280 Mr '25 700w

"Mrs. Millin writes with careful art. Her story is a moving epic, touched with all the sincerity of a rich and sympathetic mind. Her characters are moulded with quick, deft fingers, and they are revealed, whole, with something very like truth. . . Mrs. Millin meets the difficulties of her story in good taste. The theme today is a sensational one. In this story it rises to the dignity of noble tragedy." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 Ja 31 '25 550w

"It is a picture as cruel and meaningless as life, done with undeniable distinction."

+ Nation 120:498 Ap 29 '25 180w

"All the characters are, in an external and objective way, clear cut, but the interest of the book is not in individuals but in types, and in the problem they present. Like other such problems, it is, of course, largely factitious; that is, it is caused mainly by the prejudices of human beings. Mrs. Millin, accepting these prejudices as they are, builds her story out of them without propaganda." Rose Macaulay

+ Nation and Ath 35:sup247 My 24 '24 320w

"God's Stepchildren is not a book like the Passage to India, subtle, chameleon-like, brilliantly superficial to the point of being profound. It is simply conceived, simply and relentlessly written. But the impossibility it deals with is much like that of Forster's masterpiece, and it leads up to an ever more tragic inconclusiveness, a dramatic cul-de-sac from which even the backward path is blocked." E. V.

New Repub 42:106 Mr 18 '25 520w

"This is a book to read and to treasure and to fight over and to contend with. It cannot be laid aside, once it is started; it cannot be readily forgotten once it is finished. It is fertile incitement to endless and delightful discussion. It is thoughtful and witty and stimulating and exciting and profoundly stirring. It is apt to unsettle rooted convictions, to force a 'revaluation of old values,' and to increase, rather than to dispel, those disintegrating doubts which seem so much a spirit of this age. Yet it is not depressing to a robust and healthy organism." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p11 F 1 '25 1950w

"'God's Stepchildren,' must stand with Olive Schreiner's 'Story of An African Farm' as one of the great novels of Africa. It has those two qualities which Anatole France demanded of great fiction, the qualities of irony and pity. It has characterization to an extent rarely attained in a trilogy, though the book is only of 312 pages. It has the superb attainment of writing called style. Above all it has swiftness and passion, which are the despair of novelists."

+ N Y World p2m F 1 '25 1250w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y World p4m My 10 '25 60w

"The style is clear, rapid, direct, unemphasized, quiet, intense, with a simplicity more moving and at times more terrible than any eloquence. It is a book which deserves, as literature, to be approached without bias and read with no disturbing watch for plea or propaganda."

+ Outlook 139:308 F 25 '25 450w

"Mrs. Millin has given us something beautiful and memorable. No half-praise will fit it. She has a terrible conscientiousness in the revelation of motive. She knows what she is talking about. But, betrayed by the desire to make a point instead of simply telling a story, she has before the end to introduce an improbability, unexplained and indeed inexplicable. . . It is a weak end to a very strong book." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 137:490 My 10 '24 900w

"I find it possible to admire her facile handling of a technical difficulty. It is not easy to knit four generations of characters into a compact, unbroken narrative. This she has done admirably, solving a technical problem with more grace than did Hergesheimer in his 'Three Black Pennys.' Her plain facility at putting together a tale leads me to regret that she did not limit herself to materials provided in her first chapter—and so write a wholly different story." L. M. Hussey

+ Sat R of Lit 1:555 F 28 '25 700w

"Not a pleasant history, but a good novel close to the soil and the life of South Africa from 1821 to 1890; and without suggestive incident. It is worth reading for the background against which the story is written, as well as for the story itself."

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 750w

"God's Stepchildren is the classic of its theme in our English literature." Alain Locke

+ Survey 54:180 My 1 '25 720w

"The book is full of fierce feeling and is written with swiftness and certainty, and evidently from lifelong observation of South African life. Besides the colour studies there are equally sure pictures of Europeans and of the various grades of whites. . . A book that strangely holds the mind after the end is reached."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Mv 1 '24 700w

Wis Lib Bul 21:199 J1 '25

MILLIS, WILLIAM ALFRED, and MILLIS, HARRIETT. Teaching of high school subjects. (Century education ser.) 477p $2.25 Century 373 Teaching. High schools 25-2285

A text for students who are preparing for high school teaching and a guide to further professional study for teachers already in service. The usual high school subjects are included and both principles and method are covered. Includes chapter bibliographies.

"Especially helpful to teachers who are required to teach two or more subjects. Full chapter bibliographies."

+ Booklist 21:329 Je '25

Cleveland p95 S '25

"The series of essays is made up largely of general dogmatic statements which contain no substantiating data or references to authority. Virtually no opportunity is given the reader to weigh the evidence from which the authors draw their conclusions. The diction is at times oratorical and persuasive rather than scientific, and in many instances a literary style is affected. The book is painfully lacking in concrete examples of methods, such as might be secured by stenographic reports of classroom procedures and pertinent illustrations. In general the book seems to have been written with a minimum of effort. It does not fulfil its mission of giving teachers in small high schools some degree of proficiency in the methods of the high-school subjects." C. V. Good

+ School R 33:396 My '25 1000w

"The refreshing characteristic of the book is to be found in the practical, concise and intelligible manner in which President Millis has recognized the weakness of many text books in education and successfully steered his course in such a way as to avoid the uninteresting abstract theories too common in books of this type. As summer reading for the person who is to begin high school teaching in the fall and as a handbook during the early years of teaching the book has a great deal to recommend it."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Je 1 '25 250w

Springf'd Republican p12 J1 24 '25 160w

MILLS, DOROTHY. Book of the ancient Greeks. 420p il $2.50 (9s) Putnam 937 Greece—History. Greece—Civilization 25-11374

An introduction to the history and civilization of Greece from the coming of the Greeks to the conquest of Corinth by Rome in 146

MILLS, DOROTHY—Continued

B.C. The emphasis of the book is not on wars but on the life of the people, their literature and art and the heritage that they left.

"Written in simple though attractive style. Miss Mills excels not only in her choice of material for such a book as this, but also in the skill with which she has marshalled it for modern day use. And whatever their usefulness for the school, there is a strong appeal in these vividly written chapters for 'grown-ups' who need an insight into history at its sources. At the close of the volume there are ample suggestions for further reading."

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 5 '25 250w

"As seems to be the rule in books of this type on both sides of the Atlantic, it commits the fault of talking down to its audience and of regarding Greek civilization from an emotional point of view. For a school textbook the grammar is too often faulty and the ascertained facts of Greek history are not always accurately recorded."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p658 O 8 '25 200w

MILLS, LADY DOROTHY RACHEL MELISSA (WALPOLE). Road to Timbuktu. 262p il $5 Small [15s Duckworth]

916.6 Timbuktu. Africa, French West [24-14141]

"An account of an Englishwoman's journey through central Africa as far inland as Timbuktu. Contains considerable historical fact and information, but the principal interest lies in the excellent, straightforward descriptions of the natives, their manners, appearance, amusing personal traits and characteristics."—Booklist

Booklist 21:193 F '25

Reviewed by Harold Howland
Lit R p11 Ap 18 '25 480w

"Sentimentally romantic is the only possible description of Lady Dorothy Mills' record of her journey to Timbuktu."

+ New Statesman 22:694 Mr 15 '24 150w

"It was an amusing adventure, well worth undertaking for its own sake, even if it adds nothing to our previous knowledge of Timbuktu. But the writer makes the mistake of not sticking to her personal experiences. We could have swallowed a daily journal whole. Instead she hands us out—to use one of her own expressions, many weary pages of second-hand information about the French Soudan and its meagre history, which those who are interested in the subject could have obtained elsewhere. This destroys the character of the book, and cuts short the space that might have been devoted to more entertaining topics." Clennell Wilkinson

+ New Statesman 23:94 Ap 19 '24 500w

"It is an entertaining book, mildly informative, and the author has not inserted pictures of herself petting baby tigers. There is none of the conventional writing about lost tribes and the spiritual condition of the natives, none of the missionary touches that make most books of travel unreadable. Instead it is a tangible record, done in a way that makes one feel and smell and hear."

+ N Y Tribune p10 Mr 29 '25 200w
St Louis p383 N '24

"Lady Dorothy Mills has given us a delightful record of African travel, which bears on every page the impression of a gay, vivid and whimsical personality."

+ Sat R 137:415 Ap 19 '24 350w

"Steeped with the enthusiasm of the born traveller, she presents a series of pen pictures of African life, portrayed with vigor of style and charm of expression."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:515 F 7 '25 260w

"Lady Dorothy Mills, though her writing never reaches real distinction, has some gift for observation and description and can bring before us something of the parching monotony of the Niger and the curious charm of Timbuktu and the other towns and villages through which she passed. Her book contains, too, a good deal of interesting information. But only in faint and occasional touches do we discover anything of the essential atmosphere of that strange and desolate country, and of the human part of it almost nothing beneath the visible surface."

— + Spec 132:885 My 31 '24 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p153 Mr 13 '24 450w

MILLS, FREDERICK CECIL. Statistical methods, applied to economics and business. (Am. business ser.) 604p $3.60 Holt

311 Statistics 25-1468

"Professor Mills' book is principally of value from a business viewpoint to the statistician who desires to settle in his own mind the best way of presenting the facts in any given business problem or who desires authority for setting up statistics in a given manner. The book contains a very clear presentation of such subjects as the choice of the most representative average, the elements entering into price changes, the determination of trends and of various other matters which should be understood much more clearly than is usual among business statisticians."—Am Management R

"All of the four texts are clearly the work of men competent to deal with the subjects treated. Each has its own merits, and the appeal of any one of the books to students and teachers of statistics will be gauged by the particular interests and by the individual temperament of the users." W. I. King
+ Am Econ R 15:371 Je '25 420w

"Professor Mills has approached his subject in a scholarly manner and his presentation of matter which is necessarily at times abstruse is so clear that the book should prove of considerable value to the man engaged in setting up business statistics." Dwight Farnham

+ Am Management R 14:207 Je '25 260w

Booklist 22:55 N '25

"There has been no attempt made to secure brevity of expression, which is frequently found in books of this nature, and which may be desirable in a strictly mathematical work. Throughout, the needs of the beginner, rather than the advanced student, are borne in mind."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 14 '25 300w

"In all the discussion where mathematical principles are necessary, the explanation is clear and exact, so that the student unskilled in these principles can follow them out by careful analysis of the text. Some theories are discussed at greater length in the latter part of the book. Numerous illustrative tables and charts of actual data are included."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:795 My 30 '25 300w

MILLSPAUGH, ARTHUR CHESTER. American task in Persia. 332p il $3 Century

336.55 Persia. American financial mission.
Finance—Persia 25-21182

"The interest in this book is doubled when it is read in connection with Morgan Shuster's 'Strangling of Persia,' published a dozen years ago. Each tells the story of an American financial mission which went to the far side of the world to assist the ancient kingdom of Persia to organize its financial administration. Each is a commendable report of its author's efforts, of which the American people may be justly proud. But the two books together become much more than two reports. They give the life history of an ancient Asian state in the face of European imperialism, in the presence of the greatest of European wars, and in the midst of the uncertain world of to-day; a history which has in it something of an epic quality."—N Y Tribune

N Y Times p3 N 15 '25 600w

"The author pictures with much detail the land of Persia and the strange and colorful life of its people. More than that, he exhibits a very real insight into the good and bad qualities of the Persian character." H: K. Norton

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 15 '25 1900w

MILN, LOUISE (JORDAN) (MRS GEORGE CRICHTON MILN). Ruben and Ivy Sên. 360p $2 Stokes

25-17272

"Ruben Sên is the son of Ruby Sên, the widow of Sên King-Lo whose own story was told in 'Mr. and Mrs. Sên.' Ruben, English in appearance, is Chinese in mind and heart. Ivy, his sister, has a Chinese face, which she hates, for under the skin she is all English. The two conflicting natures are the ironic results of the blood mixture that came of the marriage of Sên King-Lo and Ruby Gilbert, the English girl. From these conflicts, and the pain and anxiety of the watching mother, Mrs. Miln has constructed a strong novel."—Lit R

Booklist 22:118 D '25

Boston Transcript p4 O 3 '25 600w

"'Ruben and Ivy Sen'" is by far the best of Mrs. Miln's books, not only because of the problem which it handles so well, but because of her ability to draw her reader from England to China and back again with the feeling of living in each of the countries for the moment, and understanding each of the racial problems that stir the emotions of Mrs. Sen and her two children." V. R. Bowker

+ Int Bk R p822 N '25 250w

Reviewed by J. J. McLaughlin

Lit R p4 O 3 '25 320w

"Most absorbing novel. It is just a trifle too compact, the characters dovetail a bit too nicely to the necessary action; the economy of means is a trifle too obvious to serve its purpose. Retribution is too exact, circumstance too apposite to mark the book as a fine bit of literary construction."

+ — N Y Times p8 S 20 '25 700w

N Y Tribune p14 N 1 '25 150w

"A moderately good novel containing occasional bits of excellence and dominated by a moving sense of spiritual affinity, not so much with the China we think we know but with Cathay."

+ — N Y World p4m O 4 '25 100w

"The story is readable and well told."

+ Outlook 141:288 O 21 '25 80w

"The tale is never merely sensational. It is an honest novel, for the most part well written. Some readers will find the scenes in China too full of local color, but only a few will remain unimpressed by Mrs. Miln's mastery of the racial conflict she has chosen to portray."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:262 O 31 '25 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p641 O 1 '25 130w

MILN, LOUISE (JORDAN) (MRS GEORGE CRICHTON MILN). Soul of China; glimpsed in tales of today and yesterday. 311p $2 Stokes [Ts 6d Hodder & S.]

25-1250

In the hands of a writer who knows and loves China these tales of today and yesterday are a revelation of the human side of Chinese life and the customs of the country. Contents: The no-number wife; The cat pagoda; The tame dragon; Weeping willow; Flower of luck; The doll in the swing; The sword of chastity; The puppets of mah jong; How music came to China; Gratitude.

"As in the earlier books on China the writer shows an insight into Chinese customs and character as well as a desire to portray the human and attractive side of Chinese life. Her descriptions of the delicate, sensuous beauties of the Chinese landscape are particularly vivid."

+ Booklist 21:276 Ap '25

"Mrs. Miln has exceeded all other writers in her portrayal of China as a comprehensible, human, likable country. Her most enthusiastic efforts, however have gone into her descriptions of the physical beauties of China. To us that is the thing above all others which stands out in her books." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 31 '25 2300w

"One can imagine these tales related by a Chinese story-teller in market place or yamen, a story-teller with an unusual repertoire. Mrs. Miln seems to have taken a hint here, a tradition there from Chinese mythology. With these materials she has fashioned stories that reveal the spiritual essence of the Chinese people, with their gusto for life, their love of nature and beauty that somehow remind of the old Greeks." J: J. McLaughlin

+ Lit R p12 Ja 24 '25 600w

N Y Times p9 Ja 11 '25 870w

"Although Mrs. Miln gives us sympathetic glimpses of the life of the East, there is something presumptuous in this talk of souls; the soul of a nation is subject for even the wisest of its citizens to approach with misgiving. The dainty spirit that this foreign lady has captured in her pages is Chinese, but surely it is not China." Mary Willcox

+ — N Y Tribune p10 Mr 1 '25 350w

Wis Lib Bul 21:113 Ap '25

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER. Gallery of children. 105p il $3.50 McKay 25-20978

Twelve stories for little girls, by the author of the popular "When we were very young." The dainty pictures by the Dutch painter H. Willebeek Le Mair have already appeared in magazines in this country. Children who have seen the picture of "Sparrow Tree Square" will be glad to learn that the little girl anxiously searching her green handbag is Miss Diana Fitzpatrick Mauleverer James, who has forgotten the crusts she intended for the sparrows; and that the children in "Castles by the Sea" are only waiting for the sea to wash away the sand and leave them high and dry.

"A rare book of short stories for little children." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:181 O '25 250w

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p46 D '25 70w

"His gay verse has been so widely read and quoted during the last year that it would be impossible not to compare with it any work that he might do for children, and the stories in this gallery are as essentially right as anything the other book contained. Here is the same amusing mixture of the romantic and the literal, held together by a prose style as charming and smooth as the rhythm of his verses. . . The title of this book is unfortunate, its lack of color is not fair to such a conspicuously light-hearted and decorative and altogether satisfactory story book." H. C. Forbes

+ N Y Tribune p6 O 4 '25 1050w

"The first two tales in that collection of stories are utterly charming, in Mr. Milne's best vein for juveniles; the others give the impression of being somewhat more fragmentary than the design of the author perhaps intended when he first projected them."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:281 N 7 '25 110w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p804 N 26 '25 220w

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER. Holiday round. 249p $1.75 Dutton

827

A collection of light and humorous sketches reprinted from Punch. Contents: Holiday time; The house-warming; At play; Two stories; An odd lot; Little plays for amateurs; A chapter of accidents; Stories of successful lives; A few friends; Epilogue.

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER—Continued

"A fine volume for family evenings this, and decidedly worth owning."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 18 '25 350w

N Y Tribune p15 N 8 '25 100w

"Whether or not you like all this depends on what you consider funny. For our own part we extract a great deal of fun out of the mild perturbations of Mr. Milne's characters."

+ N Y World p4m O 4 '25 200w

"If you have ever had a picnic go wrong, or come to tea with only one of a pair of spats, or if you are interested in the 'Sardine Defense League,' or even should you only care to know that Artichoke is not a girl's but a boy's name, you will want to read the book. One is only sorry not to find in it any of Mr. Milne's charming verses, but some of his prose reads like verse."

+ Outlook 141:453 N 18 '25 200w

MILNE, JAMES. London book window. 206p $2.50 Putnam [6s Lane]

824 Books and reading

"James Milne has been looking into London book windows and out of London editorial windows for more years than it would perhaps be courteous to state." (Lit R) "His 'A London Book Window' is a series of journalistic articles about such things as 'What Makes a 'Best Seller,' 'The Happy Ending,' 'The 'Problem' Novel,' 'First Novels and Novelists,' 'About Publisher's Readers' and so on." (N Y Times)

"Mr. Milne is refreshing in that he views his world through rose colored spectacles. It might do some of us no harm to glance now and again through the same lens. We are perhaps needlessly suspicious of optimism in these days."

+ Margaret Williamson

+ Lit R p16 Mr 21 '25 400w

New Statesman 24:372 Ja 3 '25 120w

"Mr. Milne is, on the whole, a charming writer, but he should not essay critical judgments."

H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y Times p6 Mr 15 '25 250w

N Y Tribune p8 Mr 15 '25 320w

St Louis p352 S '25

"This collection of literary essays is pleasantly and nimbly discursive but scarcely of permanent interest. The contents are light articles of the type provided in America by the 'columnists,' and in London called the causerie. They do not lack good observation or good sense; at times they capture the vivacity of aphorism; but they remain products of popular, if sound, journalism rather than contributions to literary criticism or history. As a whole, they are better read once than reread."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 15 '25 750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p887 D 25

'24 100w

MINER, JACK. Jack Miner and the birds, and some things I know about nature. 178p il $2.50 Reilly & Lee

598.2 Birds

25-7854

Jack Miner, known far and wide as the friend of birds, has a remarkable bird sanctuary at Kingsville, Ontario, on the north shore of Lake Erie which attracts thousands of geese, ducks, swans and other game birds. His book tells in an inimitably humorous way his experiences with birds and their enemies. It also describes in detail appliances useful to those who would cultivate the friendship of game and song birds—the arrangement of bird sanctuaries and the building of bird houses.

"For seventeen years effort to cultivate the friendship of birds has placed the author in a unique position among bird-lovers and naturalists; and his work on their nature and habits is not only peculiarly authoritative, but unfolds a romance the like of which I do not know for originality, intimacy and attractiveness among all that has been written about wild things. And any doubters of the literal truth of this strange, moving narrative will be welcomed at the Miner farm, where the air at this time of year is full of wings, and the ground and ponds covered with feathered beauties." W: A. Deacon

+ Int Bk R p266 Mr '25 1600w

MINNIGERODE, MEADE. Lives and times; four informal American biographies. 215p $3.50 Putnam

920 Jumel, Stephen. Eaton, William. Alston, Mrs Theodosia (Burr). Genêt, Edmond Charles Edouard 25-6392

"'Informal biographies' of Stephen Jumel, Merchant of old New York; William Eaton, Hero of the shameful days of the Barbary Coast; Theodosia Burr, Prodigy, and Edmond Charles Genêt, Citizen-Ambassador from France to the United States. It is on the 'times' that Mr. Minnigerode puts his accent, rather than on the 'lives,' with the consequence that these chosen four really do live—which is still too rare a thing in biography."—N Y World

Booklist 21:337 Je '25

Bookm 61:345 My '25 90w

Reviewed by Ralph Bergengren

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 21 '25 2050w

Cleveland p112 D '25

"The material is skillfully handled, the 'human interest' of these long-dead men and women brilliantly presented. One hopes that Mr. Minnigerode will stick to this kind of writing in which he has competence and good taste."

+ Ind 114:386 Ap 4 '25 100w

"Meade Minnigerode has made a fine contribution to American literature. Incidentally, he has made a book that will keep you from your meals." C: W. Thompson

+ Lit R p4 Ap 4 '25 1550w

"In spite of research that appears to have mastered the social and political scene which formed the stage whereon his four frustrated individuals walked, the author has failed to do more than give a rather clever series of pictorializations. This is regrettable, for there was opportunity here for infinite analysis. If Mr. Minnigerode had pursued his subjects with greater insight he might have fashioned an extremely important addition to the history both of society and of the individual. As journalism, and as journalism only, 'Lives and Times' is adequate." H. S. Gorman

+ Nation 121:193 Ag 12 '25 400w

"His very eagerness to give the account just as he saw it betrays him into stylistic stammerings which make us interrupt to read sentence after muddled sentence. He stays not for subject and he stops not for predicate, but you grasp the living image if you catch his enthusiasm, as you cannot fail to." D. B. Woolsey

+ New Repub 42:245 Ap 22 '25 380w

"It is quite as much the times as the individual lives that will hold the reader in this book, for the author has made a valiant attempt to orientate his personages with a high degree of vividness and actuality. To some measure he has succeeded and his partial failure is due only to a lack of the proper kindling spark within him."

+ — N Y Times p5 Mr 22 '25 2150w

"It may safely be said that even the casual reader will find these varied biographical studies entertaining, and if Mr. Minnigerode's taste for the picturesque slightly outweighs his instinct for psychological research, the casual reader at any rate will not be likely to complain." Gamaliel Bradford

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 29 '25 620w

"A book that is notable in its historical quality no less than in its literary; a book that really sounds a new note in biography." W. F. Beazell

+ N Y World p6m Mr 8 '25 820w

Outlook 140:193 Je 3 '25 400w

Pratt p35 autumn '25

St Louis p357 S '25

"Mr Minnigerode has the journalist's happy faculty of being able to connect his facts with pretty flights of rhetoric which serve his purpose if they do not serve history's. The book is jazzy and snappy. But it is interesting, entertaining and new. After all, history can take care of itself and so no harm is done."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ap 6 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p401 Je 11 '25 300w

MIRO FERRER, GABRIEL. Figures of the passion of our Lord; tr. from the Spanish Figuras de la pasion del Señor, by C. J. Hogarth. 309p $3.50 Knopf [12s 6d G. Chapman]

232 Jesus Christ—Passion 25-8094

"Senor Miró has undertaken the supremely difficult task of telling the story of the Passion of the Lord and of making each person in the tragedy live before our eyes. As in the Oberammergau Play, we see Caiaphas, Annas, Pontius Pilate, Nicodemus in their official capacity, and the action of the holy Personality of Jesus working on the priest, the king, the deputy-governor and the respected counsellor. The story is told in a series of complete pictures. Innumerable little touches give colour to the whole. Senor Miró works by means of his pictures to the central scenes of the Crucifixion."—Spec

Booklist 21:358 J1 '25

Bookm 62:lxviii D '25 120w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 20 '25 550w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 114:384 Ap 4 '25 1250w

"The English narrative is lucid and beautiful, only once or twice in an obscure phrase betraying the translation. That infrequent cloudiness is the less a defect, since it is occasionally present in the original as well. It is unimportant. The beauty of the prose, clear and colorful as the water of Galilee, and, like Gennesaret, brilliant with mirrored images, is not marred by a fleck of cloud." Muna Lee

+ Lit R p14 Ap 11 '25 750w

"The planning of the book as a series of separate narratives, while involving frequent breaks in the continuity of interest, gives the most ample scope for these elaborate pictures of contemporary Jewish life, and enables the story of the Passion to be presented from widely different and strongly contrasted points of view. The translator, C. J. Hogarth, has performed his task with great credit, and great praise is due to the admirable printing and get-up of the volume, which is a delight to the book-lover's eye."

+ Living Age 324:625 Mr 14 '25 500w (Reviewed from Daily Telegraph)

"The Figures, beautifully translated by Mr. Hogarth, are not characteristic of the author's work. They are a strange mixture of a remarkable erudition and a decadent aestheticism, whence emerges the picture of a Jesus very different from the Christ of the Christian legend, or the Son of God of the theologians. Printed in Caslon Old Face, and exquisitely bound, the book itself is a work of art to be treasured independently of its contents."

+ Nation 121:123 J1 22 '25 200w

"A book so coloured with beauty and loaded with horror as this one is could only be the fruit of a Latin mind. Señor Miró dedicates his work to 'the Mother who has so often related to me the story of the Passion. It has obviously been one to him with the air he breathed; and now, with immense learning and lively imagination, he has put that story into one of the most ornate books of our time."

Nation and Ath 36:684 F 14 '25 820w

"This is a book one cannot ignore. Its design, as the title suggests, is an elaborate reconstruction of a story which to most readers is intimately familiar; it is long, and packed and pressed down with an almost bewildering detail; the air of it is brooding and sultry like a night of successive thunderstorms; and in its insistence on harshness and cruelty and bodily pain, that mobs will jeer at its victims in agony, that torture is something undergone in a terrible solitude of spirit, the narrative of the Passion as related by Sr. Miró is remorseless."

New Statesman 25:17 Ap 18 '25 1200w

"It is a mistake to read it through with anything like the continuous application given a novel. Rather, one should move from picture to picture with the deliberateness in which one moves from picture to picture in a gallery. And one should move also reverently for, truly, these pictures by Gabriel Miró are stations of the cross, stations conceived by a modern attempting with faith to revisualize and to revitalize the most cherished moments of a religious past."

N Y Times p6 Mr 15 '25 1250w

"'Figures of the Passion of Our Lord' belongs in spirit to the period of fervently esthetic interpretation. [It is] more impressive as a work of creative imagination than as a tribute of piety. Its author is of Jesuit upbringing, enamored of landscape and mountain scenery, and temperamentally enriched with the æsthetic melancholy of the later romanticists. His imagination is passionate, colorful, sensuous, with a touch of Latin morbidez." S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p1 Ap 12 '25 2150w

"This is not the Man of Sorrows. Miró has robbed the passion of everything of sublimity, of exaltation, of inspiration, of impulsion to service and sacrifice. His is not a loving or a lovable Jesus, nor a Divine, whether one reads as a believer in Him as God or Man. There is no trace of beauty left in the story when he has told it, and this, of all the stories that have moved mankind, is empty and meaningless without beauty."

— N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 450w

"Señor Miró has learning, art, and sustained power of description. His learning is wide, deep, and accurate. He has the artist's delicate sense of knowing just how much is necessary to enable him to see the time, circumstance, and background which throw into high relief each figure that absorbs his attention. With dreadful power and too painful realistic detail we are shown Jesus scourged, Jesus carrying His heavy cross, Jesus in torment on the Cross, till we feel as if we were reading the old familiar story for the first time. Yet, horrible as these last scenes are, the book leaves an impression of serenity."

+ Spec 134:371 Mr 7 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p58 Ja 22 '25 30w

"Clearness of vision and vividness of presentation are applied in this book to the story of the Passion; and the story is told, it should be said at once, with a beauty of style which is spoiled by only one consideration. That consideration is the Authorized Version of the New Testament."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p184 Mr 19 '25 520w

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 J1 '25

MIRRELES, HOPE. The counterplot. ltd ed 334p $3 Knopf [7s 6d Collins] 25-7940

Completely out of harmony with her world, Teresa Lane finds no relief in religion. Neither the bland evasions of her easy going English father nor the unquestioning faith of her Catholic Spanish mother are possible to her. And there is no one to satisfy her vague yearnings toward a romantic ideal. Of her sister Concha's warm beauty and easy popularity Teresa is secretly jealous, and yet when love comes to her it brings not peace but further perplexities. All this inner turbulence finds expression in a brilliant play, the text of which takes up the last third of the book. The setting of the play is a Spanish convent in the fourteenth century.

MIRRLEES, HOPE—Continued

"There is some very good writing in the book. It may appeal to all those who are disciples of Freud, but its reception by others cannot be vouched for."

+ — Boston Transcript p5 My 2 '25 270w

"The texture of the novel is simplicity elaborately woven. It is a rare and a stimulating book." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p7 J1 3 '25 400w

"Miss Mirrlees, who is as urbane as Sir Thomas Browne or Huysmans, writes as beautifully as Pater; and the rarefied world that she weaves like a canopy over the discordant, unrelated, irrelevant lives below has the imperishable fragrance of Pater's prose."

+ Nation 121:261 S '25 50w

"An admirable gift has been spent on an ungrateful theme. Miss Mirrlees is still too much a moralist to have the necessary detachment of the artist." Austin Clarke

+ — Nation and Ath 34:804 Mr 8 '24 520w

"Whether Miss Mirrlees has succeeded in the bold course of transferring her theme from an English country house of the twelfth century to a Spanish convent of the fourteenth, and from the novel to the drama will, of course, be questioned. It is perhaps enough to say that the novel is enthralling; and the play may be enjoyed and admired for itself." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 43:212 J1 15 '25 260w

"The important superiority of Miss Mirrlees to almost all contemporary novelists lies neither in her wit, nor her erudition, nor her language, nor her sense of character, though all these are rare and remarkable. It is her view of life that matters, and is truly interesting." Raymond Mortimer

+ New Statesman 22:574 F 23 '24 720w

"A strange book 'The Counterplot,' clever, bitter, cryptic and at times sinister in its dissections of tortuous psychology."

N Y Times p9 Ap 12 '25 900w

"By weaving fourteenth century Spain into twentieth century England through beautifully written pages Miss Mirrlees has achieved an effect of great richness and decoration, the more intriguing in that her story is so little concerned with settings and surfaces, so deeply engaged with souls." Mary Ross

+ N Y Tribune p12 Ag 23 '25 760w

"It is a mixture of startling beauty and unbelievable ineptitude. It is full of strange scenes and rhythms, it has learning, passion, wit; it has also that stupid vulgarity without which a book can nowadays scarcely hope to be accounted clever." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 137:214 Mr 1 '24 400w

"Here, in lovely language, is an enigma. Sparkling with poetic and epigrammatic gems, 'The Counterplot' leaves us puzzled, groping for a clue to character, to intention, to interrelation of plot episodes. What is the plot and what the counterplot? If Miss Mirrlees desired to talk in the bewildering riddles of ultra futurism, she has succeeded." M. D. Holmes

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:907 J1 18 '25 550w

Spec 132:374 Mr 8 '24 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p174 Mr 20 '24 300w

MIRSKY, D. S., prince. Modern Russian literature. (World's manuals ser.) 120p $1 Oxford [2s 6d Milford]

891.7 Russian literature—History and criticism [25-20320]

"The book starts with what Prince Mirsky calls 'the Natural School,' of whom the chief writer was Aksakov. He traces the rise of the first great wave of realism in Russian literature, a wave which reached its height in the work of the great trinity, Turgenev, Tolstol, and Dostoevsky. He then has three chapters dealing with the dramatists, the poets, and the critics and publicists respectively. A chapter follows treating the second great wave of realism which reached its height in Chekhov. Finally, Prince Mirsky has a chapter on 'The New Age,' carrying his survey down to the writings of Remizov, Bely, Zamyatin, and Frishvin. There is also an admirable bibliography of English translations of Russian writers."—Nation and Ath

Booklist 22:110 D '25

"The author brings to his task a thorough knowledge of his subject, a readable style, and, above all, a fresh viewpoint. Moreover, his familiarity with the literatures of England and the Continent allows him to speak of Russia's contribution in terms enlightening to his audience."

+ Nation 121:683 D 9 '25 300w

"It is not possible to speak too highly of this volume in the 'World's Manuals' series. Prince Mirsky has produced a book which is admirable in every way; it is readable, intelligent, short, useful, and full of that rare thing—real criticism."

+ Nation and Ath 37:271 My 30 '25 400w

"Prince Mirsky has written a short book and a bad one. . . His attack on Chekhov, Gorky and Andreyev, as well as on the minor writers, indicates that his alignment with political reactionaries has vitiated his literary judgments."

— N Y Tribune p8 O 11 '25 250w

"In this admirable survey Prince Mirsky tells the story of Russian literature with a verve and enjoyment which make it easy and pleasant reading."

+ Sat R 139:592 My 30 '25 150w

"An admirable summary of Russian literary history. We have nothing but praise for the author's condensed treatment of his subject. With most of his judgments few would quarrel. But, in agreement as we are with the trend of his survey, his attitude to Tchekov seems to us a little unworthy."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p331 My 14 '25 400w

MITCHELL, EDWIN VALENTINE, ed. Steamer book, a miscellany for voyagers on all seas. 322p il $2.50 Dodd

808.8 Voyages and travels. Literature—Collections 25-10502

Intended as a companion of the sea voyage, this book is a miscellany of information and entertainment. The opening section is devoted to information about ships and navigation. There follows a collection of sea poetry and tales, extracts from sea writers such as Darwin and Melville, and selections about flora and fauna of the sea. Finally a log outline is given and a nautical vocabulary.

"Enlightening and amusing." T. R. Coward

+ Bookm 61:707 Ag '25 50w

"One cannot open the book anywhere without chancing upon something that is either very entertaining or pleasantly informing. It is the kind of book that one can dip into at odd moments or can take up and read for an hour or so without boredom and without much mental effort—in short, just the book for the long, idle and restful days of a sea voyage, no matter on which of the Seven Seas one may be sailing."

+ N Y Times p24 Je 14 '25 200w

N Y Tribune p12 Je 14 '25 220w

"A copy of 'The Steamer Book' should go into every bon voyage box."

+ N Y World p3m Ag 16 '25 150w

St Louis 23:435 D '25

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 150w

"Altogether, the little book contains a variety of interesting scraps, literary and otherwise, and seems to hold within its covers something for every taste. Yet it would seem to err here and there in its selections."

+ — Spring'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 200w

MITCHELL, ROY. School theatre. 104p il
$1.75 Brentano's

792 Amateur theatricals. College and school drama. Theaters—Stage-setting and scenery 25-25217

"The theory and practice of play production is outlined, accompanied by excellent diagrams and sketches of stage sets, completed, and in the process of construction. There are also detailed notes on costume, make-up, lighting and the choice of plays. A list of the more familiar, actable plays for Little Theatre Groups is included, as well as the names and addresses of many play publishers and firms where theatrical supplies may be purchased."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:148 Ja '26

"Though small in size, it covers much territory, furnishing excellent material for earnest students of production work. A most worth while book." Frederica Magnus

+ Lit R p5 O 17 '25 100w

N Y Times p26 Ag 30 '25 350w

"Should prove a practical assistant to directors of school and amateur dramatic groups throughout the country."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:452 D 26 '25 100w

"Mr. Mitchell offers many suggestions to teachers interested in bringing the theatre into the school as an educational factor. His terse style, though too oracular, throws out needed light on the elementary production problems facing an amateur group and an amateur producer."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 9:706 O '25 100w

MITCHELL, WILLIAM. Winged defense; the development and possibilities of modern air power—economic and military. 261p il $2.50 Putnam

623.74 Aeronautics, Military. United States —Air service 25-17165

The former assistant chief of the United States air force and the man who is the storm center of the controversy now raging about the air service sets forth his view of the development and possibilities of modern air power and his criticism of the organization of this branch of the national defense.

Booklist 22:106 D '25

"The book is persuasively written, incontestably sound and honest, but it is not calculated to expand its author's popularity with high departmental officials."

+ Bookm 62:619 Ja '26 120w

"A vigorous and daring polemic." Edmund Noble

Boston Transcript p4 S 12 '25 2600w

"An epic of the air and a philippic, too, is 'Winged Defence,' in which its temperamental author, Col. William Mitchell, reveals to us the world above the world and its people. Long after investigations cease from troubling, and discussions over the merits of aerial navigation are no more, this volume should live. It should do so despite the bad manners of its author, both official and personal; and the fact that he says and does things which bring soldiers in peril of court-martial." J: W. Harrington

+ — Int Bk R p801 N '25 1800w

Reviewed by M. W. Royse

Nation 121:673 D 9 '25 720w

"The book is frankly propaganda for a separate Air Service. While the book deals with a military subject, it is not primarily militaristic in spirit. The author writes more as an airman than as a soldier." Iskander Hourwich

New Repub 44:237 O 21 '25 800w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:38 Jl '25

"Into details Colonel Mitchell does not go sufficiently, but haste he might plead in preparing his book to arouse his countrymen to the need of a sound and progressive air policy. He is certainly entitled to respectful attention." H: E. Armstrong

+ — N Y Times p3 S 20 '25 2200w

"Unfortunately General Mitchell's experience is imperfectly represented by his book. Mitchell, the author, is more energetic than specific. He speaks grandly of changes, but tends to skip the gap between the future and the present. Oftentimes he proceeds for pages from generalization to generalization. The result is a fair picture of air power possibilities as he sees them, but not a wholly convincing argument in behalf of an immediate revolution in government policy." F. E. Hill

+ — N Y Tribune p4 O 4 '25 760w

Outlook 141:677 D 30 '25 80w

St Louis 23:431 D '25

"'Winged Defense,' like the statements which its distinguished author from time to time issues to the press, is more marked by enthusiasm than by caution." E: P. Warner

Sat R of Lit 2:212 O 17 '25 850w

MITFORD, MARY RUSSELL. Letters; selected with an introd. by R. Brimley Johnson. 236p $2.50 Dial press [6s Lane]

B or 92

[25-14508]

"Miss Mitford 'happened' in a period of transition and had a long writing life. She was born in 1787 and died in 1855, began writing excellent letters in 1800 and maintained that humane and enlivening practice for fifty-five years. Through her letters flows the current of our social history at periods so notable as those of the Napoleonic War, of the Regency and the Dandies, of the railways, and of the early Victorian epoch. All their phenomena are reflected in her pages, and we see her mental attitude change before our eyes with her environment."—Spec

"To the excellent compilation of her letters made by Mr. Johnson the seeker for social as well as of literary information, may therefore readily turn. They are, in their way, a supplement to the sketches of life contained in 'Our Village,' a work as unique in its style as 'Pride and Prejudice' and 'Cranford' are in theirs." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 1 '25 1450w

"This handy little selection from the many volumes of Miss Mitford's letters is done with skill. Delightful as they are and entertaining, one would like occasionally to feel that Miss Mitford was in a hurry, or in a temper, or had something very urgent to say."

+ Nation and Ath 37:82 Ap 18 '25 250w

"There is much to interest in this unpretending book."

+ New Statesman 24:724 Mr 28 '25 580w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

N Y Times p15 Je 7 '25 1900w (Same as Spec)

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p4 N 15 '25 900w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

"This selection of Miss Mitford's letters is well made and welcome. Altogether, the book is a very pleasant presentation of a delightful and warm-hearted lady."

+ Sat R 139:365 Ap 4 '25 400w

"Miss Mitford was not only possessed of a charming personality and a delightful style in writing. She enjoyed life and literature, no matter how much they might vary. Her letters never seem tinged by regrets for times passed. She makes her witty or sympathetic

MITFORD, MARY RUSSELL—Continued
 comments upon the hour as it flies, but seldom makes unfavourable comparisons with the people of former days." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 134:890 My 30 '25 2100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p218 Mr 26 '25 860w

MITTELHOLZER, WALTER, and others. By airplane towards the North Pole; tr. from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. 176p il $4 Houghton

919.8 Aviation. Arctic regions. Phototography, Aerial. Spitzbergen

The expedition by airplane to Spitzbergen in 1923 was originally planned as an adjunct to the Amundsen flight across the Pole. Changes in Amundsen's plans canceled the necessity for the auxiliary flight but since all preparations had been made it was decided to carry out the expedition for the purpose of photographic research. The book, written by several members of the expedition, contains a description of Spitzbergen and the area to be photographed, an account of aerial photography and its geographical value, and a record of the flight. The illustrations of arctic scenes are a most attractive feature of the volume.

"Described lucidly by experts."

+ Spec 135:1052 D 5 '25 120w

"Apart from its interest as a narrative of adventure, the book is more than justified by its very beautiful photographs of Arctic scenery and by its technical discussions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p819 D 3 '25 620w

MOFFATT, JAMES, ed. Everyman's life of Jesus. 242p $1.50 Doran [6s Hodder & S.]

232 Jesus Christ 25-8287

By selecting what is essential in the four memoirs of the life of Jesus contained in the gospels and arranging it in a natural and consecutive order, Dr Moffatt sets forth the story of Jesus in such a way as to render it more intelligible to everyman. The text is entirely taken from the gospels themselves.

Booklist 21:325 Je '25

Bookm 61:adv Ap '25 100w

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 18 '25 450w

"The impression is unforgettable; almost as if we had read it for the first time. It brings out afresh what Jesus was, what He did, what He thought and taught, and the sublime personality commands us in all its beauty and wonder and assurance." J. F. Newton

+ Int Bk R p309 Ap '25 300w

J Religion 5:332 My '25 60w

"A consecutive, clear and interesting narrative."

+ N Y Times p21 Mr 1 '25 470w

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p3 Ap 12 '25 450w

Pratt p7 autumn '25

"The remarkable thing about the work of Dr. Moffatt is the devout religious motive and spirit which animates the book. The story of Jesus is related in the simple and beautiful language of the evangelists, just as a great scholar would tell it to a little group of his own children at the Sabbath fireside. The only criticism the scholar-guest can make on the work is not a word of derogation, but of appreciation. The reader must realize the purpose of the book. He must understand why and for whom it was written." B: B. Bacon

+ Sat R of Lit 1:688 Ap 18 '25 420w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p831 D 4 '24 110w

MOFFETT, CLEVELAND LANGSTON. Seine mystery. 288p $2 Dodd

"The central figure is Pierre Launay, a Parisian writer who foretells his death at the hands of an assassin as a payment for a strange and unnamed crime of years before. When a drowned passenger is found in a taxicab at the bottom of the Seine the search begins for Launay's murderer, and much of the ensuing detective interest turns upon whether or not the culprit is Emile Bigot, a facetious creature with a penchant for extravagant lies, false noses and subtle poisons."—N Y Tribune

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 1 '25 250w

"Mr. Moffett writes agreeably, and he knows how to weave a web of mystification about his central theme. It is true that the bright reader will probably guess the mysterious horror hanging over Launay long before Mr. Moffett permits a much-searched-for letter to be found and read, but this does not invalidate the inexplicable progressions that lead up to the final scene." H. S. G.

+ Int Bk R p618 Ag '25 400w

"Written with real distinction. This quality arrests you on the first page." H. H. Wallerstein

+ Lit R p4 Ag 22 '25 230w

"Those readers who feel that the plot's the thing may well place 'The Seine Mystery' near the top of their Summer's list. Nor is the element of romance missing, for Mr. Moffett sees to it that a somewhat complicated love story between the young reporter and one of the victims of Launay's suggestive fiction runs side by side with the more sinister sections of his tale."

+ N Y Times p13 Jl 5 '25 520w

"Mr. Moffett is expert with all the paraphernalia of mystery and skillful at plots and counterplots. Here is better than average ham-mock reading."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Jl 26 '25 200w

Spec 133:792 N 22 '24 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p653 O 16 '24 100w

MOFFIT, LOUIS WILFRID. England on the eve of the industrial revolution. 312p $3.50 International pub. [12s 6d P. S. King]

331.09 England—Economic conditions. Agriculture—England. Lancashire, England

[25-13667]

A study of economic and social conditions from 1740 to 1760, with special reference to Lancashire. The first part deals with the technique of agriculture and the economic aspects of farming. The second part is concerned with industry and commerce—distribution of industry and population, industrial technique, economic organization of production and distribution, and labor and social conditions.

"His book, if it is a little lacking in life and distinction, will give to his readers a good impression of the state of English industry on the eve of the machine age. His study of agriculture in Lancashire is in this respect very useful, and he has taken great trouble to assemble the facts about technical progress at this time."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:742 S 19 '25 380w

"This is a rather disappointing book, though it contains a good deal of useful matter. It hardly lives up to its ambitious title. By far the best part is the opening section, which deals with agricultural conditions and the economic structure of farming. This is good and informative, and contains much that is new. The second section, on industry and commerce, is more scrappy."

+ New Statesman 25:376 Jl 11 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p841 D 10 '25 1000w

MOLE, LOUIS MATHIEU, count. Life and memoirs; ed. by the Marquis de Noailles; [tr. by Arthur Chambers]. 2v 351;327p il $12 Doran [ea 18s Hutchinsonson]

B or 92

These two volumes cover the life of Count Molé from the death of his father in 1794 to 1817. At twenty-five he began his brilliant public career under Napoleon as auditeur to the Council of state, advancing rapidly to more important honors. Volume I, is chiefly concerned with his political activities. Volume II, while continuing the record of his public career, gives from Count Molé's own pen the frank and intimate picture of his private life. The two volumes present a figure of unusual brilliance and charm.

"They are well worth reading for anyone interested in the historical development of the French people, though less for what they say than for what they imply, and as a detailed picture of a man typical of his generation."

+ Nation and Ath 36:683 F 14 '25 300w

"He has carried discretion almost to the point of absurdity. The reader is constantly annoyed by the omission of lines which evidently contained the writer's opinions upon persons whom he encountered and by names in blank. Discretion is indeed a virtue. But the opinions of Molé here recorded were written down over a hundred years ago. His knights are dust, and their good swords are rust. Moreover, a few hours' intelligent research would serve to fill in a large proportion of the names left blank. This coyness of the editor is all the more to be regretted because the memoirs of Molé do undoubtedly constitute a historical document of importance, both from the general point of view and as an addition to Napoleonic literature."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p807 N 29 '23 1250w (Review of v 1)

"Molé suffers from the fault of a far greater writer of memoirs, the Cardinal de Retz; he is so often occupied with the mechanism, the minor intrigue, of politics, that he fails to put before us the broader views which he was well qualified to present. But if so, he certainly has also one of the high qualities of the man who was so intimately connected with his celebrated ancestor, Mathieu Molé. He is an admirable painter of portraits."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p78 F 5 '25 1100w (Review of v 2)

MOLNAR, FRANZ. The guardsman; a comedy in three acts; tr. by Grace I. Colbron and Hans Bartsch, acting version by Philip Moeller, foreword by Theresa Helburn. 189p il $2 Boni & Liveright

894 25-3777

This play, written and produced in Hungary in 1911 and by the Theatre Guild in New York in the season of 1924-25, is a comedy of a young actor and his actress wife, both absurdly emotional and jealous of each other. The young husband hits upon the expedient of testing his wife's love by laying siege to her heart under the disguise of an officer of the Russian guards. The success of his courtship confirms his worst fears, tho his wife assures him in the end that she recognized him under his disguise and that he never for a moment deceived her.

Booklist 21:270 Ap '25

Cleveland p89 S '25

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch
Nation 119:501 N 5 '24 430w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y World p4m F 1 '25 280w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses
Outlook 139:458 Mr 25 '25 130w

"Sophisticated high comedy not perhaps so romantically appealing as 'The Swan,' or packed with the beauty, power, and imagination of 'Liliom,' but a keen-edged, deft, and spirited satire of piquant characterization, scintillating dialogue, and rarest of all, a humor provocative of thought." Rachel Field

+ Sat R of Lit 1:660 Ap 11 '25 160w

"The Guardsman" scarcely reads as well as it may be expected to read under highly favorable conditions; for the lightest and surest of histrionic touches would be needed to save its cynical humor from trivial, vulgar commonplace. Even at best its characters would remain puppets."

Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 7 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:55 F '25

MOLNAR, FRANZ. Prisoners; tr. from the Hungarian by Joseph Szebenyei. 278p $2.50 Bobbs

25-5962

This is the first novel of the Hungarian dramatist to be published in English. Riza Nagy, a pretty cashier in a Budapest pastry shop robs her employer of three hundred florins. A young lawyer, Nicholas Chathy, undertakes her defense. Before Riza's trial comes off she confesses to Nicholas that she loves him and that she stole the money in order that she might buy finery in which to make herself lovely in his eyes. He is at the time engaged to an innocent young girl and believes himself in love with her, but this fact does not impress the passionate Riza. The story reaches its climax in the trial scene when Nicholas under the glow and pleading of Riza's eyes realizes that he loves her and makes a moving speech for the defense, which, however, does not secure her acquittal.

Booklist 21:384 J1 '25

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Bookm 61:354 My '25 40w

Cleveland p37 Ap '25

"Good reading. A story well conceived, and, in the end, worth writing."

+ Ind 114:423 Ap 11 '25 40w

"In spite of the atmosphere of rottenness, Molnar's novels are clean and elevating, with never a touch of immorality or even flippancy about them. One may rather discover a suggestion of a moral here and there. Unostentatious and shy, but the moral is there." Joseph Szebenyei

+ Lit R p647 Ap 5 '24 230w

"Emotionally and artistically 'Prisoners' is a notable product that is bound to make a strong appeal to many readers in addition to the large class of initiates for whom the ground has been prepared by Molnar's successes on the stage. It is by all odds more representative of Hungarian literature, more in the line of legitimate succession to the translated novels of Jókai, Mikszáth and Herczeg than some of the Hungarian works tinged with political bias that have of late been masquerading under the guise of pure literature." Alexander Green

+ Lit R p4 Ap 18 '25 800w

"If the end were as good as the beginning. 'Prisoners' would be a remarkable novel." Edwin Muir

Nation and Ath 38:326 N 28 '25 70w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 42:243 Ap 22 '25 60w

"'Prisoners' is simple, and tries to be big, and succeeds in being remarkable. The best thing in a book, which, even if it doesn't altogether 'come off,' is nobly planned and forcefully written, is the subordinate character Sebfi, whose wild semi-insane love for Riza does not succeed in creating the love to reward the love." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:240 D 5 '25 480w

Reviewed by Emil Lengyel

N Y Times p9 Mr 22 '25 1000w

Reviewed by W. A. Drake

N Y Tribune p16 Je 7 '25 1000w

"In one scene at least Molnar, the dramatist, triumphs over Molnar, the novelist. But soon Molnar, the novelist, is back at work again, patiently explaining, pressing down on his characters until their breath is squeezed out and there remain only limp figures in costume."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 380w

Outlook 139:583 Ap 15 '25 140w

MOLNAR, FRANZ—Continued

"With our ears echoing all the ill-considered eulogies evoked by the Hungarian's plays, it would be easy to invest this simple story with an importance it does not possess. For it is really very simple and quite trivial: a small, competent piece of fiction, and little more. It should not be taken too seriously." B. R. Redman

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:611 Mr 21 '25 650w

Spec 135:890 N 14 '25 60w

"A novel tiresome and irritating in the looseness and inconsequence of its early chapters and ultimately saved from ineffectuality only by an opportune dramatic climax and a few closing pages of high poetic quality. If the present volume is representative of the author's best work in fiction, as seems reasonable from the fact that it is the first to undergo translation, one may say with confidence that the novel is not Molnar's medium. More than anything else 'Prisoners' leaves one with the impression that it is a sketch of a drama, wanting working into acts and scenes rather than narrative development." H. G. R.

— Spring'd Republican p7a Mr 29 '25 480w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p856 D 10 '25 280w

MONAHAN, FRANCIS JOHN. Early history of Bengal; with a preface by Sir John Woodroffe. 248p il $5 Oxford [15s Milford]

954.1 Bengal—History 25-18889

"A scholarly treatment of the earliest records of the Maurya Period in India. This begins shortly after Alexander the Great's invasion in 327 B.C. Mr. Monahan intended to bring the history down to the modern period, but died before the completion of his task."—Ind

"By fixing the arbitrary date of the Maurya rule as his starting-point the author precluded himself from discussing the interesting question of the early population of Bengal and the process of the introduction of Aryan influence. Moreover, as the evidence of the Maurya period almost exclusively refers to regions other than Bengal, the value of the account given of that empire under Candragupta and Acoka rests entirely on the assumption that what was valid for Bihar may fairly be deemed to hold true of Bengal. Unfortunately we know too little to feel any confidence in the validity of this assumption, and the value of Mr. Monahan's work must lie in the presentation of Maurya institutions." A. B. Keith

+ — Eng Hist R 40:420 J1 '25 700w

"The present volume is a unit complete as far as it goes, and a valuable contribution to the history of an important but little-known chapter in the varied life of India."

+ Ind 114:331 Mr 21 '25 80w

"There is not a sentence in his book which is slighting or patronizing, or without understanding and sympathy. All this deepens our regret that his book is hardly a beginning of what he set out to do."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p210 Mr 26 '25 1050w

MONAHAN, MICHAEL. Road to Paris. 379p il $4 Brown, N.L.

914.4 France—Description and travel. Italy—Description and travel 25-9233

"The Road to Paris' is an account of a recent trip, the author's first, to Europe. Predominantly a book of travel, it is also a book of reflection and as such a potent agency for a quickening of the sympathies." (N Y Tribune) "In Paris, he spent considerable time in the museums and art galleries, paying homage particularly to his idols, Balzac and Hugo. He fairly bubbles with appreciative comment and his eyes can hardly encompass the beauty that is so lavishly spread. So, too, in Rome and Florence. It is the joyous effervescence of a starved man reveling in a sumptuous repast." (Lit R)

Bookm 61:492 Je '25 220w

"A ruminative traveler is the best companion in the world, and if one can bring to his ruminations new translations of de Maupassant in lieu of a labored description of Mont St. Michel, and fill it with little vases, 'unlicked, incondite things' as does Mr. Monahan, he seems to become a companion straight from Parnassus."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 6 '25 250w

"The book with its chronicle of delightful days has certainly many entertaining pages for its readers. The author has a keenly sensitive soul, responsive to the voice of the past and the call of to-day. He has something interesting to say; and Mr. Monahan has long possessed the art of saying it with grace and vigor." J. F. W.

+ Cath World 121:131 Ap '25 530w

"If you would partake right heartily of a most stimulating banquet for two, step right up and shake Michael Monahan's grizzled hand. He is all right. Long life to him and a round-the-world tour next time." Hugo Sonnenschein

+ Lit R p14 F 28 '25 300w

"A very individual mélange of all sorts of travel notes whimsically combined, and not the least attractive of its features are the light-hearted Thackerayan verses scattered throughout." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p3 F 8 '25 1900w

"Monahan shares with Oliver Goldsmith readiness of sympathy, ever-present hopefulness, sociability and good humor. And if Goldsmith had written of his tramp over Europe when he earned his bread by playing the flute to French peasants, he might well have produced some such book as this." C: J. Finger

+ N Y Tribune p13 My 10 '25 270w

"When you finish reading this book you will feel that you have made a new friend, and a most genial, companionable friend, too. Mr. Monahan writes as a man who loves his work. He stimulates you as a glass of the Burgundy that he praises so highly."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:680 Ap 11 '25 200w

MONROE, ANNE SHANNON. Behind the ranges. 343p $2 Doubleday

25-9192

"Anne Shannon Monroe stages her story in the cattle country of Oregon, and sweeps in the land-and-water troubles of the early days, weaving into her wild Western spectacle an altogether human entanglement of romantic love. . . . Moving through the center of the story, and dominating its action, is the fine old man, Riley McNab, an early comer who, with his fields and flocks, wishes to make this region the greatest meat-and-bread raising country on the globe. Linked with Riley's fortunes are the cow-boy boss, a mysterious late arrival, reticent and scholarly; the sinister yet fascinating schemer, Jim Battles, with his castle in the foothills, maneuvering to gather in all these pleasant fields and homes, from desert rim to mountain slope; and the wild, strange, poetic little girl, Helie, whose father no one knows, but whose courage and quick intuition finally swing the hinge of fate for all that region."—Int Bk R

Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 160w

"The story has in it the aromatic breath of the Far West and the dramatic lure in the lives of her early people. Readers may turn to these pages with happy expectations." Edwin Markham

+ Int Bk R p387 My '25 850w

N Y Tribune p12 My 24 '25 150w

Outlook 140:160 My 27 '25 10w

MONTAGUE, CHARLES EDWARD. Dramatic values. 274p $2 Doubleday

809.2 Drama 25-11963

Mr Montague's book of essays on plays and players was first published in England in 1911 but few copies found their way to America. The papers, which appeared originally in the Manchester Guardian, are made up of theater notices of plays grouped together for similarity of interest or pleasure. Among the dramatists discussed are Shaw, Ibsen, Molière, Masefield, J. M. Synge and Oscar Wilde. Contents: The plays of J. M. Synge; Fiscal measures; Good acting; The well-made play; Some plays of Mr G. B. Shaw; "On the actual spot"; Three acted plays of Molière; Improvements in play-making; Some points of Ibsen; Shakspeare's way with Agincourt; Oscar Wilde's comedies; Playgoing at Stratford-on-Avon; Mr Masefield's tragedies; Good and bad subjects for plays; The art of Mr Poel; The wholesome play.

"A collection of able and well-written play reviews and essays on the theatre."

+ Dial 80:72 Ja '26 80w

"Delightful papers on dramatic values, which are distinguished from the vast bulk of ordinary theatrical matter by their ability, sanity and sincerity. Even those readers who may have been familiar with them in the past will be glad to renew acquaintance with comment so shrewd, pertinent and illuminating." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p4 Je 6 '25 950w

"It is only a little dated and never stale. It is dated largely because it deals with nothing that has been written since; yet in New York today the comments on 'Candida,' 'The Wild Duck,' and 'Caesar and Cleopatra' may be more directly of interest than they were fifteen years ago. But 'Dramatic Values' has a truer interest than one of coincidence; it puts forth some of the freshest, most balanced, and most individual criticism of our time." L. Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p7 My 17 '25 950w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

N Y Tribune p2 J1 12 '25 450w

"These well pondered, carefully wrought, unobtrusively serious essays on sundry playwrights and subjects of the drama are welcome for their own sake as examples of cultivated composition, even if they contribute little either to our knowledge of the drama or to esthetics."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 My 13 '25 270w

MONTGLYON, DE MERCY ARGENTEAU, princesse de. See Mercy-Argenteau, R. F. A. C. E. M.

MONTGOMERY, MRS ROSELLE MERCIER. Ulysses returns, and other poems. 132p $1.50 Brentano's

811 25-4950

"Many readers will respond to these confidences of a woman experienced in Vanity Fair, with a delicate flavor of worldly wisdom in her tone, yet a woman who knows the deeps as well as the shallows of life."—Lit R

"Those who feast subtly upon E. E. Cummings and Wallace Stevens will find 'Ulysses Returns' very nondescript indeed. But, fortunately for poets like Mrs. Montgomery, this group is very small. Her work rises above the class of completely mediocre poets because of her basic sincerity and grace."

+ Bookm 61:492 Je '25 120w

"The workmanship is good; the thought is clear; the mixture of objective and subjective is about right for average taste. But if poetry be faint hearted and drab, what avails lucidity, metrical nicety or anything else?"

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 220w

"If this is a first volume of the author's verse (as I think), it is a begetter of great expectations for others to come. The New York Times, as one of the factors which have helped these poems to see the light, is to be congratulated on its discrimination." E. B. Sherman

+ Int Bk R p592 Ag '25 650w

Reviewed by K. L. Bates

Lit R p4 Ap 18 '25 500w

"Critical sense she either lacks or holds in abeyance, and fastidiousness of taste is even more conspicuously lacking. But Mrs. Montgomery is able to strike a human note when at her best, and for that she can be forgiven much." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 22 '25 350w

"Artistry of form and a certain feeling of rebellion raise many of the poems above mediocrity." G. H. Busey

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ap 19 '25 100w

Reviewed by Babette Deutsch

Sat R of Lit 2:216 O 17 '25 70w

MONTROSS, LYNN. East of Eden. 299p $2 Harper

25-18057

This story of the Illinois corn belt draws a vivid picture of the disheartening conditions that forced the farmers of the section to unite to save themselves. Fred Derring is heart and soul for the organization—Tom Nicholson is against it. The feud between the two men deepens until Derring is goaded into a murderous fury. He is losing heavily, yet to camouflage his losses he plunges into an extravagant display of improvements on the farm. His son deserts him, and he is out of touch with his daughters, particularly Lou, his favorite, of whose love affair he knows nothing. Driven by despair, he sees in the opulent Nicholson the cause of all his troubles. Half crazed he waits for the moment of revenge.

"A very readable novel."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 14 '25 190w

"All in all, the book is carefully written. In places it arouses intense interest. It is somewhat unfortunate, however, that the fight on the Lantz bills—the climax of the book—comes in the middle rather than at the close. Farm folks reading 'East of Eden' will rather resent the implication that they can not think, but will appreciate the pictured difficulties which brought about the failure of the first great national grain cooperative. City readers will probably take Fred Derring as typical of farmers, and thereby will get a wrong impression as to the farmer and his ability." O. E. Bradfute

+ Int Bk R p57 D '25 500w

Reviewed by N. A. Crawford

Int Bk R p101 Ja '26 160w

Nation 121:764 D 30 '25 50w

"While the book contains crudities, and occasional lapses even, from conventionally good English, it is truly creative in its grasp of emotional reality, and it shines with the unassailable virtue of sincerity." E. B. H.

+ New Repub 45:93 D 9 '25 150w

N Y Times p11 N 29 '25 620w

"Actually, the domination of the corn is rarely direct enough to be felt, and sometimes it is all but forgotten. The result is a well-balanced, more truthful work, but power has been sacrificed, and the novel runs on at a single level."

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 18 '25 420w

N Y World p7m N 22 '25 350w

MOON, GRACE PURDIE (MRS CARL MOON). Chi-wee; the adventures of a little Indian girl. 329p il $2 Doubleday

25-26903

"'Way up on a mesa high' lives Chi-wee, with her mother, who makes pottery jars to sell. Chi-Wee has plenty of adventures for a seven-year-old. She is a real character and puts through her undertakings whether she is bargaining for a bright warm shawl for her mother at the trader's store or searching all alone for her baby brother in the desert. The story is so simply and clearly told that children will see what Chi-Wee sees and hear what she hears and feel all the charm of her companionship with Baba, the little white goat, and Loki, the Navajo sheep boy, who leads her forth on a great adventure."—N Y Tribune

MOON, GRACE PURDIE—Continued

Booklist 22:76 N '25

"Charming picture of life in the desert. Grace and Carl Moon have lived in the country of the Pueblo tribes, and pictures and story combine to make it all seem very real and near to children." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:183 O '25 50w

Cleveland p103 N '25

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p814 N '25 90w

Nation 121:603 N 25 '25 40w

"She is a dear little girl, and the author has made her and her home and her surroundings all very true to life, while Daniel Moon's illustrations picture, equally realistically, a quaint, attractive small person."

+ N Y Times p6 D 6 '25 80w

"A very charming and vivid story of life in the desert." A. C. Moore

+ N Y Tribune p6 Ag 30 '25 300w

"It is difficult to give any idea of the freshness and charm of this book. In an early crop of fall juveniles it stands out with a vigor and sunniness all its own. From cover to cover it is American. Chi-Wee's adventures are those of a little Indian girl today, but the heart she brings to them is the heart of happy childhood the world over." R. L. Field

+ Sat R of Lit 2:272 N 7 '25 300w

MOON, LORNA. Doorways in Drumorty. 158p
$1.50 Bobbs

25-24062

These stories in dialect of the village folk of Drumorty originally appeared in the Century magazine. Contents: The corp; Silk both sides; The sinning of Jessie MacLean; Wantin' a hand; The tattle-doodle; The courtin' of Sally Ann.

"She does not always probe as deeply as she might nor use as strong a searchlight as she should, and quite often she goes no deeper than the surface. But her treatment of some of her characters shows that she has the instinct and the faculty, and if she keeps on writing doubtless her ability to make relentless and efficient use of that important instrument in the writing of fiction will grow with practice."

+ — N Y Times p17 D 27 '25 300w

"Her style is as direct and open-faced as the folk ballads of her race and, like them, her narratives achieve an effect at once quaint and powerful."

+ N Y World p6m D 6 '25 70w

MOON, PARKER THOMAS. Syllabus on international relations. 280p $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan
341 International law and relations 25-2996

"The method adopted by Professor Moon and his associates has led to a division of the material of the book into three schedules adaptable to courses covering 85, 50 and 25 hours respectively. The contents are divided into ten parts plus a very serviceable bibliography. These parts are headed as follows: I. Introduction; II. Nationalism, Territorial Conflicts and War; III. Imperialism and World politics; IV. Militarism and Armaments; V. History of International Relations to 1914; VI. History of International Relations Since 1914; VII. Summary Review of Policies of Great Powers; VIII. Economic Problems of International Relations; IX. Problems of Diplomacy; X. International Organization, the League, and the World Court."—Ann Am Acad

"On the whole, the work is a distinct contribution to the science of world politics. The learned colleagues who aided Professor Moon have given the work the character of being the product of several able minds. It deserves a wide use in a country where the myth of isolation is rightly being understood now with emphasis upon the myth rather than the isolation." J. E. Harley

+ Ann Am Acad 120:165 J1 '25 400w

"A Syllabus that is informing and suggestive without being encyclopaedic; well-balanced without being strained; and sensible and scientific without being dogmatic." A. C. Flick

+ Hist Outlook 16:236 My '25 320w

"The reviewer regrets that he has been unable to find a section devoted to what he would call Common vs. Conflicting Interests of States. But the work is well done. It appears to be accurate, it is impartial and comprehensive, and international relations are viewed as a whole." A. S. Hershey

+ — Survey 54:254 My 15 '25 260w

MOORE, ANNIE CARROLL. Three owls; a book² about children's books; their authors, artists and critics. 376p 1l $2.50 Macmillan

028.5 Children's literature 25-27450

Miss Moore edits the children's books department in the weekly literary review of the Herald-Tribune. This book is a compilation of several outstanding features of that department. In it there are reviews of new seasonal and holiday books, and reviews of old favorites, articles on singing, games, poetry and stories, and generous lists of children's books for the interested grownup to choose from.

Booklist 22:141 Ja '26

Reviewed by Marcia Dalphin

Bookm 62:462 D '25 180w

N Y Times p20 Ja 10 '26 420w

MOORE, ANNIE EDGERTON. Primary school; the improvement of its organization and instruction. 340p $2 Houghton

372 Education of children 25-4166

The author studies the primary school, its organization and its methods of construction, points out defects and suggests remedies by calling attention to the successful experimentation in several outstanding schools. In his preface to the book Dr F. M. McMurry writes: "The author of this volume has had extensive experience as a teacher in kindergarten and in primary schools; as a supervisor of those two departments; and as a college professor of modern educational theory as related to those departments. She is, therefore, remarkably well equipped to show the relation between broad theory and classroom procedure."

"A clear, interesting presentation. Valuable appendices."

+ Booklist 21:361 J1 '25

Cleveland p96 S '25

Reviewed by J. D. Wolcott

School Life 10:140 Mr '25 50w

MOORE, GEORGE, ed. Anthology of pure poetry (Eng title Pure poetry, an anthology); with an introd. by George Moore. 182p $2 Boni & Liveright

821.08 Poetry. English poetry—Collections 25-4682

In one of their conversations in Ebury Street George Moore, John Freeman and Walter De la Mare have a discussion on pure poetry. Their discussion brings them to agreement that there is more poetry in things than in ideas, that pure poetry is objective, born of admiration of the things of the external world. In discussing this theory they give their reasons for selecting or rejecting certain poems, and the anthology that follows the long introduction illustrates and sustains their theory of what constitutes pure poetry.

Booklist 21:372 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 850w

Dial 79:78 J1 '25 100w

Reviewed by Babette Deutsch

New Repub 43:23 My 27 '25 350w

"Its chief merit—its great merit—is that it groups together a selection of poems over a series of centuries which probably have hitherto not been grouped together, in a reader's mind, although each and every poem may individually be familiar to him. Moore undoubtedly works his catchword 'pure' too hard. All that he is really doing (perhaps it is all that he set out to do) is to call attention to the fact that art only becomes great art when it attains detachment, when it is disinterested." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p6 Ap 12 '25 2650w

"The book, in spite of its omissions and mistaken thesis, is one of the most stimulating anthologies which one could hope to find." Malcolm Cowley

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Ag 2 '25 1050w

Outlook 140:195 Je 3 '25 40w

St Louis p112 Ap '25

"It is a most interesting piece of work, but the exact opposite of the personal anthology. The distinguished triumvirate take a hard and fast definition of Pure Poetry, 'something that the poet creates outside his own personality,' and apply it like a guillotine to English verse. The result is very restricted, conservative, almost conventional Golden Treasury. Everything which can be called reflective or gnomic, or elegiac is ruthlessly cut out, and so we get only works of the highest inspiration." J. St L. S.

+ Spec 133:391 S 20 '24 200w

Springf'd Republican p14 Jl 3 '25 350w

MOORE, JOSEPH HAMPTON. Roosevelt and the Old guard. 300p il $4 Macrae Smith co.

B or 92 Roosevelt, Theodore 25-20249

As president of the National Republican league, 1902-1906, and member of congress from Pennsylvania the author long enjoyed Roosevelt's friendship. His book brings together many incidents and interviews which light up Roosevelt's political career from his Rough rider days.

Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '25 950w

"Mr. Moore's book deserves the attention of those interested in details of the political history of the country in the early years of the century." G. W. Douglas

+ Lit R p5 Ja 9 '26 280w

"If one is looking for hero-worship he will not find it in Mr. Moore's book; and that is well. Mr. Moore has written a vigorous and lively book."

+ N Y Times p22 D 27 '25 450w

MOORE, MARIANNE. Observations. 120p $2 Dial press

811 25-2487

"In granting their fourth annual award to Miss Marianne Moore the editors of The Dial have for the first time, so to speak, taken an option on the future. Miss Moore had in a decade of unassuming activity published only one small and unpretentious collection of poems. With important additions, 'Observations' is a reprint of the earlier 'Poems.' And in its totality it stands as a record of whatever accomplishment Miss Moore has attained in contemporary letters."—Nation

Booklist 22:23 O '25

"'Observations' shows a sharpened, occasionally brilliant, wit. It is over-preoccupied with tiny things which it does not always succeed in making important, though it is sure of the importance of anything it thinks or feels. To a reviewer frankly unexcited by the genre, the question occurs, Is it so valuable and so poetic as all this to be self-assured, compact and epigrammatic?" Margaret Widdemer

Lit R p4 Ag 8 '25 320w

"In respect to her work Miss Moore hews to an ideology that is aristocratic and severe and pure. Against the commonplace and the easy her subtlety of sarcasm is devastating. Herself a modernist by all the earmarks discernible, she is yet austere conservative, gifted with an instinctive taste and the wit to prove its supremacy." Edwin Seaver

+ Nation 120:297 Mr 18 '25 800w

"'Observations' is the sort of a book it is because Miss Moore's mind is the sort of a mind it is. Her work—a sort of condensed intellectuality that sways between a matter-of-factness that is really about as matter-of-fact as a pearl and a symbolism that peers over these observations almost constantly—is compact with the lucidity of unusual mental attacks." H. S. Gorman

N Y Times p5 F 1 '25 1800w

Reviewed by Wilbert Snow

N Y Tribune p3 My 17 '25 1000w

"Any Ph. D. thesis will provide an irritating parallel. Neither unique nor scholarly this dossier of rococo clippings from newspapers and magazines and the archives of an incoherent journalism. But what is of profound importance is the chemistry and the mystery by which a poet (Miss Moore is certainly that!), possessed of 'a novel intelligence' and 'a strange sensibility,' has reduced her fragmentary chaos to stern patterns, exquisite preciseness, all of a clarity untroubled, all in varying measure severely beautiful." Joseph Auslander

+ — N Y World p8e Ja 18 '25 750w

MOORE, N. HUDSON (WOODBIDGE) (MRS SAMUEL P. MOORE). Old glass, European and American. 394p il $10 Stokes

738.2 Glassware

24-28131

Beginning with the early Roman glassmakers Mrs Moore relates the progress of glassmaking as a fine art as it developed in the various countries of Europe, reserving nearly half the book for a history of American glass. Composition, color, process of making and decoration of the different kinds of glass are described, and illustrated with numerous examples gathered from museums and private collections. There are 223 illustrations.

Booklist 21:263 Ap '25

Bookm 61:233 Ap '25 260w

"Designed primarily for the collector, especially of American glass, but of general interest and valuable for reference in the history of crafts or household furnishings."

J Home Econ 17:227 Ap '25 100w

"To those interested chiefly in Americana the book will undoubtedly be of great service. The illustrations are clear, plentiful, and well selected."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:92 Ag 29 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:54 F '25

MOORE, THOMAS. Diary; a selection ed., with an introd. by J. B. Priestley. 218p $2.50 Macmillan [6s Cambridge univ. press]

B or 9?

[25-14499]

"The selections cover a period from 1818 to 1844 and there walk through the entertaining pages the figures of Scott, Wordsworth, Washington Irving, James Fenimore Cooper, Hobhouse, Macaulay, Charles Murray, Barry Cornwall, Sydney Smith, Henry Luttrell, and many others. Parties at Lady Holland's, the period's most successful hostess, where the wit and the wisdom of the age gather about groaning tables; receptions to Tom Moore, best seller poet of his day, the troubadour, the singer of warm Irish songs. The brilliant theatre, audience rising to give old Tom his due; the promenade where gentlemen and ladies of fashion curtsy and bend in acknowledgment of passing genius."—Lit R

"Entries are as generously anecdotal as can be found in any of the diarists. Of course this is in part due to the careful editing by Mr. Priestley, who has frankly set out to present the cream of the journal. But he has done so with extraordinary effect. He has given us what is indeed a novel (contrast, conflict, dénouement, all there) vigorous, absorbing and true." Merton Winship

MOORE, THOMAS—Continued

+ Lit R p2 S 26 '25 260w

"Mr. Priestley's edition of Moore's diary and his excellent preface to it, will do much to remind those who are inclined to regard Moore as merely a happy sycophant, of his true character."

+ New Statesman 25:312 Je 27 '25 1200w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

N Y Times p11 Ag 2 '25 2400w (Same as Spec)

"The warmest congratulations are due to Mr. Priestley."

+ Sat R 139:675 Je 20 '25 100w

"In Mr. Priestley's selection there is not a dull sentence and every page has its share of the all-pervading humour and gaiety which Moore took with him wherever he went. It is a pity nevertheless that the Cambridge University Press did not publish the entire book while Mr. Priestley was busy; and many, like ourselves, will regret the insufficiency of the index as well as the niggardliness of the editor's notes, for which, because of the service he has done us and also for his excellent introductory essay, he may be forgiven." E: Davison

+ Sat R 140:73 Jl 18 '25 1250w

"This is a satisfactory book. The selections are excellent and representative—a true distillation—while Mr. Priestley's introduction is a sound and attractive piece of criticism" J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 135:161 Jl 25 '25 1900w

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 28 '25 800w

"Moore describes so well, and Mr. Priestley selects so well, that on every page there is something one would like to quote. He makes his people live."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p445 Jl 2 '25 1350w

MORAND, PAUL. Closed all night; [tr. by G. P. C., C. B. P., and H. M., from the French Fermé la nuit]. 203p $2 Seltzer [75 6d G. Chapman]

25-21911

A companion volume to Open all night, similarly brilliant in style and erotic in content. The four stories are: The night at Portofino-Kulm; The night in Charlottenburg; The night in Babylon; The night at Putney.

Boston Transcript p7 N 18 '25 1100w

"Gaudy adjectives hop through paragraphs in the volume like insects, and Monsieur Morand, disclosed himself as a kind of noisy ringmaster suffering under Don Juan delusions and a Casanova complex, makes them go through even queerer antics than he did in that earlier performance, 'Open All Night.' His scenes, however, are as unconvincing as they are animated. Altho they contain rather clever touches in places, they are, as a whole, quite as unsound descriptions of the hectic period they are sketched from as were those days in actuality." Sidney Schultz

+ Int Bk R p54 D '25 350w

"He is an amazing technician; epigrams fly from his work like the sparks from an emery-wheel. He is sure and he is brilliant. One would search far for a finer short piece than his portrait of an Irish poet with its shifting backgrounds and its finely penetrative quality. His economy of method, his deft use of a highly-developed impressionism, his cosmopolitanism . . . these qualities have been stressed before. It may suffice to say that 'Closed All Night' is a thoroughly sophisticated book, not written for the young, but as art wholly admirable." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 O 17 '25 280w

"These more than Arabian Nights of M. Morand's—admirably translated—give the essence of some modern phases of Europe with the vivid cleverness and wicked wit which constitute this writer's particular genius. There is a smiling malice in his uncanny perception, a dispassionate frankness about the closed door, which is in the last degree amusing, and thus escapes vileness handsomely and leaves one laughing and unhurt. Paul Morand is a wit of quality and a great artist who would not have amused Queen Victoria."

+ Living Age 325:218 Ap 25 '25 220w (Reprinted from English R)

"The sketch of certain decadent aspects of post-war Germany searches with light both the French and Teutonic mind. M. Morand, in his desperate modernism, is always stimulating; his world is eternally lit by the arc-lamps of electricity."

Nation and Ath 36:724 F 21 '25 250w

"The stories in Fermé la Nuit, while not so well turned or human as those in Ouvert la Nuit, exhibit the full extent of his talent for the unusual, whether in people, incident or language. He cannot live without the unusual—upon normal ground he never recovers his sea legs, and seems a rather tired journalist, a little sentimental and strangely lacking in imagination. But in this volume his hard, restless, unpleasant but enviable talent is at its best."

+ New Repub 44:312 N 11 '25 220w

"In 'Closed All Night' there are hints of a mind capable of deeper purposes than it has yet expressed, suggestions of an equipment which might be used to fine purpose beyond the bounds of mere amusement and gaiety." E: Davison

+ Sat R of Lit 2:491 Ja 16 '26 620w

MORAND, PAUL. Lewis and Irene; tr. by H. B. V. 218p $2 Boni & Liveright [75 Chatto & W.]

25-17061

"Lewis is a composite portrait of the speculative promoter, nominally a Frenchman, but adventuring in the field of international finance. In taking up an option on a Sicilian sulphur mining property he found himself out-matched by a Greek firm represented by Irene Apostolatos, a young and classically beautiful Greek widow. Irene was a practical business woman, not a gambler like Lewis. Drawn together by their unlikeness, Irene and Lewis fell in love, married, endeavored to give up their work in hope of attaining domestic happiness. Boredom ensued. Irene secretly returned to the bank. Lewis was unfaithful. Becoming aware of his behavior immediately, Irene left him without parley."—Bookm

"The titular figures of Paul Morand's 'Lewis and Irene' are symbols rather than types. They resemble the angularized conventions of modern painting, which returns to the archaic in search of novelty. Lewis and Irene occupy the whole picture with hardly any background or perspective; yet they are distinctively of the present—contemporary myths, with a basis of fact like all myths." Isabel Paterson

Bookm 62:83 S '25 450w

"In the English version I find innumerable examples of the kind of mistakes which, in my opinion, are a proof both of carelessness and ignorance of French idiom." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 115:274 S 5 '25 1100w

"The admirable manner of M. Morand's telling of the story deserves high praise. He has exercised a delicate, finely edged irony in revealing the conflict between attraction and antagonism in the relations of Lewis and Irene. The complex psychology of both characters is almost entirely brought out by their interaction. 'Lewis and Irene' introduces a new type into European fiction, the adroit and successful business woman; it offers a witty and sophisticated commentary upon post-war European economic activities; it tells amusingly a convincing and absorbing story." Lloyd Morris

+ Int Bk R p711 O '25 900w

"The detail is in places comic, and Irene's character is strongly drawn; but Lewis does not 'come off.' Still, M. Morand has significance; and, if not read in the original, should perhaps be read in translation. If you add him to your list, it will at any rate be a various one." F. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:169 My 23 '25 100w

MORE, LOUIS TRENCHARD. Dogma of evolution. (Louis Clark Vanuxem foundation lectures, 1925) 386p il $3.50 Princeton univ. press [16s Milford]

213 Evolution 25-2987

The author, who is professor of physical science at the University of Cincinnati, accepts the general doctrine of evolution as a deductive theory but rejects its implications in the broader fields of religion and social life. "Mr. More here presents a critique of theories of evolution in general and of the Darwinian view in particular. He writes from the point of view of a scientific man, deeply concerned at once with the proper weighing of evidence and with the Christian view of man's origin and destiny. He is able to show that many leading biologists, though convinced of the truth of evolution, are not equally satisfied with Darwin's view of the mechanism; but it is with the sociological aspects which are derived from the theory of evolution by 'doctrinaire sociologists and pseudo-biologists' that Mr. More is most concerned." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

"Whatever may be the reader's views on the question of evolution, he is almost certain to change them by the time he finishes this book. Most volumes on the subject are either highly partial exponents of evolution in one phase or another; or, if they are contrary minded, attack the theories from a religious or pedantic or narrow minded attitude. Professor More is a scientist and experienced author, and in no case can he be described by any of the preceding adjectives. Yet his findings are on the whole not favorable to evolution, as it is commonly understood—or misunderstood." L. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 27 '25 720w

"A very interesting and suggestive book." J. J. W.

+ Cath World 121:709 Ag '25 550w

Lit R p11 Mr 14 '25

"Professor More's elucidation in the historical chapters is to be highly recommended; besides being thorough in analysis and accurate in statement, it is set forth with a simplicity of language which is rare among writers on philosophical subjects. . . . That Professor More is, as a scientist, compelled to acknowledge the truth of the theory of evolution, but is unwilling to accept its consequences, is apparent; the fallacious nature of his argument should also be apparent. There is nothing more dangerous than the argument from analogy, as every scientist knows; yet the Princeton lecturer, with eyes wide open, rushes in where mere logicians fear to tread." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p12 F 22 '25 2500w

"His book calls for more careful consideration than one might assume, because Mr. More comes with a great show of classical learning, a respectable scientific standing as a physicist and a fair command of language, while his volume is in every detail a beautiful and dignified example of the printer's art. It behooves us, then, to realize that it is in reality a hollow show, a whitened sepulcher if ever there was one, inspired by a pathological emotionalism and crowded from cover to cover with fallacies, errors and superficialities." H. M. Parshley

+ N Y Tribune p1 Mr 15 '25 1650w

St Louis p333 S '25

"The initial excellence of this 'uniformly excellent volume is its accurate and suggestive title. Not a little of the delight of the book springs from the reader's joy at the scintillating play of Professor More's rapier." W. L. Sperry

+ Sat R of Lit 1:757 My 16 '25 680w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p256 Ap

9 '25 150w

MORGAN, CHARLES. My name is legion. 346p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Heinemann]

25-7827

"Irma Pennell possesses strange spiritual and clairvoyant powers. She moves, a feminine messiah, among the fleshly and godless group of her brother's friends. Murder and madness follow her disturbing sanctity until finally she frees herself from the obsessions of her inner life and achieves happiness in the emotions of a normal woman."—Nation

Boston Transcript p4 Je 13 '25 50w

Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 40w

"A story that stretches eager fingers toward the thin veils of mysticism, but grasps too often the crude vestments of a thriller instead."

+ Nation 121:194 Ag 12 '25 80w

"The story is ragged, bizarre to the point of tawdriness occasionally, but the theme of a holy war waged unsuccessfully at first, with hatred of evil as a weapon, and then triumphantly under the conquering sign of love, is an interesting one for this tag-end of materialistic age." D. B. Woolsey

+ New Repub 42:349 My 20 '25 120w

"Preposterous is hardly the word for much of the dialogue and action of this extraordinary novel. Yet the spiritual problem here analyzed and resolved is a serious one, advanced with all reverence and treated with considerable skill. The characters are vigorously whole and alive, and the entire book fairly tingles with a vibrant spirituality which induces an atmosphere in which all these strange things seem not only possible but actual and immediate."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 5 '25 1200w

"It is difficult to be convinced by Irma, hard to accept her endowment as real, her influence as important. Her reconciliation is not finely handled, and one is forced to believe that her mystery is the product of only partial conception." Margaret Evans

+ N Y Tribune p12 Mr 22 '25 730w

"A significant and beautiful appeal to forthright and normal thinking and being. He has written an intelligent and provocative book." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y World p3m Jl 19 '25 420w

"Baldly set forth, it sounds both preposterous and unattractive. It says much, therefore, for Mr. Morgan's sincerity and artistry and good taste that he is able to avoid all the pitfalls, of mawkishness and cheap magic, that beset the path of anyone courageous enough to write a story about mysticism. The author exhibits a quick sense of drama and of human psychology; but the by-plot is false and theatrical to the last degree." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:493 My 9 '25 550w

"As a stylist Mr. Morgan can be said to have arrived. Like Thomas Beer, for instance, he seeks the strong and imaginative word; but in contrast to Beer's telescoping, Mr. Morgan—inferior only in his lack of compression—drops words like flashing stones that fall beneath a tide of tremendous rhythms. His method creates atmospheres that pervade the book. A little later these words may presumably accomplish more substantial and memorable things, which 'My Name is Legion' foreshadows, but does not do." L. Kronenberger

+ Sat R of Lit 1:687 Ap 18 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p314 My 7 '25 360w

MORGAN, EMANUAL, pseud. See Bynner, W.

MORGAN, JACQUES JEAN MARIE DE. Prehistoric man; a general outline of prehistory; [tr. from the French by J. H. Paxton and V. C. C. Collum; with an introd. by Henri Berr.] (History of civilization) 304p il $5 Knopf [12s 6d K. Paul]

571 Archeology. Man, Prehistoric 25-2564

"With long experience of his own in the archaeological field, Professor de Morgan presents, both critically and synthetically, the evidence

MORGAN, J. J. M. DE.—Continued
now available, which results in a clear view over the earliest doings of the genus homo as revealed, not by written records of him, but by the relics he has himself left. . . . Despite the incompleteness of the evidence and the unscientific hypotheses often founded upon it, this cautious expert is able, not only to outline the industries of the various periods, but also to describe the dwelling-places of prehistoric man, his fashions in dress and ornament, his arts, his religious beliefs and magical practices, his early attempts at writing, and even his interrelations with other prehistoric men in various parts of the planet."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 22:16 O '25

Boston Transcript p1 Mr 14 '25 920w

"As reporting, the book is helpful; as interpretation, it is surprisingly vacant." Clement Wood

+ — Lit R p4 My 29 '25 550w

Reviewed by M. J. Herskovits

Nation 120:672 Je 10 '25 180w

Reviewed by B. Malinowski

Nature 116:38 Jl 11 '25 450w

"The book forms an admirable introduction to pre-history."

+ New Statesman 24:756 Ap 4 '25 300w

"He weaves together with fascinating deftness the facts which have been made available. The volume is especially notable for its many illustrations of the implements of prehistoric man as found in caves and tombs." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p12 D 27 '25 250w

"The book is excellent reading after a diet of fantastic volumes which profess to derive the simplest ideas and tools in the possession of mankind from world-wide Egyptian migration and trade." Ruth Benedict

+ N Y Tribune p16 Mr 22 '25 750w

St Louis p341 S '25

"M. de Morgan ignores all recent work, even in French, and nearly all foreign work of whatever date. Not the least defect of the work is a total lack of proportion and a dread of chronological data. The Iron Age is dismissed in six and a half pages of print without a single date; and this in a work of three hundred pages."

— Sat R 139:164 F 14 '25 550w

"If the volume has shortcomings, lack of familiarity with some of the other methods of approach might well be assigned as a contributing cause. . . . Failure to make use of a great mass of recent literature on the subject becomes apparent when one examines the author's text."

— Sat R of Lit 2:110 S 5 '25 850w

MORGAN, JOHN HARTMAN. John, Viscount Morley: an appreciation and some reminiscences. 215p $3 Houghton [10s 6d Murray]

B or 92 Morley of Blackburn, John Morley.
1st viscount A25-407

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924

"General Morgan is an ardent admirer of Morley, but one who guards himself from becoming an idolatrous worshipper. His appreciation is filled with intimate details which possess all the more value because Morley's friends can be depended upon to respect his injunction that no one should write his biography."

+ Am Hist R 30:822 Jl '25 850w

"The book portrays a versatile man and does it in attractive style."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:427 My '25 50w

"A brief but able appreciation of Lord Morley as man, politician and man of letters."

+ Booklist 21:300 My '25

"An excellent memoir of a distinguished man for whom we have no prototype in America."

+ Bookm 61:493 Je '25 220w

"General Morgan has written a wise, a noble, a beautiful book."

+ Ind 114:162 F 7 '25 300w

"General Morgan writes as an intimate friend and a warm admirer of Lord Morley, but by no means as an indiscriminating one. If some of the chapters published during Morley's lifetime received the latter's approval, it was not because they were lacking in judicious criticism but because they embodied an intelligent appreciation of his life's work. General Morgan has views of his own on most subjects and knows how to set them down in forcible English. We are made to regret that the provisions of Morley's will make a formal biography impossible, for General Morgan is equipped to produce one of marked excellence and interest." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Nation 120:471 Ap 22 '25 720w

"There is an obvious, and not seldom comic, effort to make the talk, especially when it rings the changes on impressive European names, sound like a continuation of the famous dialogues between M. and Mr. G. in the last volume of the Life of Gladstone. Lord Morley's wit, we are assured, would flash out like a bright blade. That happens to be true, but no one could guess it from the specimens given here."

— New Statesman 24:482 Ja 31 '25 550w

"It is the decisive merit of General Morgan's book that, without eulogy or special pleading of any kind, he convinces his readers of his thesis. Telling the truth and nothing but the truth, allowing the facts to stand foremost and restricting comment to its proper role, he expresses the quality and, so to speak, the substance of a personality." C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 221:573 Mr '25 750w

Outlook 135:586 Ap 15 '25 350w

MORLAND, DAVID F., and MCKEE, RAYMOND W. Accounting for the petroleum industry. 304p $4 McGraw

657 Accounting. Petroleum industry and trade 25-9779

"Practical treatment of accounting principles and procedures pertaining to the production, transportation and storage, refining, and marketing of petroleum. Includes also a study of federal taxes as related to the oil industry." —Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:424 Jl '25

MORLEY, CHRISTOPHER DARLINGTON. Thunder on the left. 273p $2 Doubleday

It is Martin's tenth birthday. The party is almost over when the children begin to discuss their elders. Are they really happy? Do they really have a good time? The children agree to play a game of spying on their parents to see. The discussion is interrupted by the arrival of the grownups themselves. At their urging, Martin blows out the candles on the cake and makes a wish. . . . The story is projected twenty-one years into the future, when the children of the long ago party meet again in the same old house for a picnic. Martin is there, but none of the others recognize him except Joyce. His wish has come true; he is the child, watching the grownups. The action of this story of emotional cross currents, with its uncanny insight and great beauty of phrase, takes place within the twenty-four hours before the picnic. George is Martin's self, in love with Joyce, yet truly loving Phyllis, his wife. Phyllis is unaccountably drawn to Martin, and Martin is frankly bewildered. As the tension reaches its climax the scene reverts sharply to the children's party. The candles are still smoking on the cake. It is difficult to know just what the story means, but it is impossible not to be moved by it.

Booklist 22:163 Ja '26

"Christopher Morley's latest novel is the best that he has done. In certain respects the book may be called as distinguished a contribution to American literature as has been made for a considerable period. Hard and crusty conservatives will not like it; the sordid realists of the present day will sneer at it as a triviality." K: Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 14 '25 1400w

"Excellent imaginative work produced by a man whose writing has already been appreciated by the American public, who are now eager to buy and read his new book. He toys with dreams; but they are dreams tender, idealistic and humorous." D. F. Gilman

+ Boston Transcript p1 N 18 '25 180w

"The delicate beauty of Mr. Morley's style and his joyous epigrammatic humor sometimes reveal and sometimes conceal the depth of his intuitive wisdom. The book will be enjoyed by many readers who will not concern themselves with the ominous mutterings of the thunder on the left."

+ Cleveland p124 D '25

Reviewed by Elizabeth Kingsley
Int Bk R p126 Ja '26 1200w

"Thunder on the Left," contains almost every quality that is known to secure the most comfortable kind of literary popularity. Grace, charm, sympathetic affection, and something sentimental that is just too searching to be set down as mere sentimentality—these are important items in Mr. Morley's formula. Yet the best things in 'Thunder on the Left' are the work of the essayist rather than the novelist in him." E: Davison

+ Lit R p4 D 26 '25 950w

"Mr. Morley's intention in this pleasant, ruminative novel is not entirely clear. Combining realism and fancy, he leaves us a little lost between the two. At the end one feels that a layer of essay has been laid on ground seeded with novel. The novel sprouts up through the essay, to be sure, but only in patches." M. H.

New Repub 45:197 Ja 6 '26 230w

"Christopher Morley has written a strange and beautiful book—indeed, for sheer beauty and poignancy it ranks with anything published on this side of the Atlantic in the memory of our generation."

+ N Y Times p10 N 29 '25 900w

"Mr. Morley has written a novel which illustrates an idea and yields a powerful emotion. And he has written it with an art that is never uncertain, never relaxed, never inadequate to his purpose. 'Thunder on the Left' is one of very few American novels that have been written beautifully." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 600w

"The chief person in the book, George Granville, is so immensely and vividly present as to appear a self-portrait—or, even more truly, a portrait of the reader's self, the funny tragic essence of our humanity, fumbling from brave immaturity toward the cruelties of spiritual adulthood. He alone would make this a fine book. And he is not alone." Babette Deutsch

+ N Y Tribune p5 D 20 '25 820w

"Mr. Morley has deserted his chair on the boulevard for a novel which has actual contacts with the absurdities and the divinity and the meanness of the throngs about it. And the result is a masterpiece of compassion and understanding." Alison Smith

+ N Y World p6m Ja 3 '26 400w

"Mr. Morley's novel has all the traits that have given him his well deserved reputation as an essayist. The gay, if occasionally sentimental humor, the neat epigraphic turn of phrase, and a style which, if not always brilliant, is never dull or un elegant, all these virtues appear in full measure in 'Thunder on the Left.' In addition there is in the work the thrill which goes with any exploration of the unknown imagination when the explorer is a man of good faith and good humor." Leonard Bacon

+ Sat R of Lit 2:363 D 5 '25 720w

"No one in the world but Christopher Morley could have done it, and yet in a way, it is totally different from any of his other books. At times one feels that one is reading just a modern novel written merely by a very clever human being, and then one turns the page and—what! behold the elfin earmark of Mr Morley and none other! It is a queer book, as queer and whimsical as 'Where the Blue Begins,' and as irresistible."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a N '29 '25 550w

MORLEY, CHRISTOPHER DARLINGTON, tr.
Two fables. 95p $1.50 Doubleday

25-16654

These two fables are translations, one from the French, The story of a white blackbird, by Alfred de Musset; the other from the German, The young foreigner, by Wilhelm Hauff. The first is a literary satire, delicately humorous in subject and style. The second is a rollicking satire of manners presenting the Englishman from a German point of view.

"This study of manners, 'The Young Foreigner' under the most amusing cloak of humor, is a very fine piece of work. The introduction to the two fables thus curiously combined explains their raison d'être; the underlying idea of having united them is essentially a part of Mr. Morley's whimsical fancy. They complete each other astonishingly."

+ Bookm 62:222 O '25 160w

"Wittily satirizing the foibles, especially the literary foibles of de Musset's day, (nor are they unknown to ours!) Mr. Morley's strongest impression, he tells us, as he finished its reading was, 'how happy de Musset must have been when he had finished it. He must have had one of those perfect moments that men of his type live for: he had done it and knew that it was good.' Which exactly reflects the reader's thought regarding the translator of these two quaintly contrasting stories." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 8 '25 960w

"As for the translations, one feels that the German lent itself more readily to English, though Mr. Morley succeeds in preserving as much of the wit of the French original as the genius of his own tongue in all probability will permit. The nimbleness and flash of the French word are well-nigh impossible of reproduction in English. Cameron Wright has done two excellent woodcuts to illustrate the volume and then counteracted his good work and practically ruined the appearance of the pages by jumbling tendrils and grapes and blackbirds and beer steins and clay pipes around the borders." J: R. Ellington

+ N Y Times p5 Ag 2 '25 1300w

"In both these fables sentiment has been caught on the right side of beauty. Which is more than can be said for Mr. Morley's introduction."

+ N Y Tribune p15 O 11 '25 250w

MORLEY, FELIX. Unemployment relief in Great Britain; a study in state socialism. (Hart, Schaffner and Marx prize essays in economics) 203p $2 Houghton [6s Routledge]
331.25 Unemployment. Insurance, Unemployment. Labor, and laboring classes—Great Britain 24-25109

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Mr. Morley has written an unusually interesting book on what is commonly considered a dry and technical subject." W: M. Leiserson
+ Am Econ R 15:365 Je '25 580w

"The outstanding weakness of the book is what seems to be an attempt to interpret the facts so as to make out a case against state insurance. The facts invite criticism at many points, but they do not prove the case." B. M. Squires

+ Am J Soc 31:112 Jl '25 460w

"Mr. Morley's book should be read by all who are interested in this important subject, not because it is conclusive, for it is not, but because it stands over against most of the discussions that have appeared in book form, and because it raises questions calling for further research." H. A. Millis

MORLEY, FELIX—Continued

+ — Ann Am Acad 119:150 My '25 700w

Harvard Business R 3:383 Ap '25 120w

N Y World p6m My 3 '25 100w

"The reviewer believes that objection may be raised to several assertions in this book. Its chief use, therefore, is for specialists in the subject who have independent knowledge of some of the topics treated and who are able to use Mr. Morley's study as an expression of a point of view." H. Feldman

+ — Pol Sci Q 40:483 S '25 1100w

"This is a painstaking and valuable account of the origin and development of compulsory insurance in the country where it has its most extended trial. The mistake that the author makes is in thinking that the evidence of lack of foresight in the drafting of the British law is equally evidence of a fundamental weakness in the very idea of state-operated unemployment insurance. This is an error which leads to certain inconsistencies and irrelevancies."

J: A. Fitch

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:896 J1 11 '25 750w

"It is a most painstaking piece of work. The author has read widely and carefully. But a compendium of authorities is not enough. An intimate and close study of the actual operations of the scheme is needful, rather than a résumé of various authors."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p688 O 30 '24 220w

MORLEY, FRANK VIGOR. Dora Wordsworth, her book. 175p il $2 Houghton [7s 6d Selwyn & B.]

B or 92 Wordsworth, William. Quillinan, Dorothy (Wordsworth) (Mrs Edward Quillinan) [25-5206]

The poet Wordsworth's daughter, Dora, grew up in the sentimental days of "Keepsakes" and albums. The subject of this book is the album which she kept for twenty years and to which her father's literary friends—Southey, Coleridge, Sir Walter Scott, Lamb, Landor, Leigh Hunt and others, made contributions. The memories called up by their neat verses and signatures form a picture of the Wordsworth family and literary circle. Tennyson's and Matthew Arnold's were among the last signatures in her book.

"It is a most delightful book written simply and sincerely, revealing the human side of illustrious persons."

+ Bookm 62:92 S '25 180w

Boston Transcript p5 My 27 '25 650w

Nation 121:100 J1 15 '25 10w

Nation and Ath 36:688 F 14 '25 470w

"Surprisingly attractive little book. Mr. Morley has imparted (or retained) a fragrance as of lavender in this unique and rather pathetic family treasure. Into its tender fabric he has woven unostentatiously and with great skill a picture of life at Rydal Mount and elsewhere, intimate and illuminating. The more interesting of the entries are reproduced in facsimile; and the result is a charming little book, which will give pleasure wherever it is read."

+ New Statesman 24:395 Ja 10 '25 850w

"Such a book as this, is, of course, of no great moment to the world at large. It enters the category of Wordsworthiana rather than stands on its own feet as a work of literary import. Nevertheless, the author has achieved an admirable piece of social reconstruction."

J: Carter

N Y Times p13 My 31 '25 1900w

"No better occasion could be imagined for a book of literary chat, and Mr. Morley is equal to the opportunity. Certainly no one before him ever wrote pleasantly of Wordsworth's old age." G: F. Whicher

+ N Y Tribune p3 Je 7 '25 700w

"Wordsworth, with his life of apparent calm, but really of constant excitability kept in check, is a notable character, and the new book, which introduces his friends by means of his daughter's album, affords an alluring introduction to his circle with some good criticism on the makings of the poet himself." Vernon Rendall

+ Sat R 138:649 D 27 '24 1000w

"The verses as a whole do not show the authors at their best, but they are remarkably adequate, and Dora Wordsworth may well have prided herself on having gathered so many celebrated names between the covers of one book."

Arnold Whitridge

Sat R of Lit 2:28 Ag 8 '25 460w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p841 D 11 '24 700w

MORROW, HONORE (MCCUE) WILLISIE (MRS WILLIAM MORROW). Lost speech of Abraham Lincoln. 57p $1 Stokes

25-7831

Another Lincoln story built up about the incident of the lost speech. This, "the greatest speech of his life," was made in Bloomington, Illinois, five years before he became president. So enthralled were his hearers that reporters laid down their pencils, unable to take notes. All attempts to recapture it were vain. Lincoln himself could not recall it. The speech lived only as a memory in the hearts of the few who had been privileged to hear it.

"There is beauty and tenderness and the magic of true creative imagination in all the scenes of this little story." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 1 '25 1000w

"Excellent light reading for outdoors on a summer's day." R. W. Thompson

+ Lit R p5 J1 11 '25 250w

"This effective little story of an actual and significant event in Lincoln's life is well written. It is expressed in simple human terms, and is commendable for a style devoid of rhetorical ornament and irrelevant detail."

+ N Y Times p9 My 3 '25 350w

Outlook 140:160 My 27 '25 10w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

MORROW, HONORE (MCCUE) WILLISIE (MRS WILLIAM MORROW). We must march; a novel of the winning of Oregon. 427p $2 Stokes

25-20630

This historical novel pictures the courageous forward press of a small band of missionary-pioneers, the first to cross with a wagon the seemingly impassable barrier of the Rockies, and undeterred by hardships, hostile Indians or the long arm of the Hudson Bay company that sought to bar the way, to carry into Oregon Christianity and civilization, with their symbols the cross and the plow. In that little group of pioneers the figure of Narcissa Whitman stands out. By the force and beauty of her character she dominates such different men as Marcus, her impetuous husband, Sir George Simpson, the lordly governor of Rupert's Land, and Umtippe, the cruel and crafty old Indian. This story of lofty courage and gallant effort, of triumph in despair and of waiting love rewarded, is her story.

Booklist 22:163 Ja '26

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p2 D 5 '25 1100w

"A story told with simplicity and power."

+ Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 40w

"The novel is a very long one, and packed with so much material that it seems at times somewhat unwieldy. It has many scenes which should, one feels, be both dramatic and thrilling, yet which somehow fail of their effect. But it shows an immense amount of study and conscientious hard work." L. M. Field

+ — Int Bk R p130 Ja '26 800w

"In less capable and talented hands the saga could not have been shown to us in all its strength and beauty. Narcissa Whitman—the Governor—Doctor Whitman—the lesser figures of the drama—are all rightly proportioned and intensely alive." Margaret Widdemer

+ Lit R p3 N 21 '25 580w

"Mrs. Morrow has striven for accuracy throughout. Not the least interesting part of 'We must March' lies in its depiction of the methods, manners and modes of thinking of the period. The author well knows the artistic value of contrasts."

N Y Times p8 O 25 '25 720w

"The 'talking' seems to me inaccurate. That is a small criticism, but it is, I fear, suggestive of much in the book. Also the central plot is weak, though it may be history. These things reconciled me to the book—a very wonderful description of going to the Oregon, a still more marvelous and thrilling tale of the journey from Walla Walla to Fort Hall, Fort Uintah, Santa Fe and up to Bent's Fort and on to Kansas City and St. Louis. Mrs. Morrow's descriptions ring true and lift the book out of the hopeless commonplace. In that respect she has the gift of the born story-teller." Gilbert Parker

+ N Y Tribune p4 O 18 '25 950w

"The romantic part of the book is not as good as the historical side. One doubts the reality of the marvelous wife of Whitman, the mingled tearful sentimentalism and savagery of the Indians, the alternating devotion and mean spirit of the missionaries both Protestant and Catholic." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 141:485 N 25 '25 130w

"Her narrative is most vivid throughout and yet told with simplicity and restraint."

+ R of Rs 72:558 N '25 80w

"When I say the portrayal is magnificent and holds pure story interest to the last page, I can say no more. I have only two criticisms to offer and they are not censure. First, I think Narcissus Whitman's final martyrdom ought to have been included. Second, from reading of the Oblate Annals and Jesuit Reports on the Mountain Missions, I do not believe any Catholic ever instigated, abetted, or even suggested the destruction of the Protestant missions." A. C. Laut

+ Sat R of Lit 2:255 O 31 '25 1100w

MORTON, H. V. Heart of London. 208p $1.50
Brentano's [3s 6d Methuen]

914.21 London

"The author of this collection of little journalistic pastels is one of the young recruits of the pen in London. There are fifty or more brief, vivid articles in the collection, selected from a series appearing in The Daily Express under the same heading as the title of the book. Darting hither and thither about London, Mr. Morton picks up a scene here, a bit of history there, a significant relic of the past in another place, a characteristic personality somewhere else, and then about each one he writes three or four pages that are luminous with color and atmosphere, vital with action and meaning, warm and throbbing with the heart's blood of the great city."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p6 O 31 '25 800w

"Mr. Morton has the journalistic eye for 'romance,' the journalistic ear for 'the human note.' But it is the one considerable virtue of his book that it is written with a genuine, and not a feigned, gusto. Mr. Morton has not grown up."

+ Nation and Ath 37:549 Ag 1 '25 150w

"The Heart of London has all the qualities and all the faults that one has come to associate with that class of writing. One cannot help admiring the zest with which he pursues his search for the more human and dramatic aspects of London life. He succeeds in reproducing vividly the atmosphere of the London streets, but too often he sacrifices sincerity to sensationalism, and the necessity under which his medium places him, of creating at least one effect per sketch, is responsible for an indiscriminate and rather mechanical sentimentality in his work."

+ New Statesman 25:582 S 5 '25 180w

"Mr. Morton is not a precise master of prose, but he commands a good sound journalese that is written to be read by a great many people, and he knows how to put his essays together in such a way that the reader must go on to the end. It is true that he sentimentalizes, as when he writes about the Cenotaph or the Strand, but it is that universal sentimentality that is never banal." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p11 J1 26 '25 2150w

"American readers who know and love London will enjoy the book all the more for the added glamour it will have when read on this side of the ocean, and those who hope to see London next year will like it as an appetizer."

+ N Y Times p20 O 11 '25 450w

"The scenes he catches in such characteristic style are the familiar ones but they have been freshly observed and their meaning illuminated with wit and a true London lover's tenderness."

+ N Y Tribune p13 S 27 '25 180w

"There's variety, in Mr. Morton's book, and there is, on the whole, live and likeable writing, too."

+ N Y World p7m N 22 '25 100w

MORTON, MARTHA (MRS HERMAN CONHEIM). Val sinestra. 275p $2 Dutton

25-760

In "Val sinestra" the author develops a theme of racial and temperamental conflicts. The scene is laid in New York of the '90's, where the three principal characters live and grow up together. Julie Gonzola has inherited from her Spanish and Hebrew forefathers a brilliant exotic nature that draws irresistibly Martin Steele and Floyd Garrison to be her bondslaves from the earliest days of their childhood acquaintance. Martin is the sullen fiery product of Swiss peasant stock; Floyd, the son of a proud old New York family. Julie's mother, fearing the outcome of a union with the impetuous Martin, hurries her daughter into marriage with the safe and dependable Floyd. Against their wills the three are held together, their lives inextricably bound in the curious pattern destiny weaves for them. An unexpected dénouement sets them free and brings the book to a close.

"Although crude in spots, it has considerable force, brilliance, power and grace that should augur well for the future. The plot, conventional in itself, is developed in unusual fashion and the reason lies in the characters."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '25 330w

"A loosely constructed, scattering defeat of a forceful situation. 'Val Sinestra' just escapes being a fine novel."

+ N Y Times p22 F 8 '25 650w

"One is depressed by the brilliant promise of the first part of the book and the ruin at the end." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p13 Mr 15 '25 500w

"In the beginning the treatment is brilliant. Miss Morton has a highly individual style that is sometimes technically as well as emotionally thrilling. She writes with a peculiar, nervously powerful attack. The first hundred and twenty pages are electrically potent. Then the book, from being highly charged, becomes overcharged. With the crisis, darkness descends." Eva Goldbeck

+ N Y World p6m F 22 '25 530w

"The book is often highly dramatic, and no one could foresee the manner in which the tangle, spiritual and material, in which its leading figures have become involved reaches a final solution. If judged upon the high plane upon which it evidently strives to move, the novel falls short of success; it is nevertheless interesting and far from commonplace."

+ Outlook 139:272 F 18 '25 150w

MORTON, MARTHA—Continued

"Val Sinestra" is worthy of having been better written. Miss Morton wrote in a style apparently simple and direct, but loose of construction, with the point of view shifted frequently and awkwardly. In some parts of the story she overdoes detail, and in others she leaves out too much."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 8 '25
300w

MOSES, MONTROSE JONAS, ed. Representative American dramas, national and local. 681p $4.50 Little

812 American drama—Collections. Drama—
Collections 25-12385

An anthology of fifteen plays with introductory sketches of the authors, and bibliographies. Contents: A Texas steer, by C. H. Hoyt; The girl of the golden west, by D. Belasco; The witching hour, by A. Thomas; The city, by Clyde Fitch; The scarecrow, by Percy MacKaye; The piper, by J. P. Peabody; Mrs Bumpstead-Leigh, by H. J. Smith; It pays to advertise, by R. C. Megrue and Walter Hackett; The famous Mrs Fair, by James Forbes; The emperor Jones, by Eugene O'Neill; Nice people, by Rachel Crothers; The detour, by Owen Davis; Dulcy, by G. S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly; The adding machine, by E. L. Rice; The show-off, by G. Kelly. Appendix.

Booklist 22:23 O '25

"This is a varied and delightful list. At least two of these plays, 'A Texas Steer' and 'The Girl of the Golden West,' are not obtainable in other form, and another, 'The City,' representing the later Clyde Fitch is only obtainable in the expensive Memorial Edition, edited by Mr. Moses in collaboration with Miss Virginia Gerson." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 11 '25 1350w

"Edited by a man who has devoted a lifetime of intelligent and sympathetic study to his subject, it presents an encouraging picture of the improvement in literary and dramatic craftsmanship of American playwrights during the last thirty years as represented by his selections."

+ Ind 115:247 Ag 29 '25 180w

Nation 121:sup443 O 14 '25 60w

N Y Times p14 Ag 9 '25 360w

"If it was Mr. Moses's object (as I fancy it was) to show by this collection the vitality of the American drama rather than to try to find its polish and intellectual depth he has admirably succeeded. And he shows it pushing hopefully forward, too, led by experimenters like O'Neill. It is noticeable, also, that the collection is cheerful." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p8 S 27 '25 300w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

Outlook 140:499 Ag 5 '25 250w

St Louis p407 N '25

"This collection of plays by Mr. Montrose J. Moses, one of the most industrious of dramatic anthologists, if not particularly valuable or inspiring, has at least the merit of being judiciously variegated. If, as may be assumed from his somewhat elaborate and ingenious preface, his intention, in the making of it, was to illustrate the general quality exhibited in the different kinds of American drama produced during the last thirty years, he may be said to have fulfilled it admirably."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:383 D 5 '25 520w

"Though many of the plays are dated and outmoded both in subject and technique, they all sprang from the theatre of their day, and catch its changing aims better than a hundred text-books on the history of our theatre within the last thirty-five years. Done as Mr. Moses has done it, it more than repays the doing . . . and the reading." J. M. Brown

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:705 O '25 560w

Wis Lib Bul 21:229 O '25

MOSZKOWSKI, ALEXANDER. Isles of wisdom; [tr. by H. J. Stenning]. 322p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

"By solving a mystic cipher, Mr. Moszkowski has revealed to him the location of a large group of islands hitherto undiscovered in the South Seas. Upon exploring these he finds each island dedicated to some philosophical theory, which the inhabitants, instead of merely discussing, actually adhere to in their daily lives. The book is a picturesque satire on the modern tendency to live by formulas and to seek extremes in life and thought."—Publisher's note

Bookm 62:506 D '25 160w

"The vast amount of detail in this extraordinary tale is so shot through and through with satire and so winged with imagination that while at first glance it may seem forbidding, its reading will prove it distinctly appealing to those interested in the trend of scientific thought today." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 19 '25 1250w

Nation 121:685 D 9 '25 20w

"This book, if it serves no other purpose, ought to give the careful reader a fairly good intellectual rub-down." T. H. Raines

N Y Times p7 O 25 '25 1100w

Outlook 141:244 O 14 '25 100w

"If its satire lacks immediacy, the book itself is full of delightful stimulation for the mind, and, on a small scale, of very successful target-shooting."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:346 N 28 '25 580w

"Herr Moszkowski's head is full of philosophy, but, we regret to say, his pen is devoid of charm, his construction is Germanically cumbersome, his humor infrequent, and his powers of pure disquisition inexhaustible."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p118 F 19 '25 620w

MOTT, LEWIS FREEMAN. Sainte-Beuve. 522p $5 (21s) Appleton

B or 92 Sainte-Beuve, Charles Augustin
25-5098

"Professor Mott has supplied a very full account of the life of Sainte-Beuve. He gives, too, a complete résumé of his important longer works and a good survey of the essays. While much has been written about the critic, particularly at the time of the centenary of his birth in 1904, Professor Mott is yet able to offer his book as the first full biography."—N Y Times

"This is an adequate and scholarly book, and when one knows something of the vastness of the subject one appreciates the patience and thoroughness with which Mr. Mott has carried out his task." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf My '25 500w

Booklist 21:337 Je '25

Bookm 61:605 Jl '25 220w

"Professor Mott's life of Renan was a solid and a sincere piece of work. His life of Sainte-Beuve has all the merits of its predecessor and one more—it is a little more sympathetic, that is to say, a little more alluring." Brander Matthews

+ Int Bk R p377 My '25 1800w

"Mr. Mott's book is the first comprehensive treatment of Sainte-Beuve in any language and it is a magnificent feather in the cap of American scholarship." Felix Grendon

+ Nation 120:670 Je 10 '25 1100w

"Professor Mott admires Sainte-Beuve immensely and he succeeds in making his readers share his sympathy for the man who has not escaped calumny."

N Y Times p11 F 22 '25 1000w

"There can be no question of the soundness of his book nor of its value to students. It makes a worthy companion to his work on Renan, and the two now ask to be completed with a similar study of Taine." Jacob Zeitlin

+ N Y Tribune p4 My 3 '25 650w

"An admirably lucid and immensely informative life of Sainte-Beuve, so well arranged and indexed as to be an ideal text for collateral reading in a college course in French literature, and yet so free of a dryly academic view-point and of the usual apparatus of foot-notes and the like as to be of interest to the general reader."

+ Outlook 140:371 J1 8 '25 150w

St Louis p359 S '25

Reviewed by Gordon King

Sat R of Lit 1:897 J1 11 '25 450w

"'Sainte-Beuve' is essentially expository; it might be dramatic. It outlines and constructs the pageant of 19th century literary France, but lets its gorgeous coloring pass almost unnoticed. The wealth of anecdote which is available about its characters and which many a biographer would have seized upon to the exclusion of more substantial material, is scarcely touched. . . Though the style is mediocre, the presentation of the subject is well-ordered and exceedingly lucid; the critical passages are at the same time substantial and suggestive."

+ — Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 13 '25 600w

Wis Lib Bul 21:198 J1 '25

MOTT, RODNEY L. Materials illustrative of American government. (Century political science ser.) 397p $3 Century

353 United States—Politics and government. State governments. Local government

25-17947

"This collection of selections from public documents is designed to supplement the standard textbooks on American government and to furnish case material illustrating the principles upon which governmental processes, national, state and local, rest."

Am Econ R 15:780 D '25 80w

"An important deficiency in the mechanics of teaching American government to college undergraduates has been met by Dr. Rodney L. Mott's excellent compilation."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:849 N '25 360w

"For some time there has been a distinct need for a source book of well-chosen material for use in connection with courses in American government. To meet this need the Century Company has included in its political science series a volume of Materials Illustrative of American Government. Most of the items chosen are admirable. Virtually all are primary source material with a minimum of mutilation." J. D. McG.

+ Hist Outlook 17:40 Ja '26 250w

MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE. Sixty-four, ninety-four! 365p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

25-9298

"In 'Sixty-four, Ninety-four' the author of 'The Spanish Farm' essays a novel expedient in the writing of fiction. In his first novel Mr. Mottram endeavored to make intelligible, in the person of a peasant girl of French Flanders, the post-war psychology of devastated France. Incidentally he told a romance of the transient war-time love of this girl, Madeleine Vanderlynden, and the English Lieutenant Geoffrey Skene. The present volume tells precisely the same story, but from the angle of Skene himself, covers the same ground, in many cases describes the same incidents, and constitutes a history of the war-time and post-armistice psychology of the well-bred British fighting man."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:384 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p2 My 16 '25 550w

Dial 79:350 O '25 130w

"Though there is little of it which does not deal with the trench life of the British, it is still delicate and possessed of the permanence which recommends it to the discriminating as well as to a wider public."

+ Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 80w

"As a technical feat alone, 'Sixty-Four, Ninety-Four' deserves the attention of every person who sets pen to paper. Mr. Mottram has performed a courageous act with superb finish, for, in defiance of all critical canon, he retells the story of 'The Spanish Farm' almost in its entirety. The books have been admirably welded, but each is capable of an independent career. 'The Spanish Farm' comes first, only by chronology." Hugo Sonnenschein

+ Lit R p3 My 29 '25 550w

"Not only is it an excellent novel, but it is a valuable contribution to the literature of those war-years of which the new generation knows nothing but what it is told or reads."

J. W. Sydenham

+ Living Age 327:168 O 17 '25 320w (Reprinted from Empire Review)

"Of its kind, 'Sixty-Four, Ninety-Four' is a good, but not a very good, book. It has conscientiousness, unobtrusiveness, sincerity—qualities which can be raised from the second to the first rank only by the addition of a quality of a different order, a transforming quality. And although, therefore, the book is well written, it is quite inadequate to its theme."

Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 36:892 Mr 28 '25 320w

New Repub 44:52 S 2 '25 200w

"This book deserves a place on the shelf beside Mr. Patrick Miller's The Natural Man, among the half-dozen best books about the war." J. Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:720 Mr 28 '25 150w

"An interesting and somewhat baffling book. Mr. Mottram is a writer who has gone to the heart of his experience for the subject of his writings. His experiment is interesting, and in spite of the fact that both of his novels coincide like the halves of an apple, like this apple, neither is complete without the other; the coincidence is superficial, the substance of each half is a contribution to a common whole, rather than a repetition."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 26 '25 1000w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

N Y Tribune p14 My 31 '25 600w

Outlook 140:116 My 20 '25 30w

"I think that 'Sixty-four, Ninety-four' is the most convincing record which has been published of the war as it appeared to the typical civilian-turned-soldier. It is given with an economy and austerity which could scarcely be over-praised: it is on the plane where relentless realism is one with selective, creative art."

+ Sat R 139:219 F 28 '25 270w

"It would be unfair to 'Sixty-four, Ninety-four!' to recommend it merely to literary technicians. It stands on its own feet as an unusually rich and sensitive record of a war that was humorous as well as dirty, picturesque as well as horrible, by a sensitive, intelligent spirit controlling a subtle pen." H: S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 1:739 My 9 '25 550w

"The Spanish Farm was a respectable piece of work, well built and steady. Sixty-four, Ninety-four! is a still better novel; and it is good in the same respectable way; it is obviously composed from a sound memory and no heroisms or sentimentalities enter to distort that memory. The novel is chiefly remarkable for the picture it gives of the ramshackle, unorthodox, semi-barbarian civilization, which sprung up on the Western Front, the child of our own civilization and the elements."

Spec 134:509 Mr 28 '25 820w

"If R. H. Mottram had written only 'Sixty-four, Ninety-four' he would have been put down as the author of a smoothly and sensitively conceived novel, composed with delicacy and sureness, picturing an English gentlemen. If one had read 'The Spanish Farm' first, this book might have been disappointing. But a reader who got the order inverted and came last to the book which won for its author the Hawthornden prize of 1924 would feel that he had observed a crescendo of delineative power."

MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE—Continued

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 1100w

"Mr. Mottram writes, with all his former clarity and vigour, in a spirit of disillusionment but not of bitterness. He is, in the best sense, a realist. One may salute Mr. Mottram's intention and commend his admirable achievement, while yet contending that the new book lacks for English readers the fresh interest of its predecessor. It possesses the veracity of a chronicle and the vitality of a work of fiction; but as it is, unlike 'The Spanish Farm,' rather more a feat of memory than an imaginative experience, the chronicle element definitely predominates."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p136 F 26 '25 450w

MOULT, THOMAS, ed. Best poems of 1924. 127p $2 Harcourt [6s J. Cape]

821.08 English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections 24-26120

"A slight sheaf of 127 pages, a distillation of English and American periodical verse for the past year. Favorites and strangers mingle happily and gracefully, with emphasis on singing poetry as against the staccato. There are, among others, Archibald MacLeish, Laurence Housman, Joseph Auslander, Walter de la Mare, Sara Teasdale, Conrad Aiken, Edwin A. Robinson, two of the Sitwells, Edward Shanks, Edwin Muir, Lord Alfred Douglas and Wilfred Gibson."—N Y World

Booklist 21:372 J1 '25

"The editor has chosen a satisfying and sensitive group. The word 'best' must, of course, always have its private qualifications, but we have no hesitancy in saying that the poems in this little collection are all extraordinarily good."

+ Bookm 61:602 J1 '25 320w

"It is in itself a valuable contribution to English literature. There is so much in it, and it is so small. The men to whose memory it is dedicated would cherish it." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 15 '25 560w

"The collection does not attempt a complete representation of periodical verse—it is deliberately designed to catch the eye of those who would be frightened by the very bulk of the yearly contribution of William Stanley Braithwaite. It is a volume that may be slipped into a pocket to be drawn out at rare moments for casual observation and enjoyed with almost furtive pleasure." Horace Gregory

+ Lit R p4 My 2 '25 200w

Reviewed by Robert Graves

Nation and Ath 36:816 Mr 14 '25 220w

New Statesman 25:236 Je 6 '25 750w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

N Y Times p7 My 10 '25 150w

"There are high spirits. There is dramatic monologue and dialogue. There are poems suffused with the emotional color of persons or scenes, of which Mark Van Doren's 'The Crow' is a good example. There are poems purely lyric and poems philosophic." G. H. Bussey

+ N Y Tribune p10 My 3 '25 600w

N Y World p7m Ap 26 '25 90w

"We are a little doubtful about Mr. Moul's title and its implications; but certainly he is a conscientious and discerning critic, and many of the poems he has here collected are worth having. He has evidently looked for merit, without prejudice as to the form it should take: he prints sonnets and 'free verse' impartially."

+ — Sat R 139:220 F 28 '25 550w

"Something seems to have discouraged our younger poets in the past year; there is none of the free and abundant lyricism that marked the few years after the Armistice, and no new names are on the lips of the most erudite in contemporary verse. It may be, as Mr. Moul suggests, merely that several of the journals which gave space to newer writers have abandoned publication; but that in itself suggests some loss in poetic ardour."

Spec 134:288 F 21 '25 90w

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

MOULTON, HAROLD GLENN, and LEWIS, CLEONA. French debt problem. (Inst. of economics. Investigation in international economic reconstruction) 459p $2 Macmillan

336.44 France—Economic conditions. Debts, Public. Finance—France 25-17675

"This book contains a complete exposition of the effects of the war and the period of reconstruction upon financial and economic conditions in France. It deals in turn with the problems of international trade and finance, the budget and the growth of the public debt, the exchange and currency situation, production and trade, and the foreign debt problem. . . The data have been compiled from both official and private French sources, and the statistics upon which the conclusions are based are presented in the form of simple and easily understood diagrams."—Publisher's note

"In view of the recent postponement of serious consideration of the debt, the book is of decided interest."

+ Eng N 95:644 O 15 '25 130w

Nation 121:581 N 18 '25 120w

"A striking example of applied economics at its best." G. Soule

+ New Repub 45:67 D 2 '25 220w

"The study aims to be and presumably is impartial; it is a detailed economic examination and must be answered, if at all, by arguments equally specific; yet every part of the survey supports a single thesis—that France lacks the financial resources to pay her foreign debts."

Springf'd Republican p10 S 23 '25 650w

MOYER, JAMES AMBROSE, and WOSTREL, JOHN F. Practical radio, including the testing of radio receiving sets. 249p il $1.75 McGraw

654.6 Radio telephone 24-25352

"Gives information on practical methods, and attempts to explain fundamental principles as simply and clearly as possible."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:604 D '25

MUHLHAUSER, GEORGE HENRY PASCHE. Cruise of the Amaryllis. 316p il $2.50 Small [8s 6d Lane]

910.4 Voyages around the world. Amaryllis (yacht) [24-13808]

In September, 1920, Lieutenant Muhlhauser embarked from Plymouth, England, in his 28-ton yacht, the Amaryllis, with a crew of three, for a cruise around the world. The chronicle of this daring feat, in which a course of thirty-one thousand miles was covered, is illustrated with photographs, charts and maps.

"It all reads like a fairy story come true. There is not too much scenery, not too many technicalities, just the right amount. The book is very British, in that having embarked on his adventure for the pure fun of it, it became a vital matter to the Lieutenant, and assumed a vast importance. Curiously enough, it has the same effect on us. He explains his trouble, which he need not have had, and we are all sympathy, his delights, and we are all joyful congratulation." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 700w

Cleveland p56 Je '25

Reviewed by Lawton Mackall

Lit R p6 Je 27 '25 550w

"A happy argosy and its chronicle well told. May this mariner rest pleasantly in the hierarchy of his breed, with Nelson and Collingwood and Drake." Cameron Rogers

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ap 26 '25 470w

"Lieut Muhlhauser's style is clear and his story is told without pose. One gets a clearer idea, for example, of the South Sea islands than from many of the extended narratives whose authors are making a case for or against the natives, or are deliberately investing them with a false, if not meretricious lure."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 F 26 '25 300w

MUILENBERG, WALTER J. Prairie. 277p $2.50 Viking press

25-16658

Turned away from home because his father could not forgive his marrying into the shiftless Dalton family, Elias takes his bride West. He buys several acres of prairie land and they settle down to farm it. Lizzie, frail, submissive, spiritless, has no such love for the farm as motivates her husband's life. Elias feels the mute alliance between Lizzie and their pale, thin son who is so much like her. Against the mother's wishes he sends Joey off to school, determined to make of him a solid citizen such as he himself has become. The years on the prairie come and go with alternating success and disappointment. To Elias they bring pride of fulfillment, to Lizzie futility and grief, and to Joey a bitter resentment that makes final the estrangement between father and son.

Booklist 22:118 D '25

Cleveland p107 N '25

"In his picture, both of the struggle with earth and of the human actors, the author has worked with fidelity and courage and faith. It is sound work, if not brilliant."

+ Ind 115:363 S 26 '25 100w

"To readers interested in pioneering and farm life this book must be interesting. One must admit, however, that it lacks universal appeal." Stella Heilbrunn

+ Int Bk R p826 N '25 350w

Reviewed by N. A. Crawford

Int Bk R p101 Ja '26 50w

"A bitter book, one might say, but yet a truthful one." L: Bromfield

Lit R p3 N 28 '25 650w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Nation 122:14 Ja 6 '26 600w

New Repub 44:132 S 23 '25 130w

"Credit is due the author's courage in challenging comparison with Hamsun. Nevertheless, since he has done so, one cannot refuse to weigh him with the Norwegian. There is in the latter's scale a transmuting quality—call it genius—or a moral sun or what you will—which lifts his book into the realm of the eternal and gives him the advantage in all comparisons. 'Prairie' is a good book, but it has no outstanding beauty; pages of it are uninspired and dull, dialogue is frequently wooden and deadly, for the sake of atmosphere; it details dead items. The characters are alive, but they are studies of one dimension."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 23 '25 720w

"'Prairie' has the effect of an epic; it is more than a novel of promise; it is a substantial achievement in art." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 100w

"A solid, well-executed and in many ways powerful book. It helps to crystallize one authentic phase of American life with satisfying thoroughness, and with much beauty besides."

Ruth Suckow

+ N Y Tribune p5 S 13 '25 850w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 141:98 S 16 '25 150w

"This story of what the prairie and pioneer do to each other is truthful, gripping, and in some passages powerful. It is also narrow, stiff, and depressing. Once the author's intention is grasped by the reader, its execution grows a little mechanical. We feel that many incidents are invented to develop a set formula. There are several scenes that are finely faithful to Western life and human nature." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 2:99 S 5 '25 950w

Springf'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

MUIR, AUGUSTUS. Third warning. 315p $2
2 Bobbs [3s 6d Methuen]

25-21591

It was evident that Drysdale's presence at Brackenbridge hall was not wanted. He had proof of the fact in the attempt on his life during his first night there. But the attack, instead of scaring him off, roused his ire and fixed him in the determination to find out why he was being hounded from the estate he had inherited, and to discover his enemies and the reason for their enmity. Besides, on the day of his arrival he met Marget, auburn-haired daughter of the Manse, and there was no leaving the vicinity so long as she was there. Disregarding all ominous warnings the hero is rushed from one hair-breadth escape to the next, in a chain of surprising complications until the author sees fit to relieve the suspense and disclose the heart of the mystery.

"Mr. Muir lets nothing hinder the increasing tempo of his tale. Characterization goes by the board. He gets over the omission by the use of labels. Description, too, as it tends to retard, gets short shrift. One of the chief difficulties of writers of mystery yarns is to keep the cat in the bag till the final chapter. As regards 'The Third Warning,' it can go into the record that Mr. Muir succeeds."

+ N Y Times p22 Ja 3 '26 450w

"This is an exciting story of plot and counterplot, with an accompaniment of stealthy footsteps, 'sibilant' leaves and low-hanging Scotch mists."

+ N Y World p7m D 13 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p434 Je 25 '25 160w

MUIR, EDWIN. First poems. 75p $1.50 Huebsch [4s 6d Hogarth]

821

25-13442

"In three only of the pieces in this, his first, volume of poems does Mr. Muir avoid the metrical forms accepted by usage and familiarity; and so perhaps there is some degree of definiteness in terming him a traditionalist in technique."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Whatever Mr. Muir chooses to be in future, such performances, and particularly the 'Ballad of Eternal Life,' prove him now no mere poetic personality but succinctly a poet." L: Untermeyer

+ Bookm 61:703 Ag '25 230w

Dial 79:174 Ag '25 120w

"It is no slender accomplishment. Readers of his rather stiff, old-fashioned quatrains will have to feel either that he has done a great deal or that he has done nothing at all. Which is as much as to say, he is a poet." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 120:719 Je 24 '25 650w

"Edwin Muir is an interesting new poet; though moderately conservative in technique, he sometimes gets worked up and makes words jump, run about, and do things for him which few of his contemporaries can induce them to do; so that the reader gets the sense of something important happening, even if he does not understand quite what it is all about." Robert Graves

Nation and Ath 37:142 My 2 '25 150w

Reviewed by Babette Deutsch

New Repub 43:23 My 27 '25 200w

"There is much to suggest that here is a writer of unusual promise. As would be anticipated, Muir's range is not great, either as to subject matter or form. But he has a sturdy way of looking out upon life, and an alert mind, free alike both of sentimentalism and decadency."

MUIR, EDWIN—Continued

+ — N Y Times p6 Ap 5 '25 550w

"I believe the reader of this little book will agree with me that Muir is a genuine poet. He has the ability to evoke in his best moments the 'spirits of the vasty deep' and peer into the heart of things. His descriptive passages are finished beyond those of most beginners, and when he writes rhetorical lines he usually gives us rhetoric that is excellent," Wilbert Snow

+ — N Y Tribune p12 Je 14 '25 750w

Reviewed by Joseph Auslander

N Y World p4m Je 21 '25 150w

"One sees exactly what he means; and the expression of it resembles poetry as chalk resembles cheese."

— Sat R 139:715 Je 27 '25 100w

"In the handling of delicate internal rhymes and subtle assonances, and a haunting ripple of melodious rhythm, Mr. Muir is signally successful. A disquieting preponderance of abstract and general words tends to disturb the clear impression of his image."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:766 My 16 '25 260w

"The technique is not brilliant, the craftsmanship not impeccable; yet owing perhaps to the earnestness of the tone with which these things are uttered (an earnestness which we feel by quite legitimate means, by the aesthetic effect of the verse and not from any statement of the poet about his frame of mind) they seem to mean more than they say."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p264 Ap 16 '25 750w

MUKUL CHANDRA DEY. My pilgrimages to Ajanta and Bagh; with an introd. by Laurence Binyon. 245p il $6 Doran [21s T. Butterworth]

729.4 Art. Buddhist. Mural painting and decoration. Cave temples. Ajanta, India. Bagh, India [25-21812]

In a setting of marvelous beauty—an amphitheatre of hills enclosing a wooded glen threaded by a winding stream—are the caves of Ajanta, relics of an ancient Buddhist monastery. The walls of the twenty-nine caves are covered with allegorical paintings frequently having for subject the life of Buddha in previous incarnations. Mr. Mukul Dey, an Indian artist, made two visits to the Ajanta caves and one to Bagh, to copy these precious paintings. His book, amply illustrated from photographs of the caves, and reproductions of copies of the frescoes, describes his labor of love, and the difficulties and dangers attending it.

"The book is full of delightful passages, not merely on the art but of the country and its people, abundantly illustrated." Hamilton Bell

+ Lit R p8 D 5 '25 480w

"The sentences are always twining unexpectedly to end in a little flower or little thorn. We are guided round two groups of monuments by an efficient cicerone, but we are also in company of a courageous and unspoiled mind." E. M. F.

+ Nation and Ath 37:462 Jl 11 '25 950w

"He has contrived to write of something more than art: there is a flavour in the quaint, delicious narrative of his experiences which suggests that a full account of his travels might well be a classic and would almost certainly be a good seller, always provided that the kind friends who have 'patiently endeavored to put my wild English into some sort of shape' could be persuaded to withhold their profane hands from the manuscript."

+ New Statesman 25:372 Jl 11 '25 520w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 O 18 '25 180w

"His book is welcome because it gives in popular form an account of the life of Buddha from which the subjects were taken, and of the general circumstances of Indian life and art. It treats of the paintings 'in situ,' and with all the interest of local atmosphere, Mr. Mukul Dey's account of himself is modest and written in a style of delightful simplicity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 Jl 23 '25 1400w

MULFORD, CLARENCE EDWARD. Cottonwood Gulch. 340p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-3847

Mr Mulford's latest book concerns itself with the phenomenal career of Cottonwood Gulch, a small mining town which overnight becomes the haven of gold-crazed men who rob and kill without compunction. The only steady and clear-eyed man in the whole outfit is Dave Saunders, foreman of the B-B ranch. When crime reaches its zenith, Dave takes the law into his own hands and with some able assistants rounds up every murderer and bandit in the four corners of Cottonwood. The criminals are dealt with in a business-like manner until Cottonwood, tho reduced in population, glows with respectability. And Dave having finished a good job, turns to the home of a pretty girl to tell her all about it.

"'Cottonwood Gulch' is evidence that Mr. Mulford's invention is as fresh as ever. His dialogue and action may well give pointers to those novelists of more ambitious pretensions in the analysis of character and the intricacies of plot. There is never a dull moment in his narrative. His characters speak in a robust, humorous vein of living hyperbole and rich, inexhaustible invective." J. W. Crawford

+ Lit R p9 Ja 24 '25 350w

N Y Times p22 Ja 25 '25 260w

N Y World p4m F 1 '25 150w

MULHOLLAND, JOHN, and SMITH, MILTON MYERS. Magic in the making. 134p il $1.50 (6s) Scribner

793 Conjurung

25-6215

"The book is divided into twenty-two short chapters, each of which exposes the modus operandi of a simple experiment in conjuring, which may be performed by the merest tyro; around each trick is written an interesting story which gives the reader a hankering to try some of the mystifications on his friends. One of the authors is the head of the department of English in the Horace Mann School for Boys; the other is an instructor in the same institution. The book contains a number of illustrations of the simple appliances required for the experiments; most of the apparatus consists of common household articles that may be obtained by any one."—Lit R

Booklist 21:332 Je '25

"The twenty tricks in their little volume are all comparatively simple and what is more, they are novel, most of them newly invented and all of them newly presented. The ambitious student need not be afraid that he will find in this volume the tricks which have been collected in the old magic books." Brander Matthews

+ Int Bk R p332 Ap '25 1550w

"Admirably adapted to the interests of boys as well as of adults." W. B. Gibson

+ Lit R p10 Mr 7 '25 150w

N Y Times p21 Ap 12 '25 450w

N Y Tribune p14 Mr 15 '25 130w

Outlook 140:268 Je 17 '25 10w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 30w

Wis Lib Bul 21:196 Jl '25

MULLIN, GLEN HAWTHORNE. Adventures of a scholar tramp. 312p $2 Century

339 Tramps 25-6955

Across the United States and back again the scholar tramp panhandles his way with his hobo pals. He learns their picturesque jargon, their mode of travel without a ticket or a by-your-leave, their discretion toward the policeman and his billy, their methods of approaching strangers for a handout—in short, their way of life and much of their philosophy concerning it. The amusing circumstances under which this unusual schooling is acquired form the adventures of which the author writes.

Booklist 21:362 J1 '25

"One of the most thoroughly enjoyable, veracious, and interesting autobiographic narratives we have recently read."

+ Bookm 61:484 Je '25 130w

"Delicious bits of humor are liberally scattered throughout the book. They meet the true tests of that quality, too; for while perusing them the reader often laughs aloud. Mr. Mullin's language is often not that of the Columbia University professor; it savors of the plain, vulgar talk of the tramp. We close the book, nevertheless, with a hitherto unfelt admiration for the courage of the worthies portrayed, as well as an accurate knowledge of their life." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 25 '25 470w

"The hobo's conversation is five hundred per cent more real than their conversation in any similar book known to this reviewer and contains just about thirteen per cent of reality, which is quite as much as it should contain. A real document, but not one you should read aloud to your growing sons."

Ind 114:386 Mr 4 '25 100w

"Intensely interesting record." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p6 Ap 11 '25 550w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

Nation 120:605 My 27 '25 500w

"Certainly, Mr. Mullin found the oddest of entertaining experiences and Rabelaisian talk. His fellows were full of humor and vividness."

+ New Statesman 26:338 D 26 '25 850w

"In 'Adventures of a Scholar Tramp' Glen Mullin has turned the trick as few men bred in a world of culture have been able to do it. His book is alive with a valid and genuine spirit of the road." L. Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 5 '25 880w

"It is in the tradition of Mark Twain and Ring Lardner that Mr. Mullin belongs. And he does admirably well neither of them has ever done. He has contrived to blend, without serious disharmonies, the diverse elements of his own limpid style with the audacious pyrotechnics of hobo slang, so that the mixture almost defies analysis." Carl Van Doren

+ N Y Tribune p4 My 3 '25 850w

"Hobo life, photographed by a sportsmanlike observer, is far from epic. Mr. Mullin interpolates an occasional lyric passage, and is sometimes splendidly colorful; but toward the end the book drags. It is time for the play to end."

— + N Y World p6m Ap 5 '25 300w

"This is a delightful book, worth everybody's reading."

+ Outlook 141:101 S 16 '25 250w

St Louis p336 S '25

"Some of the descriptions of tramps in this book are very well done. But Mr. Mullin has failed to imbue the objects of his descriptions with life. The book will prove of interest to those readers who wish to catch a glimmer of the truth without being made to feel uncomfortable. However, it is not likely to be given wide approval among the roving brotherhood." Jim Tully

— + Sat R of Lit 2:177 O 3 '25 650w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 240w

Wis Lib Bul 21:108 Ap '25

MUNDY, TALBOT. Om; the secret of Ahbor valley. 392p $2 Bobbs [7s 6d Hutchinson]

24-27998

"Ommony belongs to the Indian Secret Service. His sister and her husband have disappeared, twenty years before, among a savage tribe in the north, and Ommony goes to seek them. He goes disguised as a Brahman in the play-acting company of a very wise and holy old Lama and his young disciple—as sphinxlike and mysterious as he. Ommony's quest also involves the restoration of a stolen bit of jade of supernatural properties, and the identity of the young disciple, who turns out to be his lost sister's daughter."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 21:234 Mr '25

"It is a long story, but it does not drag, and from first to last it is dominated by the intriguing figure of the brave and humorous, tolerant, courteous and determined Lama, Tsiang Samdup, whose story was told there in the mysterious Ahbor Valley. Picturesque, entertaining, and giving a glimpse of a philosophy and way of living alien to us of the West, Mr. Mundy's novel is well worth reading." L. M. F.

+ Int Bk R p286 Mr '25 400w

"Om' is probably his best. It has swing and balance, is thoughtful and with beauty. Its pictures are interlaid with idealism. It holds and impresses with a fine touch of intimate sympathetic knowledge of rich materials."

+ Lit R p9 D 27 '24 300w

"Om' is silly and amusing, and at times it has a surprising note of sincerity and unprejudiced human sympathy that rings as deeply true as a temple gong." Isabel Paterson

— + N Y Tribune p11 F 8 '25 550w

N Y World p9e N 16 '24 70w

"Readers who like Kipling's 'Kim' will like this story. At least they will like the incidents. The culmination of its plot, however, is neither very credible nor quite in tone with the story of danger, travel, and mystery that precedes it."

+ — Outlook 138:690 D 24 '24 70w

"Though more theatrical than 'Kim,' 'Om' is not melodrama, or rather not too melodramatic. At the same time it is solidly and sometimes beautifully written, charged with thought, and full of excellent narrative. Excitement and satisfaction join."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:330 N 29 '24 220w

Spec 134:510 Mr 28 '25 130w

"It is a long story, not always easy to follow, but worth persevering with for its depiction of Indian native life and of a mystic whose philosophy of the 'Middle Way' enables him to tread it with courage and patient endurance to the end."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p57 Ja 22 '25 120w

MUNRO, WILLIAM BENNETT. Current problems in citizenship. 541p $1.80 Macmillan

320 Political science. United States—Politics and government 24-20679

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Illuminating, thoughtful, and comprehensive."

+ Boston Transcript p5 F 14 '25 180w

"We wonder whether the average high school senior could handle the book. For a selected group of highly interested and well prepared students, this book would be a pleasure to teach. A special word must be said for the controversial topic. Professor Munro has showed no hesitation about the discussion of any of them. All are handled in a clear, interesting and fearless manner." C. E. Martz

+ Hist Outlook 16:123 Mr '25 600w

MUNRO, WILLIAM BENNETT—Continued

"This volume, with its helpful aids to further and more exhaustive reading, should prove of the utmost value in the education and training of good citizens."

+ Lit R p10 D 27 '24 200w

"The book is readable, lucid and succinct in statement of the issues involved, and unpartisan and temperate in treatment. Because of the author's special interest, much more space is devoted to political and governmental problems than to economic and social problems. This will be deplored by many teachers in the field." W. G. Kimmel

+ School R 33:156 F '25 460w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p175 Mr 12 '25 60w

MUNRO, WILLIAM BENNETT. Government of the United States, national, state and local. 660p $3 Macmillan

353 United States—Politics and government 24-14081

"Teachers who have used Professor William Bennett Munro's earlier work on American Government will be interested in the revised edition of The Government of the United States, National, State and Local. In addition to rewriting the former chapters and bringing them to date, Professor Munro has introduced certain additional chapters, notably one on 'The Citizen and His Privileges,' and one on 'The Nation's Expenditures.'"—Am Pol Sci R

"The chapters on municipal government are exceptionally well done." R. M. S.

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:650 Ag '25 130w

"His exposition throughout is clear and he has produced a definite statement for everything that he has tried to elucidate. The revision has lengthened the book considerably, a thing which undergraduates may not appreciate, but it has made the book more orderly and one of the best sources of information on our Government."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 6 '25 300w

"A general description of governmental forms and functions with a breezily assured, yet impartial and undogmatic criticism of the working of the governmental machine. The directness and clarity of the language are an asset in the fulfilment of its expository purpose, which the criticism also helps to foster since it tends to fill in the forms of government with vital facts."

+ Springfield Republican p12 Ap 10 '25 300w

MURASAKI SHIKIBU. Tale of Genji; tr. from the Japanese by Arthur Waley. 300p il $3.50 Houghton [10s 6d Allen & U.]

25-26899

This classic tale of old Japan, probably written in the early part of the eleventh century, tells of the gallantries and love adventures of Prince Genji, the son of the emperor. It is an enormous work running in the original to over four thousand pages. The plan of the translator is to complete the story in six volumes, of which this is the first.

"With sure touches the Lady Murasaki can depict the pathos of an old nun, and the simplicity of a child. Her humor is discreet and subtle and her satire certain and effective. Mr. Waley is to be congratulated on his translation, which has succeeded in bringing the life and spirit of the East one thousand years ago into the West of to-day. We trust that this is merely the beginning of a sumptuous feast." L. H. Titterton

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf O '25 500w

Booklist 22:73 N '25

"If it were only for the background of Japanese court life in these far off days, the book would be worth reading; but it is more than that, it is a story of a Japanese Don Juan."

+ Bookm 62:76 S '25 200w

"There is a distinctiveness, a Nipponesqueness that is wholly different and, although nearly a thousand years old, fresh. There is, probably, no greater English master of Japanese literature than Arthur Waley. And the breadth of his learning was never so manifest as in this scholarly and idiomatic translation of the first volume of the English edition." J. F. Vance

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 11 '25 1700w

Dial 79:515 D '25 50w

Ind 115:192 Ag 15 '25 200w

"Even after translation into so very different a language, the dexterity of the Japanese narrative, the quiet humor with which some of the episodes are related, the tenderness and sympathy which mark the handling of others, give distinction to the book. And strange as many of their ideas and beliefs may seem to us, the numerous characters peopling it are real human beings, at times startling us with their modernity, making us remember, almost with astonishment, how very many years have passed since 'The Tale of the Genji' was written and become one of the classics of Old Japan." L. Moore

+ Int Bk R p707 O '25 1300w

"It is, perhaps, somewhat graceless to look this gift horse in the mouth—particularly as the teeth have been extracted by Mr. Waley. One feels, as with Rabelais, the Genji should be swallowed whole." A. H. Gibbs

Lit R p2 O 3 '25 450w

"In the tender description of a child or an old nun, she gives us the effect of Trollope. Her humor is far more subtle than that of Molière; it is of our own day, allusive, satirical. And yet occasionally we are reminded of the Elizabethans."

+ Living Age 327:645 S 19 '25 440w (Reprinted from Westminster Gazette)

"While the manner of the story is strange its matter is familiar. If there were only a manner to consider, one might call the book quaint and be done. And it is quaint enough. The decorum is that, presumably, of a medieval Japanese court. The clothing, the houses, the flowers, the morals are as 'different' as such things may be. The people, as they talk, fall into beautiful verse, so that the scene becomes at times a veritable field of blossoms suddenly blown. Yet it is easy, as one reads on, to slip into the conviction that this story of Prince Genji and his innumerable mistresses is but accidentally different from stories one has read of other lovers in other courts." Mark Van Doren

Nation 121:305 S 16 '25 600w

"It is clear that Lady Murasaki has every quality that goes to make a great novelist—imagination, humour, uncommon good sense, a lively phrase, a command of narrative on a large scale, and a sympathetic, observant regard for human character." Raymond Mortimer

+ Nation and Ath 37:371 Je 20 '25 1350w

"One of the most charming translations ever made from any language into English. . . Probably few people will be born of our fiction for whom we shall feel the affection we do for Genji and his ladies. Few characters are likely to drop from twentieth century novels real and charming enough to make us forget Lady Murasaki, or dull our expectation of her forty odd chapters still to come. May they win us, as this first volume has done, with its true marriage of a simple beauty and a complicated heart." Robert Littell

+ New Repub 43:324 Ag 12 '25 1350w

"The Tale of Genji,' as here presented to the American reader is a work of such freshness, power, beauty and charm that the term masterpiece is not misplaced." J. Carter

+ N Y Times p1 Jl 26 '25 1650w

Reviewed by Witter Bynner

N Y Tribune p1 S 27 '25 2200w

Outlook 141:200 O 7 '25 120w

"Genji' is wholly a delight. It brings sheer happiness by its truth, beauty, humor, its understanding of humanity and zest for life, its admirable richness of texture," K. S. Angell

+ Sat R of Lit 2:99 S 5 '25 1100w

"The story is full of penetrating and tender observations and although Murasaki's hero has some hardly admirable qualities and though the authoress draws a picture of an over-civilized Court world where it was clearly less important for women to be virtuous than quick-witted, sensitive and above all accomplished writers of those half-cryptic little verses which fell continually from the pen of every well-bred person, she also draws the picture with a taste that is unerring, and in the true spirit of Comedy."

+ Spec 135:168 J1 25 '25 950w

"The poetic sensitiveness which marks Mr. Waley's renderings of Chinese and Japanese verse confers a beautiful distinction on this first stage of his considerable task. The language of the original is, we believe, not easily accessible even to the educated Japanese of today, yet here we have a version which is in itself a delight."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p428 Je 25 '25 1300w

MURDOCK, HAROLD. Nineteenth of April, 1775. 134p il $2 Houghton

973.33 Concord, Battle of, 1775. Lexington, Battle of, 1775

Three lectures, published in limited edition two years ago and now reprinted in recognition of the anniversary celebration of Concord and Lexington, in which a critical historian distinguishes between fact and long cherished popular tradition concerning the events of that April day. The story of Concord and Lexington as Mr. Murdock tells it, after careful study of the evidence on both sides, is more favorable to the British than the commonly accepted version.

Booklist 22:26 O '25

"Mr. Murdock has painstakingly separated fact from the mass of legend and tradition which have enmeshed the entire day from start to finish. Nothing has been eliminated that adds real glory to the courage and patriotism of the hastily summoned citizen soldiery. On the other hand, much has been added by incorporating the British accounts of the battles and retreat. It is a good thing to see ourselves as others see us. There is glory enough without legend or exaggeration." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 22 '25 500w

Reviewed by J. H. Penniman
Lit R p12 My 9 '25 250w

"Small, compact, well written, and carefully documented book." C: A. Beard

+ New Repub 43:215 J1 15 '25 320w

Reviewed by J. D. Adams

N Y Times p3 Ap 19 '25 900w

R of Rs 71:558 My '25 100w

St Louis 23:439 D '25

"It is a thoroughly scholarly and readable account."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:864 Je 27 '25 120w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 16 '25 1000w

"The details which Mr. Murdock enumerates with regard to the battles of Lexington and Concord are somewhat too minute for general consumption, but they are presented with graceful and polished phrasing. At the same time, Mr. Murdock permits too much irony to creep into some of his phrasing."

+ — Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 20 '25 840w

MURPHY, ROBERT CUSHMAN. Bird islands of Peru: the record of a sojourn on the west coast. 362p il $5 (15s) Putnam

591.98 Natural history—Peru. Peru—Description and travel. Birds 25-3972

"An interesting account, historical and actual, of the guano islands of Peru and the bird life there. Much is told about the industry and the prospects for its continuing. Life on the mainland is given some attention. Perhaps the best thing about the book is the superb illustrations of bird life."—Ind

Booklist 21:298 My '25

"This serious volume not only contains an absorbing and scientific study of the prolific bird life of the Peruvian Islands, but represents a complete summary of information regarding the west coast of South America."

+ Bookm 61:489 Je '25 200w

"Mr. Murphy writes with an ardent love of bird and marine life, in a study of which he has passed his life, and is never tiresome. There may be experts of similarly wide experience and power of description, but perhaps none that surpass him in knowledge, industry and travel. Certainly there are few in the world so well known." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 7 '25 600w

"No book on the subject has yet appeared which discusses in so attractive and authoritative a manner a part of the South American littoral."

+ Geog R 15:175 Ja '25 550w

"Altogether an interesting and unusual volume."

+ Ind 114:190 F 14 '25 80w

"It is a highly informative and fascinating work that well deserves the honor of being included in a series made notable by William Beebe's Galapagos. Besides being an important contribution to geographical literature it is a book that is sure to provide rare entertainment to the general reader. Mr. Murphy is that rara avis, a scientist who knows how to write." Sheril Schell

+ Lit R p13 D 12 '25 260w

"An entrancing book, based largely on his own experiences during an expedition which was made possible by a bequest to the Brooklyn Museum, of which he was then curator."

+ Nature 116:568 O 17 '25 900w

New Statesman 25:172 My 23 '25 600w

"Mr. Murphy is one of those rare men in whom the capacity for scientific observation is united with a gift for graphic description. If his work lacks the distinctive charm of William Beebe's, it is nevertheless of a quality equally sure to interest the general reader."

+ N Y Times p15 F 8 '25 1650w

Reviewed by J. O. Swift

N Y World p7m Mr 1 '25 1300w

"The book belongs to the same series as William Beebe's 'Galapagos: World's End,' and no higher compliment can be paid it than to say that it is equal in every way to its predecessor in scientific interest, and not far behind it in point of literary flavor."

+ Outlook 139:383 Mr 11 '25 300w

"The book abounds in information, but it is all so pleasingly conveyed that one becomes thoroughly interested in his researches as well as the details of how they were made. In short, without catering to the assumed demand for sensational science, Dr. Murphy has written a most readable story of a capital piece of natural history exploration." F. M. Chapman

Sat R of Lit 1:838 Je 20 '25 350w

"A careful and accurate account."

+ Spec 135:498 S 26 '25 120w

"His habit of writing is a little unconcentrated but its researches are of lasting value."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Ap 16 '25 1000w

MURRY, JOHN MIDDLETON. Keats and Shakespeare; a study of Keats' poetic life from 1816 to 1820. 248p $4.75 Oxford [14s Milford]

B or 92 Keats, John. Shakespeare, William

"Mr. Murry has tried, by tracing 'the movement of Keats's soul' through the four relevant years of his poetic life, to establish what exactly is the pure poetic nature. . . The book is not a biography, it is not a criticism, it attempts, successfully, to relate the incidents of the poet's life to his work . . . And throughout the book Mr. Murry keeps his main argument in view, the correspondence of Keats with Shakespeare, the inspiration for life that he drew from him, at the end so consciously that he literally felt himself guided, even possessed by Shakespeare."—Nation and Ath

MURRY, JOHN MIDDLETON—Continued

Bookm 62:602 Ja '26 600w

"In such a speculation many persons unquestionably will discern an excess of enthusiasm. But Mr. Murry, if he writes with the fervor of a special pleader in behalf of a point already decided in his own mind, is to the full as honest as he is often brilliant. The evidence at his disposal—very little of which, if any, of course, is absolutely new—could scarcely have been more conscientiously or effectively arranged. Collectively, with his own connecting and explanatory comments, it constitutes a remarkably minute and keenly analytical study of Keats' life and literary output from 1816 to his death in 1820." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p2 Ja 2 '26 720w

"Mr. Murry has shown, without the shadow of a doubt that in spirit and in act Keats is indeed not only with Shakespeare, but like him." Bonamy Dobrée

+ Nation and Ath 37:766 S 26 '25 1100w

"Seldom enough does a critical study come into our hands so full of eagerness and life that we are anxious to delay not a moment before imparting the news of it to the world of readers. Mr. Murry's new book, however, is undeniably such a study." H: J. Forman

+ N Y Times p2 D 13 '25 1800w

"Mysticism and mystification apart, Mr. Murry's book justifies its existence by a great number of illuminating comments upon Keats's poetry. He has worked with an ardent enthusiasm and an intensity almost ferocious. He has put his whole soul into his book. With astonishing acumen he correlates discrete particles of Keats's writings, dovetailing them together in a manner that interprets each anew. When he puts aside his adelphean metaphysicalities and descends from the world of fourth-dimensional logic to the solid ground of literary criticism he never fails in the work of exegesis." S: Chew

+ N Y Tribune p7 Ja 10 '26 1550w

Spec 135:372 S 5 '25 200w

"For a study of Keats Mr. Murry is particularly suited. He has always had a deep reverence, as a purely literary critic, for this young master of English verse. Now he comes again, in his renewed and much more complex self, to examine Keats as a man, and as a combination of the spiritual and the aesthetic idealist. He searches every line that Keats wrote, every phrase in the poet's noble letters, piecing together with infinite care, and with an acumen that amounts to genius, the evidence that is to substantiate his worship for this divine being."

+ Spec 135:491 S 26 '25 1500w

"If Mr. Middleton Murry is not altogether the proper person to take care of Keats, that is not because he wants either enthusiasm of ingenuity. About Keats, and about poetry, he says, in this book, many true and fine things. . . . It is possible to admire his book, and the sincere spirit of it, and yet to find it, as a presentation of the life and poetry of Keats, unsatisfactory."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p634 O 1 '25 1600w

MURRY, JOHN MIDDLETON. Pencilings; little essays on literature. 277p $3 Seltzer [78 6d Collins]

824 Literature—History and criticism

25-21046

"In the more familiar manner permitted by the short essay the book is a restatement and a development of the critical principles and preferences already expounded by the author in Aspects of Literature, Countries of the Mind, and The Problem of Style. But Pencilings is addressed to a wider audience than Mr. Murry's previous works of criticism."—Publisher's note

Cleveland p105 N '25

"The essays at hand appeared over three years ago, many of them are frankly journalistic; very few have subjects of significance. They have the frequent charm that work of a writer with Murry's talents must possess, but in only four essays do the pronouncements show evidence of consideration and its consequent weight." Adria Rich

+ Sat R of Lit 2:447 D 26 '25 800w

"These essays are light in style, as the title suggests, but they are thoughtful and provocative, without, perhaps, attaining the level of searching and authoritative pronouncements; in short, the sort of essay which is never written merely for the sake of displaying word patterns and which yields food for meditation while it is being read—of the right character and dimensions for a short train journey, and not requiring a degree of cloistral concentration unsuited to the place."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 N 14 '25 1150w

MUSSOLINI, BENITO. My diary, 1915-17; tr. from the Italian by Rita Wellman. 195p $2 Small

B or 92 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives. European war, 1914-1918—Campaigns 25-5366

"When Benito Mussolini wrote this book he was a private soldier, later a corporal and finally Corporal-Major Mussolini of the Bersaglieri. This fiery Socialist of other years had become all Italian and gone into the army. From September, 1915, until he was wounded in action in February, 1917, he was on the Alpine front, in a lost world of artillery, Arctic cold, wet trenches, snow-slips, blood and death."—Lit R

Booklist 22:27 O '25

"As a thrilling war diary the book offers nothing spectacularly new in the account of the Italian soldiers' difficult mountain warfare. But the story of the man Mussolini in these pages is the unconscious psychoanalysis of Europe's most sensational premier in the making." Alice Rohe

+ Bookm 61:482 Je '25 650w

"It is a stirring bit of writing, each day's hardships and each day's enthusiasms. One sees how the Italians have held out against oppression without and ignorance within. There is nothing to it, as Arnold Bennett would say, and yet there is everything." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Mr 21 '25 550w

Cleveland p99 S '25

"His diary is no better and no worse than many other war diaries, but it is interesting both from its authorship and because some of the scenes of the Italian front he describes are admirable pictures of war."

Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 70w

Reviewed by C. M. Morrison
Lit R p9 Mr 21 '25 400w

"Of Mussolini himself one gains from these pages a most attractive picture. The translation is good, though it is not always accurate and there are some inexplicable omissions. The preface, by another hand, is a marvel of bad English." C: H. A. Wager

+ N Y Tribune p8 My 24 '25 460w

"The book is interesting and important because of its realism. It gives a picture of life at the front as it really was as viewed by a brave man of penetrating mind." C. M. Bakewell

+ Sat R of Lit 1:873 Jl 4 '25 900w

MYERS, GUSTAVUS. History of American idealism. 349p $3 Boni & Liveright
 917.3 Idealism. National characteristics,
 American. United States—Social conditions
 25-6396

This book discusses the question Is America idealistic, and if so, in what ways has this idealism manifested itself? It is a narrative of ideas which, beginning in the moral and intellectual consciousness, have gradually become translated into fact. Mr Myers shows this spirit at work in its successive attempts to establish religious liberty, overthrow monarchy, wipe out caste aristocracy, establish the principle of free education, uproot slavery, democratize art and create self government in our foreign possessions. He also shows the part taken by America in the fight for democracy as against autocracy, and in the plan for world peace thru the League of nations.

Bookm 61:599 J1 '25 200w

"It is no mere abstract theory but a concrete presentation which is given. One may not agree with all his conclusions but certainly it is a fresh and refreshing way of looking at ourselves. Of course all has not been said and there is a more sombre side too."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ap 4 '25 250w
 Cleveland p94 S '25

"If Mr. Myers' point of view is sometimes a little irritating, the result of his indefatigable industry is of great value." C: W. Thompson

+ — Lit R p4 Ap 25 '25 1350w

"The basic error in Mr. Myers's approach to his subject is that his hero, 'the American people,' is ever a unity, one and indivisible, now and then defeated by its foreign heritage, by its predatory groups, by this, that, and the other thing, yet always idealistic and like Horatio Alger's heroes winning out in the end. The most progress in the United States, as elsewhere, has been initiated by political and social pioneers, lone voices in hostile wildernesses, battling courageously against odds and obstacles until the great mass was swung into line—this Mr. Myers fails totally to recognize. Mr. Myers's subject is deserving of a less confused treatment." Ernest Gruening

— Nation 121:362 S 30 '25 850w

"Mr. Myers has done much research and gathered some important material. He offers a genuine piece of work in his chapters on art. The rest of the book, however, is unworthy of serious attention, and good printing and fine paper cannot make it other than a piece of fustian." J: H. Holmes

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Ap 12 '25 650w

Outlook 140:303 Je 24 '25 180w

R of Rs 71:558 My '25 160w

"Even if every act that Mr. Myers brings forward were one of undiluted moral glory, the picture would still be a false one; for on the same terms it would be possible to write a history of American Scoundrelism which would begin with our cruel and rapacious treatment of the American Indian and carry the story down to our cold-blooded treatment of foreigners and conscientious objectors even after the recent war was over. There would be no more truth or balance in the second kind of history by itself than there is in the first by itself." L: Mumford

— Sat R of Lit 2:58 Ag 22 '25 520w

"His style is stimulating and effective for general reading. Even if his historical and social deductions require some revision, and events which are interpreted idealistically had their leaven of self-interest, the work will help the average American to feel that the weight of public opinion has usually backed—spontaneously or ultimately—liberal aims and progress."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 F 27 '25 420w

Reviewed by J. K. Hart

Survey 55:99 O 15 '25 380w

Wis Lib Bul 21:230 O '25

MYERS, LEOPOLD HAMILTON. The Clio.
 253p $2 Scribner [7s 6d Putnam]

25-23221

Lady Oswestry has invited a group of young English sophisticates for a cruise on her yacht the Clio to the mouth of the Amazon. Her unacknowledged reason for the trip is to obtain in Para a marvelously rejuvenating face cream, against the effects of which the wary Sir James cannot possibly longer hold out. The book describes the amorous adventures of several of the party on board, and tells of the political ambitions of Lady Oswestry's elder son who is financing a revolution in Para.

"It is only in our own hybrid period that we should find people tolerating and being amused by the frankness and sensuality of this book. It is clever, to be sure, but not half so clever as one expects it to be, not nearly so clever as it needs to be to carry off some of its situations."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '26 300w

"The story is told with skill, a good deal of humor,—some of it broad,—and a touch of effective human tragedy. It is a competent book. It proves nothing much."

+ Ind 116:50 Ja 9 '26 70w

"The novel is no thriller in the common acceptance of the word. It is a thriller in arresting ideas, acute delineation, in its restrained turbulence." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 D 12 '25 450w

"A brilliant, enticing, witty, and profound work. Because he has a sense of values, because the intensity of his thought gives him objectivity, Mr. Myers has achieved in this story what Mr. Huxley has often attempted but never yet quite achieved: a true evocation of the disillusioned and pessimistic spirit of the age. In wit he is Mr. Huxley's equal; in intellect he is immensely his superior." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:262 N 14 '25 400w

"The canvas is small. The colours are dazzlingly bright. Mr. Myers is witty, he can cram complexity into a phrase; he is lyrical, he can make the forests teem and lower; he is philosophical. But—." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 26:178 N 21 '25 300w

"We close Mr. L. H. Myers's novel with a feeling that 'Clio' has earned its place in the fictional registry, among the smart fleet that flies the house flag of the Mayfair school of novelists."

+ N Y Times p10 D 6 '25 760w

"As the party travels up the great tropical river, conversation pours in torrents, chiefly from the three young couples engaged in promiscuous lovemaking, in less degree from the elder people. All this is very brightly and gracefully delivered, but is of no aid whatever in getting the story along."

+ — N Y World p7m Ja 10 '26 220w

"If Harry is Mr. Myers's chief triumph, it is not to be supposed that the other characters are not also remarkable successes. All have that odd appearance which comes of Mr. Myers's way of looking at human beings, as if, instead of seeing them from a reasonable distance, he had gone too near them. Brief quotations can give no adequate idea of the fine intelligence that has here expressed itself in scores of reflective passages and swift generalizations."

+ Sat R 140:542 N 7 '25 750w

"A great many small incidents occur as the ship makes her way up the river and back again, but the people to whom they occur are so futile that their adventures and amours are uninteresting and ridiculous. His first novel, The Orissers, made so favourable and lasting an impression, and contained at least two characters of such disquieting permanence and beauty, that he can never have composed The Clio seriously. It was time that someone should expose the vulgarity of the current novels of intellectual high society with which we have lately been surfeited, for they are much shoddier than the paper novelettes which entertain housemaids with tales of the velvet and limousines of countesses."

MYERS, LEOPOLD H.—Continued

+ Spec 135:843 N 7 '25 380w

"Mr. L. H. Myers has followed 'The Orissers' with a book of a very different kind. In The Clio he has abandoned the portentous and the exhaustive for a lighter, more summary, and more amusing manner. He still has the air of ruminating over a collection of strange animals in an aquarium, but he does so with detachment and with a frequent smile. The effect is not so impressive, we must admit: the slight tinge of frivolity about the present novel was against that. Nevertheless, Mr. Myers's study is the work of a penetrating writer, who shows that he can happily blend acuteness with gaiety and humour with truth."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p770 N 19 '25 580w

MYERSON, ABRAHAM. When life loses its zest. (Mind and health ser.) 218p $1.75 Little 132 Anhedonia. Mental hygiene 25-4467

A neurologist here deals with the mental state known as anhedonia, a morbid condition in which the person suffers from restlessness and loss of energy, desire and satisfaction. The search for the underlying causes of this condition leads the author to a study not alone of such matters as the energy-feeling, appetite, insomnia, sex, doubt, fear, obsessions, etc., but into a discussion of the nature of society and the obstacles it places in the way of rational living.

Booklist 21:292 My '25

Boston Transcript p8 My 29 '25 180w

"Every sane person will find himself in practical agreement with nearly everything in this book."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 22 '25 250w

"In the most interesting manner Dr. Myerson has analyzed boredom and demonstrated its causes, effects and cures."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 80w

Outlook 140:305 Je 24 '25 40w

Reviewed by Joseph Jastrow

Sat R of Lit 2:150 S 26 '25 560w

Wis Lib Bul 21:227 O '25

MYRON, PAUL, pseud. See Linebarger, P. M. W.

N

NANSEN, FRIDTJOF. Hunting and adventure in the Arctic. 462p il $4 Duffield [15s Dent] 919.8 Arctic regions. Hunting—Arctic regions 25-7261

Nansen made his first expedition to the Arctic in 1882 to study its animal life and physical features. He describes the trip north in the "Viking," navigating the ice-field and hunting adventures with seal, whales and polar bears.

Booklist 21:335 Je '25

Bookm 61:712 Ag '25 150w

Reviewed by Edmund Noble

Boston Transcript p3 F 28 '25 2050w

"As an observer he is alert and interesting, but his zest as a seal killer will be unpleasant to humanitarians and animal lovers. The illustrations are chiefly rather crude contemporary drawings by the author, accurate but uninspired. Nevertheless, an interesting story told with gusto and high spirits."

+ — Ind 114:422 Ap 11 '25 70w

Reviewed by Fullerton Waldo

Lit R p4 J1 3 '25 350w

Reviewed by Edmund Candler

Nation and Ath 37:374 Je 20 '25 850w

"Not the story of a great undertaking, such as Professor Nansen told in 'Farthest North,' but any reader with outdoor tastes and a liking for natural history will find in it much that is interesting."

N Y Times p7 Mr 1 '25 1250w

Outlook 139:506 Ap 1 '25 140w

R of Rs 71:447 Ap '25 150w

St Louis p349 S '25

Sat R 139:589 My 30 '25 40w

Sat R 139:715 Je 27 '25 380w

Sat R of Lit 1:782 My 23 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p346 My 21 '25 1050w

NASH, LUTHER ROBERTS. Economics of public utilities; a reference book for executives, investors, engineers, and students. 430p $4 McGraw

380 Public utilities

25-17724

"Mr. Nash first takes up the origin and development and the 'distinguishing characteristics' of public utilities and follows these subjects by a chapter on franchises and another on capitalization. Next there are taken up accounting methods, regulation, valuation, depreciation, rate of return to investors, and rate structures. The subjects treated in the last part of the book are taxation, tests of utility securities as investments, and a related chapter on tests of utility development; public ownership and public relations, some current utility problems and a final discussion of outstanding issues."—Eng N

"An interesting addition to such current literature as falls into the hands of investors and executive officers, and this book ought to have a wider appeal on account of the ever-present influence that public utility services exert on the life of urban citizens." D. C. Jackson

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 28 '25 1550w

"With allowances for one extreme instance and less obvious bias, the book is a valuable contribution to utility literature. Most of those who are on the private utility side will welcome it unreservedly."

+ — Eng N 95:1004 D 17 '25 700w

NATHAN, GEORGE JEAN. Autobiography of an attitude. 292p $2.50 Knopf

814

25-20050

"In 'The Autobiography of an Attitude' Mr. Nathan has so to speak organized his philosophy, given it a name, and, here plaintively, there truculently, anon light heartedly, explained it. The book is a compilation of various speculations and opinions, such as have appeared under the title of 'Clinical Notes' in 'The American Mercury,' and purports to give a more or less orderly statement of the author's attitude toward things in general."—Bookm

Booklist 22:152 Ja '26

"In general, there is not much to object to in it or at least in the opinions based upon it. It is mainly the manner that lacks convincingness, and it is a manner that succeeds only when it amuses. Here the manner does not seem to me as amusing as it used to be. The later sections of the book are full of sound or arresting ideas, mingled with some good and some not-so-good fooling." R. M. Gay

+ — Bookm 62:336 N '25 400w

"Each thrust is accompanied with a number of flourishes the better to show off the pose of the thruster. Once in a while he draws blood—usually he is as effective as a Chinese swordsman on the Keith circuit." K. S.

— Boston Transcript p4 O 17 '25 600w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 115:477 O 24 '25 500w

NATHAN, ROBERT. Jonah. 212p $2 McBride
Jonah, the prophet—Fiction 25-4208

From the legendary figure of Jonah the prophet Mr Nathan has created his fantasy. It is a very human Jonah and no grim prophet who is here imagined—a man whose love has proved false and whose God has appeared unkind. In his dejection he loses confidence in himself and in his gift of prophecy.

Bocklist 21:304 My '25
Bookm 61:219 Ap '25 160w

"That a story founded upon the prophet Jonah should be written in the twentieth century is in itself a thing of note, but that it should be written in the way in which Mr. Nathan has written it makes it remarkable." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 1350w

"A light, roving, unboisterous humor, guiltless, I judge, of specifically intellectual intent, a gentle derision, unbelieving, certainly, but poetic and humane, seems to have seized upon the distant, august story and recomposed it merely for its own purposeless pleasure. The result may or may not offend; but it will hardly offend because of deliberate brutality; and even if it does offend, it will be bound to give the incidental pleasure which comes from skilled simplicity and civilized grace of expression." M. K.

+ Cath World 121:426 Je '25 420w
Cleveland p66 Je '25

"It has humor, charm, and a smooth slyness. An amusing, effective book."

+ Ind 114:386 Ap 4 '25 30w

"It is the book of an artist, and of one who understands not only beauty, but the frailties and contradictions of human nature." E. H. Wyman

+ Int Bk R p428 My '25 320w

"Excellently contrived story. I said 'excellently contrived,' for I cannot at the moment call to mind a more ingenious mixture of irony and beauty than is here spread for those who love wit and fine phrases." C: C. Baldwin

+ Lit R p6 F 21 '25 850w

"He has perhaps a little overdone the jaunty modernity of the language which he permits his characters, but it is, on the whole, an amusing book, illuminated with wit, and, in general, restrained by taste." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 120:331 Mr 25 '25 90w

"So cleverly is a skill for constructing passages of verbal beauty fitted to a flair for satiric epigram that one is attracted to his work by the varied colors of his prose, only to be disappointed by the thread-bare quality of his ideas."

+ N Y Times p8 F 15 '25 680w

"Nathan's new novel is his best piece of work. In this story Nathan has managed to preserve the simplicity of the Old Testament and heaven the mass by as sly a twist of good-natured satire as ever I read." Laurence Stallings

+ N Y World p1m F 8 '25 1000w

"The writing of the book is delightful; the purpose and substance of the satire are somewhat wavering."

+ Outlook 139:347 Mr 4 '25 120w

"Mr. Robert Nathan has followed up his delightful little book, 'The Puppet Master,' with a story equally brief and even more delightful." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 140:263 S 5 '25 450w

"In his earlier books Mr. Nathan wrote perfectly of small things, working in a very restricted medium, and always just missing greatness because of the limitations he imposed on himself. In 'Jonah' some of these limitations are absent, but he again falls short of the mark because of this shift in viewpoint, and because of a too-conscious irony." W. F. Kohn

+ Sat R of Lit 1:627 Mr 28 '25 700w

"Mr. Nathan's whimsical imagination and dainty sense of comedy provide something more than entertainment; they enable us to interpret a familiar religious symbolism. As an amusing but somewhat amateurish essay in Biblical exegesis, his treatment of the story of Jonah is by no means original; its levity conforms—outwardly, at least—to a customary iconoclasm. But Mr. Nathan, displaying an ardent intellectual honesty, has tried to substitute for the fervour and innocence of the Old Testament narrative a more sophisticated nobility."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p582 S 10 '25 350w

NATIONAL COUNTRY LIFE CONFERENCE, 6th, St Louis, 1923. Rural home; proceedings. 246p $2 Univ. of Chicago press

630.1 Farm life. Sociology, Rural

In this series of papers the subject of the farm home is discussed from the economic as well as the welfare point of view. Woman's place in farm life, as the severest test that agriculture has to face, has prominence in the discussion, also the training of the child and the improvement of home conditions.

J Home Econ 17:294 My '25 30w

"Discussion of the 'rural home,' or the 'American home,' is frequently accompanied by softening of the intellect, but on the whole the Proceedings of the Sixth National Country Life Conference is remarkably objective. It has not entirely escaped sentimentality; some of the addresses still have evidence of the awe and reverence generally associated with religious ceremonial." R. C. White

+ Survey 54:111 Ap 15 '25 460w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p76 Ja 29 '25 60w

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY, Washington, D.C. Book of fishes, food fishes, shell-fish and curious citizens of American ocean shores, lakes and rivers. 243p il de luxe $4 The society

597 Fishes 24-27800

Contents: Fishes and fisheries of our North Atlantic seaboard, by J. O. La Gorce; Our heritage of the fresh waters, by C. H. Townsend; Certain citizens of the warm sea, by L. L. Mowbray; Curious inhabitants of the Gulf stream, by J. T. Nichols; Devil-fishing in the Gulf stream, by J. O. La Gorce; Salmon: America's most valuable fish, by H. M. Smith; Oysters: a leading fishery product, by H. M. Smith; Life on the Grand Banks, by F. W. Wallace; Color plates from life, by H. Murayama.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:602 D '25

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY, Washington, D.C. Book of wild flowers; an introduction to the ways of plant life, together with biographies of 250 representative species and chapters on our state flowers and familiar grasses. 243p il $4 The society

580 Flowers 24-31492

"Contents: Exploring the mysteries of plant life, by W. J. Showalter; Our state flowers, by Gilbert Grosvenor; Familiar grasses and their flowers, by E. J. Geske and W. J. Showalter; Plant biographies by W. J. Showalter."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:408 J1 '25

NEARING, SCOTT. Educational frontiers. 250p $1.50 Seltzer

371 Patten, Simon Nelson. Teaching 25-18381

Taking as his model a great teacher, Simon Patten, for thirty years professor of economics in the Wharton school, University of Pennsylvania, Scott Nearing gives an inspiring view of the rôle and opportunity of the teacher in a free society. Professor Patten "devoted himself to seeking out the truth, expounding it and striving to build it into the life of his community." Scott Nearing shows a vision of what teaching may signify if inspired by such an ideal, and how far short of this most teaching falls.

NEARING, SCOTT—Continued

Booklist 22:103 D '25

Bookm 62:351 N '25 230w

"Mr. Scott Nearing's 'Educational Frontiers' restates in brief form—for which one is grateful—and with some degree of literary restraint, the thesis of Upton Sinclair of 'The Goose-Step.' But in Mr. Nearing's case it is not necessary to pursue my rhetorical questions. He is quite frank about what he wants." Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 S 13 '25 1700w

R of Rs 72:556 N '25 90w

"Professor Nearing's book presents two distinct motives, first the story of a great teacher leader, then a plea for a new social order, a call to the teachers of the world to lead in the creation of this new order. Of the story of the great teacher-leader, Dr. Patten of Pennsylvania University, there can be but one opinion; on the matter of teacher-leadership in social form, there must be as many as there are readers of the book. The reader may lay down the book in irritation or delight but he will find his brain cells stirred, considerably stirred, which is what a teacher aims for always." Angelo Patri

+ Sat R of Lit 2:480 Ja 9 '26 580w

"The book is no smashing blow like Upton Sinclair's Goose Step; it lacks his wholesale conscription of evidence; but neither does it so inveterately, shall I say, apply a selective service to truth. It is therefore less devastating and more inconsistent; less of an exposure but more revealing. You feel that under it all Nearing is a teacher himself, who loves his calling; to whom, in truth, the school is a trysting place of the spirit." P. U. Kellogg

Survey 55:443 Ja 1 '26 1350w

NEARING, SCOTT, and FREEMAN, JOSEPH.
 2 Dollar diplomacy. 353p $2.50 Viking press

327.73 United States—Territorial expansion.
 United States—Foreign relations. Imperialism. United States—Economic policy

25-24117

A study in American imperialism, of the growth of America's economic interests abroad, and the diplomatic and military support given them by the federal government. The authors show how close is the relation between investment abroad and foreign policy and how imperialism develops, from the opening wedge of peaceful economic penetration, thru the successive stages known as spheres of influence, political regulation, armed intervention, acquisition without annexation, and, finally, conquest and purchase. The workings of these different phases of imperialism are traced in the dealings of the United States government with Canada, China, Mexico, the Caribbean region, Cuba, and the Philippine and Virgin Islands.

Reviewed by Arthur Pound

Ind 115:684 D 12 '25 1000w

Lit R p8 Ja 2 '26 150w

"As a handbook for propagandists against 'imperialism' this book will have value, for it is full of carefully selected ammunition. But the authors have refrained, rather heroically, from airing opinions. They have stuck close to the letter of the official documents most pertinent to their purposes and have cited authorities freely, both in footnotes and in an appended bibliography." R. L. Duffus

N Y Times p1 N 8 '25 380w

NEIHARDT, JOHN GNEISENAU. Song of the Indian wars. 231p il $2.25 Macmillan

811 Indians of North America—Wars

25-11031

"Here we have John G. Neihardt contributing 'The Song of the Indian Wars' as the third volume in his bravely ambitious project of 'an epic cycle of the West.' This new poem tells, in fourteen episodes, the tale of the struggle for the great bison pastures west of the Missouri that began at the close of the Civil War and ended in 1890. It is a splendid tragedy of the inevitable conflict between settler and nomad, brilliant with the heroism of both red and white."—Outlook.

Booklist 22:152 Ja '26

"Verse which is always competent and sometimes brilliant and powerful. The moods of the times—in the Indian village, in the soldiers' camp, and in the pioneers' cabin—are poignantly distinct; and the human note, as always in Neihardt's work, rises clear and plain. Here is the greatest Indian fighting, without a doubt, in American poetry, as well as veridic and memorable Indian oratory, rough and desperate heroism of troopers, and pictures of the plains in all seasons of the year." F. L. Mott

+ Bookm 62:88 S '25 1000w

"Mr. Neihardt is at his best when describing scenery or the atmosphere of great deeds, but hampered by proper nouns when he would be historical." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '25 360w

"Intangible, invisible as the wind, yet no less real, the soul of the poem reveals itself to our hearts, communicating a living sense of the relationship of Red and White, of man and nature, of earth and sun, of planet and universe." H. G. Masters

+ Int Bk R p38 D '25 1500w

"Mr. Neihardt has not merely pored over books and documents relating to his subject but has found yet more precious source material in the talk of old plainsmen and Indian fighters. His understanding of the Sioux is rooted in six youthful years among the Omahas, a tribe of that people. He is as well equipped as paleface minstrel well could be to sing what is to us the Winning of the West." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p2 O 3 '25 800w

"The greatest accomplishment of the poem is its epic spirit. 'Stark saga stuff' this is, indeed, handled with sureness and power. 'The Song of the Indian Wars' is a significant poem, and in some respects a great one." F. L. Mott

+ N Y Tribune p4 S 20 '25 750w

"The drama marches. The verse is nervous and muscular. The rhymed couplets are occasionally clogged, monotonous, heavy; but these lapses are few for a poem running over 200 pages. The greater proportion of the lines hiss brilliantly or move with facile leisureliness or swarm with sudden giants and agilities and make burning music through the story." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p6m Ja 3 '26 500w

"This poem, I hope against hope, will win the author the award of a Pulitzer prize; and I further hope that if it finds such deserved fortune, the verdict of the discriminating judges will not be set aside by the powers behind the scenes." Arthur Guiterman

+ Outlook 141:286 O 21 '25 450w

R of Rs 72:558 N '25 80w

"Stern, chaste, far-gazing, with no ornamentation, every line of the poem, as every line of the building, is part of a great whole, and it is the whole alone that is significant, the mood of things greatly conceived and greatly wrought." J. T. House

+ Sat R of Lit 2:428 D 16 '25 1000w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p775 N 19 '25 240w

NEILL, ESTHER WAGGAMAN. Barbara's marriage and the bishop. 243p $2 Macmillan

25-4988

A story of marriage from the Catholic viewpoint, showing how a charming, delicately-bred Southern girl kept her marriage vows even when her husband proved untrustworthy. The book closes with the death of the husband and a promise of happiness for Barbara.

"When we say that her book gives us faith in youth we mean just that. To her everything here is new, so that we know it will never grow too old to receive the care of the newer generation."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 320w

"The book is well worth reading, and a refreshing contrast to much of our recent fiction."

+ Cath World 121:429 Je '25 130w

"The plot isn't modern and the method is far removed from the present day realistic style. But the book is fluently written and has a good bit of atmosphere about it. It is an atmosphere that some may find stifling, but which, on the whole, seems to us pleasant." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p10 Mr 14 '25 400w

"As a novel 'Barbara's Marriage and the Bishop' is not particularly diverting, nor is its interest great. The characters are well and humorously drawn, the narrative is sustained on an adequate level of action, and the description is well handled; but it is not a very good book."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 1 '25 500w

NEILSON, ISABEL. Madonna and the student. 282p $2 Huebsch [7s 6d J. Cape]

25-10972

"Rolande, the protagonist and story-teller comes to Munich in the days after the war to study German and write plays. . . Men call her Madonna-Vampire because she looks like a plaster saint, lives like one, and consequently breaks their hearts. Rolande is quite conscious of her assets when she arrives in Munich to reside with the Grafen Philippa, a young friend of English days, a composer of music and the very antithesis of herself. . . A German student, two years Rolande's junior, one Herr Stedmann, whose capacity for liverwurst is almost as great as his zest for passion, falls in love with her and upon every possible occasion discusses the idea of seducing her. Madonna-Vampire toys with the idea abstractedly and derives a certain pleasure from thinking about it. However, her native coldness of spirit, her terrible purity protect her from instinct and desire, to the bitter end."—N Y Tribune

"A very poor book may be almost as fascinating as a very good one; when it is bad enough to be amusing one can read it with the same zest that is to be obtained from a great novel. Such is the case with 'Madonna and the Student.'" B. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 3 '25 650w

"A first novel by a Chicagoan whose writing is bothered too much by insensate amours and sophomoric philosophy. The background of Munich is well done, but the characters—especially a tiresome heroine whose philosophy of men and their methods for her conquest form much of the book's material—are consistently uninteresting."

+ Ind 114:675 Je 13 '25 140w

"The novel is done in a sprightly vein. The story-thread that binds together the splashy sketches of cabarets, hallroom suppers, skiing on snow-covered hills, artistic groups in Little Bohemia is tenuous, but one never loses it." W. Y.

+ Lit R p8 Je 6 '25 300w

"A light and eminently readable book."

+ N Y Times p8 My 31 '25 520w

"The book purports to be a frank treatment of the sex problem. . . it seems unlikely that the confession of a character such as Madonna Vampire's, couched in journalistic English, will add zest to any life." C. M. Purdy

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 7 '25 400w

N Y World p4m Je 28 '25 100w

Sat R of Lit 2:90 Ag 29 '25 100w

Spec 134:981 Je 13 '25 50w

"As a portrayal of a feminine mind of an exceedingly unpleasant though not unintelligent type, the book has an element of the plausibility and coherency which it entirely lacks as a novel."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 300w

NEUHAUS, EUGEN. Appreciation of art. 250p il $3 (15s) Ginn

701 Art. Esthetics

24-23029

"Primarily this book aims to be of service to students who feel the need for a reasoned presentation of the fundamental principles that underlie the theory and the practice of all the arts. . . In the main the subject has been developed along two avenues of approach: first, a purely aesthetic consideration of the subject,—its content and formal values; and, second, a general consideration of elements that help to influence the currents of art,—that is, the social and economic forces that are active in the domain of art."—Preface

Booklist 21:223 Mr '25

"Although the author declares that his book is primarily for students, its greatest appeal by far is for the general reader. The wide range of subjects covered, the broad, rather superficial treatment throughout, the pleasant style, the attractive library binding, tend to support this statement."

+ Boston Transcript p5 F 7 '25 400w

"Professor Neuhaus has set himself a modest but sufficiently important task, and has done it well."

+ Hist Outlook 16:231 My '25 200w

Pratt p22 spring '25

"It is difficult to imagine any kind of reader who will not profit more in the appreciation of art from the chapter on 'Technical Methods and Qualities' than from all the rest put together. Some of Mr. Neuhaus's detached observations are admirable. The book is very well illustrated for its purpose, and English readers will not complain that many of the pictures are by unfamiliar American artists."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p57 Ja 22 '25 420w

NEVILL, RALPH HENRY. Paris of today. 320p 2 il $6 Doran [18s H. Jenkins]

914.436 Paris—Description, Paris—Social life and customs [24-31807]

Mr Nevill's book is devoted almost entirely to the lighter side of Parisian social life. He gossips about restaurants and cafés, the cabarets of Montmartre, gambling, horse-races, café-concerts, etc. There are chapters also on the Quartier Latin, on the fashionable residence quarter of Paris, and on the Paris of the past.

"There is a frightful amount of padding in Mr. Nevill's new book; and there is a good deal of repetition. However, this book will be a perfectly splendid guide for the nouveau riche who are out to spend money in Paris, not knowing the Etoile from the Rue Bac."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 30 '25 500w

"Ten racy and gossiping chapters on the varied gaiety and charm of Paris, from the Second Empire till to-day. Mr. Nevill is at times inclined to be tedious with his tirades against kill-joys and 'Puritans,' and the tone in which he writes of the world of gallantry is not always agreeable. But there is plenty of other, more attractive matter in his book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p583 S 18 '24 160w

NEVINS, ALLAN. American states during and after the Revolution, 1775-1789. 728p $4 Macmillan

973.3 United States—History—Revolution. State government 24-23941

The design of this volume is to present a summary of state history, as distinguished from national history, from the organization of the first independent state agencies at the beginning of the Revolution until 1789. The author traces the course of transition from colonies to states, the writing of the state constitutions and their development and revision. The political development of the three sections is sketched—the New England and Middle States and the South—the financial history of the states and their progress in social legislation. Then follows a discussion of the relation of the States to one another and to the central government.

NEVINS, ALLAN—Continued

"The treatment of education, literature, the Loyalists, and the westward movement leaves much to be desired. Yet, after all is said, the fact remains that Mr. Nevins's book is a valuable one, crammed full of useful facts that were not readily accessible heretofore. Anyone studying the period will find it indispensable, if only as a starting-point." S. E. Morison

+ — Am Hist R 30:611 Ap '25 950w

"Now for the first time we have a satisfactory conspectus of state history, as distinguished from national history, during the formative period."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:211 F '25 150w

"In this book the research is extensive and adequate, the point of view is detached, and, what is not so often found, the English style is good." G: M. Wrong

+ Canadian Hist R 6:73 Mr '25 430w

"The author has done his work with amazing thoroughness and care." C: M. Andrews

+ Nation 120:295 Mr 18 '25 950w

"The book is distinguished by a true historical insight and by moderation of opinion. The manner in which a great mass of source material has been woven into a connected narrative shows admirable mastery of the historian's tools. The style is clear and readable. All in all, Mr. Nevins's book stands as one that nobody who wishes to understand American history can afford to overlook." H. J. Eckenrode

+ New Repub 42:349 My 20 '25 950w

Reviewed by J: Corbin

N Y Times p12 Je 7 '25 1450w

"In this work Mr. Allan Nevins has performed a real service for students of the eventful period from 1775. He has gathered the materials for his study from many sources, all selected with discrimination and care. He has not depended entirely upon the labors of others, but has filled in many a gap with painstaking researches of his own." A. M. Schlesinger

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ja 25 '25 550w

"The bibliography is of unusual excellence. It will hereafter be considered an indispensable guide to the materials for a study of this period, and the book itself an essential one for the understanding of one of the most important epochs in our history." J. T. Adams

+ Sat R of Lit 1:321 N 29 '24 1300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p550 Ag 27 '25 1000w

"Taken all in all, this particular task has been done by Mr. Nevins about as well as it is likely to be done—certainly within the compass here determined. All students of American history will applaud its accomplishment." C. H. Van Tyne

+ Yale R n s 15:186 O '25 250w

NEW Decameron; fourth volume. 269p $2 Brentano's [7s 6d Blackwell]

Short stories—Collections

"The nine travellers in 'The New Decameron' continue, on this their fourth day, to entertain ourselves and each other with tales exhibiting considerable variety of theme and style."—(The Times [London] Lit Sup) The contributors to this collection of modern British Short Stories are D. H. Lawrence, J. D. Beresford, Horace Horsnell, Storm Jameson, Robert Keable, Edgell Rickword, Michael Sadleir, and L. A. G. Strong.

"This framework is bizarre in the extreme, and—one may judge—a little affected; moreover, those who have found it tiresome in the past are likely to think the prologue and links contributed by 'Blair' to the present collection even more irritating than usual. But while this framework gives the anthology an obvious surface distinctiveness, it stands or falls by the quality of the stories set therein; and the standard of the stories in the present collection is unusually high." J. F. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '25 520w

"If each writer seems to have sacrificed a little of his own salty individuality, the work as a whole gains in unity and cohesion."

+ — N Y Times p8 My 10 '25 600w

"The setting has nothing in common with the ghastly one of Boccaccio, none of that horrible significance which enhances the merriment of the tales through its undercurrent of death and disease. Blair's situation is very slight, but very clever and it forms a graceful framework which is so interesting and so well controlled that it will make a complete volume of the ten days tales, as it makes each individual volume a thing complete in itself." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p9 Je 14 '25 820w

"This time-honoured device for imposing some sort of unity on a collection of short stories is one that we can all enjoy; but we should have enjoyed it still more if the editor, in strict fidelity to his convention, had excluded from the body of the book the names of his contributors, which could have appeared with more propriety and to better effect in the final index."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 23 '25 300w

NEW YORK GUILD FOR THE JEWISH BLIND, comp. More aces; a collection of short stories. 384p $2 Putnam

Short stories—Collections

"Last year the Community Workers of the New York Guild for the Jewish Blind published, as a means of raising much-needed funds, a collection of short stories by well-known authors. So successful was the venture that they have repeated it this year with another collection of tales by masters of the art of the short story in America and England." (N Y Times) The authors represented are: George Ade, Mary Antin, Konrad Bercovici, Dorothy Canfield, Willa Cather, Fanny Hurst, Zona Gale, John Galsworthy, Sam Hellman, Leonard Merrick, Kathleen Norris, G. B. Stern, Benjamin R. Sher, Rita Weiman, Thyra Samter Winslow.

"Some of the stories are excellent; all of them could be read with delight by the millions of fiction magazine addicts."

+ Ind 115:619 N 28 '25 50w

Lit R p11 N 14 '25 160w

"It would be difficult to match anywhere in current literature the variety, the high level of craftsmanship, the brilliancy of performance that mark the collection. Each of the fifteen authors represented has contributed a story that he considers among his best work. How good that makes them all and the collection as a whole one has only to read the list of names to realize."

+ N Y Times p22 N 8 '25 150w

"It is difficult to dispraise 'More Aces' when one remembers that the royalties of the book go to charity. However, I must confess that this volume might be said to consist of second rate stories by first rate authors." Marya Zaturenska

+ — N Y Tribune p10 N 22 '25 180w

"In most instances the stories show their authors at their best."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:324 N 21 '25 70w

NEWCOMB, REXFORD. Old mission churches and historic houses of California; their history, architecture, art and lore. 379p il $15 Lippincott

726 California—Missions, California—Historic houses, etc. Architecture, Spanish 25-25399

This study of the architecture of Spanish California tells, by way of introduction, something of the setting of that architecture and the rise and development of the mission system. Then follows an account of mission architecture and a description of the chief missions. The last fifty pages are given to some interesting types of homesteads in Spanish California. There are 217 illustrations and measured drawings, also twenty-four line drawings.

"Mr. Newcomb has given architectural expression to an interesting politico-social movement in a book that is intended for the general reader as well as the architect. He has probably unearthed nothing that is new in a purely historical sense, but he owns to feeling some pride regarding his architectural 'finds.'" A. R. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '25 600w

Cath World 122:568 Ja '26 250w

N Y Times p7 D 6 '25 50w

NEWELL, LYMAN CHURCHILL. College chemistry. 645p il $3 Heath

540 Chemistry 25-9789

"This book is based on the courses in general chemistry as given by the author at Boston University during the last ten or more years. Throughout its preparation the need of the student has been kept constantly in mind, particularly his need of a book from which he can readily learn the fundamentals of chemistry. This thought has determined largely the style, arrangement and scope, especially in the first half of the book."—Preface

"The book throughout is written in language the beginner can understand, yet the treatment is thorough and up-to-date. It is a splendidly written book prepared by a successful teacher." B. S. Hopkins

+ Am Chem Soc J 47:2255 Ag '25 650w

"Dr. Newell has succeeded in producing a readable book that shows the important tie between chemical science and industry. It can be recommended to those who would refresh their past knowledge of general chemistry and at the same time keep up with later progress."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:878 N '25 70w

NEWFANG, OSCAR. Road to world peace; a federation of nations. 372p $2.50 (12s 6d) Putnam

341.1 Peace. League of nations 24-32118

"An American author writes this book, the purpose of which is the abolition of war. The method he believes necessary to attain that end is a world federation, and he deals with this problem in various stages. First he argues the need of such an organization, investigating the causes of war, and the benefits of and objections to a world Government. Then he considers some historical attempts at world unity and the lessons of the last war. That brings him to the League of Nations, the first stage of the edifice he would wish to see built, and he concludes with chapters on the possibility of a world federation as a development of the League."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Many opportunities of criticism are opened up by Mr. Newfang's method of abolishing war, but his motive and plan have much to recommend them and are otherwise welcome as a timely contribution to a subject that continues to bulk large in the public mind." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 17 '25 680w

Reviewed by W. F. Johnson

No Am 221:565 Mr '25 520w

Outlook 139:118 Ja 21 '25 10w

"A sincere—and a thoroughly logical—essay. The book avoids the merely argumentative tone, and is never controversial. But its calm logic is impressive, and it should be influential."

+ R of Rs 71:222 F '25 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p227 Mr 26 '25 130w

NEWHALL, RICHARD AGER. English conquest of Normandy, 1416-1424; a study in fifteenth century warfare. (Yale historical publications) 367p $4 Yale univ. press [18s 6d Milford]

942.04 Great Britain—History—Lancaster and York, 1399-1485. Normandy—History 24-21410

"Dr. Newhall takes the view that the English conquest and occupation of Normandy marks a step forward in the military art, and that the policy of Henry V was a change from that of his first campaign and from the earlier campaigns of the Hundred Years' war. . . The two chapters which describe the actual conquest are followed by three others dealing with military finance, military organization, and provisions of material. It is in these three chapters that we have the most novel information. The author has made good use not only of accounts in the Public Record Office, but of the material contained in the publications of French antiquarian societies and in departmental and other local archives."—Eng Hist R

Reviewed by O. L. Spaulding, Jr.

Am Hist R 30:804 Jl '25 620w

"A most valuable contribution to fifteenth-century history." C. L. Kingsford

+ Eng Hist R 40:275 Ap '25 1000w

"The volume is well written and well printed and accompanied by maps and by bibliographies of the voluminous manuscript and printed sources upon which it rests. In short, it is an excellent piece of historical workmanship." C. H. Haskins

+ N Y Tribune p5 F 8 '25 250w

NEWMAN, BERTRAM. Cardinal Newman. 223p $2 Century [8s 6d Bell]

B or 92 Newman, John Henry, cardinal 25-17836

"Mr. Newman—who states in his preface that he is not related to the great Cardinal—calls his work 'a biographical and literary study.' It is primarily biographical and secondarily literary, for Mr. Newman recounts the story of the Cardinal's life, pausing now and then to discuss or appraise his most important literary work of a given period. The final chapter is devoted to a discussion of 'Newman as a Man of Letters.'"—Cath World

"Mr. Newman displays discriminating sympathy as a biographer, delicate insight as a critic, and an almost Scottish shrewdness in both capacities. Mr. Newman has written a book which the general reader will find an admirable 'literary life' and which the confirmed devotee of Newman will be glad to add to his collection." J. J. R.

+ Cath World 122:279 N '25 280w

Reviewed by W. L. Phelps

Int Bk R p9 D '25 850w

"The book contains no new material, and no new theory, but is essentially an introduction to the already lavish Newman literature. Indeed, the lack of dogmatism is the best thing about it. Mr. Newman is not related to the Cardinal, nor is he personally concerned with the theological issues, and he therefore attains a detachment impossible to earlier biographers; his business is to restore proportion, and he goes about it straightforwardly and well."

+ Nation and Ath 36:862 Mr 21 '25 650w

"To compress into rather more than 200 pages a careful and thorough account of all Newman's writings, and to bring out all the more clearly, because so concisely, the light they throw on his character, is a task which needs a rare blend of insight and self-restraint. If, as is apparently the case, this is Mr. Newman's first book, all the more remarkable is the complete absence of immaturity and the sureness of touch which it shows."

+ New Statesman 24:721 Mr 28 '25 900w

"He stands more aloof from his subject than Dr. Reilly and lacks the impressive enthusiasm of the latter. His book differs from the other in being mainly biographical. It ought to be useful as an introduction to the study of a great personality. In the matter of literary appreciation Mr. Newman's remarks lack both novelty and zest."

NEWMAN, BERTRAM—Continued

+ — N Y Tribune p14 O 11 '25 120w

R of Rs 72:556 N '25 60w

"Mr. Newman's book, if it helps us to no clearer comprehension of his subject, might at least be said to increase (were that possible) our admiration for him, both as writer and thinker."

+ — Sat R 139:590 My 30 '25 420w

Sat R of Lit 2:381 D 5 '25 600w

"Coolness, imperturbable dispassion, marks Mr Newman's attitude throughout his book. His concern, he implies, is not to stand in shining armor at Newman's side and defend him from the by no means meager forces of his critics but to retell an oft-told story in a new way and in telling it to point out his foremost literary achievements and appraise them." J. J. Reilly

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 620w

"Mr. Bertram Newman's style is concise and pleasant, and should tempt the 'general reader' of our day to spare an hour or two in learning about a writer among whose works he would find it hard to get his bearings unassisted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p158 Mr 5 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p209 Mr 26 '25 1000w

NEWMAN, ERNEST. Musical critic's holiday. 330p $3 Knopf

780 Music—History and criticism 25-9386

The well-known musical critic of the London Sunday Times in order to escape the clash of opinion about him, imagines himself taking a holiday to think things over and get some perspective of musical history. Browsing in a great musical library, beyond the reach of visitors from the outside world, he tries to arrive at some principles of criticism by which to judge the innovators of each period and to separate the vital work of a new movement from the rest. He studies what contemporary criticism of the past had to say of the composers of its day and shows the never-ending struggle of musical genius against the conservatism and misunderstanding of its time. He argues that each age can judge surely as to its first rate composers and has no need to turn the task over to posterity.

Booklist 22:149 Ja '26

Bookm 61:714 Ag '25 260w

"If he sometimes proves too much, a rebate is made on a later page. In any case, he establishes the right to have an artistic faith and to exercise an artistic judgment by his examination of past criticism as effectively as Dr. Dyson does by his examination of contemporary music."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:434 Jl 4 '25 820w

"Mr. Newman has a refreshingly sane and candid point of view based on a really extraordinarily wide reading and profound knowledge of the history of music and of criticism; and also a proper sense of the value and necessity of his own profession. He does not hesitate to claim largely, nor fail to give ample justification of his claim." R. Aldrich

N Y Times p11 Ap 12 '25 1900w

"The critical fraternity owes Mr. Newman its very heartiest thanks. He certainly relieves their aching shoulders of a cumbersome burden!" Pitts Sanborn

+ N Y Tribune p5 My 17 '25 1150w

"'A Musical Critic's Holiday' is assuredly his most fascinating book; I devoured it, indeed, as it is my habit to devour novels that entertain me, at a single sitting." Carl Van Vechten

+ Sat R of Lit 1:772 My 23 '25 1100w

Spec 135:275 Ag 15 '25 260w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p411 Je 18 '25 1400w

NEWMAN, ERNEST. Wagner as man and artist. 399p il $5 Knopf

B or 92 Wagner, Richard

24-30743

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:311 My '25

Bookm 61:238 Ap '25 150w

"Every bit of scandal that was ever whispered in European coulours is here endlessly rehearsed and generally believed in. The 'life' is a long series of littlenesses."

— Dial 79:175 Ag '25 130w

"Musical criticism is so often no more than a display of pedantic dullness, or personal caprice, or simply bad temper that one welcomes with delight the exercise of an intelligence as incorruptible as it is certainly not pea-green. There is nothing ponderous about Mr. Newman's learning, and nothing spiteful or ignorant about his wit. He was one of the first to write a full study of Wagner in English, and he is one of the last to give the shining distinction of wisdom and learning to the unraveling of a personality whose art reshaped the texture of music, roused the diligent wrath of schoolmen, and even now afflicts the chambered elegance of those who like to talk about 'pure' music." T. Munro

+ Nation 119:656 D 10 '24 1650w

"It is obvious that Mr. Newman has kept his hands off the paradox that was Wagner. He is as enthusiastic for the artist as he is merciless toward the man. It is rather for the reader to edit the life; to find in the Tristan and Kurneval the relationship that Wagner expected from his friends, to trace the necessity for a philosophy of renunciation like that of Parsifal in the satiety that arose from too many festooned satin roses in the ceiling, too many soft perfumes and embroidered waistcoats in the Briennerstrasse; to seek in the music itself the perfect picture of heroic moods that can come only from a man who is to himself a hero."

M. E. Opdycke

New Repub 42:106 Mr 18 '25 600w

Reviewed by H: T. Finck

Sat R of Lit 1:477 Ja 24 '25 900w

"Eminently readable, from cover to cover, and giving further evidence of the fascinating power over the imagination exerted by Wagner's protean and gigantic figure, this volume presents the subject with a freshness of enthusiasm that is at once communicated to the reader." L. M. Isaacs

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:208 Mr '25 400w

Wis Lib Bul 21:196 Jl '25

NEWMAN, FRANCES, comp. and tr. Short story's mutations. 332p $2.50 Huebsch

Short story. Short stories—Collections

25-2971

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:226 Mr '25

"She has organized a vast amount of material and thrown it into suggestive form, so that her book is interesting and valuable, no matter where her sophisticated quips may fall."

+ Bookm 61:357 My '25 280w

"The thesis that species arise by sudden mutations is not remotely proved in the author's comments; but in recompense her running style makes many sprightly leaps across the centuries, soaring over as many as twenty authors on one page, and dropping ideas everywhere as it goes. Her translations are graceful."

+ — Dial 78:249 Mr '25 160w

"Miss Newman has originality of ideas and an appalling mass of reading on which to base and illustrate her theories. At times the full rush and volume of her references overflow the banks and floods the surrounding pages; she is often incoherent, but never quite pedantic."

+ — Ind 114:135 Ja 31 '25 200w

"The theory of mutation as applied to the short story is not clearly brought out. Everywhere the scholarship involved shows loose ends. Yet there are subtle little hints, brief remarks, almost gossip, on dozens of writers and movements. Some of it is pertinent and some of it is not. All of it is interesting." N. B. Fagin

 — + Int Bk R p301 Ap '25 450w

"She shows so much erudition, so many hundreds of authors and their works are casually yet knowingly alluded to and put in their pigeon-holes, such extraordinarily wide reading is indicated—that it is all stupendous."
 Outlook 139:459 Mr 25 '25 320w

"It is a pity that, as Miss Newman had sense and talent and extreme good judgment, she should cast her sentences so paradoxically and loudly that it is often next to impossible to reduce them to clarity."
 + — Spec 134:126 Ja 24 '25 280w

"Her selection is on the whole an excellent and suggestive one. As a critic Miss Newman bends all her wits, which are not inconsiderable, to the task of muffling up her ideas in a mist of proper nouns. Her passion for circumlocution destroys what might have been a useful contribution to criticism."
 + — The Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 5 '25 160w

NEWMAN, FREDERICK HENRY. Production and measurement of low pressures. 192p il $5 Van Nostrand [16s Benn]

533 Gases. Vacuum pumps [25-20393]

"The object, as stated by the author, is to present to the physicist and engineer, in readily available form, information concerning the production and measurement of low pressures which is contained in the many and scattered journals and which, therefore, is not ordinarily accessible to the man who wishes to use it. The four chapters on vacuum pumps, under the headings of Oil Pumps, Mercury Pumps, High Speed Molecular and Mercury Vapour Pumps, cover the subject in a comprehensive manner. The chapters on Sorption Processes and Chemical, Thermal, and Electrical Processes contain much information, including many of those phenomena the theoretical explanation of which is not adequate. The chapter on Manometers for Low Gas Pressures is quite complete and commendable. The chapter on Exhaust Procedure might well have been expanded."—Ind & Eng Chem

"Dr. Newman has done a real service in preparing this monograph. Its timeliness, usefulness and wide appeal are matched by its absolute authoritativeness, completeness and splendid organization; it should be indispensable to anyone who contemplates or is engaged in high vacuum researches. It is one of the books which any true scientist delights in adding to his library, because it is a complete and self-contained treatise upon a subject of great interest and importance." G: L. Clark
 + Chem & Met Eng 32:702 Ag '25 450w

"The author has admirably accomplished his aim and presents a thorough discussion of the whole field. He has used a minimum of mathematics consistent with an accurate presentation of the possibilities and theory involved. He has described all of his apparatus in rather detailed form, but in a manner which makes interesting reading for those who wish general information on the subject, as well as to supply the information to those specifically interested in a given apparatus. The references might have been more valuable if they had been arranged in the form of a bibliography. The diagrams are adequate and are clearly and pleasingly arranged." W. E. Tisdale
 + — Ind & Eng Chem 17:986 S '25 320w

"Prof. Newman's short account of making glass to metal joints shows that he is unaware of the ease with which such seals are now carried out on a technical scale even up to a diameter of several inches. As a whole the book is an excellent one and will be welcomed by all who are interested in the subject." R. Le R.
 + — Nature 116:352 S 5 '25 350w

NEWMAN, H., ed. The real Jew; some aspects of the Jewish contribution to civilization; with a prefatory note by the chief rabbi, and an introd. by Israel Zangwill. 291p $3 Macmillan [7s 6d Black]

296 Jews

Various writers have contributed to this volume of miscellaneous essays on the Jew and his achievements in different spheres. The book is arranged in three sections. The first deals with the teachings of Judaism and Jewish observances. The second surveys Jewish contributions to art, science, philosophy and literature. The third is devoted to Jewish activities in such fields as the drama, athletics and Eastern exploration, and to Jews as pioneers in British possessions and as citizens.

"It is rather agreeable, for a change, to receive, as we do this week, a book as frank as 'The Real Jew.'"

+ Sat R 139:589 My 30 '25 60w

Sat R 140:20 J1 4 '25 140w

"The advisability of indulging in a plea for respect and consideration is one for which we have no criticism; but it remains to be said that the attempt to set forth the claims of the Jew to the world's esteem lends a rather self-conscious air to most of the contributions. The moral sense is freely exhibited in the majority of these essays, at times not without nobility."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p439 J1 2 '25 400w

NEWSHOLME, SIR ARTHUR. Ministry of health. (Whitehall ser.) 271p $2 (5s) Putnam
 614.0942 Public health. Great Britain. Ministry of health

"Much of the substance of the book is highly technical, and will be of interest to those specially concerned with the problems of public administration rather than to the general reader. A theme which the author is clearly anxious to emphasize is that Public Health offers certain definite advantages as a career to medical men possessing organizing abilities, tact and public spirit. The author describes the conditions of the tenure of the offices in question, their security, their salaries, and their retiring pensions, with the object of inducing medical men to consider Public Health as a profession. Throughout the book, the importance of adopting general preventive measures in preference to treatment after disease has appeared is justly stressed."—Sat R

"Is naturally in large measure too closely confined to the details of British practice to be of interest to any but the advanced student of health administration. Yet there is much in the work which will appeal to every thoughtful health officer." C.-E. A. Winslow
 + — Am J Pub Health 15:1109 D '25 520w

"His book is admirable as a book on public health administration, and if it does not altogether fit its title, that is due to the fact that the title does not altogether fit the Ministry of which it is the official designation."

+ Nation and Ath 37:738 S 19 '25 180w

"Not so vividly written as Sir E. Troup's companion study of the Home Office, it is still a thoroughly competent piece of work and a storehouse of valuable information."

+ — New Statesman 25:584 S 5 '25 150w

"For the Ministry of Health there exists no one more competent to speak than the author of this book. . . . The only criticism which could be brought against the book is that the general reader, whom it is obviously needful to educate in matters of national health and hygiene, will find the significant and interesting chapters dealing with the history, achievements and methods of the battle against disease, lost in what will seem to him a wearisome discussion of administrative problems and technique."

+ — Sat R 140:75 J1 18 '25 480w

NEWTON, ALFRED EDWARD. Greatest book in the world; and other papers. 451p il $5 Little

814 Book collecting 25-17139

These fourteen papers deal with a variety of subjects but most of them are suggested by the author's favorite hobby of book-collecting. The "Greatest book in the world" is, of course, the Bible, and his first paper deals with the various versions and editions of the English Bible. The "Ghosts of Gough Square" has to do with one of London's literary shrines, the house in which Dr Johnson lived for ten years. The "Dialogue between father and son" is about the remarkable partnership of Gilbert and Sullivan. Among the other papers is one on colored-plate books, and one on London in the eighteen-eighties.

Reviewed by M. A. DeW. Howe
Atlantic's Bookshelf N '25 520w
Booklist 22:110 D '25

Reviewed by R. M. Gay
Bookm 62:337 N '25 320w

"Primarily this is a book for book collectors, as indeed all of Mr. Newton's writings are. But whether one collects books or not he will find in 'The Greatest Book in the World'—either The Book or Mr. Newton's—much good reading." G: H. Sargent

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 10 '25 2000w
Cleveland p121 D '25

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd
Ind 115:394 O 3 '25 1200w

"A volume of singular vitality and charm."
+ Ind 115:589 N 21 '25 180w
Nation 121:628 D 2 '25 30w

"Perhaps the feature of these papers that impresses one most is the delightful style which their author has developed, a style so pleasing that any professional writer trained in letters might well envy him. For it is a medium perfectly adapted to the nature of the material, easy, flowing, sometimes taking on a sort of intimacy, picturesque always and diversified with endless whimsies, bits of philosophy, humorous reflections, ironic comments, roguish asides, affording a full and never-failing stream of entertainment that carries also much good and clear and useful thought and much treasure of information." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p5 S 20 '25 1800w

"He has many prejudices, and, as nearly all of them are exactly like our own, we pronounce them to be sound prejudices."

+ Outlook 141:641 D 23 '25 180w
Pratt p28 autumn '25

"A bookman may remark that the essays of a bibliophile are apt to be genial in tone and positive in taste; and these are literary values. Mr. Newton's essays have these values. He successfully conveys himself, and is worth conveying." A. W. Colton

+ Sat R of Lit 2:460 Ja 2 '26 850w
Springf'd Republican p6 N 2 '25 550w

NEWTON, JOSEPH FORT, ed. Best sermons, 2 1925. 349p $2.50 Harcourt

252 Sermons

"Twenty-one sermons by as many different men. Among them are represented ten different Protestant communions, the Swedenborgian, Catholic and Jewish Churches, and the lay viewpoint, which is presented by Glenn Frank. The preachers from whose addresses the 'best sermons' have been chosen are Charles F. Aked, Charles Lewis Slattery, Father John Cavanaugh, Rabbi Joel Blau, William L. Stidger, Oswald W. S. McCall, Frank D. Adams, John A. MacCallum, Frederick K. Stamm, Peter Ainslie, M. Ashby Jones, Albert Parker Fitch, Harold C. Phillips, Andrew Mutch, Thomas D. King, Francis J. McConnell, Miles H. Krumbine, Edgar De Witt Jones, William L. Sullivan and W. J. Dawson."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:100 D '25

"Probably not the 'best' sermons, from every viewpoint, have been included, but the reviewer has no doubt that they are rightfully entitled 'best,' and that this second volume performs, again, an inestimable service to the cause of a religion which brings Christ into the lives of those who are called 'Christians.'" W. J. C.

+ Bookm 62:xvii Ja '26 250w

"Taken altogether, it is a fine cross-section of American preaching of today."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '25 400w

"Perhaps a better title for the volume would be 'Best Religious Addresses,' for it is at once evident that when Dr. Newton selected these discourses, some of which are most interesting and well constructed, and which must have been very effective when delivered, he was not thinking of a sermon as an oral, or written address which has for its purpose the presentation of the great facts of the Gospel." C. E. Macartney

Lit R p6 O 31 '25 950w

"This second volume of 'Best Sermons' is even more representative of the religions of the whole country than was the first."

N Y Times p12 O 18 '25 280w

"The volume makes stimulating and suggestive reading. Glenn Frank gives an admirable and constructive analysis of the disintegration of Protestantism from the layman's point of view; Rabbi Joel Blau, in a sermon of great power, describes the pathos and passion and prophecy of the modern yearning for spiritual reality; and Bishop Slattery writes as happily as ever of the confidence and faith of the believer's expectation. Others have much to give—and give it well." H. A. Prichard

+ Sat R of Lit 2:494 Ja 16 '26 750w

NICHOLS, ROSE STANDISH. Spanish & Portuguese gardens. 304p il $10 Houghton

710 Gardens. Spain—Description and travel.
Portugal—Description and travel 25-506

This account, by an American landscape architect, of the gardens of Spain and Portugal, is both historical and descriptive. Her study takes in gardens over nearly all parts of Spain, north as well as south, and many in Portugal, which is particularly attractive to students of gardens. The oriental origin of these gardens is traced and, in particular, the Moorish influence. There are 131 illustrations from photographs, including several from paintings by Rusiñol.

Reviewed by Richardson Wright
Bookm 61:224 Ap '25 230w

"Through its enchanting pages unscientific lovers of gardens can browse just as delightedly as students of garden architecture." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 7 '25 950w

"Miss Nichols has supplied a long-felt want, including, besides, a most valuable chapter on the means of obtaining results artistically produced in Spanish gardens. She also suggests which of the plants chiefly used in the Iberian peninsula are suited to various locations in this country, thus rendering the volume a peculiarly practical one." A. L. Hill

+ Lit R p12 F 21 '25 300w

"If she sees her gardens in rapid survey she sees them also in their modern artistic, social and topographical relations, and consequently her book, besides being very readable, illumines a phase of present-day Spain that is extremely interesting. It is copiously and beautifully illustrated."

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 4 '25 470w

Reviewed by Richardson Wright
N Y Tribune p5 Mr 15 '25 150w

"Miss Nichols's book is a rare treat to garden lovers."

+ Outlook 139:232 F 11 '25 300w

"The studied simplicity and unpretentious narrative are agreeable; so is the sensible practice of pausing, after description, to sum up and state conclusions." G. G. King

+ Sat R of Lit 1:558 F 23 '25 500w

NICHOLSON, JOHN HENRY. Re-making of the nations. 276p $5 Dutton [12s 6d K. Paul]
915 Asia—Civilization. Asia—Religion. Reconstruction (European war) [25-19003]

The author traveled for a year in Europe and in Asia, as a Fellow of the Albert Kahn Foundation. In this book he sets down his observations and impressions, necessarily hurried and inconclusive, of certain phases of national and international problems. He studies post war conditions in Europe, the penetration of the East by the civilization of the West, the religions of Asia, and the nationalistic spirit, and closes his record of impressions with a very hasty glance at the United States and Canada.

"Mr. Nicholson is at his best in the chapters dealing with religious tendencies in Asia, the mutual inter-actions of East and West, and the stirrings of nationality in the Orient. The worst part of his book is his utterly stereotyped and conventional chapter on America, which says all the things that visiting Englishmen usually say, and very little else." J. Bakeless

+ New Repub 45:141 D 23 '25 250w
New Statesman 26:312 D 19 '25 520w

"It is written modestly and with a consciousness of its inevitable deficiencies. But its author has well conveyed his impression of the bewildering variety of a world in transition."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p387 Je 4 '25 160w

NICHOLSON, KENYON. Garden varieties; six one-act plays and a burlesque for little theaters. 172p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

812 24-28247

Contents: White elephants; The bug man; Confession; The anonymous letter; The Casino gardens; The marriage of little Eva; So this is Paris green!

"Frank Shay, the play anthologist says, 'This is the most refreshing group of short plays I have seen in years.'"

+ Cleveland p129 My '25
N Y World p8e N 30 '24 100w

"This is an excellent small collection of one-act plays, all interesting, and well varied in topic."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:618 Mr 21 '25 150w

"The author handles bubbles as they should be handled—lightly and gayly, with just that touch of absurdity which makes for laughter."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:564 Ag '25 50w

"Light and clever."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:55 F '25

NICHOLSON, MEREDITH. And they lived happily ever after! 369p $2 Scribner

25-26930

The Cranes had been married 17 years. Long enough for Alice, the pretty, commonplace wife to grow bored with Morton, her conservative husband, and to seek distraction in a flirtation with his partner in the Spencer press. Howard was a bachelor and a good deal of a cad. Without compunction he ousted Morton from the Press, and supplanted him in his wife's affections. The affair was known to most of their set before the slow going Morton became aware of it. A divorce was arranged quietly, for their daughter's sake, and the ugly details suppressed. Ultimately Crane was persuaded by the woman he really loved, to remarry Alice, chastened by her taste of freedom and hard work, and to start married life over again on a foundation of mutual forbearance.

"Although 'And They Lived Happily Ever After' is not one of the best of Mr. Nicholson's stories, it is a thought-provoking novel. After all, is not that one of the requisites of a story that consciously or otherwise should inspire us to think? Not disagreeably, like some 'problem' novels, but somewhat soberly, and from interest that comes out of sympathy." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 17 '25 620w

"We do not believe that in the several volumes of his fiction we have read, Mr. Nicholson has so nearly approached a realistic delineation of life as he here reveals. He sets before us vital emotions, harbored by vital people, who move through a narrative as convincing and full of warm interest as the happenings of every-day existence." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p2 O 31 '25 350w

"No one of the characters really lives, nor does any phase of the situation ring true. This is a poor tract and a worse novel—which may not stand in the way of its success." D. B. W.

+ New Repub 45:198 Ja 6 '26 70w

N Y Times p22 O 4 '25 700w

Reviewed by L. G. Marshall

N Y Tribune p16 D 13 '25 400w

"Mr. Nicholson, after practicing many years, with indifferent success, at novel writing, has at last produced a story which should prove congenial to the moderately intelligent reader. The book is excellently written, temperately restrained, thoroughly interesting."

+ N Y World p1m O '25 100w

"What Mr. Nicholson has shown us is that, alas! there are vulgar people even in the Wabash Valley, and that fine natures cannot dwell in harmony with mean ones. In this, he has written earnestly a story the indisputable interest of which challenges critical curiosity." R. C. Holliday

+ Sat R of Lit 2:235 O 24 '25 420w

Springf'd Republican p5a N 22 '25 300w

NICKERSON, CHARLES SPARROW. Christianity, which way? a historical study of changes and achievements in the Christian church. 228p $1.75 Century

270 Church history. Christianity 25-3240

A brief study of certain periods in church history that bear directly upon modern religious problems—the apostolic period, the imperial period and the Reformation. The author shows that in past days the church has saved itself by its adaptability and willingness to change and that such a point of view is necessary today.

"From the early mention of the clear purpose to the author's final challenge there is compelling interest, substance, vivid interpretation and wholesome expression." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv Mr '25 250w

"He is hopeful in his outlook for the future of the church but does not hesitate to criticize. It is a wholesome tonic for the church of today." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 28 '25 150w

Cleveland p93 S '25

Springf'd Republican p10 Mr 17 '25 300w

"A good foundation for a study of some of the controversies of today."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:193 Jl '25

NICKLES, JOHN MILTON. Geologic literature on North America, 1785-1913. (Buls. 746, 747) 2v 1167;658p pa v 1 $1.25; v 2 65c Supt. of doc.

016.557 Geology—North America—Bibliography GS24-38

"Mainly a cumulation of the series of bibliographies of North American geology issued by the United States geological survey as bulletins 44, 75, 91, 99 (included in 127), 130, 135, 146, 149, 156, 162, 172 (cumulated in 188 and 189), 203, 221, 240, 271 (cumulated in 301), 372, 409, 444, 495, 524, 545, 584, 617, 645, 665, 684, and 698."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:407 Jl '25

NICOLL, ALLARDYCE. British drama. 498p il $3 Crowell [12s 6d Harrap]

822 English drama. Theater 25-22480

The professor of English language and literature in the University of London has written a comprehensive survey of British drama from its beginnings in the mysteries and miracle plays of the middle ages, to today. His purpose, as stated in the preface, is "to deal with the main manifestations of our English theatre rather than to write a series of brief criticisms of particular writers and of their works. . . . As the drama can never be disconnected from the playhouse itself, each division of this brief survey is prefaced by a sketch of the theatres and the audiences of the period treated in the following pages." There is a selective bibliography, with notes and a selected list of plays by minor writers.

"When he informs us that 'Mr. Henry Arthur Jones will be remembered not only for "Saints and Sinners," but for "The Masqueraders" (1894) and for "The Liars" (1897), all we need to say is that we know it and ask him why he takes the trouble to make so banal a statement. As a whole, however, his commentary is concise, shrewd, and based upon accurate knowledge." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 N 7 '25 400w

"We close the book without regret. Nothing very important, we feel, has happened to us. Professor Nicoll would have been better advised if he had never entered upon the eighteenth-nineties."

— Nation and Ath 38:264 N 14 '25 820w

"Professor Nicoll's work upon the history of the British stage is distinguished from the usual academic treatise by his ability to get away from the conventional platitudes of the 'literature class' and to see the English drama as a thing made by many hands for the enjoyment of the many. He is critic as well as historian, and sums up modern tendencies in a concise and useful way. A significant element of his book is to be found in the illustrations which are not the usual formal portraits of dramatists, but are a series of reproductions of stage-architecture and stage-decoration."

+ Sat R 140:485 O 24 '25 180w

"Professor Nicoll's new survey of the British Drama is not likely to increase his reputation. Apart from its summaries of the author's previously published works on Restoration and early eighteenth-century drama, and some important little-known illustrations, the book is of small value."

— Spec 135:720 O 24 '25 180w

"Prof Nicoll's book is a well organized and reasonably comprehensive study. There are few capricious judgments, and little if any fresh research."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 N 23 '25 450w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p765 O
29 '25 700w

NICOLL, ALLARDYCE. Introduction to dramatic theory. 217p $2.50 Brentano's [5s Harrap]

808.2 Drama [24-4812]

"Mr. Nicoll has undertaken no less a task than the study of dramatic literature from Aeschylus to Ibsen in an endeavor to analyze the underlying qualities and characteristics which link together the widely divergent forms of dramatic expression."—Theatre Arts Mo

"Actual accomplishment is less than we had been lead to expect. In fact, the book contains little but an analysis of tragedy and comedy as general forms of drama, and a comparison of their similarities. The exposition is at times elementary, at times over-repetitive, but nevertheless occasionally stimulating. Inasmuch as the book is styled an 'Introduction,' this proportion of elements is perhaps not out of place."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 F 4 '25 450w

"Mr. Nicoll's limitations can be seen at a glance by the examination of his bibliographical appendix. . . . He knows as little about the American contributions to dramatic history as he does about the French. Nor, oddly enough, is he much better informed about the significant contributions of contemporary British writers. And his book is about what might be expected from a writer so inadequately equipped." Brander Matthews

— Int Bk R p112 Ja '25 720w

"We find nothing of the theories of Molière, Corneille, Lope de Vega, Congreve, Goldoni, Lessing, and Abercrombie, to name but a few who have written on their own art. . . . We find an attitude that includes no enthusiasm for Marlowe; that cites Webster and Ford only to condemn them as sensational, that considers Shadwell dull, that seeks in vain for 'situation of a truly amusing kind' in The Importance of Being Earnest. A strange equipment for an introduction to Dramatic Theory! This condemnation is made because the book is one that can so easily be labelled 'competent,' and by its very existence prevent a better work appearing." J. Isaacs

— Spec 132:294 F 23 '24 350w

"He is thoroughly conversant with his material in its printed form, both as regards critical writings on the theatre and the plays themselves. If he fails to inspire he is at any rate informing, and has at his disposal the literature of many nations. His book might readily serve as a textbook for the student of the drama, and in such a connection the two brief bibliographies, the index, and the careful subdivision of subjects would be most useful."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 9:420 Je '25 100w

NICOLSON, VICTORIA MARY (SACKVILLE-WEST) (MRS HAROLD NICOLSON). See Sackville-West, V. M.

NIECKS, FREDERICK. Robert Schumann; ed. by Christina Niecks. (Dent's international lib. of books on music) 336p $5 Dutton [10s 6d Dent]

B or 92 Schumann, Robert

For the writing of this biography, on which he was for many years engaged, Dr Niecks had unusual qualifications. As a child, in company with his father who played in the Düsseldorf orchestra, he watched Schumann conduct at rehearsals and later played in the orchestra himself. He knew the musician's friends Joachim and Brahms, and had many long and intimate talks with them about Schumann. From these and many other informants who knew Schumann he has gathered facts and comments which add lifelikeness to a detailed and scholarly biography.

"This biography, almost encyclopedic in scope and content, presents the details of Schumann's life in a fine, dignified, solid manner."

+ Booklist 22:159 Ja '26

"The author was himself a musician of note and therefore well qualified to write critically of the Schumann compositions as well as to understand and to interpret the personal side of the master. The biography is made additionally valuable as a reference work by a complete list of Schumann's compositions and an excellent index." H. B.

+ Lit R p13 N 14 '25 180w

"In spite of obvious defects of construction, his book wins the sympathy of the reader both for the author and for his subject. The defects arise from the fact that the book is composed of a series of articles in which Professor Niecks dealt particularly with those episodes in Schumann's life about which there has been some controversy. Naturally, there is a lack of proportion; but this can be forgiven for the sake of the admirable study of Schumann's early years, the chapter on his relation with Mendelssohn, and sympathetic, but scrupulously fair, account of the Düsseldorf tragedy."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:158 O 24 '25 860w

"The greatness of Schumann as a man, the breadth and depth of his understanding, his extraordinary generosity and lack of petty jealousy come out very clearly in this admirable biography, and it should do something to revive interest in a great composer, whose claim to fame rests on the fact that not only was he a pioneer who enlarged the boundaries of musical expression, but a pioneer whose music is more peculiarly his own and owes less to his predecessors than that of any other composer."

+ New Statesman 26:supiii N 14 '25 950w

"This book will be welcomed by all lovers of the art of Robert Schumann as the first original treatment in English of his biography since the little book by Fuller Maitland published many years ago. Professor Niecks did not live to finish his work completely or to revise it finally. There are certain duplications and some lack of proportion. There is little critical examination of the compositions. Nor is Professor Niecks's English style of the most alluring." R: Aldrich

+ — N Y Times p24 D 27 '25 1800w

"The epistolary quotations from the composer's pen with which the present narrative is sprinkled make fresh and dewy pages in an otherwise manfully conscientious but not greatly moving review of Schumann's life and work." Pitts Sanborn

+ — N Y Tribune p8 N 22 '25 860w

Spec 155:1155 D 19 '25 30w

"A book, which, if not as full as originally planned, nevertheless covers the whole of the biographical field, and covers it more fully, and more generally interestingly, than any other work in our language that we know. Professor Niecks gives us abundant details of every period of Schumann's career; but had he been able personally to complete the book, he would no doubt have modified the considerable discursiveness and disproportion, which at times rather worry the reader—who cannot, however, fail to realize all through a fine and sensitive enthusiasm for Schumann and everything about him, and none the less fine and sensitive for being always soberly expressed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p610 S 24 '25 880w

NIGHTINGALE, MRS MADELEINE (THRIFT). Mostly moonshine. 100p il $1.75 Appleton [5s Blackwell]

821 [25-6263]

"Miss Nightingale is an ardent lover of Pan, who shares Mr. Yeats's fondness for 'Shadowy Waters'; nevertheless, we cannot believe that the moon dominated her horoscope, as her title suggests that it does her verses. Certainly she invokes from time to time the enchantments of twilight and dreams delicately in haunted woods, treading their solitudes, steeped in magic, until her 'very self is made a change-ling thing.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Less delicately adjusted minds than the poet's may smile at the title, but it does not really matter. Grant her mood, and the quality of the poems is lovely; be not one with her and the volume must fail."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ap 4 '25 100w

"'Mostly Moonshine,' in addition to the charm exercised by its contents, has also charm merely as a book. It will be found a bringer of much joy." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 22 '25 800w

"This book, with its delicate and beautiful little woodcuts, makes a charming appearance. Would that there was one arresting poem in the bundle of slender verses! There is not. Yet we cannot view the contribution with utter distaste because of the joy the writer seems to take in producing verses."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:782 My 23 '25 150w

"Her range is wide and in such a modern pastoral as 'The Lost Shepherd' she reveals the possibilities of a richer and more subtle music."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p802 N 27 '24 320w

NILSSON, MARTIN. History of Greek religion; tr. from the Swedish by F. J. Fielden; with a preface by Sir James G. Frazer. 310p $4.25 Oxford [12s 6d Milford]

292 Greece—Religion

25-23713

"In denying any continuity between prehistoric and historic the orthodox school is shutting its eyes to the evidence, as the author shows in his first chapter. His theme seems so simple and so obvious that we wonder why it has never been developed before. That Thebes, Knossos, Mycenæ, Tiryns, Corinth, Ægina, all the seats of the great legendary cycles of Greece, were in the Bronze Age the principal centres of the Mycenaean civilization is self-evident. Professor Nilsson's theory is that classical mythology and religion are directly descended from those of prehistoric Greece."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Professor Nilsson is an original thinker and a lucid exponent of his ideas, but the originality and freshness of his conclusions are based on a profound and an intelligent scholarship. The present volume is a very real contribution to our understanding of the true nature and quality of religious thought and practice in ancient Greece."

+ Ind 115:276 S 5 '25 130w

"It is a masterpiece of its kind, as Sir J. G. Frazer points out in his sponsoring preface. The accumulation of material in it is enormous, and the way in which it is manipulated is worthy of Frazer or Westermarck, those masters of this method of anthropological research."

+ Spec 135:339 Ag 29 '25 150w

"More references to ancient authorities would be welcome; for instance, the mention of Cassius and the battle of Actium directly after Brutus might easily mislead. It is unfair, however, to carp at minor errors in the most reasonable history of Greek religion we know. The author deserves our hearty congratulations on his work and on the excellence of his translator."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p564 S 3 '25 1250w

NIVEN, FREDERICK JOHN. Ellen Adair. 288p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-17062

Ellen Adair is a conscious little flirt, and a heartless one. The most exciting sport life offers is "having the boys on," a game the Ellen Adairs excel at. A questing look, a pouting lip, a provocative smile, a saucy jibe, and the play begins, if the youth be "game" and not a "sumph." Ellen's ambitious mother is proud of these facile conquests; Louise is finely hostile; her father utters a patient caution in broad Scots; her brother is bluntly unaware. Jimmy Ray in his sumphish love for Ellen suffers but can do nothing. After the vacation at Peebles and the friendship with Robert Ramsay, Ellen's manner subtly hardens, her gaiety is tinged with defiance as the barrier between the sisters grows. The time comes when her plight can no longer be kept from Louise. At each of the family in turn the truth strikes its ugly blow. But for the girl herself, there is neither retreat nor regret. The game goes on. Ellen Adair is Ellen Adair.

Boston Transcript p4 O 14 '25 850w

Cleveland p86 S '25

"The story has been written before. He follows the old trails; the difference is this: he follows an old trail with the richness of his own personality, with the perspicacity of sympathetic and sensitive eyes, mind and heart. He tells the story of an inglorious sensualist in a manner that will surprise some. He proves effectively that it is far from necessary to be offensive in order to create personalities which may offend. Here is a book we can safely recommend; it is rich with the savor of an understanding mind." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 Ag 29 '25 380w

NIVEN, FREDERICK JOHN—Continued

"Mr. Niven has drawn with great skill a bourgeois Scottish family group against an Edinburgh that in its geographical distinctness is a triumph. . . . The reader's interest is sustained not by the girl, but by the group. Through skilful dialogue and adequate incident they move about as characteristically separate human beings. Ellen remains a type, a vague and unmoving one, at that. The proof of which is that when the group dissolves and disappears and the rest of the book is made to hang upon Ellen, it falls heavily to pieces." E. B. H.

+ — New Repub 44:211 O 14 '25 180w

"Frankly, 'Ellen Adair' is not a fine novel only for the reason that it lacks the structural balance necessary to art. The story of Ellen, the story of her family, the idea of 'keeping up appearances' are so intertwined that the reader obtains no clear or satisfactory view of the intent of the author. As a rational discussion of a real type of woman it is rather more sane and less affected than Arnold Bennett's 'The Pretty Lady.' Nevertheless, it loses force by the diffusion which saps the vigor of the portrait of the little Scotch lady of pleasure."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ag 30 '25 900w

"The middle class has seldom been so hilariously, so graciously, so poignantly, so deeply and so completely 'taken off' as in Frederick Niven's 'Ellen Adair.' All the petty chicaneries and pretenses, all the minor Machiavellian strokes, all the small triumphs and the enormous, heartbreaking reversals are there." J. W. Crawford

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 460w

"A shrewd and convincing characterization of a Scotch middle class family. The author's touch is swift and deft."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:180 O 3 '25 120w

Springf'd Republican p7a O 4 '25 460w

Wis Lib Bul 21:232 O '25

NIVEN, FREDERICK JOHN. Lover of the land, and other poems. 72p $1.75 Boni & Liveright

821

25-9542

"Frederick Niven is better known to us as a novelist than as a poet. His poetry reveals something quite different—a far more personal side of the author than do his novels. Mr. Niven lives in British Columbia on the shores of Kootenay Lake and the largest number of the poems in this book reveal his intense love of the land—of trees and snows and rains and the wilder loveliness of Nature as he sees it. Few present day poets reflect so deep a sense of the love of nature."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

Bookm 61:598 J1 '25 50w

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 11 '25 120w

"The book gives pleasant reading, though its values lie rather in close observation of nature and in sincerity of high and tender feeling than in subtlety of thought or art. Occasionally the diction betrays too direct poetic influence." K. L. Bates

+ — Lit R p5 J1 3 '25 300w

"Though this is mostly 'mere verse,' real imagination occasionally shines amid these sixty-odd pages of much too 'even' poetry. Occasionally there is real strength, quiet and unsensational. The first half-dozen poems in this book, however, promise things not to be fulfilled."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:52 Ag 15 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

NOBLE, EDWARD. Mandarin's bell. 263p $2 Houghton [6s Heinemann]

25-11395

Three sea stories of the old days of sailing ships. Contents: The mandarin's bell; The sands of Ma-Tong; The yellow angel.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 29 '25 250w

Cleveland p124 D '25

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 100w

"One of the few men who write of the sea as the sea is sailed, without false bravados, with a naturalness as even as the swell beneath the breast of the hull."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 21 '25 700w

"I picked this volume up with no great expectations. But I laid it down with respect, for this writer not only knows the sea, but he knows what to write and how to write it. Mr. Noble is occasionally obscure, but all three of the tales in this book are above the average." Arthur Warner

+ — N Y Tribune p12 My 24 '25 260w

"They are splendid yarns, and something more."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:811 Je 6 '25 100w

"The sea has a grip of Mr. Noble, and he has a grip of the sea; he writes of it, as the reader, however much of a landsman, feels sure, with real knowledge. He has also the power of making our flesh creep, and uses it to the full."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 12 '25 280w

NOKE, CHARLES J., and PLANT, HAROLD J. Pottery. (Pitman's common commodities and industries) 136p il $1 (3s) Pitman

738 Pottery

25-11848

This little handbook on the making of pottery describes in brief the famous potteries of ancient times, and more fully the processes of manufacture in England today. The illustrations picture present day methods and machines.

"The clarity and simplicity with which the technical information is presented—together with excellent illustrations and photographic reproductions of the tools, methods, and processes used by the Staffordshire potters of our time—deserve warm commendation. Every collector of pottery and porcelain who wishes to acquire clear ideas of how the precious objects he treasures were made will find this a handy and reliable little work of reference." W: Burton

+ Nature 116:199 Ag 8 '25 550w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:23 Ap '25

Pratt Technical Books p18 '24

NORDEN, HERMANN. Fresh tracks in the Belgian Congo. 303p il $5 Small [18s Witherby]

916.75 Kongo, Belgian

[25-10485]

"An American traveler who followed the overland trail from the Uganda border to the mouth of the Congo describes his long trek." (Ind) "There is the Festival of the Manioc at Kisengwa; the forge in the forest; hippo hunting on the Kasai. There is the cannibal country and the country of the unsubdued; there are legends and customs, dance and song; the isolated life at the white missions, and a picture of the Belgian relations with the black people of the Congo. There are prospectors' camps and leprosy settlements; native princes and women on caravan." (N Y Tribune)

"A pleasant, easy-going volume. The illustrations and maps are excellent and the comments, particularly the chapters dealing with the morale of the Belgian Congo, are interesting and to the point. One gets a good idea of what life in the African bush is actually like for white people today."

+ Ind 115:276 S 5 '25 80w

"An unpretending, straightforward, account." Fullerton Waldo

+ Lit R p4 J1 11 '25 200w

"Whereas he was able to make first-hand observations on the government's servants, missionaries, and traders personally, his comments on the natives are culled either from these former, or from the explanations of his boy, Pierre, and suffer accordingly. It is to be regretted that Mr. Norden has failed to add to our knowledge of these interesting people." B. Z. Seligman

— Nature 115:867 Je 6 '25 180w

"A most interesting account."

+ New Statesman 24:544 F 14 '25 400w

"I cannot imagine reading this book for pleasure. I absorbed its table of contents eagerly. Its opening sentences filled me with hope; but the book fails to live up to the dramatic simplicity of its beginning." Blair Niles

— + N Y Tribune p12 Ag 23 '25 800w

"Mr. Norden's adventures were inconsiderable, but his experiences were interesting and are entertainingly told."

+ N Y World p4m S 20 '25 160w

R of Rs 72:110 Jl '25 50w

Spec 134:471 Mr 21 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p5 Ja 1 '25 1100w

NORDMANN, CHARLES. Tyranny of time: Einstein or Bergson?; tr. from the French by E. E. Fournier d'Albe 217p $3.25 International pub. [10s 6d Unwin]

530.1 Relativity (physics). Time [25-10426]

"M. Nordmann, who is astronomer to the Observatory in Paris, gives an exposition in popular language of the problem of time. The book is divisible into two parts. The first, comprising five chapters, is concerned with the history of the measurement of time. The second, of two chapters, introduces the reader to the controversy that has arisen between M. Einstein, the creator of the Relativity Theory in its published form, and M. Bergson, with whose philosophy the view of time implied in this theory is, superficially at least, quite incompatible."—Sat R

"M. Charles Nordmann is a scientist who is also a man of letters even in France, where the art of writing with brilliant lucidity is universally cultivated. Indeed, like the late Henri Fabre, he is really a born essayist, well able to turn to account all the characteristic qualities of the French language in order to capture his reader's attention and persuade him to follow a close and difficult argument."

+ Living Age 324:719 Mr 25 '25 220w

"The author is floundering in the bog of his own misconception of Einstein's meaning, one of his mistakes being failure to distinguish when Einstein is engaged in overthrowing the classical theory and when he is stating the theory which is to take its place." D. B. M.

— Nature 116:91 Jl 18 '25 600w

"M. Nordmann's book has the advantage over others on the same topic of being wholly intelligible to the least informed of readers. All will gain from the second part a gleaming, if not a full comprehension, of what the Relativity Theory is about. And from the first part most people will obtain both diversion and that rather valuable kind of information which enables one to feel a little more interested in, and appreciative of, things one has hitherto taken too readily for granted."

+ Sat R 140:439 Ap 25 '25 800w

NORRIS, HENRY HUTCHINSON, ed. Electric railway practices in 1923, as revealed in presentations made August 15, 1923, to the Charles A. Coffin foundation by nearly a score of electric railways. 221p il $2 Am. electric railway assn.

621.33 Electric railroads 24-25437

"The Charles A. Coffin foundation, created by the General electric company, makes an annual award to the electric railway company making the most important contribution to electric railway transportation. The present volume presents abstracts of reports made by many companies, and thus affords an idea of many outstanding developments during the year."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:420 Jl '25

NORRIS, HERBERT. Costume and fashion; the evolution of European dress through the earlier ages. 300p il $10 Dutton [25s Dent]

391 Costume 25-2565

"This book is the outgrowth of chronological notes and sketches on costume and accessories used in the supervision of costumes for historical plays, pageants, and films, and the basis of a course of lectures on costume. It is designed to be useful to students of the literature and history of European nations, and particularly of costume; artists who paint historical pictures; producers and actors in historical and Shakespearian plays and films, and teachers of history. The pictures are designed, not as works of art, but as a clear, detailed model of dress and accessories. Diagrams show the actual cut of the garments. Necessary historical data is compendiously arranged. . . . You can go to the book for information concerning the dress of a Celtic chieftain, the outfit of a Roman general, the costume of Byzantium, the panoply of Viking chiefs, what the Emperor Charlemagne wore, or the Empress Cunigunda."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:11 O '25

"Although Mr. Norris had in mind the needs of the Dramatic Art Department of the University of London when he wrote his book it should nevertheless prove a valuable guide to producers of historical and Shakespearian plays and films, artists and teachers of history and literature."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 7 '25 320w

"Mr. Norris's method is notably thorough."

+ N Y Times p18 Mr 1 '25 530w

"Mr. Norris answers every question that may possibly arise to plague a conscientious property man or mistress of the wardrobe of a historical pageant."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 8 '25 120w

"The book is a solid reference book and handbook. . . . admirable in its practical detail."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:566 F 28 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p149 Mr 5 '25 900w

"There is a mass of work and of devotion evidenced in this big book, but it is hard to conceive a book with less style of its own, less organization as literature or flare in the illustrations."

— + Theatre Arts Mo 9:562 Ag '25 120w

NORRIS, KATHLEEN (THOMPSON) (MRS CHARLES GILMAN NORRIS). Little ships. 427p $2 Doubleday

25-18578

The story of Mollie and Peter Cunningham, their children and their kin is a true family chronicle. The Cunninghams are Irish-American Roman Catholics living in San Francisco. Peter is a prosperous wholesale grocer, Mollie a doting mother. They have five living children and "two angels." These children are the little ships that in their love they would guide into safe harbor. The story follows the course of these little ships and the storms that beset them: wayward, lovable Tom, their first born; Cecilia, whose vocation to be a nun was for a time swallowed up in a love affair; little Paul who died young from a motor accident; and Martin and Ellen who married and had little ships of their own to watch.

Booklist 22:119 D '25

"There is no doubt that Mrs. Norris cuts her segment of life very carefully and renders it very truthfully. She is the priestess par excellence of the Irish-American. With all her keen criticism of them, her appreciation of such faults and failures as she makes clear, she loves them very dearly, and she makes them lovable as she describes them. 'Little Ships' is the best novel Mrs. Norris has written in a long period. It has all her best qualities and it is freer from undue sentiment than any novel she has recently written." D. L. M.

NORRIS, KATHLEEN—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 17 '25 1250w

"It is an ordinary human drama, but told with such keen understanding and sympathy, and such abundance of humor, that our attention is closely held." M. T. S.

+ Cath World 122:566 Ja '26 260w

Cleveland p107 N '25

"Mollie, her family, her house, her relatives, her neighborhood and her friends, her recreations and ambitions and maneuvers are set forth, life-size. It is perhaps little more than a slice of life. Perhaps Mrs. Norris plants tears in the eyes of Mollie and her circle rather too obviously. 'Little Ships' is, none the less, fluent and comprehending and self-sufficient and eminently readable. And Mrs. Norris is gratifyingly competent." J. W. Crawford

+ Int Bk R p54 D '25 1000w

"In order to make this type of narrative interesting an author must have far greater gifts than Kathleen Norris has ever manifested."

— N Y Times p19 S 13 '25 920w

"As it stands, it is extraordinarily good in spots, by paragraphs and even pages. The family atmosphere is wonderfully conveyed; it envelops the narrative from beginning to end; one gets the very feel and smell of the Cunningham house, the tone of the conversation, the interplay of the brothers and sisters, parents and children, husband and wife. The complexities of the Irish Catholic temperament are skillfully indicated; their generosity and avidity; their reticence and volubility; their piety and practical ability; their doleful songs and cheerful wakes, all are woven into the texture of the book. It is worth reading for the classic Irish anecdotes alone, and, with care, a few of the vital statistics might be skipped." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p11 S 13 '25 920w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p640 O 1 '25 180w

NORRIS, KATHLEEN (THOMPSON) (MRS CHARLES GILMAN NORRIS). Noon; an autobiographical sketch. 86p $1.50 Doubleday.

B or 92

25-4227

From the noontime of her life Mrs Norris looks back over happy years of struggle and accomplishment and finds the record "somehow good." In a brief autobiographical narrative she tells of her girlhood days in San Francisco, her marriage to Charles G. Norris, the novelist, their coming to New York and the pursuit of a literary career together, and of the success that came to her with the publication of her first book, "Mother."

Booklist 21:300 My '25

Bookm 61:485 Je '25 250w

"The book should be a help and inspiration to every young writer."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 28 '25 720w

"The sunny freshness and intimate charm of Noon should make it as popular, as widely read, as Kathleen Norris's delightful short stories and novels." A. McC. S.

+ Cath World 120:858 Mr '25 250w

Cleveland p106 N '25

"It is a pleasant narrative, with no disagreeable people and few incidents which did not come out happily. Interspersed is a good deal of advice to young writers, much of it excellent." L. M. Field

+ N Y Times p6 Ja 25 '25 1900w

N Y World p7m F 15 '25 180w

"'Noon,' is quite certainly a 'glad book,' but of a kind and caliber which not the most hardened anti-sentimentalist is likely to resent. It reveals a real woman of genuine talent, buoyant courage, and happy nature, and tells simply and sincerely within a modest hundred pages the story of her life from childhood to her middle years." Ethel Parton

+ Outlook 139:228 F 11 '25 330w

NORRIS, WALTER BLAKE. Annapolis, its colonial and naval story; with selections from diaries and private letters. 323p il $3 Crowell

975.2 Annapolis, Maryland

The book is chiefly concerned with the Annapolis of colonial days—its early settlement, the distinction which attached to it as provincial capital, its development as a little center of wealth and fashion, its clubs and theaters, its Tory families and their homes. Its Revolutionary history is also sketched and an account is given of Washington's visits to Annapolis. Then for a time the town suffered eclipse till the establishment of the Naval academy once more brought it prestige.

"Fortunate are we, as well as the Annapolitans, that this romantic story found so sympathetic a raconteur." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 26 '25 1500w

"Mr. Norris writes easily of what has become the quaintest of American towns. His book is illustrated with etchings of the docks and old buildings. He seems to collect and disseminate each little living detail with surest ease." B. L. Marsh

+ Lit R p7 D 12 '25 180w

"A very colorful and interesting portrayal of the story of Annapolis."

+ N Y Times p21 O 4 '25 380w

Reviewed by C. F. Goodrich

No Am 222:364 D '25 650w

"The part of the narrative dealing with colonial days is attractive and fairly adequate; the remainder inadequate. The illustrations are delightful."

+ Outlook 142:76 Ja 13 '26 30w

"Attractive volume."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:324 N 21 '25 200w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 1 '25 140w

NORTHEND, MARY HARROD. We visit old inns. 176p il $3 Small 917.4 Hotels, taverns, etc.

25-10021

"Miss Northend, a skillful observer of colonial and historic American buildings, has visited taverns at Concord, Hillsboro, New Hampshire; Ipswich, Newburyport, Georgetown, Andover, Marblehead, Dennis, and elsewhere. In each of them she has discovered luster ware, or hooked rugs, old clocks, or old wallpapers, tobies, or samplers. From her visits to these inns—a few of which are operating as public houses to-day—and from her observations of the antique furnishings therein she has compiled this book."—Outlook

Booklist 22:28 O '25

"She shows a markedly poor talent for prose. But the New England inn, with the frank glory of its chamfered summer beam and twelve inch pine plank floor, cannot be obscured by any manner of weak telling—not, at any rate, when the pictures are there too." Moran Tudury

— + Bookm 62:346 N '25 280w

Cleveland p99 S '25

Nation 121:100 Jl 15 '25 10w

"Apparently, the author is not given to bestowing much pains on her diction, which is sometimes annoyingly clumsy and often a bit crude in the use of adjectives. But otherwise her book is a fascinating volume, packed full of interesting and colorful information and written out of a genuine enthusiasm, that makes a real contribution to popular knowledge of the life of Colonial times. Summer vacation motorists through New England will like to carry the book with them."

+ N Y Times p18 My 17 '25 460w

"There is a Donald G. Mitchell air about it, a freshness and enthusiasm that leave a bright picture on the mind, and the book has the advantage of excellent illustrations."

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ag 16 '25 150w

"Admirably illustrated and entertaining book. Its contents furnish suggestions for motor trippers, and offer material to set the hearts of collectors aflame with cupidity."

+ Outlook 140:114 My 20 '25 120w

R of Rs 72:112 J1 '25 100w

St Louis 23:438 D '25

"To one who loves the quiet attraction of an old New England village, and to one who finds interest and delight in antiques of all kinds, this book will afford much pleasure."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:920 J1 18 '25 300w

"Miss Northend's pleasantly illustrated book suggests no brackish thoughts. It is scarcely a contribution to history, but it will serve as a Baedeker for leisurely motorists in search of the quaint. And there are hints on distinguishing between genuine and spurious in several varieties of antiques."

+ Springfield Republican p7a J1 19 '25 400w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

NORTHROP, MRS ALICE (RICH). Through field and woodland; a companion for nature students; ed. by Oliver Perry Medsger. 532p il $5 Putnam

570.7 Nature study. Natural history 25-9132

"As teacher of botany at Hunter College and the adviser of teachers and children of the New York city public schools, Mrs Northrop had spent many years in acquiring at first hand and in the open the facts which have been embodied in this volume. There are chapters on ferns and mosses, trees, flowers, grasses, poisonous plants, fur-bearing animals, birds, reptiles, insects and fish."—R of Rs

"As complete and helpful as any book could be. It is a large book in size and in its generous supply of informative matter. It is not the book to carry along on the tramp through the woods, but it is the book to have back at the camp or at the cottage so as to be able to look up and discover just which bird or flower or fern or little wild animal was the one recently met." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p558 J1 '25 550w

"The work is notable among nature books and well worth the attention of nature lovers, especially of those newly started on that alluring path, because of its wide inclusiveness."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 19 '25 400w

"It forms a useful guide to the general study of nature, and is intended for the layman or for the young reader; the style is simple and interesting."

+ Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 80w

R of Rs 71:560 My '25 80w

"Careful and comprehensive introduction to the wild life in the neighborhood of New York."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p559 Ag 27 '25 320w

NORTHUP, GEORGE TYLER. Introduction to Spanish literature. 473p $3 Univ. of Chicago press

860.9 Spanish literature—History and criticism 25-21672

The plan of this outline has been "to relate Spanish literature to the geographic, ethnic, social, and historic facts which have determined it," and to stress the evolution and development of the great schools of writing as they have appeared. The book thus sketches the history of Spanish literature from its beginnings to modern writers of note, furnishing biographical data concerning the writers, and a sketch of their important works, and wherever possible grouping authors in the schools to which they belong.

Cleveland p122 D '25

"The great merit of his new history of Spanish literature is that it gives due recognition to the work of living Spanish scholars."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p742 N 5 '25 200w

NORTON, EDWARD FELIX, and others. Fight for Everest: 1924. 372p il $7.50 Longmans [25s E. Arnold]

915.4 Everest, Mount. Mountaineering 26-132

Colonel Norton's expedition in 1924 reached a record height of 28,100 feet, only 900 feet below the summit. The first two-thirds of the book is narrative, contributed by leading members of the expedition; the last third consists of chapters on the physiological difficulties involved in such an ascent and on the use of oxygen, and observations on natural history, geology, glaciology and photography. In addition to many photographs, there is a series of colored plates reproducing pictures drawn by Dr Somervell.

"Two books have already been devoted to the attempt [to capture Mount Everest], and the third may fairly be said to outdo its predecessors, alike in the vivid realism of the narrative and in the sumptuous illustrations which accompany it." Edmund Noble

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 2 '26 3500w

"The illustrations require special mention. The exceptionally fine photographs were taken by Captain Noel, who had been official photographer in 1922. T. H. Somervell has done the water colors from which were made the plates in color. The technique is admirable." J. M. Thorington

+ Lit R p2 Ja 9 '26 650w

"The whole production, including the maps, photographs and plates in colours, is of a very high order; it is certainly one of the notable books of 1925."

+ New Statesman 26:supxv D 12 '25 480w

"Aside from the mere interest of the adventure the volume has value as an account of travel at high elevations. . . . The Himalayas are marvelously beautiful, yet one feels that the illustrations with which the book is generously supplied—particularly the colored sketches of Mr. T. G. Somervell do them justice." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 Ja 3 '26 1750w

"The photographs once more are admirably chosen to convey the beauty and grandeur of the mountains and the peculiar character of the ice formations."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p781 N 26 '25 1400w

NOYES, ALFRED. Book of earth. (Torch-bearers, v 2) 328p $2.50 Stokes [7s 6d Blackwood]

821 25-15834

In the second volume of his trilogy, "The torch-bearers," Alfred Noyes carries on his poetic conception of the scientists and discoverers as passing on from one to another thru the ages the light of their imagination and learning. From the astronomers, the watchers of the sky, he turns to the men who read the secrets of the earth, and tells in narrative verse the story that the evolutionists have revealed.

Booklist 22:110 D '25

Bookm 62:352 N '25 110w

"By the mere fact that he has chosen a theme so significant and devoted himself to it so assiduously, Mr. Noyes has ranked himself with the few writers of the cosmic order, has proved that he is one of those who are concerned with the larger facts of human life and destiny, and has earned the respectful attention of all followers of literature. In two distinct ways 'The Book of Earth' proves disappointing. On the one hand, the book is less interesting than one might expect, and glows in places with the glamour of adventure and discovery; on the other hand, the work does not rank as sheer poetry with the best that Mr. Noyes has done." S. A. Coblenz

NOYES, ALFRED—Continued

+ — Lit R p2 O 31 '25 430w

"A remarkable and inspiring book." F. S. Marvin

+ Nature 116:89 J1 18 '25 950w

"We cannot but feel that Mr. Noyes would have done better to have avoided his philosophers and his scientists and followed in colorful verse the pageant of evolutionary processes. But because of its epic sweep, its dramatic power—most of all because of the loftiness of the design—Mr. Noyes's epic may not be neglected." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p12 Ag 30 '25 2800w

Reviewed by Joseph Auslander

N Y World p7m N 1 '25 400w

"It is a book that may be recommended to both evolutionist and anti-evolutionist; and one need not be ardent in either camp to enjoy the many fine lines and such passages as those that portray that sweet old naturalist Linnaeus." Arthur Guiterman

+ Outlook 141:287 O 21 '25 260w

"Like his first volume should be welcomed by all who desire the public dissemination and assimilation of the achievements of mankind; for thereby the attempt is made to enable us all to enter into the difficulties, the feelings, and the aspirations of the leaders of the race." Sir Oliver Lodge

+ Sat R of Lit 2:5 Ag 1 '25 1500w

"The blank verse in which it is written is of that easy, flexible kind familiar to readers of Mr. Noyes's previous work—a medium equable and melodious, never falling below a certain standard of accomplishment. It is true that the general level attained is not notably high. Yet, if sublimity is not within Mr. Noyes's reach, he skillfully avoids the worst fault of long poems—dullness."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p44 J1 2 '25 950w

NOYES, CLARA DUTTON. Home care of the sick; when mother does the nursing. (National health council. National health ser.) 70p 30c (1s 6d) Funk

649.8 Nurses and nursing 24-24039

"A manual of 70 pages, by the director, Nursing service, American national Red cross. Not intended as a substitute for medical advice, but as a practical aid in carrying out the doctor's orders."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:423 J1 '25

NUGENT, ROSAMUND. Cobweb palace. 350p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Harrap]

25-3943

Stella Coronal, a very young and romantic person, on her first trip to Oxford makes the acquaintance of Lionel Cleere, a prospective student of the University. When their romance comes to an abrupt end Stella realizes she does not even know his name. Years later, Stella, a successful actress, meets Lord Chenyl who woos her in caveman fashion—but her heart is still true to her Oxford lover. Only by the kind intervention of fate could she ever hope to meet him again—and fate is exceedingly kind.

"It is delicate and charming, and a little wistful in places. It is not, however, very well written."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Mr 11 '25 300w

"Miss Nugent has won the crown for making of her none-too-unusual plot a sophisticated, smooth, quickly moving narrative, really full of genuine emotion and worldly charm." M. L.

+ Lit R p10 F 28 '25 320w

"A literary trifle, with a rather banal climax; but its freshness and cleverness justify its having been written."

+ — N Y Tribune p9 My 17 '25 300w

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 180w

"It is a pretty thing, but made of such thin stuff that it offers little for the reaching fingers of the mind to lay hold on."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:602 Mr 14 '25 250w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 3 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p632 O 9 '24 80w

NUGEY, ANTHONY L. Oil refinery specifications. 210p il $3.50 Chemical pub.

665.5 Petroleum 24-27913

"Briefly describes types of plant, and presents a wide range of specifications for safe design, construction, and renovation of petroleum refineries and filling stations, including details of auxiliary equipment of all kinds."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Eng N 95:317 Ag 20 '25 40w

"The reviewer believes that the author has presented a valuable, novel, and timely piece of work. He would like to see in the next edition actual refinery data in support of some of the calculations." G. A. Burrell

+ — Ind & Eng Chem 17:657 Je '25 560w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:427 J1 '25

NUTTING, WALLACE. Ireland beautiful. 302p 2 il $4 Old America co., Framingham, Mass.

914.15 Ireland—Description and travel 25-25863

"Mr. Nutting has set out in this beautiful book, half of photographs of Irish countryside in every aspect, and half of descriptive writing, to laud the picturesque and sentimental merits of Ireland. . . . The photographs, which are all original—being taken by Mr. Nutting himself—cover about 7,000 miles of Irish travel in every one of thirty-two counties, and interestingly present many bewitching nooks and corners—rose grown cottages, Druids' trees, remote moss grown ruins and flower banked rivers—besides aspects of the more famous beauty spots in Ireland, such as Antrim Castle and the Giant's Causeway."—N Y Tribune

"Thoroughly appreciative of the best quality of the Irish people and finely optimistic regarding the future of their adored land, Mr. Nutting has transfused into his photographic revelations of its beauty a certain quality of interpretation which gives them ethereal as well as artistic value." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 650w

"Mr. Nutting has many amusing anecdotes and observations to make on Irish life (he delightfully describes a Pig-Market)—as well as many profound comments on Ireland and her condition and her future. There is no doubt that those Americans who have any love for Ireland or any interest in Irish affairs will be stirred and enchanted by these pictures and these descriptions and anecdotes."

+ N Y Tribune p20 D 20 '25 300w

"By his new book 'Ireland Beautiful' Mr Nutting will increase the lovers of that land, for he has yielded himself a willing captive to its beauty and has photographed its scenes with an evident desire to compass the diversity of its charm."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a N 22 '25 650w

NUTTING, WALLACE. Pennsylvania beautiful (eastern). (States beautiful ser.) 302p il $4 Old America co., Framingham, Mass.

917.48 Pennsylvania—Description and travel 25-2571

"Mr. Nutting has made a picture-book of Pennsylvania. . . . With his camera he has followed Pocono's creeks to their hidden falls; neglecting the monuments of the Philadelphia region, he has made discoveries of his own in old Zionsville and in the modern canal-side colony at New Hope. His genius lies in the lens of his camera; the pictures make the book. The text rambles through recollections of the Conestoga wagons which came from the banks of the stream he pictures, and reflections upon the Pennsylvanian's passion for ironwork."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 21:335 Je '25

"In a way, a review of any of these 'books beautiful' applies to all. The text of each is of course different. Thus the local color differs. But in them all, loveliness follows loveliness in one enchanting succession."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 3 '25 500w
Cleveland p55 Je '25

"On the whole, 'Pennsylvania Beautiful' is much more than a picture book. Some day it may be very valuable, and even today it helps to preserve the old life that is so rapidly passing away in both its outward and inward manifestations." P. H. Jewett

+ Lit R p14 Ap 25 '25 600w
N Y Tribune p9 Ja 25 '25 500w

"There are no striking views, but much that charms appears on the pages of Mr. Nutting's volume. Colonial architecture and ornament are well depicted."

N Y World p9e N 30 '24 40w

St Louis p113 Ap '25

"'Pennsylvania Beautiful' is up to the standard of the series, and it should be appreciated by the lover of beautiful photographs. As a gift book it is beyond question a deserving volume."

+ Springfield Republican p10 D 17 '24 300w

O

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD. Prize stories of 1924; chosen by the Society of arts and sciences; with an introd. by Blanche Colton Williams. 256p $2 Doubleday

Short stories—Collections

Contents: The spring flight, by Inez Haynes Irwin; Margaret Blake, by Chester T. Crowell; Rachel and her children, by Frances Newman; Uriah's son, by Stephen Vincent Benet; The most dangerous game, by Richard Connell; Horse and horse, by Charles Caldwell Dobie; Professor Boynton rereads history, by Edith R. Mirrielees; The secret at the crossroads, by Jefferson Mosley; The tie that binds, by George Pattullo; The courier of the czar, by Elsie Singmaster; 'Lijah, by Edgar Valentine Smith; A river combine—professional, by R. S. Spears; What do you mean—Americans? by Wilbur Daniel Steele; One uses the handkerchief, by Elinore Cowan Stone; Progress, by Harriet Welles.

Booklist 21:276 Ap '25

Reviewed by G. H. Carson
Bookm 61:350 My '25 250w

"If one should select stories on the test of their popular appeal, it is probable that there would be some reason for the inclusion of many of the tales in a volume that purports to offer the cream of a season. But, on a test of literary judgment, these volumes are not representative of the best short-story art in America." H. S. Gorman

+ Int Bk R p616 Ag '25 850w

"This collection impresses me as an honest piece of editing. Why then is the result not more distinguished? Well, first of all, the committee whose disinterested and unpaid labors have produced the book is so large that it is unwieldy. Secondly, it is not representative of American criticism. Thirdly, it is impressed by the artificial mechanics of plot rather than by the fresh living presentation of life. Fourthly, it shows no signs of having read the more distinguished American magazines which have a foreign audience. Fifthly, it is unpaid." E. J. O'Brien

+ Lit R p2 Ap 11 '25 800w

Reviewed by J. J. Smertenko
+ Nation 120:469 Ap 22 '25 350w

"It is an ungrateful task to reverse a verdict arrived at so meticulously, and what are the 'best stories' will always remain a matter of personal taste. But to assert that 'this annual volume of stories has come to be the standard for collections of this kind' is a frank overstatement. Several better selections without the crown of a prize to authenticate their worth have come from the press within the past six months."

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 1 '25 1100w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer
N Y Tribune p9 Ap 26 '25 320w

Reviewed by P. F. Sifton
N Y World p7m F 22 '25 1100w

"The reader who is not an addict of magazine fiction is likely to find in this volume a readable but not highly memorable group of stories." H. W. Boynton

+ Outlook 139:582 Ap 15 '25 300w

Springf'd Republican p6 Je 1 '25 400w

OAKELEY, HILDA DIANA, ed. Greek ethical thought; from Homer to the Stoics. (Lib. of Greek thought) 226p $2 Dutton [5s Dent]

170.8 Ethics. Philosophy, Greek. Greek literature—Collections 25-14857

A collection of excerpts from early Greek writings illustrating the changing moral concepts of the Greeks and the development of ethical thought over the period of time from Homer to Marcus Aurelius. The volume is indexed according to author, work and chief ethical subject.

"This is an excellent volume."

+ Nation and Ath 37:522 Jl 25 '25 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p369 My 28 '25 100w

OVERMAIER, HUGO. Fossil man in Spain; [tr. by Christine D. Matthew]; with an introd. by Henry Fairfield Osborn. 495p il $5 Yale univ. press; for sale by Hispanic soc. of Am.

571 Man, Prehistoric. Spain—Antiquities 24-25757

For descriptive note see annual for 1924.

"The book contains much of value." Aleš Hrdlička

+ Am Hist R 30:796 Jl '25 900w

"This work is a splendid contribution to the subject. Professor Obermaier is in the front rank of prehistoric archaeologists, and is at home in all branches of his subject. He is something more than a specialist; he has the characteristics of a true student of human culture. It is possible to detect minor inconsistencies in the argument of Professor Obermaier, but they do not weigh in the balance against the vast mass of solid fact and logical interpretation which makes this book a monument to the erudition, enthusiasm, and originality of its learned author." W. J. Perry

+ Nation and Ath 36:818 Mr 14 '25 800w

"It is a monumental work that will long retain a foremost place in the prehistorian's library, though no specialist has heretofore been able to do without the original Spanish edition. A few changes have been introduced in the new version and the book has to a large extent been brought up-to-date." M. C. B.

+ Nature 115:151 Ja 31 '25 700w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p529 Ag 13 '25 1300w

OBERMAIER, HUGO—Continued

"The unique and novel feature of this work is the masterly and critical treatment of the life, art, and industries of the Iberian Peninsula during the Glacial Epoch." H: F. Osborn
+ Yale R n s 15:169 O '25 320w

O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH HARRINGTON (ARTHUR MIDDLETON, pseud.), ed. Best short stories of 1924 and the Yearbook of the American short story. 383p $2.50 Small [7s 6d J. Cape]

Short stories—Collections

"Among the better known short story writers represented are: Rupert Hughes with 'Grudges,' Gouverneur Morris with 'A Postscript to Divorce,' Zona Gale with 'A Biography of Blade,' Floyd Dell with 'Phantom Adventure,' and Charles J. Finger with 'Adventures of Andrew Lang.' The remaining stories are Ruth Suckow's 'Four Generations,' done in the mood and manner of her first novel, 'Country People'; Lizette Woodworth Reese's 'Forgiveness,' Charles C. Dobie's 'The Cracked Teapot,' Carlos Drake's 'The Last Dive,' Tupper Greenwald's 'Corputt,' Leonard L. Hess' 'The Lesser Gift,' A. B. Shiffrin's 'The Black Laugh,' Melvin Vanden Bark's 'Hog Back-Ridge,' and Warren L. Van Dine's 'The Poet.'"—Lit R

"What Mr. O'Brien is after is 'psychological and imaginative reality,' and he finds it in these stories which deal with human nature as it exhibits itself in crucial, climatic moments. The moments are often sad, or bathed in irony, or even tragic in character, and the mood of the writers seems to imply that here is the real reality, la vraie verite. This attitude persists because of the fetters which bind the American artist, says Mr. O'Brien—a pleasant fancy, and one with which numerous earlier commentators have entertained themselves." G. H. Carson

Bookm 61:348 My '25 850w

Boston Transcript p6 Ja 21 '25 400w

Cleveland p38 Ap '25

Dial 78:520 Je '25 120w

Reviewed by N. B. Fagin

Int Bk R p249 Mr '25 900w

"The Yearbook of the American Short Story is in itself a complete and comprehensive study, full of well arranged information. For the most part the stories themselves will interest the general reader, although there are several that seemed to me a long, long way below the highest standards." Herschel Brickell

+ — Lit R p5 Ja 31 '25 850w

"On the whole the stories do not have for me the interest that is to be found in the tales which more truly approximate human experience, but I prefer them infinitely to the perversions crowned by our Academy." J. J. Smertenko

Nation 120:471 Ap 22 '25 220w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

N Y Times p6 Ja 18 '25 2100w

Reviewed by L. Bromfield

N Y Tribune p3 F 15 '25 700w

"Only about a third of the names are widely known. This is a good sign, both as indicating that the story and not the name at its head has governed in the choice, and as proof of a broadening of the field of short-story writing. On the other hand, the collection as a whole is hardly equal in dramatic, human, and humorous interest to some of its predecessors."

+ — Outlook 139:288 F 11 '25 180w

Sat R of Lit 1:620 Mr 21 '25 330w

"It must be conceded that they are very dexterous and sure of themselves; their liveliness of touch is wonderful, their talent undoubted. Yet it is impossible to suggest that there is more than a transitory interest in any one of their tales."

+ — Spec 135:26 J1 4 '25 500w

"The American volume for 1924 seems possibly to have liberalized somewhat its standards of selection. Whether this impression be accurate or not, the collection affords good reading within the range mentioned."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a F 15 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p385 Je 4 '25 220w

Wis Lib Bul 21:113 Ap '25

O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH HARRINGTON (ARTHUR MIDDLETON, pseud.), and CURNOS, JOHN, eds. Best British short stories of 1924. 325p $2.50 Small [7s 6d J. Cape]

Short stories—Collections (22-23919)

"This is the third year for which the editors have done for British short-story writing what Mr. O'Brien alone has done for this kind of American fiction. Naturally most of these twenty-six stories will be unknown this side the Atlantic—indeed, some of the writers' names are unfamiliar. Among the best known are those of McFee, Maugham, Marshall, Katherine Mansfield, and 'E. M. Delafield.'"—Outlook

Booklist 21:151 Ja '25

Reviewed by G. H. Carson

Bookm 60:769 F '25 370w

"The only thing which really annoys us about Mr. O'Brien is that he always uses the unqualified superlative. Frankly, it is sometimes a question as to whether his best stories are the best."

Boston Transcript p5 F 28 '25 670w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

Lit R p16 D 6 '24 550w

"For all who are interested in the short story, whether merely as readers and admirers of a distinctive type of fiction or as students of current literature, this book offers a valuable collection of tales."

N Y Times p20 N 23 '24 400w

"There is much good reading in the British collection and much that should be of interest to the writer." L: Bromfield

+ N Y Tribune p3 F 15 '25 250w

"An amusing, clever dialogue discussion on the Short Story, between the Critical Reader and Mr. Curnos, makes a capital Introduction."

Outlook 138:691 D 24 '24 100w

"The most successful collection, by a long way, which has appeared in this series. It is packed with good things, so diverse in manner that the aptest criticism is: 'Read it for yourself.'" Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:191 F 21 '25 150w

"To anyone familiar with modern literature the stories are clear, interesting, and significant, but one who came to them without previous training would find many strangely vague and unsatisfactory." J. W. Krutch

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:475 Ja 24 '25 1400w

Spec 134:126 Ja 24 '25 370w

Springf'd Republican p6 My 25 '25 260w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p194 Mr

19 '25 900w

O'BRIEN, HOWARD VINCENT. What a man wants. 344p $2 Doubleday

25-18576

Ammiel was the youngest son, and apparently not a Spottswood, for he had not in the least degree the orderly conventional outlook on life that characterized the Spottswood family. On him, the impractical helpless member of the group, devolves the task of straightening out the affairs of the others. Jonas the oldest son, is on the verge of nervous breakdown over business worries; Stephen's political ambitions are jeopardized by a blackmailing actress; Sarah is engaged to a sham litterateur with shoddy morals, and must somehow be disillusioned. And as if that were not enough, there is the disturbing problem of Adrienne, whom Ammiel wants as he has never wanted anything. It is the philosophy of life bequeathed to him by his grandfather even more than the fortune, that shows Ammiel how a man may get what he wants once he discovers what that is.

"'What a Man Wants' will surely satisfy those who desire what all Mr. O'Brien's books offer, a readable story, popular appeal, and a little sermonizing." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N '25 480w

"Ammiel from first to last is a soul-satisfying person, to whom you take an instant liking and for whom you 'root' all through. Best of all is the sane, healthy philosophy, the clear recognition of the different values of this odd and fantastic civilization of ours. In a word, 'What a Man Wants' deserves to be recognized as one of the season's best books." A. H. Gibbs

+ Lit R p3 N 28 '25 550w

Sat R of Lit 2:346 N 28 '25 420w

O'CASEY, SEAN. Two plays. 199p $2.25 (7s 6d) Macmillan

822

25-4225

The two plays are tragedies of Irish life, with Dublin as their setting during its recent days of disorder and bloodshed. Contents: Juno and the paycock; The shadow of a gunman.

"All in all, some apparent defects ranged against some no less visible excellencies, the two tragedies present a clearly delineated segment of contemporary Irish life. The playwright knows his people and has limned them well. His manner is realism, his style vigorous and his portrayals convincing enough to assure us that they are, in the main, faithful depictions." F. W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 14 '25 650w

"There is effective drama in both these pieces, but there is no great probability of their reaching the footlights. In Synge's 'Playboy of the Western World' there was a touch of imagination and fantasy to relieve the satirical sting. Here there is nothing of the sort. Mr. O'Casey has written in the plainest terms of realistic tragedy and the truer his picture is the more tragic must it be accounted." J. R. Towse

Lit R p5 Mr 21 '25 650w

Reviewed by Bonamy Dobrée

Nation and Ath 36:891 Mr 28 '25 180w

New Statesman 25:20 Ap 18 '25 270w

"The playwright's name will be new to readers of Irish plays, but his two dramas should prove sufficient to show that that dramatic urge that began so many years ago with Yeats, Martyn, Colum and Synge has not died."

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 8 '25 1300w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 220w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p7m Mr 8 '25 40w

Reviewed by Joseph Campbell

Sat R of Lit 2:78 Ag 29 '25 1700w

Spec 134:415 Mr 14 '25 170w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p117 F 19 '25 320w

"As a presentation of Dublin life Sean O'Casey's plays are central; they give one what is nearly the norm of that life. These men and women, by their wonderful talk, by their piety, their casualness, their singlemindedness, are authentically the folk of Dublin." Padraic Colum

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:397 Je '25 2650w

O'CONOR, NORREYS JEPHSON. Changing Ireland; literary backgrounds of the Irish free state, 1889-1922. 259p $2.50 Harvard univ. press [11s 6d Milford]

820.9 Irish literature—History and criticism. English literature—Irish authors 24-30334

"'Changing Ireland' is the title of a book of miscellaneous chatty essays and reviews. The author has made no attempt at concentrated or unified discussion either of Irish political or literary affairs; very evidently he has merely gathered together a number of papers written at different times, but all bearing more or less on the subject of contemporary Irish writers, their opinions and influence on politics, and the racial characteristics and traditions which have made their work what it is."—Springf'd Republican

"The essentials of the Irish spirit in literature have been admirably analyzed by Mr. O'Connor. And though he is concerned primarily with literature, every page of his book has its bearing on Irish political affairs and helps to supply just that deeper, larger understanding the lack of which has been the one fatal defect in the English dealing with Ireland." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Lit R p2 D 6 '24 650w

"His hotch-potch of essays and book notices, while it contains much that is interesting about individual Irish authors of the present generation, leaves unanswered the main questions raised in the preface or answers them with generalisations that few Irishmen would accept, however convincing they may have appeared to the American audiences for whom the papers were originally written."

+ New Statesman 25:22 Ap 18 '25 720w

"As a consistent series of 'studies in the literary background of the Irish Free State' his book leaves much to be desired. In the larger meaning of the description he is correct enough, but in its more specific meaning his rather loosely connected chapters fail to impress the reader. Indeed, there is no intensive study in the book. It is rather a series of pleasantly worded, chatty commentaries on various Irish writers." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p8 D 28 '24 2000w

N Y Tribune p16 Ap 26 '25 450w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 21 '25 700w

"The style is slipshod, inaccuracies abound, together with repetitions, due no doubt to the periodical nature of the studies. The inclusion of passing reviews increases the book in size rather than in permanent value."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p106 F 12 '25 170w

ODELL, CHARLES WATTERS. Educational statistics. (Century education ser.) 334p $2.50 Century

371 Education—Statistics. Statistics 25-11405

The book has been written to meet the need of principals, supervisors and other school administrators, for a text-book in the methods of preparing and presenting educational statistics. The text may be used in teachers' college courses, or by the graduate whose professional training has not included work of this nature. An attempt has been made to explain as simply and lucidly as possible the rather technical subject matter of the book.

Booklist 22:103 D '25

"The book is not notably successful in its presentation from the point of view of the beginner; nor does it contribute a great deal to the availability of material for either the beginning student or the advanced student. As for original contributions to theory, none were observed. After the author gets well started, the discussion runs on more smoothly and coherently." D. E. Scates

+ School R 33:796 D '25 580w

ODUM, HOWARD WASHINGTON, ed. Southern pioneers in social interpretation. 221p $2 Univ. of N.C. [9s Milford]

920 South—Biography 25-13186

"We have here an introductory essay by Dr. Odum (Professor of Sociology at the University of North Carolina) and a group of biographical sketches." (Outlook) Contents: Woodrow Wilson, by G. W. Johnson; Walter Hines Page, by R. D. W. Connor; Charles Brantley Aycock, by E. A. Alderman; Seaman A. Knapp, by J. Davis; Augustus Baldwin Longstreet, by J. D.

ODUM, H. W., ed.—Continued

Wade; Joel Chandler Harris, by J. C. Harris; Booker T. Washington, by M. N. Work; Madeline McDowell Breckinridge, by S. P. Breckinridge; Edward Kidder Graham, by R. D. W. Connor.

"The book is interesting and the style attractive. The various sketches, however, are not sufficiently thorough to constitute very valuable material for the sociologist."

+ Am J Soc 31:411 N '25 60w

Ann Am Acad 122:267 N '25 60w

"Professor Odum's book is important for its point of view, its courage, and its plain speaking. It is not literature in the bookish sense, but it is inspiring and a hopeful sign of genuine progress."

+ Ind 115:109 J1 25 '25 1050w

"The book lacks unity and force because Mr. Odum is the editor rather than the author; not that Mr. Gerald Johnson does not write provocatively about Woodrow Wilson, or Mr. Wade humorously about Augustus Longstreet, but because it is easier to develop a hand normally than to manufacture one from such diverse fingers as the authors of these rather slight essays have brought him. As portraits the essays are unsatisfactory, but then, they were not meant to be portraits but tools." A. W. Vernon

+ New Repub 44:289 N 4 '25 280w

"The Northerner as well as the Southerner can get considerable food for thought out of this book, although it seems to have been prepared with especial expectation that it would be read by the men and women of the South. . . . Mr. Odum has apparently embraced with enthusiasm the opportunity of saying some things that he thought needed to be said. With no mincing of words he points out limitations, shortcomings, fears, low standards, provincialisms, reactionary tendencies that form handicaps to progress of any sort and render impossible the breeding and training of men and women capable of leadership."

+ N Y Times p16 Ag 23 '25 350w

"On the whole, the book is decidedly worth while, throwing a good deal of light on an interesting phase."

+ Outlook 141:128 S 23 '25 220w

Sat R of Lit 2:221 O 17 '25 120w

"The volume is a most fitting tribute to southern pioneers by those who know them well. The South's appreciation of them is here organized in a manner which is full of human interest, information, and literary merit of the highest type. The volume should appeal not only to the students of history and literature but also to the casual reader who is seeking to know more of the true spirit and worth of the South." R. R. Hollingsworth

+ School R 33:718 N '25 260w

ODUM, HOWARD WASHINGTON, and JOHN-SON, GUY BENTON. Negro and his songs. 306p $3 Univ. of N.C. [13s 6d Milford]

784.7 Negro songs 25-13744

"More than most folksongs, the improvisations of the Negro are founded on the melodies and harmonies of which they are but an accompaniment, an accompaniment which, taken by itself, does small justice to the talents of the colored people who made them up. Mr. Odum and Mr. Johnson have collected the whole or scraps of hundreds of songs, some old, some new; religious songs, 'social' songs, work songs."

—New Repub

Ann Am Acad 122:268 N '25 170w

Booklist 22:149 Ja '26

"Readers of this intriguing study who remember the sonorous melody of 'Swing Low, Sweet Chariot,' as sung by the Jubilee or Hampton Singers, will hear its cadences pulsing silently between the lines of each chapter." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 3 '25 1000w

"A very valuable and very interesting volume. It is to be hoped, if the ends of truth are to be served, that in this, as in other collections of folk song, the brutal actualities will be preserved in volumes not intended for general circulation. Only so can students in the future arrive at anything approximating a correct impression of real conditions. Also, one might wish that the musical air had been printed for each song where the air had been more or less definitely established by custom and repetition."

+ Ind 115:80 J1 18 '25 200w

"An entertaining and instructive volume. It is to be hoped that many others will be inspired by their examples. The work must be done quickly, before the negro loses the gift of song, as he rapidly is doing under existing conditions." H. B.

Lit R p5 S 5 '25 200w

"The types included are religious songs, social songs, and work songs, the last named being, perhaps, the most attractive from their purely rhythmical effect. Throughout there is ample evidence of the negro's gift of imagery, of graphic description, and above all of appreciation of dramatic effect. The authors make an eloquent plea for the systematic study of negro culture, which readers of this volume will heartily support."

+ Nature 116:781 N 28 '25 220w

"Without the magic of Negro voices they do not make very lively reading. Yet there is a kind of fascination in this curious collection, the kind of fascination that comes from looking at something on the surface very simple, often crude, often laughable, sometimes quaint, which, underneath, we probably do not understand or are likely never to understand." Robert Littell

+ New Repub 44:74 S 9 '25 1200w

Reviewed by Carl Van Vechten

N Y Tribune p2 O 25 '25 300w

"The volume is marred slightly by an attitude, which I honestly believe is unconscious, to arrive at ethnic truths regarding the Negro which at times are pitifully absurd. To me the best thing about this book is that it richly illustrates the enormity of lore awaiting the energy and awakening of the negro scholar and folklorist."

Eric Walrod

+ Sat R of Lit 1:891 J1 11 '25 700w

"If subsequent volumes in the series live up to the joyful cadence established in this first volume, they will all be most heartily welcome."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 10 '25 400w

"An interesting collection. It is done with a scholarly acumen for detail and a dispassionate notation on the specimens." Countée Cullen

+ Survey 54:583 S 1 '25 1050w

"We get the feeling that the authors have not had access to the best type of Negro—that they have accepted Daddy Jack when they might have had Uncle Remus. With the social songs, in their determination not to shock any susceptibilities they have whitewashed the Negro out of all recognition."

—The Times [London] Lit Sup p558 Ag 27 '25 280w

Wis Lib Bul 21:228 O '25

OEMLER, MARIE (CONWAY) (MRS JOHN NORTON OEMLER.) His wife-in-law. 370p $2 Century

25-5617

This is the story of a bold young man who swoops down on the proud, useless, but highly ornamental young woman he loves, marries her, and carries her off to a conveniently deserted isle in order to domesticate her. The taming of the shrew is not, alas, as easy a matter as he anticipates, so more in sorrow than in anger he sends her home again. Naturally Mary finds life very dull without her brilliant cave man, so she plunges into social service in New York. René, the late husband-in-name-only, thereupon plunges into the South American jungle and utterly disappears. Years pass. Mary meanwhile, has been developing a beautiful, sturdy character. When word comes that

René seems to be lost, she goes off to the jungle to find him, with what happy result the reader may surmise.

"There are a great many thrills in the story but its real success will be due to the half humorous, half whimsical, way in which it is told."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 1 '25 400w
Cleveland p83 Jl '25

Reviewed by Harvey Ferguson
Int Bk R p552 Jl '25 260w

"A wholesome, entertaining story, warm with humanity and alive with vivid characters, but, more than this, it is a beautifully intimate view of the web and woof of to-day's mind as expressed by two young people." Ernest Hackett
+ Lit R p14 Ap 25 '25 450w

New Statesman 25:146 My 16 '25 280w

"Mrs. Oemler is most nearly the American claimant to the elaborate cap won by Ethel M. Dell and Mrs. E. M. Hull. The conversations are as witless as any that Eleanor Abbott ever concocted."

— N Y World p4m S 13 '25 200w

"The art of the story is negligible, but there is something about the telling that will attract readers who care more for sentiment than reality. And the Bad Old Lady is well worth knowing."

+ Outlook 140:194 Je 3 '25 120w

"It has an average surface excellence of writing, which virtue is rendered entirely futile beneath the burden of stereotyped material the author has employed for her variation of an all too familiar theme."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:601 Mr 14 '25 230w

"Although the theme of The Taming of the Shrew is developed to a really ridiculous extent in the opening chapters of this novel there are many delightful passages to be found later on."

+ Spec 135:26 Jl 4 '25 100w

Springf'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 150w

"Mrs. Oemler's enthusiasm is pleasant, and with all its absurdity there is something in the story that lures the reader on and leaves him good-tempered, if not much edified."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 23 '25 200w

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM. Black soul. 253p $2.50
Bon & Liveright [7s 6d J. Cape] [24-14378]

An Irish tale, dominated by violent and elemental emotions and by the power of the sea raging around the shores of Inverara. Fergus O'Connor, spent by his thirty years of hard living and made almost insane by his experiences in the war, comes to the little peasant community of Rooruck to escape life and, if possible, to forget. He lodges in the cabin of Red John, a weakling despised by his beautiful wife, Little Mary, so called because she is the tallest woman in Inverara. Fergus becomes to her the conqueror she has been waiting for, but he has had enough of women and fights his passion for her. In the end he comes to love Little Mary and to find healing and sanity in her simple primitive love for him.

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 180w
Dial 78:426 My '25 120w

"Sheer poetry from the first page to the last, and should be described under that head. The fact that it is written in a prose which, however telling and beautiful it may be at times, never falls to a dissimulation of verse, has nothing to do with the matter. It is a question of mood, atmosphere and music—not of lines that do or do not run straight across the page to a measure more or less clearly emphasized."

Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p3 Mr 7 '25 1050w

"One is blinded by this book, made helpless, beaten by wind and water, but with the mind still pricking vividly. It is a ripe piece of work, splendidly extravagant, and cruelly honest."

Nation 120:634 Je 3 '25 180w

Reviewed by Austin Clarke

Nation and Ath 35:270 My 24 '24 320w

"The simplifications are terrific, and life is red-blooded, indeed. Storms rage continually without, while fights and drinking, and the fierceness of desire, rage within the huts and hovels. The story is not melodrama. The characters live clearly in the mind. Mr. O'Flaherty has conceived his story epically, and has set it quite reasonably in heroic surroundings. It is good and at times fine reading. And it is a story that hangs admirably together from start to climax." Ralph Wright

+ New Statesman 23:196 My 24 '24 220w

"The novel is especially notable for its fine descriptions. Winter and Spring, Autumn and Summer on Inverara are glowingly described. The reader is never for a moment unconscious of the wild setting which is like a surging orchestral accompaniment to this tale of intellectual frustration and futility and of triumphant love."

+ N Y Times p9 F 22 '25 1000w

"There is no poverty of imagery anywhere in the book, no economy even. There is nothing but the sheerest extravagance which blows one like sea and wind together. The elements are the chief characters here and they make man a tiny, miserable coward, always fighting and always succumbing."

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 1 '25 750w

"The storms of sky and sea echo in the passionate hearts of the men and women who live on the island. The prose moves like an orchestral commentary, now wild and fierce, now subdued in tenderness or fainting with passion or dark with harsh chords of sadness and disillusion. It runs uneven and yet splendid like the sea and like the sea too attuned to every mood of passion and despair and doubt returning with winter and quenched in spring." Donald Douglas

+ N Y World p6m F 22 '25 560w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Outlook 139:580 Ap 15 '25 220w

"It is a remarkable piece of work indeed. But the writer of it has much to learn. For one thing, he has to learn to be humane. To paint as certain writers have done, the Gaelic peasantry and fisherfolk as people in an idyll with the light of Tir-nan-og ever upon them, is to make them unreal, of course. To write about them as having no spiritual history, and as of being what the elements and their own appetites make them is to be just as unreal. When Liam O'Flaherty makes himself equal to the task of giving his people a manifold existence, and with affections as well as passions, he will be able to write a fine Irish novel." Padraic Colum

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:787 My 30 '25 1150w

"The Black Soul is utterly free from sentimentality and nearly free from a moral sense: its interest lies in the gradual appeasement of the Stranger's soul in the passion of love, an appeasement marked by many set-backs and conditioned, till the very last, by unrelieved egoism. Mr. O'Flaherty makes us feel the ecstasy and even the elevation of the consummation; but the narrative never takes one into its confidence, it goes its arbitrary, disquieting, uncomfortable way, weeding out civilized emotions as though it had been written by a cave-man for cave-men." L. P. Hartley

+ — Spec 132:809 My 17 '24 220w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 17 '25 400w

"As a study of a mind that has survived terrible experience and found strength in tide and sun and simple humanity, his book is stimulating and significant."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p266 My 1 '24 360w

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM. The informer. 312p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d J. Cape]

25-18355

"Gypo Nolan, a gigantic brutal type, an ex-policeman who has even been expelled from the 'Revolutionary Organization,' a secret Communistic society, after months of semi-starvation, betrays, on sudden impulse, a comrade to the police. Terrified by all that the dreaded name of 'informer' implies to the Irish mind, he concocts a story, on being confronted by gunmen, in which, surprised by his own imagination, he almost believes. Cautious in mind, yet careless, he squanders the 'blood-money' in low publichouses and dens of vice, with a growing sense of exaltation caused by sudden wealth, intoxication and danger. In a last harrowing scene, Gallagher, the revolutionary leader, tortures the giant intellectually in cross-examination, and watches the struggles of that inarticulate mind dulled by drink. However sordid the scenes may be, Mr. O'Flaherty shows us the pitiable humanity of the unfortunate informer, and sees, awed by his own creation, beneath the brutality and stupidity, the childlike soul of the man."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The material of this novel would have been more wisely utilized in the writing of a good vigorous short story. In fact, dramatically, the theme would have made a very remarkable short story. The characters are sketched with too light a hand to hold our attention for more than fifty pages. Some people are able to infuse a tinge of sentiment or color into studies of the Irish temperament. The men and women Mr. O'Flaherty describes to us are not martyrs for a noble cause. They are merely a collection of brutes. Such a novel is a libel upon the inhabitants of Ireland."

— Boston Transcript p2 O 10 '25 480w

"Mr. O'Flaherty's story is like a primitive hurricane of sincerity and enthusiasm."

Nation and Ath 38:154 O 24 '25 100w

"The Dublin underworld is here, but nothing of significance emerges, either from background or theme. And this, we venture to opine, is because Mr. O'Flaherty has written of Ireland and the Irish without the illumining torch of sympathy." E. B. H.

— New Repub 45:93 D 9 '25 160w

"Though I am a fervent admirer of his short stories, I have not, before this, been able to consider him adequate as a novelist; he has seemed to labour one note too monotonously, and, powerful though he is, to be sometimes weakly violent too. But in The Informer all weakness has disappeared. Plot and atmosphere are real; the horrid figures move through them solidly; the terrors of fact now and gibber from the pages." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:727 O 10 '25 250w

"Mr. O'Flaherty handles this nightmare stuff with consummate skill and fervor. We are under the spell of his inventions from first page to last. We follow the wild hunt for life as breathlessly as any pursuer on Gypo's heels. There are passages of the same savage prose, near neighbor to delirium and hallucination, that we find in 'Wuthering Heights.' In the face of such splendors it is a sad task, indeed, to contemplate Mr. O'Flaherty's psychology. This is worse than 'applied.' It amounts at times to an incongruity that borders on farce. At will, and when the humor seizes him, the author, in all seriousness, can reach out for a good deal of what his school is teaching us to consider as 'blather.'" H: L. Stuart

+ — N Y Times p9 O 11 '25 1150w

"I admire Mr. O'Flaherty's skill, his cleverness and his strength and passion in this new book. He has shown those who felt that he was bound to the technique and theme of 'The Dark Soul' that he can change his manner, his subject matter and his method, that he can write of physical bondage as well as mental bondage." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 8 '25 1000w

"It is not another 'Crime and Punishment.' Yet there is an extraordinary fidelity of visual representation of men and actions. You see the man Gypo Nolan and the commandant Gallagher completely and the whole underworld of revolutionary Dublin. There seems nothing in that ooze of crime and sacrifice and passion that you have not observed with your own eyes." Donald Douglas

N Y World p5m O 11 '25 500w

"The subject is an admirable one. The reader perceives how it would have been treated by Dostoevsky, who remorselessly would have forced the reader to identify himself with the criminal and suffer with him a cumulative, inevitable progress of torture. Mr. O'Flaherty describes meticulously, but does not represent that progress. As a consequence the reader is invariably external to the character and the characters' experiences. One contemplates Gypo Nolan with a purely objective emotion, as one might look upon a figure by Rodin, equally brutish, equally strong, equally impotent."

Sat R of Lit 2:227 O 17 '25 160w

"For all its ominous atmosphere and its horror, The Informer is singularly restrained and full of sanity. There is no attempt to make our blood curdle, only a wish to show us an aspect of truth. Its author, neither for nor against the revolutionaries, simply exhibits them to us as men of virtue and vice mingled in dangerous proportions, men of action gone mad in a chaotic and disordered time and place."

Spec 135:560 O 3 '25 900w

"In this new novel Mr. Liam O'Flaherty shows a considerable advance in his art. His choice of subject has helped him; for the strained terms of realism which he has used in picturing the western peasantry seem to suit this study of the Dublin underworld during recent years of political and social disturbance."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p616 S 24 '25 420w

OGDEN, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Cow jerry. 328p $2 Dodd

25-2965

McPacken, a small town close by the Arkansas river, was the prosperous center of native and imported cattle industry, a meeting place for railroaders and cattle men. The rivalry existing between the two factions was expressed in an occasional outbreak, but on the whole peace prevailed in McPacken. Then one day Tom Laylander brought into this green valley his starving herd. Thru the treachery and crookedness of Cal Withers, an important cattle dealer, Tom lost his herd and was compelled to work as a railroad section hand. Thruout McPacken he was known as the "cow jerry." This incident was the beginning of the bitterest battle ever waged between railroad and range. Jailings, riots and lawyers costs entered into it, and the love of a fine spirited girl. McPacken still speaks of Withers' downfall and the way that "cow jerry" could fight.

"An entertaining humorous story of a Texas cowboy."

+ Booklist 21:304 My '25

Cleveland p83 J1 '25

"The novel is that unusual kind of book whose humor makes the reader love the people at whom it also makes him laugh."

+ N Y Times p22 F 1 '25 350w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

O'KANE, WALTER COLLINS. Trails and summits of the White mountains. (Riverside outdoor handbooks) 308p il $2.50 Houghton

917.42 White mountains. Mountaineering

25-9571

This book is for beginners in mountain climbing. Introductory chapters describe the pleasures of mountain climbing and equipment needed and give general directions and advice.

These are followed by descriptions of nineteen of the best climbs—ascents which can be accomplished in a day.

Booklist 21:377 J1 '25

Ind 115:24 J1 4 '25 50w

N Y Times p3 My 31 '25 500w

"Many photographs add to the beauty of the book, which serves satisfactorily to answer Mr. O'Kane's opening question, 'Why climb?'"

+ N Y Tribune p16 Je 7 '25 80w

Pratt p32 autumn '25

"This is distinctly a book for the mountain-climber, whether experienced or prospective. The beginner may get from it the information necessary for his comfort and pleasure. One who attempts mountain-climbing elsewhere than in the White Mountain region may get from this little manual many helpful suggestions."

+ R of Rs 71:670 Je '25 100w

"A convenient and interesting little guide-book."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:884 J1 4 '25 220w

Spring'd Republican p12 S 29 '25 160w

OLLIVANT, ALFRED. Boxer and Beauty. 130p il $1.50 Doubleday [6s Heinemann] [25-7834]

"Mr. Ollivant writes his tale around a huge cart horse, Boxer by name. Boxer has two adorers. One is his raw-boned mate, Beauty. The other is his breeder's son, Will Lord, a born horseman. Every one else in the story dislikes him except the heroine, who loves him on Will's account. Will dies—as do more than half the other characters—and Boxer splashes out into the rain with a new owner, who bludgeons him instead of cajoling him. That is all. The author knows animals too well to idealize the big horse. He lets him remain stupid and cantankerous throughout, save for his love for Will and his grief at the latter's death."—Lit R

"Alfred Ollivant has veered back in the general direction of the one theme which won his lasting fame. He has veered back toward it; but not far enough. The hero of his 'Boxer and Beauty' is as far behind Owd Bob, the collie protagonist of his 'Bob, Son of Battle,' as this latest book is behind his first one, and as the horse is far behind the dog in brain and loveliness." A. P. Terhune

—Lit R p6 Ap 11 '25 550w

"The story is full, naturally, of feeling and the warm flavor of the soil rather than of any intellectual qualities. But it is never sentimental, as most of its class are likely to be, and never absurd; Mr. Ollivant tells it simply and movingly, with taste and restraint. 'Boxer and Beauty' is not unworthy of the author of 'Bob, Son of Battle.'"

+ N Y Times p9 Je 14 '25 300w

"Lovers of animal stories should revel in this tale of two delightful horses."

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ap 19 '25 100w

"Doubtless much of the success of Mr. Ollivant's handling of such themes is due to the fact that he never humanizes his animals although he does endow them with definite personalities. Animal psychology is always dangerous ground for fiction but Mr. Ollivant makes no mis-step."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:73 Ag 22 '25 140w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p712 N 6 '24 230w

O'LONDON, JOHN, pseud. See Whitten, W.

OLSON, EMERY E., and HALLMAN, JOHN
 2 WALTER. Credit management. 444p il $4.50
 Ronald

658.882 Credit

25-8830

"Presents both principles and practice in considerable detail and gives some attention to collection procedure. Should be valuable to business executives other than those engaged in credit work."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:604 D '25

OMAN, CAROLA. Princess Amelia. 319p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Unwin]

25-2657

A romance of the 18th century giving glimpses of the life at the court of George III. It is the tragic love story of the youthful Princess Amelia, a delicate and charming little lady who falls in love with Colonel Fitzroy, a gentleman of her father's court. Since the princess cannot marry until she is twenty-six, the affair moves slowly thru eight years of secret longing, only to have the lovers' happiness, at the last moment, snatched from them by the death of the princess. The sad note of the story is somewhat relieved by the vivacious and lovely Lady Georgiana, dearest friend of the princess, whose fortunes and love affair are of a brighter hue.

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 7 '25 500w

"The book arouses sympathy and affection for the unfortunate Princess Amelia and, as a well-drawn picture of Eighteenth Century court life, is well worth reading."

+ Ind 114:422 Ap 11 '25 60w

"As historical fiction it is interesting because of the antipodal difference between it and the average American biographical novel." A. W. Porterfield

Int Bk R p616 Ag '25 450w

"The tale as a whole gives a carefully drawn, minutely detailed picture of life [at court] at a not very lively period, its appeal almost exclusively centred in the sweet, frail little figure of the pretty Princess, who could be so gay and lighthearted when she had a chance."

+ N Y Times p9 F 8 '25 620w

"'Princess Amelia' has the dignity of its eighteenth century setting and the gentility of a tender romance." B. A. Rosenbaum

+ N Y Tribune p10 Mr 22 '25 300w

"The affair is none too thrilling at best and its progress is continually impeded by long descriptions of gowns, equipages, and personages of the time. The bright spot, or rather streak, in the book is Lady Georgiana Vavasour, who comes in from the country to be lady in waiting to the Princess. She is a very dashing young lady, and her sparkle and verve are almost enough to outweigh the dulness and sentimentality of the rest of the tale."

—+ Sat R of Lit 1:620 Mr 21 '25 150w

"Altogether a vivid and attractive picture of life in the eighteenth century."

+ Spec 133:850 N 29 '24 130w

"Written with vigor as well as charm, and pervaded with the gracious, albeit somewhat irritating atmosphere of the 18th century of Fanny Burney and Sheridan."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Ap 8 '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p628 O 9 '24 320w

ONE act plays for stage and study; a collection of plays by well-known dramatists, American, English, and Irish; preface by Augustus Thomas. 490p $3 French, S.

822 American drama—Collections. English drama—Collections

25-9091

Twenty-five one-act plays by English, American, and Irish dramatists. Contents: The man upstairs, by Augustus Thomas; The mayor and the manicure, by George Ade; The red owl, by William Gillette; The rector, by Rachel Crothers; A flower of Yeddo, by Victor Mapes; Deceivers, by William C. DeMille; The girl, by Edward Peple; Peace manoeuvres, by Richard Harding Davis; Moonshine, by Arthur Hopkins; The dying wife, by Laurette Taylor; The little father of robbery, by Clare Kummer; Such a charming young man, by Zoe Akins; Judge Lynch, by J. W. Rogers, jr.; The widow of Wasdale Head, by Sir Arthur Pinero; Dolly's little bills, by

ONE act plays—Continued

Henry Arthur Jones; The man in the bowler hat, by A. A. Milne; Lonesome, like, by Harold Brighouse; Hanging and wiving, by J. Hartley Manners; 'Op-o-me-thumb, by Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce; Phipps, by Stanley Houghton; Spreading the news, by Lady Gregory; A minuet, by Louis N. Parker; The ghost of Jerry Bundler, by W. W. Jacobs; Wealth and wisdom, by Oliphant Down.

Booklist 21:372 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p2 J1 11 '25 260w

Reviewed by J. T. Shipley
Lit R p10 Ap 25 '25 160w

"Most of the twenty-five plays are actable; they are, as a matter of fact, far more for the stage than the study. Let the amateurs rejoice," W. P. Eaton

N Y Tribune p9 Mr 8 '25 120w

"Handy volume. Many of these one-act dramas are available in no other form."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 22 '25 200w

"A heterogeneous collection of good and bad, showing some writers at their best, with others who take the one-act form trivially, and hence have not treated it worthily. The present anthology is avowedly made up for the acting group; its literary value is uneven, as though much of the material had been resurrected rather than urgently chosen."

+ Outlook 139:195 F 4 '25 300w

Springf'd Republican p14 S 16 '25 250w

"The plays are practically all light comedies of character or situation touched with poetry or pathos as the case requires—essentially one-act material handled by experienced craftsmen."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:489 J1 '25 130w

Wis Lib Bul 21:141 My '25

O'NEILL, EUGENE GLADSTONE. Desire under the elms. 166p $2 Boni & Liveright

812 25-9427

"The pivotal figure is Ephraim Cabot, dour owner of a dour New England farm. The period is the 50's. There are two sons by a first wife. They hate their father with a real New England hatred. There is a third son, offspring of a second wife. This Eben is softer than his half brothers, but he, too, hates his paternal parent because he is certain that the man was cruel to his mother. . . . Ephraim Cabot, at 76, returns with a third wife—young and not at all unpleasant to the eye. Revolting, the elder sons depart for Californi-ay. The son by the second wife remains, and, because of this, tragedy lurks in the shadow of the trees. The old man longs for another son, the young wife acquiesces. But, when the child arrives, it is not the old man's. It is Eben's. So the inevitable O'Neill tragedy comes from beneath the elms and enters the New England farmhouse. The child is slain by its mother, and, finally, she and Eben are led away, leaving Ephraim Cabot, hard and lonely in the presence of his hard and lonely God."—Theatre Arts Mo

Booklist 21:373 J1 '25

Cleveland p89 S '25

"O'Neill is so much better a dramatist than a literary man, that he ought never to subject his plays to the reading test; and ought always to let his drama carry its own emotions, without writing bad emotion into it."

Dial 80:70 Ja '26 80w

"It is O'Neill's peculiar gift, rare enough in this age of realism, that he can take such a crude and elemental tale and elevate it toward tragic poetry. . . . At times it rises to poignant and shaking tragic force. As a picture of New England the drama is a trifle ludicrous. As an elemental tragedy of human desire, raised to an exaggerated pitch of emotional excitation, it is a striking performance. If O'Neill were only a shade less emotional, a shade less theatrical and a shade more philosophical and in the finer sense realistic, it might well have been an enduring work of art. But by just that shade it misses." W. P. Eaton

+ — N Y Tribune p10 My 24 '25 620w

"When Mr. O'Neill is oblivious of his audience, as in the scene of the father and the sons, bound for Californi-a and taunting the old man after a repression of their entire lives, he is irresistible. At times he anticipates a need for exposition. His creative passion is almost sufficient to bridge those gaps of somewhat pedestrian writing." J: W. Crawford

+ — N Y World p6m Ap 26 '25 240w

Theatre Arts Mo 9:4 Ja '25 700w

OPDYCKE, JOHN BAKER (OLIVER OPDYCKE, pseud.). Language of advertising; with an introd. by Percy S. Straus. 494p il $3.50 Pitman

659 Advertising

25-19570

An elaborate volume designed to interest the general reader as well as to instruct the student of the art of copy writing. The author finds much good advertising copy in literature, and some literature in advertising copy. He gives numerous illustrations of both, covering his subject in entertaining style. A useful appendix outlines 33 courses in advertising, and is followed by two lists giving the derivation and correct usages of words in common speech.

Booklist 22:147 Ja '26

"Mr. Opdycke serves up his lessons with sauces composed of succulent fruits and spicy condiments gathered from a thousand sources. Read his charming essays and there are your lessons before you couched in the language of a scholar and a poet. And a poet with an imagination, lively at times, and stern occasionally. A delightful rivulet of fancy runs through this remarkable book."

+ N Y Times p2 S 13 '25 960w

"If one should go through the book and cut the word 'advertising' wherever it appears, the book would lose little. It would still remain a much too long (there are over 200,000 words) and rather rambling work on the art of writing, including pronunciation, spelling, and punctuation, illustrated with copious extracts from the whole range of English literature." E. E. Calkins

Sat R of Lit 2:408 D 12 '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p622 S 24 '25 260w

OPDYCKE, JOHN BAKER (OLIVER OPDYCKE, pseud.), ed. Literature of letters; famous literary letters as related to life, to the history of literature, and to the art of composition. (Stratford classics) 504p 96c Lyons & Carnahan

826 Letters. Letter-writing

25-14231

"This book purports to furnish guidance for the study of letters written by gifted and noted people. It is an attempt to group some very remarkable letters, selected, in the main, somewhat at random from the files of literature, according to literary manner or quality; and then to bring such comment and analysis to bear as are calculated to be most valuable for the interpretation of the letters as well as for training in the inspiration to good letter writing." (Prefatory letter) The letters are grouped under the headings Engagingness; Humor; Individuality; Restraint; Movement; "You" and "I". In addition, the book contains a bibliography and an index.

"If this appeals to you, well and good; but if a pronounced pedagogic flavor spoils any book for you, shun this one." R. W. T.

+ — Lit R p14 O 31 '25 70w

N Y Tribune p11 J1 12 '25 150w

"Mr. Opdycke has been associated with the teaching of letter writing for many years, and his factual knowledge of the epistolary art and its vast literature are manifest throughout the book. This manual should be of intrinsic value both to the mature admirer of well-written letters and to the young student of English composition."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:731 My 2 '25 220w

OPDYCKE, OLIVER, pseud. See Opdycke, J. B.

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Gabriel Samara, peacemaker. 323p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-20258

Gabriel Samara is Russia's man of the hour. He has put down Bolshevism and is striving with all the energy of his forceful nature to bring an orderly government out of chaos. Working for him, but not always in sympathy with him is his secretary, Catherine Borans, apparently an American girl, but really a daughter of the Tsars. The story tells of their love which emerges triumphant from the wreck of Samara's political ideals.

Booklist 22:119 D '25

"During the many years Oppenheim, remarkable maker of plots, has been writing tales of mystery and romance the world has grown to be politically an absorbing and exciting universe. Mr. Oppenheim has again made use of the material at his hand; and from it he has written a story which will rank high as a contribution to political fantasies. There is ample justification for the framework upon which the plot is allowed to rest." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 10 '25 900w

"Perhaps it is not the best he has ever written, but it certainly is not his worst."

Ind 115:619 N 28 '25 100w

"It is a tale in Mr. Oppenheim's best vein."

+ Lit R p11 N 21 '25 110w

N Y Times p9 O 25 '25 680w

Outlook 141:358 N 4 '25 160w

"We have searched the book vainly for a redeeming feature in its sustained banality."

— Sat R of Lit 2:324 N 21 '25 160w

"The book is carefully written."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p700 O 22 '25 180w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Stolen idols. 293p $2 Little

25-9634

In a remote Chinese temple, beside a great statue of Buddha there stood two cunningly wrought images representing Soul and Body, one the benign incarnation of good and the other the sinister presentment of all evil. Each was alleged to conceal a fabulous wealth in jewels. When the story opens, one man, to gain these treasures, has met with a violent death while his companion barely escapes alive. When Geoffrey Ballaston recovers consciousness he learns that the idol in keeping of his dead friend has disappeared and that the single one, the Body, which remains to him is useless without its mate, for they can only be opened together. He learns further that the Body, separated from the Soul, exerts a powerful influence for evil over all who come near it. All these dire predictions are realized until at last the stolen idols are reunited and love robs them of further power to harm.

Booklist 22:34 O '25

"The story is exciting, as Mr. Oppenheim's stories have a habit of being. There is in it, however, a more serious intent, for he presents very graphically the plight of the landed gentry of England as well as the particular virtues and the picturesqueness which are bound up in that class." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 1050w

Cleveland p84 J1 '25

Ind 114:619 My 30 '25 100w

"In 'Stolen Idols' he is just a little below his accustomed level. At times he is even dull and wooden." Donald Douglas

— + Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 150w

"The story moves slowly, and is told in a rather perfunctory manner. It conveys little suggestion of reality, but some of it is fairly entertaining, and though below the average level of Mr. Oppenheim's work, 'Stolen Idols' will no doubt serve to while away an hour or two for the unexact reader."

— + N Y Times p9 My 17 '25 720w

N Y Tribune p9 Je 7 '25 450w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 140:256 Je 17 '25 180w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"There is much pleasure to be had in witnessing such good workmanship."

+ Spec 135:242 Ag 8 '25 300w

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 26 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 S 3 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:200 J1 '25

ORCHARD, WILLIAM EDWIN. Christianity and world-problems. 211p $1.75 Doran [6s Hodder & S.]

230 Christianity

[25-19062]

That present day problems arise from a collapse of faith, and that their solution lies in world-wide acceptance and application of the teachings of Christ is the platform of the author. Among the problems considered are the immensity of the universe as a deterrent to faith, the apparent conflict of science and religion, Christianity among the religions of the world, the church and war, and Christianity, the answer to social as well as to individual need.

Bookm 61:xxviii J1 '25 80w

"This is a thoughtful work and merits attention."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p303 Ap 30 '25 160w

ORCZY, EMMUSKA, baroness. Pimpernel and Rosemary. 446p $2 Doran [7s 6d Cassell]

24-1772

"The Baroness Orczy has brought down to the twentieth century, into and out of the World War, the long thread of romance which she started years ago with 'The Scarlet Pimpernel.' In her latest book she has for her hero, Peter Blakeney, who is the great-great grandson of the original Scarlet Pimpernel. Peter is a reckless and helpless chap, gallant, gay and fond of adventure. He loves Rosemary, and when he believes he has lost her to another he goes galumping into the war between Hungary and Roumania. Out of the midst of that struggle he brings deliverance from seemingly impending death for his rash young cousins, Philip and Anna. More wonderful yet, he wins his own happiness with Rosemary."—N Y World

Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '25 850w

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"History is as good a medium for picturesque romance as modern politics is a bad one; and unless the reader is prepared to accept Hungary as a pitiful victim and Roumania as a ruthless oppressor his sympathy is likely to stray, and in a tale of this kind such straying is fatal. The story, moreover, has fundamental weaknesses of structure and characterization which make the behaviour of both oppressors and oppressed seem singularly futile."

— New Statesman 24:214 N 22 '24 200w

"The story compares well in its interest, its colorful background, its complications, its dramatic quality with the Baroness Orczy's previous Pimpernel stories."

+ N Y Times p25 F 1 '25 370w

N Y Tribune p11 Mr 22 '25 230w

"It all goes with a thrill. Trust the Baroness for that."

N Y World p5m F 1 '25 130w

Sat R of Lit 1:603 Mr 14 '25 300w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 3 '25 220w

ORCZY, EMMUSKA—Continued.

"An exciting story, the interest of which is well sustained."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p689 O 30 '24 130w

ORDE-BROWNE, GRANVILLE ST JOHN.

Vanishing tribes of Kenya. 284p il $5 Lip-pincott [21s Seeley, Service]

916.76 Kenya colony and protectorate. Ethnology—Africa [25-10488]

"Major Orde Browne spent a good many years observing the manners and customs of the primitive tribes inhabiting the southern slopes of Mount Kenya—tribes which were very little affected by outside influence till the beginning of the present century. He has collected a great deal of interesting detail on their history and laws, their domestic and religious and military institutions, all of which are rapidly disintegrating. For the smaller tribes are all fast becoming merged in their larger and more important neighbours, while every influence tends to make the young people despise and forget the old traditions." In his final chapter Major Orde Browne has some very suggestive things to say about the psychology of the African negro, and the problems which confront the European settlers and administrators."—New Statesman

"A book which should greatly interest the general reader as well as the ethnologist." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 13 '25 820w

"Unfortunately, his catalogue methods, while they have resulted in a volume stuffed with information laboriously gathered and neatly arranged under labels such as History, Marriage, Laws, Domestic Food and Drink, Arts and Crafts, Law, Dances and a dozen others, carry with them no breath of life. He gives us no rich and suggestive interpretations of the African scene, such as we find in the work of Llewelyn Powys, no stirring accounts of adventure, no gripping pictures comparable to those, let us say in Carl Akeley's 'In Brightest Africa.'" F. O'Brien

+ Lit R p3 Jl 25 '25 650w

"Will be of value to all who have to deal with natives either as government officials, missionaries, or settlers. What he has to say on the bride-price, initiation, trial by ordeal and government, is all eminently sound. His book is a careful, though not exhaustive, study." B. J. Seligman

+ Nature 115:866 Je 6 '25 600w

New Statesman 25:180 My 23 '25 150w

"The results of his inquiries are embodied in this valuable volume; they include interesting observations on the fauna and flora, for the author appears to be a keen naturalist as well as a magistrate and a soldier."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p276 Ap 23 '25 2000w

ORLEANS, ELISABETH CHARLOTTE, duchesse d'. Letters of Madame; tr. and ed. by Gertrude Scott Stevenson. 2v v 2 307p il $5 Appleton

B or 92 France—History—Bourbons, 1589-1789 [24-14039]

The first volume of the "Letters of Madame" (Book Review Digest, 1924) covered the years 1661 to 1708. The present volume continues the intimate story of the French court, as told in these letters, from 1709 to the death of Madame in 1722. She was the wife of Philip, duke of Orleans, the only brother of Louis XIV, who had a great regard for her. King Louis died in 1715 and in this volume of letters Madam's son Philip, duke of Orleans, the famous regent, has a prominent place.

Booklist 21:338 Je '25

Boston Transcript p4 My 2 '25 950w

"It is the candy of the correspondence the new edition brings: two volumes of tart sweets, queer-coloured crystals of life, witty characterizations, piquancies given with astonishing literalness and comedy and irony. The exhibition of selected aspects, the concentration of special qualities, has rendered these more readily amusing. Madame appears chiefly in the light rôle of entertainer, a part she knew how vivaciously to fill!" Paul Rosenfeld

Dial 79:248 S '25 2500w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p5 S 12 '25 260w

"Altogether a delightfully high-spirited, sensible, and intelligent woman, who, in spite of her personal dislikes, tells us any amount of good stories about the French court under Louis XIV. and the regent."

+ Nation and Ath 36:893 Mr 28 '25 800w

"Particularly to those readers who have not time for the seventeen volumes of Saint-Simon are to be recommended the Letters of Madame, which, edited and annotated with skill by Miss Stevenson, give a connected history and a colored picture of the French court during the great half-century." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 43:268 Jl 29 '25 1600w

"Both the selection and translation of the letters is well done on the whole. The difficulty of reducing so large a mass to two volumes must have been great. Yet one cannot help feeling that the editor has overrated the squeamishness of the age. Over and over again one is arrested by those irritating rows of dots. Madame can tell us so much that we want to know, and for those who cannot read German she is inaccessible. One cannot quite see why she should not be allowed a little more of the freedom she invariably gave herself. After all, she was a good Christian and most of what she thought fit to write ought to be able to be heard by modern ears."

+ New Statesman 24:604 F 28 '25 700w

"Her chronicle of Versailles is masterly; her style is informal, colorful, vivid, combining scope with accuracy of detail and an inexhaustible curiosity with the ability to gratify it." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ap 26 '25 1300w

N Y Tribune p7 My 17 '25 300w

Reviewed by Arthur Krock

N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 1100w

Outlook 140:305 Je 24 '25 20w

"Her letters are not of great literary merit. They are sometimes witty, with a good deal of what Mme. de Sévigné would doubtless have considered unseemly language. Their great value, except when her strong prejudices step in to mar it, is that they give us the view of a clever outsider of the chief personages of France and, in lesser degree, of the affairs of the country."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p151 Mr 5 '25 920w

ORPEN, SIR WILLIAM. Stories of old Ireland & myself. 94p il $3.50 Holt [12s 6d Williams & N.]

920 Dublin—Social life and customs. Ireland—Biography 25-9650

The author of these reminiscences of old Ireland is a British painter, born in Dublin, famed for his portrait characterizations and the series of war pictures painted by him under appointment as official artist of the World war. It is a romantic Ireland of which he writes. He glances lightly from one picture or character to another and enlivens his memories at every turn with anecdotes. Such men appear as Timothy Healy, William O'Brien, Michael Davitt and Hugh Lane, with the artist's portraits of them. There are memories of the Dublin School of art and of Dublin authors and artists.

"Sir William Orpen's pictures alone would make a delightful volume, printed, as they are, very delicately, with an atmosphere of soft sun and fine Irish mist; yet here they are accompanied by a running commentary by their maker on the old Ireland which inspired them, the Ireland of his boyhood. Gorgeous are his portraits of Ireland's grand old men. Delightful are the pictures of the 'colleens' whom he knew in his youth, and the rides in jaunting cars and picnics of famous men, and all the rest. Enchanting are the anecdotes, which trip through it all in a happy, haphazard fashion particularly Irish." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 20 '25 600w

"A book of reminiscences this, and in a sketchy way an autobiography, but it escapes the pitfall of such books, for it chats away and is not prosy, and though it deals with many Irish people very little known even in Ireland, it manages to invest them with interest." C. de Kay

+ N Y Times p7 Je 21 '25 1350w

"His sketches, the majority of which have not been published before, are a pure, unadulterated delight." Glen Mullin

+ N Y Tribune p5 Je 28 '25 650w

"Somebody will no doubt write a long, enlightening account of Irish life and thought from 1880 to 1920, very meaty and improving, in his place. Sir William can do and has done a much more entertaining thing. His pen flits over the expanse of time, events, and people, mayfly fashion, touching now here now there."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:863 Je 27 '25 260w

"The odd misprints and versions of proper names accord, somehow, with the delightfully inconsequential atmosphere of the book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p809 D 4 '24 1150w

OSBORN, EDWARD BOLLAND. Heritage of Greece and the legacy of Rome. (Doran's modern readers' bookshelf) 192p $1.25 Doran

913.37 Civilization, Greek. Civilization, Roman 25-18475

"Broadly speaking, Greece was theory and Rome practice. Greece was reason and Rome authority. Greece was self-determination and Rome discipline." The author follows this general discipline in his study of the contribution of the Greek spirit and the Roman letter to modern life and thought.

"The most adequate summary of this enthralling study were wholly inadequate. So vitally are the topics correlated, so firmly knit the fabrics of the narrative, that the fragmentary details possible only to present in a review of unforbidding length, give no real idea of the perfection of the study as a whole." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 850w

"It is evident from this volume that he is a classicist of much learning, deep interest and fresh enthusiasm. With a subject so large and complicated as to be unwieldy, he has succeeded in presenting it with a semblance of comprehensive survey, notwithstanding the narrow bounds of a hundred pages for each of its two sections, with fine proportion and with a very successful capture of the spirit of the two civilizations."

+ N Y Times p2 Jl 19 '25 500w

"It may be said at once that Mr. Osborn, the literary editor of The London Morning Post, has been as successful in this task as could be expected. Whether anybody but a genius could adequately discuss the two great classical civilizations in 192 small octavo pages is another question. The book contains its unavoidable quota of misprints and errors." G. M. Whicher

+ N Y Tribune p11 S 13 '25 550w

"A study of this little book should prove a stimulus to further reading in the same field. To provide for this Mr. Osborn has appended a short list of books on related topics."

Sat R of Lit 2:243 O 24 '25 140w

OSBORN, HENRY FAIRFIELD. Earth speaks to Bryan. 91p $1 Scribner

213 Evolution. Religion and science 25-12633

Professor Osborn, director of the American museum of natural history, answers Mr Bryan as a naturalist and calls to witness the great truth which the earth proclaims of a long slow upward movement or evolution which he defines as a "continuous creation of life fitted to a continuously changing world."

"Evolution is shown to us in its true light, not only as a scientific fact, but as demonstrating the highest principles of life from the practical, the ethical, and the spiritual sides. The beauty, order, and design of nature are presented in a most convincing manner." M. P. R.

+ Am J Pub Health 15:906 O '25 320w

Bookm 62:220 O '25 160w

Cleveland p72 Jl '25

"In spite of defects the five brief chapters which make up this book are well worth reading by the layman who wishes to learn the scientific point of view from a great scientist who is also truly reverent and deeply religious. The last chapter, entitled 'The Credo of a Naturalist,' is perhaps the strongest in the book." J. A. MacCallum

+ Lit R p4 D 26 '25 800w

"It is natural that Mr. Osborn should reply, in behalf of the earth, to Mr. Bryan, who represents God. The two have much in common. Both are dogmatic and long-winded, and both quote the Bible abundantly."

— Nation 121:337 S 23 '25 100w

Nature 116:532 O 10 '25 300w

"Professor Osborn's orderly summation of earth's revelations in its superficial layers and the processes of evolution that are constantly in progress in the sight of all whose eyes are open, may be considered in effect to represent the defense of Mr. Scopes at his trial for teaching the facts of natural history as the great scientists of the world have interpreted them, which facts and interpretations and teaching, however, are contrary to the laws and the peace and dignity of the State of Tennessee—thanks to Mr. Bryan." Van Buren Thorne

N Y Times p1 Je 28 '25 2650w

Reviewed by H. M. Parshley

N Y Tribune p1 Jl 26 '25 240w

Reviewed by A. G. Ingalls

Outlook 140:469 Jl 29 '25 130w

Pratt p13 autumn '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p786 N 26 '25 220w

OSBORN, LUCRETIA THATCHER (PERRY)
* (MRS HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN). Chain of life; [with a foreword by Michael I. Pupin]. 189p il $2 Scribner

575 Evolution

25-23389

A brief history of life on earth from the most primitive organisms up to the first men of history. The introductory chapters sketch the growth and spread of the evolutionary idea and the origin of life on earth. The author is the wife of Henry Fairfield Osborn and she quotes largely from his writings.

"It is a scholarly study of life, giving to the student and layman very definite and true ideas of evolution. Combined with references to Professor Osborn's well-known theories and the many fine illustrations, this book cannot but prove of wide interest."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '26 130w

"To say, as do the publishers, that Mrs. Osborn's book 'explains the origin of life on earth' is to make a false assertion. Nothing is gained by trying to popularize such verbiage as Prof. Osborn's 'four evolutions of energy'—the 'Inorganic Environment,' the 'Organism,' the 'Heredity-germ' and the 'Life Environment.'" G. A. Dorsey

+ N Y World p6m D 13 '25 700w

OSBORN, STANLEY R. Red hair and blue sea. 374p $2 Scribner

25-10417

A Titian-haired young woman who is undecided which suitor she loves best, a bland looking pirate and a Polynesian Hercules, are the principal characters in this tale of the South Seas. The pirate, Burke, abducts Palmyra from shipboard en route to Honolulu with her friends. While Palmyra always craved adventure, she never pictured any thing like this. While Burke gloats over his prize, the Polynesian deftly steals Palmyra and brings her to a deserted island. Before Palmyra's ventures come to an end she has quite decided which of the suitors to marry—if she ever sees him again.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 29 '25 220w

"A diverting, although highly improbable, romance."

+ Ind 114:675 Je 13 '25 80w

"On the whole, the novel is an engaging and not too exacting tale which manages to capture something of mystery and very little of wonder."

+ — N Y Times p8 My 24 '25 720w

"Sharks, Micronesians and sea thrills in plenty distinguish this volume."

N Y Tribune p9 Je 7 '25 160w

"Makes no striking departure from the standardized formula for fiction of this type. The book is unevenly written, in some parts incredibly mediocre, in others surprisingly good."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:90 Ag 29 '25 250w

"It is a preposterous, dramatic narrative, replete with stirring incidents which keep the interest alert to the final scene."

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 380w

OSGOOD, HERBERT LEVI. American colonies in the eighteenth century. 4v v 3-4 580:582p ea $5.50 Columbia univ. press [ea 28s Milford]

973.2 United States—History—Colonial period. United States—Politics and government—Colonial period. Great Britain—Colonies—North America

With these two volumes Professor Osgood's exhaustive study of the American colonies is concluded. The four volumes on the eighteenth century and the three on the seventeenth, of which they are a continuation, constitute a standard work in which the author has striven "so to present the history of the Colonies, on its political and institutional side, as to show that there was in their development both unity and diversity."

Booklist 22:27 O '25

"They are characterized by the wealth of detail, the sound and careful research, the consummate skill which never allowed Osgood to get lost and always enabled him to keep in close touch with the highway of synthetic perspective." W. P. M. Kennedy

+ Canadian Hist R 6:254 S '25 1100w

"The present volumes, left in ms. at the author's death in 1918, were published through the generous efforts of some of his former pupils. They deserve the thanks of every student of colonial history, and the support of every public and college library in the country." S. E. Morison

+ New Repub 44:210 O 14 '25 900w

"The present volume carries on the internal history of each separate colony with the same elaborate detail that characterizes the previous volumes."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p259 Ag 16 '25 950w (Review of v 3)

"Shows the same evidence of laborious research, of a sound and balanced judgment, of a grasp of the large issues often involved in little events; is written in the same clear and simple English, with passages of rare eloquence where the occasion warrants them."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p590 S 17 '25 1400w (Review of v 4)

O'SHAUGHNESSY, EDITH LOUISE (COUES) (MRS NELSON O'SHAUGHNESSY). Married life. 299p $2 Harcourt

25-18274

"There are six stories contained in this book, two long, the first and last, and four short tales, all of which are concerned with marital relationships. The first tells of a rich and high-bred old man, the widower of three wives, who at sixty-two takes a fourth bride in the person of an attractive mercenary woman less than half his age. She brings him youth, beauty, virtue, devotion, in a fair exchange for his wealth, but when an early flame re-enters her life, the elderly husband unsuspectingly loses all these radiant possessions, passing away peacefully at the end without ever knowing the wrong that has been done him." (Sat R of Lit) Contents: Mr Crane's last wife; You never can tell; Seeing Edward again; Arthur Albion Street's illness; Mr Bishop; Souls in intaglio.

"The actual truth about this volume is that it is not for average readers. It is primarily for exceptional ones. These stories are remarkable. They are never crude, nor vulgar nor morbid. They are merely positive in their fidelity to life as seen by the eyes of maturity. None of them could have been written by a man or woman under forty. No adolescent intelligence could strike the balance between the dramatic and the commonplace as Mrs. O'Shaughnessy has done. No sheepish imitator of Sherwood Anderson, that gutter realist, could so achieve true realism with art and simplicity."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 10 '25 420w

"On the whole, Mrs. O'Shaughnessy is only a raconteur who polishes her stories to enhance her fame and not her subject. She is moderate in most things, and mediocre." Eva Goldbeck

+ — Lit R p5 N 28 '25 320w

"Mrs. O'Shaughnessy has a disturbing power, a sure and pointed and tender vision for the irreparable flaws in life. Here are six short stories dealing with phases of modern marriage, and each is appealing and absorbingly interesting."

+ Nation 121:764 D 30 '25 50w

"Married Life is the reunion of a half dozen short stories under a convenient roof. Marriage happens to be their theme, but from life they are second cousins thrice removed. A plausible, smart unreality prevades them."

+ New Repub 45:119 D 16 '25 170w

"Her situations are exquisitely organized to diverge inwardly among the characters, to converge outwardly upon the reader. Her skillful, telling recognitions pile up an overwhelming deposit of tacit social satire. On the whole, there are wealth of observation, maturity of reflection and skill and feeling of design in Mrs. O'Shaughnessy's exposures of 'Married Life.'"

+ N Y Times p8 N 15 '25 580w

"The first story, which is decidedly the best of the lot, is an example of simple writing, with sharp, biting comments on the characters themselves. The last story is, however, the one which Mrs. O'Shaughnessy seems to have brought forth in the most pain and consequently with the most pride. It comes, despite an occasional beauty of phrasing, dangerously near spoiling the generally high level of the book." L. F. Hellman

+ — N Y Tribune p11 Ja 10 '26 400w

"It has never quite been the privilege of this reviewer to find anywhere so accurate and so superbly contemptuous a sense of the charlatanry of death as in this book. And certainly not since the exquisite author of 'Bliss' and 'The Garden Party' has any one remembered and made such devastating use of the minutiae of detail in people and clothes and furniture—especially furniture." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p5m O 11 '25 300w

"They are deftly written, witty, ironic, clear-cut productions, except the last, an inherently impressive work whose appeal to the average reader is weakened by the author's intentional envelopment of her theme in a cloudy, half-mystical indirectness. The initial story seems to us by long odds the best."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:199 O 10 '25 200w

O'SHAUGHNESSY, EDITH LOUISE (COUES)
(MRS NELSON O'SHAUGHNESSY). Viennese medley. 295p $2 Huebsch

24-27996

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"A vivid and authentic portrayal of the life of a middle-class family in post-war Vienna. The picture of the gentle old Tante Ilde is skilfully and touchingly drawn."

+ Booklist 21:198 F '25

"There is a vagueness about her characterization at times which reveals her with still some technique to master. Yet there is beauty in the book as well as power." C. P.

+ Cath World 120:710 F '25 400w

"So engrossing is the book, and so faithful in its delineation of people, conditions and incidents, that one can not read it without experiencing somewhat the stark necessities which beset Tante Ilde and her kinspeople." Angie Ousley

+ Int Bk R p485 Je '25 900w

Reviewed by Emil Lengyel

Nation 120:576 My 20 '25 320w

New Repub 43:81 Je 10 '25 120w

"The note of pathos humanizes and sentimentalizes the story. Nevertheless, Tante Ilde is to no small degree a creation of 'Dresden china,' and the other characters live only by grace of the reader's generosity. Yet despite these flaws, 'Viennese Medley' is no commonplace novel."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:307 N 22 '24 450w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 18 '25 260w

"It is a touching and interesting, if unhappy, narrative. A certain artlessness and monotony in the narration is compensated for by her indubitable sincerity in constructing a picture of a very pitiful reality."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p613 S 24 '25 380w

OSKISON, JOHN MILTON. Wild harvest; a novel of transition days in Oklahoma. 300p $2 Appleton

25-15762

The scene of this love story is a prairie farm in Oklahoma. Nan Forest is the heroine, as capable and jolly as she is pretty. Her popularity with the country youths—particularly Tom Winger—rouses the ire of Ruby Engel who retaliates in the only way she knows, by casting her net about Tom and about Nan's fiancé, Harvey Stokes, as well. This is not Nan's only trouble. Her father, a fugitive from justice, is caught and brought to trial, and there are anxious months of waiting, darkened by feud and bloodshed, before the clouds lift and the sun shines over the prairies.

"The book will be read by the casual reader for the story, but the more discerning will read it as a picture of an interesting period in America's development. The color and feel of pioneer days in Oklahoma are well done, the fleeting glimpses into the real problems of these people are fascinating. I know of no other novel dealing with this particular phase of our development." Homer Croy

+ Int Bk R p679 S '25 460w

"The book seems an odd mixture of 'The Virginian' and 'Pollyanna' set in a new background." L. Bromfield

+ Lit R p3 N 28 '25 130w

"'Wild Harvest' might have ranked as a very good tenth-rate stock Western story if the author had not been ambitious to introduce some intelligence into the substance and background of his yarn. As a result, although it makes interesting reading throughout, the novel will fail to attract that large audience which stampedes at the sight of an idea. At the same time the book does not do the idea itself sufficient justice to permit it to rank with any of the more serious novels of the frontier."

+ N Y Times p22 S 20 '25 650w

"There is much interesting material in connection with those picturesque times when the pioneer farmers bent their efforts to converting the prairie country into pasture land, but of this Mr. Oskison has made little use. The book has almost no epic quality and the setting and characters are colorless."

+ N Y Tribune p13 O 11 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p774 N 19 '25 120w

OSSENDOWSKI, FERDINAND ANTONY. Shadow of the gloomy East; tr. by F. B. Czarnomski. 203p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Allen & U.]

914.7 Russia—Social conditions. Russia—Civilization. National characteristics, Russian 25-26438

Did you know that in peasant Russia today the spirits of the dead are still invoked; that young girls are dedicated with terrifying rites to witchcraft; that the heathen ceremonies of paganism are still secretly practiced? The author writes of the shadow of the gloomy East that falls across Russia, darkening the lives of her hundred and forty million people with political as well as social evils, and of some of the sinister personalities bred in the shadow.

Booklist 21:335 Je '25

"In this book is outlined with breadth and intensity one of the most startling revelations of present misery and future trouble which is to be found in the pages of any modern book." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap.8 '25 1050w

"It opens up to Western eyes the festering sore of the vast Russian wound, showing as a surgeon might show why that unhappy country suffers so horribly from moral decay and disintegration." C. F.

Cath World 122:570 Ja '26 120w

Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 60w

"A source-book for students of Russia, it is also a book of great popular appeal, in its timeliness and in its human insight and understanding. Perhaps it reminds one a little too much of Upton Sinclair's impetuous methods, but it must be remembered that the material at hand lends itself to drastic treatment." Esther Strong

+ Int Bk R p589 Ag '25 360w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 36:649 F 7 '25 100w

Reviewed by H. B. Fuller

New Repub 42:299 My 6 '25 560w

Reviewed by A. I. Nazaroff

N Y Times p3 Mr 22 '25 2100w

"The book is evidently the product of hysteria and of a weakness for the sensational. One could surrender one's self more freely to the entertainment it affords if one were not vexed by the thought that there is always a credulous public for this sort of lurid poppycock." Avraham Yarmolinsky

+ N Y Tribune p16 My 24 '25 620w

"Through chapter after chapter he charts and comments on the evil and perverted practices of the Russian nation. He shows how witchcraft, cults and heathenism have eaten into the very bone of the community. He makes it temporarily plausible, and as good reading as any properly perturbing ghost story."

OSSENDOWSKI, F. A.—Continued

N Y World p6m Mr 22 '25 340w

"If I try to characterize the American people by taking the Mormons' customs as typical of the American family, the adventists as the representatives of American religion, the Negroes as the American race, the Loeb and Leopold case as the proof of the existence in America of a 'highly developed kidnapping industry' and so on,—my picture of the American people would be as good as Ossendowski's picture of the Russian people. His book is a good 'story' for a magazine section of a perfectly 'yellow' newspaper." Pitirim Sorokin

— Sat R of Lit 2:431 D 19 '25 700w

Spec 135:202 Ag 1 '25 500w

Springf'd Republican p5a N 22 '25 450w

"A remarkable, but scarcely unbiased, picture of Russia. We must leave to students of Russian anthropology and of comparative religion the checking of the details. Mr. Ossendowski certainly tells a story that absorbs us while we find ourselves doubting the impression he creates."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p205 Mr 19 '25 370w

OSSENDOWSKI, FERDINAND ANTONY, and PALEN, LEWIS STANTON. From president to prison. 360p $3 Dutton [10s
6d Allen & U.]

947 Russia—History—Revolution, 1905.
Prisons—Siberia. Russo-Japanese war,
1904-1905 25-14240

In this volume the author gives an account of his personal experiences during the Russo-Japanese war and in the Revolution of 1905, also of the life of the Russian prisons in Siberia and Manchuria.

Booklist 22:67 N '25

"It is a stirring and interesting work, even after one has added the skeptic's grain of salt."
+ — Bookm 62:506 D '25 150w

Reviewed by F. P. Hull

Boston Transcript p2 J1 25 '25 1050w

"From President to Prison is really a valuable work—much more than a chronicle of the author's personal misadventures in Russia in the days of the 1905 Revolution. If nothing else, it is a treatise on the Russian prison system which everyone interested in world affairs should read."

+ Cath World 122:570 Ja '26 230w

Cleveland p113 D '25

"The book presents a scene at once vividly interesting and depressing. The present narrative lacks some of the spontaneity of 'Beasts, Men and Gods,' but it still possesses plenty of glamour, strife, and unusual adventure."

+ — Ind 115:276 S 5 '25 250w

"An able, vivid book, that is likely to become the friend of very many."

+ Nation and Ath 37:602 Ag 15 '25 700w

Reviewed by A. I. Nazarov

N Y Times p9 Ag 9 '25 1600w

"Ossendowski's description of prison life is interesting, but the vitality comes from the colorful bits of crime and degeneracy which he picks up, now in incidents that happen before his eyes, now in stories which he draws from the lips of his fellow prisoners. Behind it all is the philosopher, absorbingly engaged in the vivisection of his fellow mortals." H: K. Norton

+ N Y Tribune p10 O 11 '25 1100w

"Few tales of prison life have ever been told as this one is. Yet it is a pity that in some mystic way Dr. Ossendowski and his publishers could not have been vouchsafed foreknowledge of the immense success of 'Beasts, Men and Gods,' or even of the lesser success of 'Man and Mystery in Asia.' It is anticlimax to have this first of recollections, in point of happening, come last in point of writing." W: P. Beazell

+ — N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 520w

Outlook 141:166 S 30 '25 60w

Pratt p34 autumn '25

St Louis p411 N '25

Sat R 140:266 S 5 '25 450w

"As fiction it is entertaining, somewhat romantic, and amusing. As a factual chronicle, the book, like the preceding works of the author, has little if any value."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:499 Ja 16 '26 200w

Spec 135:108 J1 18 '25 120w

"He has the vitalizing touch to make any dry bones live. For such a man that period is almost too rich in stimulating material, and the book that he has written on it will hold the attention as a story of personal adventure with beginning, middle, and end."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p489 J1 23 '25 900w

OSTENSO, MARTHA. Wild geese. 356p $2 Dodd
25-21214

Miss Ostensso's prize story is the tale of a Scandinavian farming community in the Northwest. Caleb Gare, a malevolent figure of tyranny and greed, dominates the story. He is able to intimidate his own household by means of a damaging secret continually held over his wife as a threat. For his daughter Judith, who alone refuses submission to him, his keenest cruelty is reserved. She carries murder in her heart and once, at least, attempts to practice it. A young school teacher who lives in the Gare household, adds the only touch of brightness and tenderness to the grim story which ends with retribution for Caleb and the burning of his acres of flax.

Booklist 22:119 D '25

"'Wild Geese' is a book which eventually would have had to appear. That it happens to be written in English, and not in Norwegian, matters but little. It is as much part of the Norse-American literature as it is of native American writing." Karsten Roedder

Bookm 62:493 D '25 400w

"In her handling of Caleb Gare, Miss Ostensso has not shown herself particularly skilful. In other parts, too, the theatric, even the melodramatic are somewhat too often employed. Perhaps this is because, in order to win the prize, she had to hold in mind the demands of the producer as well as the publisher and fit her story to the screen as well as within the covers of a book. In spite of all this, however, very much remains upon the credit side of the ledger to make the novel well worth reading, for it is not only a new study of a type of American citizen comparatively unknown without the district wherein he lives, but it is a strong story in itself, sober in its realism yet shining with hope and the idealism of youth."

S. L. Rich

+ — Boston Transcript p3 O 31 '25 1050w

Reviewed by D. F. Gilman

Boston Transcript p7 N 18 '25 120w

"It bears within itself traces of its dual purpose: to be a novel and to be a film-piece; and the critic familiar with both forms will correctly say that it is faulty in both. But once these critical reservations are made, there is room for genuine pleasure in the simplicity and vividness of the book, in the whole rounded character of the protagonist. The good things far outweigh the bad."

+ — Dial 80:68 Ja '26 200w

Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 60w

"Martha Ostensso's 'Wild Geese,' the winner of a $13,500 prize competition, is remarkable not so much for what it accomplishes as for what it might have accomplished. It gives something of the impression of an unfinished statue by a Rodin; there is much that is unique and imposing about it, but also much that is inchoate and unformed." S. A. Coblenz

+ — Int Bk R p86 D '25 720w

"Her style is at times curiously awkward, but for the most part it fits the harshness of her story, tempered with touches of beauty over which she does not linger too long. 'Wild Geese' has more plot than most recent farm-novels. Miss Ostenso has made a good beginning, aside from her great good fortune in winning a large prize over some eleven hundred competitors. She is one more of the younger Americans worth keeping an eye upon." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p2 O 24 '25 450w

"It is not another 'White Peacock' by a new D. H. Lawrence. It has none of the splendor of a white peacock or the skyey romance of a wild goose. It is merely a well-stuffed goose." Donald Douglas

+ — Nation 122:14 Ja 6 '26 180w

"Crude life has been crudely reported in an old-fashioned, melodramatic technique, enhanced with some vigorous clean-cut writing and admirable characterization. It is about the soil; not of it; the spirit of saturation is not there. Overstatement spoils the stress of this domestic tragedy. Its beauty is tacked on, rather than organic, an added prettiness for literary effect. Yet it has compelling power of interest. There is every reason to believe that Miss Ostenso's next novel will be of greater merit. Having succeeded in a tour de force, she may then forget the moving pictures."

+ — N Y Times p8 O 18 '25 600w

"She has not attempted to be witty or clever or showy. She is not verbally fastidious nor a sensitive stylist in pursuit of the subtler music of thought. She is a little blunt and quite downright and factual—like the saga writers. What she lacks in subtlety she makes up in strength. She grips her human theme as a man takes hold of plow handles. She conspicuously excels where the young novelist is ordinarily weak; in firmly conceiving and thoroughly dramatizing character and in the fundamental work of composition, which is, namely seeing the thing through, and thus pre-establishing lucidity and order in the movement of her narrative." Stuart Sherman

+ — N Y Tribune p1 N 8 '25 2600w

N Y World p7m O 25 '25 220w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 141:485 N 25 '25 200w

"'Wild Geese' does not, I feel, stand on its own merits. It is as though the author had studied the earlier novels of Willa Cather, had followed the successful lead of Edna Ferber in 'So Big,' had introduced some of the qualities of Selma Lagerlöf and Knut Hamsun and out of this jumble had produced a readable but unoriginal and undistinguished story." Rebecca Lowrie

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:335 N 28 '25 420w

"The novel bears strong traces of Scandinavian temperament and art. It is at once graciously naive and imaginatively tragic; the language is sensitive and vivid; the scenes are realistic, but aim at an impression of beauty or of haunting terror. While there is exaggeration in the characters and the episodes, and some uncertainty in the narrative, the author has always endeavored to reach the emotions by the imaginative reproduction of actual experience. Painful as most of the scenes are, they distill the humaneness which is essential to tragedy."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p898 D 24 '25 170w

OSTRANDER, ISABEL EGENTON (ROBERT ORR CHIPPERFIELD, DAVID FOX, DOUGLAS GRANT, pseud.). Black Joker. 361p $2 McBride

25-23365

An American girl on her way home from a convent in France becomes the bone of contention between two rival gangs. She is supposed to have documents of some dread international significance and the opposing forces are evidently out for both "the child" and "the papers." The moment she lands, the heroine is kidnapped by her enemies, promptly re-kidnapped by friends, and is thenceforth in every chapter abducted by one side only to be forcibly rescued by the other. It is a melodramatic yarn, strongly reminiscent of the movie serial thriller.

"'The Black Joker' bears all the signs of a not too fresh treatment. Transfer it from the ship upon which its action centers and it would bear certain resemblances to other and more familiar pieces of fiction."

— Boston Transcript p5 D 9 '25 230w

"To enjoy the book it is necessary in the first place to like that kind of a novel, and in the second to hold the critical faculty in abeyance and never give a thought to the absurd impossibility of it all, theme, plot, incidents alike. Nor should one be annoyed by certain crudities of style that are frequently manifest. As a piece of invention, however, it is ingenious and striking, crowded with exciting incidents, the whole built into a closely articulated and smoothly developing story."

+ — N Y Times p22 Ja 3 '26 400w

"The incidents are exciting, but the plot is plain 'tosh.'"

+ — Outlook 141:676 D 30 '25 70w

OSTRANDER, ISABEL EGENTON (ROBERT ORR CHIPPERFIELD, DAVID FOX, DOUGLAS GRANT, pseud.). Neglected clue. 301p $2 McBride [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

25-8786

"Alma Leigh lived a retired life in the little village of Evendale. That she had a past was apparent, but she tried to live only in the present. One day she was found murdered with nothing to tell of the culprit except an emerald cuff link and a wound in the heart made by a carved knife. Dr. Dan Oakes, the village doctor and coroner, and his friend and patient, Cornelius Peterby, retired New York broker, set about solving the mystery, in which they finally succeed after running down many a false trail."—Lit R

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 100w

"It is a capital story with the villain well concealed until the very end. The characters are well drawn and are intensely real."

+ Lit R p9 My 16 '25 120w

"The story moves to a logical and plausible solution. The characters are well drawn and the book has considerable distinction of style." Ruth Von Phul

+ — N Y Tribune p11 My 17 '25 120w

"This posthumous detective-murder tale seems thoroughly to deserve the attention of Miss Ostrander's former following, for it measures up very creditably with the best of recent and numerous volumes of the same kind which we have read. The steps in the dénouement are taken in full view of the reader, and the interest in the unraveling of the mystery is well sustained."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:142 S 19 '25 250w

"The author succeeds in keeping us pretty well in the dark as to the murderer of Mrs. Leigh, who was found stabbed to the heart at the bottom of a flight of steps. But she does not succeed in making very much out of the search that follows."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p886 Je 4 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:200 Jl '25

O'TOOLE, GEORGE BARRY. Case against evolution. 408p $3.50 Macmillan

575 Evolution

25-9126

The author maintains that evolution should be treated merely as a hypothesis, not as established fact or basis for dogma, and that the agnostic attitude toward it is the safest.

O'TOOLE, GEORGE BARRY—Continued
The first part deals with evolution in general,
the second part with the problem of origins.

"Of interest as a résumé of the subject purporting to be from an agnostic standpoint. Probably no real contribution."
+ — Booklist 22:147 Ja '26

"It would indeed seem that Dr. O'Toole is well qualified, from all angles, to write a book on evolution. He has not, he says, designed it as a work of 'popular science,' and to that extent the work is not very satisfying to the lay reader. In fact, without very laborious effort, it is almost unintelligible to the untechnical layman." L. S. K.

— Boston Transcript p3 J1 3 '25 680w

"We hope that his book may be widely read, for it deserves to be, and those who read it with care will find themselves equipped with a series of arguments which will prove very useful when they are in company with the many half-instructed persons, if indeed half is not too generous an allowance, who prate volubly about man and his origin, body and soul." B. C. A. W.

+ Cath World 121:562 J1 '25 600w
Cleveland p72 J1 '25

Reviewed by H. M. Parshley
N Y Tribune p1 J1 26 '25 240w
N Y World p6m D 6 '25 140w

OTTO, MAX CARL. Things and ideals; essays in functional philosophy. 320p $2.50 Holt
170 Philosophy. Ethics. Idealism 24-24075
For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"The three chapters dealing with the ancient conflict between science and religion are the clearest and most heartening discussion, yet in print, of that much befogged issue. . . . It is a brave book, sincere in thought and frank in expression." A. E. Haydon

+ Am R 3:224 Mr '25 1350w

"This book places the author in the front ranks of present writers on philosophy. This, not because it sets out a new philosophical system or advances new special theses, neither of which it claims, but because of its brilliant and inspiring reinforcement of a view of 'things and ideals' that is steadily making its way in the world." A. W. Moore

+ Int J Ethics 35:310 Ap '25 1300w

"The work is to be praised for the very wide range of reading in its background, for its downright sincerity, and for the courageous enthusiasm, glowing between the lines, for the thinker's task. Moreover, to a rare degree, Otto has succeeded in the writer's peculiar task of making his language mirror perfectly his thought." G. A. Tawney

J Philos 22:553 S 24 '25 1950w

J Religion 5:335 My '25 50w

"Professor Otto proposes a brave and honest program. Instead of spending time on the doubtful enterprise of proving the existence of God, he would face the facts even at the price of disillusionment. There is a ruggedness about this non-theistic idealism which challenges admiration."

+ J Religion 5:436 J1 '25 500w

"These essays have their own philosophic truth, even when they go so far as to take a highly subjective view of science itself. But philosophers of other schools will be sure to find them wanting." D. W. Prall

+ — Nation 121:173 Ag 5 '25 620w

Wis Lib Bul 21:85 Mr '25

OURSLE, FULTON. Sandalwood. 316p $2 Macaulay

25-8372

An ironical tale of married life in which the principal characters are Eddie Carpenter, a piano salesman, Lucy, his uninteresting wife, and Faith Waring, an attractive young pianist, whom Eddie loves. Eddie plays at dying so that he can utterly detach himself from the world about him, particularly from his somber wife and annoying relatives. Into a solemn death-bed scene steps beautiful Faith Waring, and with the doctor's permission takes care of the invalid. Then under the same roof with Eddie's mystified wife and indignant relatives, Faith gradually nurses Eddie back to health. Later, when she puts her lover to the final test, she discovers she had worshipped a coward. The story ends on a note of tragedy. Faith finds release in death—for Eddie there is life with Lucy and his relatives.

"As a story 'Sandalwood' is well told, cleverly handled and extremely colorful. As a study in characters it has its weak spots." W. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 My 9 '25 450w

"He is a realist of the first water; a writer to be watched, as Dreiser was watched by a believing coterie when first he began his meteoric career. The perfume of 'Sandalwood' will remain when the vapid odors of materialistic best-sellers have been blown away on the four winds." C. H. Towne

+ Int Bk R p353 Ap '25 800w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
Lit R p14 My 2 '25 780w

"An interesting and amusing book."

+ New Statesman 25:728 O 10 '25 100w

"Mr. Oursler at times appears to have bartered his precious possessions of a certain and deeply wise innocence for the readier weapon of contemptuous condescension. He is not detached altogether nor yet too helplessly involved. He writes with an engaging dash and energy that cause the reader willingly to condone occasional absurdities of fiction and explication and motivation."

+ — N Y Times p8 My 10 '25 500w

N Y Tribune p9 My 24 '25 160w

"Even out of over-worked elements, Mr. Oursler has written a novel that has a remarkable originality."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:713 Ap 25 '25 350w

"A triangular situation freshly but over-romantically treated by an American writer."

+ — Spec 135:890 N 14 '25 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p654 O 8 '25 400w

OWSLEY, FRANK LAWRENCE. State rights in the Confederacy. 290p $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press

973.71 State rights. Confederate states of America

Among the contributory causes to the collapse of the Confederacy was dissension from within. Individual states, insisting upon the preservation of states' rights, not only failed to support the central government in its conduct of the war, but by refusing to pool their resources in men and supplies, by blocking conscription, and otherwise hampering the Confederacy, brought about its defeat. The author bases these conclusions upon the official records of the Union and Confederate armies and contemporary newspapers, letters, and diaries.

New Statesman 26:188 N 21 '25 320w

"Professor Owsley's book will never receive the attention its conclusions deserve, for its reading will flatter no one's pride, nor give any reader the thrill of a vicarious victory." F. L. Paxson

N Y Tribune p4 D 27 '25 650w

OXENHAM, JOHN. Hidden years. 244p $1.75 Longmans

Jesus Christ—Fiction

25-20709

Thru the mouth of a boyhood friend who lived next door to Joseph the Carpenter and his wife Mary, an imaginary tale is told of the life of Jesus during those hidden years before the beginning of his ministry.

"It is a reverent, and at times remarkably lovely presentation of the life of Christ through the eyes of a boyhood friend. Yet, written for children, it should perhaps not be so definitely presented as a novel." J. F.

+ — Bookm 62:502 D '25 200w

"It was a daring thing for any writer to do, but John Oxenham has done it with skill and reverence. It does not detract; it makes the New Testament more vivid. And yet it is a story, a piece of fiction, and no mere adaption of the Gospel story. Imagination has been given a chance, but it has not violated either the truth or spirit of the New Testament."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 250w

"It would be hard to exaggerate the beauty of this story, told with such perfect simplicity, such deftness and such delicacy, in no sense iconoclastic, touching no vexed theological questions. One feels somehow that it will go on being read for a long, long time." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 D 19 '25 330w

"It is dignified, simple, fine-fibred, reverent, and carries that air of reality that in such fiction is the first essential of success."

+ N Y Times p9 Ja 3 '26 480w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p678 O 15 '25 120w

OXFORD poetry, 1924; ed. by Harold Acton and Peter Quennell. 52p $1 Appleton

821.08 English poetry—Collections 24-30186

An anthology of poems by the undergraduates of the various colleges of Oxford university written during 1924. There are contributions from twenty-one poets. Some of the poems have appeared in The Spectator, The Weekly Westminster, the Cambridge Mercury, The Oxford Broom and The Oxford Outlook.

"They include fair examples of humor, pathos, beauty and description." N. R. C.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 16 '25 400w

Cleveland p121 D '25

Reviewed by V. Sackville-West

Nation and Ath 36:585 Ja 24 '25 150w

"'Oxford Poetry, 1924,' does not, as a whole, maintain the exceptionally high standard of the anthology for the preceding year, but all of the poems are good, and the leading poem, by one of the editors, Harold Acton, 'Lament for Adonis,' while combining something of Shelley, Swinburne and Walter de la Mare, is a piece of pronounced merit." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p6 Mr 22 '25 530w

"Not a poem that is immature or commonplace has crept into the collection; and in that respect it is superior to most of our own undergraduate anthologies, which allow sparrows to try their voices with nightingales." L. G. Marshall

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ap 26 '25 500w

"Oxford Poetry for 1924, although distinguished by a thirst for beauty on the part of such contributors as Harold Acton in 'Adonis' and John Linnell in 'Spring Solitude,' is, on the whole, a disappointing volume."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:676 Ap 11 '25 220w

"This year's Oxford poetry is chiefly notable for Mr. Quennell's 'Leviathan' and 'Meander.' His verse is strong and original in texture, and it is the natural garment of a vivid imagination which, if it handles the mythical, makes it new. The same cannot be said of his co-editor Mr. Acton, whose 'Lament for Adonis' is no more than a decorative elegy after the Theocritean manner."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p802 N 27 '24 300w

P

PACKARD, FRANK LUCIUS. Broken waters. 294p $2 Doran

25-21067

While on an errand of mercy to the slums of Paris, Anne Walton gives aid to a wounded man, stumbles into a den of thieves and meets Fire-Eyes, the terror of the underworld. Two months later, on the way to Talimi with her father, Anne may have forgotten that fateful night, but the trail of crime starting there leads straight to her destination in the South seas. A spectacular jewel robbery has been committed in Paris, the jewels are already in Talimi, and the man who has planned every move in the desperate game, has planned how to get them back. His plans meet with every success until Anne overhears the plot, recognizes Fire-Eyes, and pits her wit and strength against his. Since she fights for love as well as for justice, the exciting tale concludes satisfactorily.

"With a dash and sparkle, a thrill and grim adventure, quite joyously lacking in any probability, Mr. Packard goes his sweet dramatic way."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 28 '25 350w

"As a weaver of detective stories Mr. Packard easily ranks with the best writers to-day. In 'Broken Waters' he enters an entirely new field and adds fresh laurels."

+ N Y World p7m N 22 '25 130w

Springfd Republican p7a N 29 '25 80w

PAGE, KIRBY. American peace policy; with 2 an introd. by John H. Clarke. 94p $1 Doran 341 Peace. International cooperation

25-21690

This little book presents a concise statement of the need for some sort of international organization for the prevention of war; it touches upon the inadequacy of existing agencies and the difficulties in the way of effective organization, and in closing emphasizes the necessity of American participation in an international alliance for peace.

N Y Tribune p11 N 15 '25 100w

Reviewed by W. F. Johnson

No Am 222:379 D '25 350w

PAGET, VIOLET. See Lee, V., pseud.

PAGET, WALBURGA EHRENGARDE 2 HELENA (VON HOENTHAL) lady. In my tower 2v 278:279-558p $12 Doran

B or 92

Walburga, Lady Paget, continues her memories from the point where her "Embassies of other days" (Book Review Digest, 1923) left off. "In my tower" was written from 1893 to 1908 while Lady Paget was in Italy. Tired of the routine of social life (her husband had just finished his embassy to Vienna) she retired to a villa outside of Florence where she was able to delight at leisure, so she writes, in "my flowers, my animals, my work, my liberty." She kept a diary, entertained innumerable visitors, and paid many visits to London and elsewhere, all of which she writes about in these good-humoredly gossiping reminiscences.

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p10 Ja 10 '26 820w

"In order to be a first-rate gossip upon paper it is necessary to give the reader the sense that he is taken into the writer's confidence. Lady Paget knows exactly how to give this sense of intimacy. She confides in us her tastes and her prejudices and tells us little things, not always specially interesting in themselves, about her family and her pets, and then when we are quite at home with her

PAGET, W. E. H.—Continued
she proceeds to divulge the things we want to know, and we are immensely amused and somehow a little bit flattered."

+ Spec 134:415 Mr 14 '25 650w

PAINE, ALBERT BIGELOW. Joan of Arc, maid of France. 2v 367;379p il $10.50 Macmillan

B or 92 Jeanne d'Arc, Saint 25-21144

Mr Paine has given four years' study to this carefully documented story of the Maid of France, following her footsteps wherever they led and visiting every place connected with her story. He has also read his way thru a maze of official documents, letters and contemporary chronicles. By this means he has been able to give her story as far as possible in her own words and those of her contemporaries. Almost the whole of the second volume is given to an account of Joan's trial and martyrdom. There are thirty-two full-page illustrations in gravure.

"A history written with a rare combination of scholarly thoroughness and literary grace. The author employs his familiarity with the scenes amid which Joan spent her life to give his picture of her labors and martyrdom a vividness that is lacking in the pages of Andrew Lang's study; and while we are not annoyed by excessive credulity, there is none of that tone of ultra-rationalistic skepticism which runs like an unpleasant undercurrent through Anatole France's history of the Maid." Allan Nevins

+ Bookm 62:489 D '25 450w

"Bound to take its place among the most complete in analysis and description and among the most notable in interpretation of all the best that has been penned. From the viewpoint of humanness we are inclined to regard this work as the most fascinating that has appeared."

F. P. Hull

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 21 '25 2200w

"Mr. Paine is to be congratulated on returning to a sound, historical treatment of St. Joan of Arc. His plan has been to let the saint speak for herself, so far as possible, throughout the book, and the result is an intensely real and living portrait." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 122:564 Ja '26 350w

"Albert Bigelow Paine had a humbler motive for writing the life of Saint Joan than Mark Twain had, and he has produced a humbler work. It has virtues of its own, chief among these being a kind of dogged fidelity to the documents in the case, so that for the first time in a popular biography of the maid we get her whole story as nearly as possible in the words of herself and her contemporaries. But it has not the virtue which makes the 'Personal Recollections,' if hardly, as both Mark Twain and Mr. Paine have gone on record as believing, its author's best work, at any rate one of his most passionate and gallant." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 121:578 N 18 '25 650w

"To my taste, the best biography of Joan at the present time is Mr. Paine's. He brings you closer to the sources than any one else, and thus he justifies his book. One needs his book to check up the others." Stuart Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 N 29 '25 1700w

"It may be questioned if it would not have been better to reduce their number and avoid the frequent inartistic crowding of several pictures upon one page. The chapters, too, which describe such localities and landmarks as may still be identified, though brief, could well have been spared by the general reader, and the space gained devoted to a fuller portraiture of some of Joan's contemporaries and associates only lightly sketched. But these are not great matters. The thing which Mr. Paine set out to do he has clearly achieved: he has written a true, excellent, and absorbing biography of Joan of Arc, Maid of France." Ethel Parton

+ Outlook 141:652 D 9 '25 1250w

"The volumes are well illustrated and give the fullest account of Joan which has been written in English. Mr. Paine, however, has chosen a field already worked by great authors . . . For English-speaking people she has been made very real by Mark Twain and Shaw. Neither one of these authors did such careful work as Paine, and they wrote fiction not history, but they made Joan live more fully than she does in these pages." D. C. Munro

+ Sat R of Lit 2:293 N 14 '25 850w

PAINE, RALPH DELAHAYE. In Zanzibar. 327p $2 Houghton

25-11002

The rollicking adventures of three gallant seamen of the U.S.S. Toledo, scout cruiser. They are a curious trio—the dignified Cassius Stackpole, chief pay clerk of the Toledo, the boyish shipmate, Seaman William Sprague, a harmless youngster with a passion for the saxophone, and Martin Donnelly, machinist's mate, the most ferocious looking being imaginable. The scene opens in Djibuti, a little city of French Somaliland, then shifts to Zanzibar where our three heroes make startling history. An ebony elephant, a phantom lady, a one-eyed Arab shipmaster, and a benevolent lion all play a prominent part in the fortunes of the three naval pilgrims. When the excitement is over, behold the distinguished paymaster with a remarkable soul-mate, the youngster happy with his "yaller" dog, Moses Mohamet Ali, and Donnelly, who enjoyed the fight, with $5,000 to his credit. "Join the Navy and See the World!" says young Sprague.

"Certain hectic adventures are here recorded. And anyone who can read of them without a stirring of his blood, or can voluntarily lay the book aside 'to finish some other time,' may make up his mind that, whatever the number of his years, if custom has not, age has staled for him the 'infinite variety' of tales like this."

F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 13 '25 600w

Cleveland p83 J1 '25

"There is not enough love interest in the yarn to spoil it. If it is any bother the reader can forget it in sailor talk and sailor adventure. The boy who does not like it has something seriously wrong with him." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p6 J1 3 '25 260w

"In Zanzibar' should prove gorgeous reading for boys from 14 to 40 and older. The pages pulse with rapid-fire action, sometimes improbable, but never quite impossible."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 7 '25 750w

"Ralph D. Paine's posthumous 'In Zanzibar' is one of the best of his sailor tales, which is saying much. Written with the charm of style and salty humor which has always distinguished his work, this yarn about the boys of the U.S.S. Toledo in foreign parts is likable stuff."

+ N Y Tribune p9 J1 19 '25 180w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 40w

"Another rousing Ralph D. Paine story that boys in their teens, especially, will enjoy. Crammed with action from cover to cover; with plenty of mystery and a good love story combined with the author's usual sea flavor and outdoor atmosphere, this book should be a favorite round the campfire or for foggy evenings by the seashore."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:111 S 5 '25 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p774 N 19 '25 150w

PALMER, FREDERICK. Invisible wounds. 328p $2 Dodd

25-7070

Invisible wounds, the kind which all suffer in varying degrees, the kind for which medals are not given, with such wounds is this love story concerned. The central character is Irene Darcourt of gentle breeding whose buoyant youth and unaffected simplicity gave her austere aunt many an anxious hour. Brought up in the seclusion of Darcourt House, Irene's life had virtually been mapped out for her along the paths of stern duty but the death of her guardians and an enormous inheritance give her undisputed freedom. She decides that the first thing to do is to learn how to play and for her playground she chooses Paris. There in an artist's studio she meets Billy Morrow and in that moment life for Irene becomes a new and glorious venture. A few weeks of enchantment and joyous abandon and Irene's playtime comes to a sudden end. Again she faces obligations and in meeting them finds happiness.

Booklist 22:35 O '25

"Very exquisite is the unfolding of the love story between the two young Americans, each so reverent of the other, each so sure of his and her own traditions. Mr. Palmer draws two people who, although pre-war, were the best of the modern tradition. Then he spoils it all. Having carefully made an Irene who could not have been Camille under high provocation, he makes her that on no provocation at all. We do not know when anything has annoyed us so much. We recommend to Mr. Palmer that he set his talents, of which he has many, to writing first parts of novels in future, and let sex take care of itself. He is not expert at it." I. W. L.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ag 1 '25 560w

"In the handling of this theme Mr. Palmer proves himself adroit and understanding; he writes with the ease and felicity of one who is thoroughly master of his subject matter, and not only delineates his characters carefully and with psychological skill, but gives us a story that is entertaining beyond the average. True, the author is not always an adept in details of plot construction, and in the crucial scene of the entire book he relies upon a triple coincidence that is less convincing than one might desire; yet it cannot be denied that on the whole he has produced a novel that is out of the general rut."

+ — N Y Times p19 Ap 5 '25 470w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 20w

Sat R of Lit 2:164 S 26 '25 350w

PANCHATANTRA. Gold's gloom; tales from the Panchatantra; tr. by Arthur W. Ryder. 151p $2 Univ. of Chicago press

891.2

25-19859

A selection of Indian folk tales from the Panchatantra. The complete work has recently been published by the University of Chicago press.

"This translation deserves close attention from scholars and wide appreciation from men and women who wish to read an unusual and fascinating book. There are little gay whimsical turns to the translation which make the book ideal reading." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 17 '25 550w

"The cream of Mr. Ryder's recent translation is here served up in fine style; a dignified and readable translation, rhymes with a surprising amount of lilt and spring, and all printed in a way to delight the eye."

+ Lit R p8 Ja 9 '26 60w

Reviewed by C: Johnston

N Y Times p2 N 29 '25 300w

"In the smaller book the individual stories are intact, but one loses the Oriental framework and concatenation characteristic of the larger collection." Stuart Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 D 13 '25 1250w

"The book is composed of separate, selected tales, generally disconnected; it presents the spirit of the individual stories, though not of the entire collection. Those who love La Fontaine or John Gay will find a new pleasure in this presentation of the world's oldest book of fables." W. N. Brown

+ Sat R of Lit 2:313 N 21 '25 400w

PANCHATANTRA. Panchatantra; tr. from the Sanskrit by Arthur W. Ryder. 470p $4 Univ. of Chicago press

891.2

25-21523

A certain wise old king, wishing to obtain for his sons the best possible instruction in the wise conduct of life, summons to his court a Brahmin pandit. This learned man undertakes the moral education of the young princes thru the stories, interlarded with quotations and proverbs from ancient sources, which form the Panchatantra, or Five Books. These anthropomorphic tales have been translated and retranslated into many tongues. They now appear in English for the first time in a complete collection.

Booklist 22:152 Ja '26

"The publishers of Arthur W. Ryder's translations from the Sanskrit of 'The Panchatantra' have done a noble work. These moral tales are far more amusing than their moral purpose would indicate." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:333 N '25 280w

"Fairy-tales for grown-ups. Fairy-tales suffused with a wisdom that is ironic, slightly bitter, wire-drawn—perfectly civilized. Mr. Ryder's translation is most excellent. It shows not only a thorough knowledge of the subject but understanding, sympathy, style and a keen sense of humor." Achmed Abdullah

+ Lit R p2 S 26 '25 420w

"The first complete version in English, and one which fortunately is very readable."

+ Nation 121:549 N 11 '25 20w

"The morals taught are utterly utilitarian, Macchiavellian; expediency is virtue! Mr. Ryder has acquitted himself of his task very well. His translation is readable, but the verses are sometimes hackneyed." E. P. Horowitz

+ — New Repub 45:197 Ja 6 '26 200w

"Close, yet flexible, translation, following the alternating prose and verse of the original, which brings the University of Chicago also under the ancient spell. From this latest and most faithful version, fitting successor of the work of Burzuvia the physician, the chips and sawdust have been carefully dusted, but much muscle and sinew went into the work, especially, doubtless into the translation of the verses, where Mr. Ryder has imposed on himself the added handicap of rhyme." C: Johnston

+ N Y Times p2 N 29 '25 1450w

"Arthur W. Ryder is known to gentle readers for his graceful English versions of Sanskrit verse and drama. In the 'Panchatantra' he makes the whole of his twelfth century text accessible to the ordinary American understanding by a racy translation." Stuart Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 D 13 '25 1250w

"There is probably no book that better illustrates the mental attitude of Hindus toward life than does the Panchatantra. If it be fate, poverty, learning, pedantry, wit, the wiles of women, the false piety of ascetics, the greed of Brahmins—all are committed upon with the typical Hindu reaction; and, thanks to Professor Ryder's skill, that reaction becomes in the English at once comprehensible and delectable."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:313 N 21 '25 400w

PANTER-DOWNES, MOLLIE. The chase. 368p $2 Putnam [7s 6d J. Murray]

25-8318

"Mollie Panter-Downes is seventeen years of age and 'The Chase' is her second novel. It is the story of a London slum child, born of an old English family, who struggles for power and place in the top rank of society. He gains it in a spectacular way, loses it, and on the last page renews the chase."—N Y World

"In spite of the fact that there is unevenness of achievement, Miss Panter-Downes convinces us that she is a person of amazing possibilities, whose future is certain to be interesting." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 29 '25 1400w

"A very good novel—for a girl of seventeen to write. She shows imagination, vigor, and good style, and as long as her characters are no older than she is, handles them well. Toward the end of the book they outgrow her."

+ — Ind 114:563 My 16 '25 40w

PANTER-DOWNES, MOLLIE—Continued

"Except in the first few chapters, it lacks the effect of sparkling, eager youth that enveloped the first book and charmed the reader. Miss Panter-Downes gets an opportunity to give us some beautiful descriptions of the country, and she does it wonderfully well. But the story shifts to New York, and there one feels that the young author has lost control of both her hero and her plot." R. L. Kurzman

— + Int Bk R p615 Ag '25 320w

"The Chase' is a childish effort and nothing more—and we know Miss Panter-Downes is capable of more. The plot is utterly impossible; the construction, if precocious, is weak; and the tale has not even the interest that an easy background of research, of local color, can achieve." Dorothy Bobbe

— Lit R p8 My 29 '25 450w

"There was a spirit of zestful youth, a fresh idealism and eager joy in Miss Panter-Downes's first novel of which her second shows comparatively few traces. The style grows more and more strained, self-conscious and mannered as the book proceeds, evincing an imitative passion for short, jerky sentences and the repetition of such phrases as 'Hey diddle diddle' to show extreme mental perturbation."

— N Y Times p9 Ap 26 '25 600w

"Miss Panter-Downes is said to be still in her teens, and while she writes with undoubted eagerness and an engaging freshness she apparently has not got her schoolgirl imagination in harness. 'The Chase' kicks up its heels like a colt."

— N Y Tribune p11 Je 7 '25 200w

"Throughout 'The Chase' runs an active plot, for the most part well handled. An unevenness is still evident in Miss Panter-Downes's work and successful scenes are interrupted by passages that are obviously childish."

— + N Y World p7m Ap 26 '25 250w

"Those who encouraged Mollie Panter-Downes, an English girl of seventeen, to secure publication for 'The Chase,' her second novel, were unwise. The tale is superficially facile, but at bottom it is little better than sugary milk and water."

— Sat R of Lit 1:841 Je 20 '25 100w

"Miss Panter-Downes has built up her story and constructed her figures too largely out of that common stock of second-hand material which lies at the disposal of the routine storyteller; and we regret this the more because she writes with an evident and attractive sincerity of intention which we should like to see applied to the more exacting task of the imaginative interpretation of such phases of actual life as may have come within her range of personal observation."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Mr 19 '25 230w

PARKER, ERIC. Hesketh Prichard. 271p il $5 Dutton

B or 92 Prichard, Hesketh Vernon Hesketh [25-9727]

This is the story of a life of extraordinary power and scope. There seems no limit to the versatility of the man—hunter, explorer, naturalist, cricketer, author, soldier. He himself felt that all his life had been but a training for the tremendously important part he was to play during the war. A part of the material in the book is biographical, written by a friend, a part is taken from his letters at the front. The whole is the picture of a remarkable personality.

— Boston Transcript p3 Ag 1 '25 2000w

"Mr. Parker's book is sympathetic and interesting, abounding in anecdote and successful in its portrayal of Major Prichard's vigorous and colorful personality."

— + Ind 115:136 Ag 1 '25 150w

Reviewed by L: S. Gannett

N Y Tribune p7 O 4 '25 550w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

R of Rs 72:334 S '25 130w

Sat R 139:367 Ap 4 '25 300w

"This is not an important biography, too many good things are unimportant. But whoever reads it will be satisfied in having made a contact with a gentleman."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:261 O 31 '25 350w

"Mr. Eric Parker has modestly called his book a memoir; it is really an ably written Life."

— + Spec 133:1027 D 27 '24 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p838 D 11 '24 760w

PARKER, SIR GILBERT. Power and the glory; a romance of the great La Salle. 339p il $2 Harper

La Salle, Robert Cavelier, sieur de—Fiction 25-18581

"The hero of Sir Gilbert Parker's latest romance is a personage well known to all of us in our school days, but encountered by few of us since—Robert La Salle. It is the story of a fearless and undaunted explorer whose career was threatened less by the dangers of exploration than by the plotting of enemies who never gave up their efforts to destroy him."—N Y Times

"The theme is a good one and contains all the elements for a great historical novel. In some way, however, this story misses the mark and becomes tedious and disappointing through an ineffective use of the material."

— + Booklist 22:163 Ja '26

Reviewed by J. W. Maury

Boston Transcript p2 O 3 '25 1350w

"The character of La Salle is well-drawn as an epic hero. Gilbert Parker's sympathies were, evidently, strongly with his hero, which, in a measure, accounts for his lack of accuracy in regard to the great Order which did so much towards France's success in her colonization of the New World."

— + Cath World 122:573 Ja '26 160w

"An incoherent tale of adventure and intrigue without the sparkle and tingle which always one expects to find in the next chapter. The many characters unpleasantly stick to their types and disappoint only in living up to every expectation."

— Ind 115:534 N 7 '25 50w

"Sir Gilbert's hero is of the old-fashioned kind, who stalks the prairies in seven-league boots, talks with commoners and kings, plans empires and effects the destinies of States. This type of giant was once a familiar figure in the historical novel of twenty and thirty years ago, but it is likely that few of the papier maché heroes of that movement possess the vitality and the human qualities of Sir Gilbert's protean de la Salle." Henry Hansen

— + Int Bk R p776 N '25 2250w

"Certainly he has re-created with compelling emphasis an absorbing age and an inspiring, heroic people. And his story swings with a slow, strong dignity." Walter Yust

— + Lit R p12 Ja 2 '26 260w

Nation and Ath 38:362 D 5 '25 100w

"Perhaps the author's greatest achievement in 'The Power and the Glory' is his ability to paint, with great success, an extensive and sometimes glowing canvas. There is nothing mean or huddled about the book; and its picture of Canada is no more brilliant than its picture of the French court. The narrative is not so good; it is told sometimes like fiction and sometimes like documented history; and its verbose style, poorly concentrated material and repetitious happenings make it about a third too long."

— + N Y Times p21 O 4 '25 900w

N Y World p7m O 25 '25 120w

"A vivid, brilliant narrative. This book will undoubtedly take a place among the best examples of novels dealing with early Canadian and American history."

+ Outlook 141:243 O 14 '25 120w

"Perhaps this is the way to make the discovery of America interesting; perhaps on the other hand it is the reason why Americans see Europe first."

— Sat R of Lit 2:225 O 17 '25 350w

"Sir Gilbert tells a thrilling story which helps to spread knowledge of the early history of the new world."

+ Springfield Republican p7a Ja 3 '26 300w
Wis Lib Bul 21:232 O '25

PARKES, JOAN. Travel in England in the seventeenth century. 354p $7 Oxford [21s Milford]

914.2 England—Description and travel.
Travel [25-17450]

"An account of the conditions of traveling by land and water in the England of the Seventeenth Century. The roads, inns, conveyances, highwaymen, police, and posts are discussed with constant references to contemporary records."—Ind

"When Miss Parkes writes of 'Travel in the Seventeenth Century' she gives to her subject a picturesqueness that invests it with all the best qualities of a novel. Its chronicles of fact may be read with as much pleasure as if they had been drawn wholly from the depths of her imagination." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 22 '25 1300w

"There are plenty of good stories to choose from, and Miss Parkes has chosen a good many of the best, making almost as readable a whole as can ever be made by this method of compiling." G. N. C.

+ Eng Hist R 40:635 O '25 150w

"The prints, sketches, and woodcuts reproduced to illustrate the book are well chosen and interesting. Altogether, a handsome volume with much amusing comment and a great deal of genuine information."

+ Ind 115:304 S 12 '25 80w

Nation 121:711 D 16 '25 20w

"Miss Parkes has a very pretty taste in quotation, and her book is full of gems and deserves to be read by all who like to travel in the past. It is admirably produced." Eileen Power

+ Nation and Ath 38:118 O 17 '25 1550w

Reviewed by Eileen Power

New Repub 44:287 N 4 '25 1550w (Same as Nation and Ath)

"The book is at once scholarly and readable; it combines graphic pictures with reliable documentation. In short, it will please both the scholar and the general reader."

+ New Statesman 25:642 S 19 '25 200w

N Y Times p2 D 13 '25 450w

"It is a very valuable mass of information on this subject that Miss Joan Parkes has digested for students who are interested in the life of the seventeenth century. Her presentation aims primarily at instruction. It is concrete and meaty." Jacob Zeitlin

+ N Y Tribune p11 O 11 '25 900w

"A most entertaining account."

+ R of Rs 72:335 S '25 30w

Spec 134:1011 Je 20 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p413 Je 18 '25 1550w

PARKHURST, GENEVIEVE. King in the making. 229p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Putnam

B or 92 Edward Albert, prince of Wales
25-5872

"Mrs. Parkhurst regards Edward, seventeenth Prince of Wales, as 'the most romantic figure in the world.' She writes of the Prince's childhood, youth, young manhood and present with an enthusiasm born of true admiration, emphasizing his 'winsomeness' and presenting an altogether charming picture of his baby-hood, school days and wartime routine. The author had the friendly co-operation of those in a position to give authentic data. There are thirty-five illustrations portraying His Royal Highness in the various steps of his career from the cradle almost to the throne."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 21:380 Jl '25

"Set forth with a winning simplicity which makes Edward, Seventeenth Prince of Wales, seem in truth the wonderful human being many of us have imagined him to be."

+ Bookm 61:490 Je '25 130w

"His Highness and his particular tragedy are enfolded with a genuine and unsentimentalized touch. Miss Parkhurst will undoubtedly make friends for the Prince, as he has sought to do for England. Not all the story is told, but the background of a future king is made more understandable."

Boston Transcript p4 Je 24 '25 150w

Cleveland p113 D '25

"She has done quite an exceptional thing; for to make a highly interesting book about a young man who has never done anything and whose education is still in the making seems an almost impossible task. She has accomplished it, however; and what is more, she has made a lively story, in spite of the fact that she has done a great amount of labor in going to the fountain-heads of information and making herself absolutely sure of her facts." C. W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p1 My 10 '25 1700w

N Y Tribune p10 Ap 5 '25 100w

"There are some good pictures in this book. Most of them you have seen before in newspaper rotogravures. The rest of the book goes no deeper into the Prince of Wales than most of the pictures, and not as deep as does the frontispiece."

— N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 320w

Outlook 140:224 Je 10 '25 10w

"Most of the anecdotes, except those collected first hand, are by this time clichés. Those who know the Prince, and many who do not, are aware that the 'prince business' is greatly to his distaste."

— Sat R of Lit 2:243 O 24 '25 420w

Springfield Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 380w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p353 My 21 '25 100w

PARKINSON, HARGREAVES. A B C of stocks and shares; with an introd. by Hartley Withers. 96p $1.25 Longmans

332.6 Stocks 25-9585

Written from the standpoint of English investment practice this handbook for the investor explains the organization of the London stock exchange, the buying and selling of stocks, the business of speculation and certain British stocks and shares in particular.

"In such a book as this investors ought to find reliable untechnical information of a sort applicable to every-day questions relative to stocks and shares. It might be added that this is an English book and exemplified by slightly different illustrations, but apart from this fact, the rules and advice given are general and useful to American investors."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 1 '25 350w

"Mr. Parkinson calls his book a handbook for the investor, and an excellent handbook it is."

+ Nation and Ath 37:304 Je 6 '25 80w

PARRISH, ANNE (MRS CHARLES A. PARRISH). Perennial bachelor. 338p $2 Harper

25-16492

The Harper prize novel for 1925 is a mirror of the changing scene and fashions in America, from hoop-skirts to mah jong. On the eve of the Civil war Maggie Campion is left a widow with three small daughters, an infant son and an income altogether insufficient to maintain her beautiful Delaware estate. Little Victor is from the first the center of the household, worshipped and spoiled by its women folk, an unconscious tyrant. Yielding to his protesting tears Maggie refuses a prosperous suitor, just as some years later, after her death, Maggie of the second generation, chooses between her lover and her brother, electing to stay with Victor. None of the family marries. They pass thru all the stages of genteel poverty till reduced to taking boarders and finally to selling the old home. Only Victor, the "perennial bachelor," idolized by his sisters, keeps up to the last the pretence of style and the dignity of a silk hat.

PARRISH, ANNE—Continued

"The author's own writing is fancywork, of a choicer type than any she describes. She places her stitches with delicate precision, and the story grows under her hand with the effect of a fine tapestry in faded colors. It is no wonder that her story received the Harper prize." V. D. Scudder

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '25 520w

Booklist 22:74 N '25

"There is a way to write certain types of novels and only one way to do them. Curiously enough, Anne Parrish was once possessed of the manner which would have given to this story which has won the Harper Prize even greater distinction. The point really is that Miss Parrish has buried the true significances of her story. If she had clung to the ironic pen she wielded in 'A Pocketful of Poses,' she might have brought out for us the whole bitter irony of an age as it is symbolized in this family. Here she has shown us precisely the ironic failure of the ultra feminine woman in dealing with life." D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 29 '25 1150w

"It is essentially a feminine product, but one handed with a rare delicate humor and much human understanding. A sad, sweet, picture, deftly done, but better suited to the feminine taste."

+ Ind 115:365 S 26 '25 160w

"With something of the fine-woven quality of 'Lulu Bett,' and yet with a more subtle flashing of fun; with something of 'Harriet Frean's' note of fatality, yet infinitely gayer; and with a pin-point realism all its own, she gives us in 'The Perennial Bachelor' the story of an American family. 'The Perennial Bachelor' ought to be one of a stout line of American novels. If Anne Parrish can do thus much she can do more. Every faded old home under decaying maples, every boarding-house and straw-ride, every school picnic and country funeral is grist to her mill, and more power to her grinding! The present season is not apt to produce a more honest and engaging piece of work than this one." Kathleen Norris

+ Int Bk R p702 O '25 900w

"There is in the book a certain amount of sly humor; too, occasionally 'vivid flashes of characterization and drama. Given such a theme Anne Parrish might have clouted it into a poignant and unforgettable tragedy, had it not been for her desire to be charming and whimsical at all costs and for the fact that, doubtless, before starting work upon it, she surrounded herself with a library of reference books on what, for unknown reasons, are called American antiques. The book, gilt cover, double-barreled academic indorsement and all, simply screams for the more refined hammock-and-porch trade." Achmed Abdullah

+ Lit R p2 S 19 '25 650w

"Miss Parrish has written a delightful book."
+ New Repub 44:132 S 23 '25 250w

"Miss Parrish has written a very fine and a very poignant study of decadence and the tragedy that often lurks under the stoical front failure keeps for the world. What is especially remarkable in so young a writer is her sense, not alone of old days and ways, but of the actual processes by which the present becomes the past." H: D. Stuart

+ N Y Times p9 S 6 '25 1600w

"Occasionally the intriguing accounts of dresses and the like get the upper hand and the picture is a trifle obscured by its parts. But usually Miss Parrish sweeps through it with a truly American gusto, and with a sensitiveness which makes her book an illuminating picture of American life, entertaining if not wholly encouraging." Mary Ross

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ag 30 '25 1000w

Pratt p40 autumn '25

"Anne Parrish in 'The Perennial Bachelor' (a not altogether happy title) has undertaken to do what Rose Macaulay did in 'Told by an Idiot'; present, in words, a panorama of generations. She has done so with less brilliancy than the English author, and far greater art, humanity, and truth." Margaret Deland

+ Sat R of Lit 2:235 O 24 '25 1200w

"The story is told with vivacity and humor, but its dominant note is pathos. Its emotional strain at times recalls the story of the last days and death of little Dombey. A feeling short of satisfaction with this effect is perhaps due to a lack of convincingness in the sequence of misfortune that the little family encounters. There is none of the mystic poetry of Hardy's grim fatalism to give it support. The novel leaves an impression that good material has failed of its possibilities by a too easy authorship."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Ag 28 '25 620w

Wis Lib Bul 21:232 O '25

PARRY, ERNEST JOHN. Cyclopeda of perfume. 2v $10 Blakiston

668.5 Perfumery

"Alphabetical arrangement of topics. Concerned almost entirely with materials of the perfume industry, but includes a few notes regarding methods."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"This new work will undoubtedly be of great service to those interested in perfumes and their raw materials. It is to be regretted, however, that in a work of this character there should be so many incorrect statements." E. K. Nelson

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:987 S '25 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:606 D '25

PARTINGTON, WILFRED GEORGE, ed. Smoke rings and roundelays. 320p $2.50 Dodd [7s J. Castle]

808.8 Tobacco

[25-26563]

A smokers' anthology of prose and verse. Contents: In the beginning; Tobacco; Pipe songs and fancies; Woman and the weed; Some great pipemen and others; Cigars; Cigarettes; Snuff; Matters of choice; Virtues of the leaf; Parodies and imitations; On the varieties of pipes; Tobacco and books; Dinner—and after; Smoke pictures; The philosophy of smoke; Recipes and hints; Accessories to the pleasure; First and last; Appendix.

Booklist 21:373 J1 '25

"Another man of taste and discerning ability has compiled an anthology of poems and prose concerning tobacco in its various forms. Mr. Partington has made his collection more catholic and entertaining [than Joseph Knight's 'Pipe and Pouch'] by including both prose and poetry. He has classified his selections, in such a way as to make the contents present a regular sequence from the beginning of tobacco history."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 250w

"The best tribute to the worth of Mr. Partington's book is that we found ourselves so entertained by its contents and so spiritually made aware of the soul of tobacco that for a whole hour, engrossed in its pages, we neglected our pipe. The compilation had been made with considerable skill and variety."

+ Nation and Ath 36:164 O 25 '24 200w

"Mr. Partington, in undertaking this anthology, faced no dearth of material. His problem was to cull the choicest leaves, and to blend a satisfying mixture. He has performed that task with enthusiasm and discernment, to the end that 'Smoke Rings and Roundelays' is a dangerous book to place in the hands of any man who has sworn off, or is thinking of swearing off, smoking."

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 29 '25 500w

N Y Tribune p11 Mr 15 '25 120w

"A very pleasing, very inclusive volume of poems and prose extracts."

+ Spec 133:476 O 4 '24 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p608 O 2 '24 850w

PATRI, ANGELO. School and home. 221p $2 Appleton

136.7 Education of children. Children 25-15826

Out of his love and understanding of children Mr Patri writes this plea to parents to back the schools with their brains and their money, to see to it that they are wisely and generously administered and the children fitted to take their rightful part in life. He is chiefly interested in the peculiar needs of the individual child—the gifted or spoiled or timid child, the child who is not really bad, tho he may seem so, and the child who fails.

Booklist 22:103 D '25

"To participators in the game on either side Mr. Patri gives, out of his experience and insight, cogent advice and suggestion; the onlooker will find his volume fascinating reading." M. W. Bianco

+ Bookm 62:216 O '25 600w

"Many anecdotes help to make the book easy reading and send home the writer's points."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 9 '25 250w

"Mr. Patri uses the illustrative method very largely, pointing all his arguments with anecdotes of real cases of children who presented problems of one sort or another. He thus makes the volume readable and entertaining, although he loses no opportunity of presenting the pleas and arguments that are evidently close to his heart."

+ N Y Times p14 Ag 30 '25 380w

R of Rs 72:336 S '25 60w

"The simplicity of the discussion will make the book available to many parents in need of suggestion who are not ready to follow a more technical treatment of the same problems."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:415 D 12 '25 120w

Survey 55:258 N 15 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:227 O '25

PATRICK, DIANA, pseud. (MRS HARRY J. WILSON). Dreaming spires. 361p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-6198

"Bargain. Barter. Something better than I give each time." This was the philosophy with which Dallas Coventry took stock of her possessions and prepared to fend for herself, after her stepfather's disgrace and her mother's death. Bankrupt of all but physical loveliness and a clever, calculating mind, she determined to trade what she had to give for wealth, social position, success—always demanding for herself the best of the bargain. At the moment when the consummation of these dreams was at hand love entered Dallas' life to defeat her hard philosophy and to show her what is the real loveliness life has to sell.

"Miss Patrick, even though she gives the reviewer plenty of faults to deplore, would not be herself if, with the calculation of a coldly technical stylist, she managed to get rid of them.

Ultimately she may turn most of them into virtues. Meanwhile she will bear up many readers, even those who realize her shortcomings, on the wings of her own enthusiasm and belief in the narratives she produces. Perhaps, in our sophisticated day, this is a virtue to be treasured." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 1 '25 1050w

"The story is vigorous enough. It is done in warm and active colors and with a sensitiveness to the detail of Dallas' mental and spiritual evolution, which is provocative when it isn't sometimes provoking. It is really what might be called a daring story, but inoffensive." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p12 Mr 21 '25 350w

N Y Times p22 My 31 '25 720w

N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 140w

Sat R of Lit 1:635 Mr 28 '25 330w

PATRICK, GEORGE THOMAS WHITE. World and its meaning. 463p $3.50 Houghton

190 Philosophy A25-428

In his introduction to philosophy Professor Patrick deals with both speculative and critical philosophy and places special emphasis on the aspects which come nearest to the average thoughtful mind that gives itself to reflection about the meaning, purpose and value of life. The book summarizes clearly and helpfully the conceptions of various thinkers on the themes discussed. Each chapter has its bibliography.

Booklist 21:357 J1 '25

"Whoever wishes to share the outlooks of modern philosophy should read this book. It is a simply written yet expert presentation of the whole subject, characterized at once by thorough insight into the problems involved and by remarkable skill in setting them forth." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 800w

Cleveland p90 S '25

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

New Repub 43:24 My 27 '25 380w

"It is difficult to speak with moderation of Professor Patrick's work, so admirably is it done. The author's fairness is also beyond all praise." J. H. Holmes

+ N Y Tribune p16 My 3 '25 530w

Outlook 140:268 Je 17 '25 40w

Pratt p6 autumn '25

"A book that will appeal alike to student and layman. It is readable. In fact, it is just the thing for the average educated person who seriously wants to learn a little about what philosophy stands for at the present day. Then there are good bibliographies to each chapter, suggestive for further reading, though like most such bibliographies these are not annotated enough to be the best help to a beginner."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:813 Je 6 '25 320w

"Surveys with clarity and in pleasing language the whole field of philosophy. . . One of the merits of the book is the skill with which the author imparts to the ideas of the world's leading philosophers in all ages a relevancy to the average man's innermost concerns."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 Ap 3 '25 380w

"It is a systematic survey. But that does not keep it from being, at the same time, an excellent expositor of movements and systems." J. K. H.

+ Survey 55:266 N 15 '25 120w

PATTEE, FRED LEWIS. Tradition and jazz. 289p $2 Century

814 Literature, Modern—Addresses, essays, lectures 25-6530

A collection of essays gently inveighing against the present-day jazz tendency of American life and literature. In the solitude and quiet of his country place, to which he escapes for two months of every busy year, the author turns again to the Greek and Latin classics for refreshment, and finds in them the panacea for the literary ills of his generation. In place of the sordid realism of the present vogue, he offers the pure imaginative flights of an earlier day, and from the worship of the false gods of modernism and jazz, he pleads for a return to the neglected classics.

PATTEE, FRED LEWIS—Continued

Booklist 21:373 J1 '25

"Dr. Pattee is always as refreshing as a spring shower through which one joys to walk. His essays are the intelligent and sprightly expression of a personality genial and tolerant. Delightful and stimulating as the book undoubtedly is, Dr. Pattee is guilty of an unconscious stylistic solecism. He rails at the age of 'swift mobility' and jazz; he condemns in it especially its speed, its sentimentality and its sensationalism; from these he argues for repose." J. T. Shipley

+ — Lit R p4 Ap 11 '25 700w

"Professor Pattee slings English with great energy and sometimes with good aim; but—to twist the symbolism of one of his essays a little—he is more anxious that his shots should leave a train of fire behind them than that they should hit the mark." H. E. Woodbridge

+ — N Y Tribune p3 Je 14 '25 900w

"Professors, like parsons, are prone to be a little on the defensive in contact with the lay world. Mr. Pattee is a genial and open-minded fellow-citizen, but every page of this very readable book shows him as consciously a professor as Mr. Mencken is an anti-professor. He is never pompous or dull, and he is not more didactic than a critic who knows his mind should be."

+ — Outlook 141:360 N 4 '25 300w

"Dr. Pattee has confused idealism with kindness, and in pursuing kindness he has become accustomed to excuse and forget faults if he can discover in a book some appeal to his own kindly nature. Kindness has led him into a blind alley from which he has never emerged. He can no longer take any pleasure in exploration, and so he sits with his back to the wall." C. H. Grattan

— Sat R of Lit 2:59 Ag 22 '25 950w

Springf'd Republican p10 F 27 '25 460w

Wis Lib Bul 21:111 Ap '25

PATTEN, CHARLES JOSEPH. Passing of the phantoms; a study of evolutionary psychology and morals. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 103p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

591.5 Psychology, Comparative. Ethics, Evolutionary 25-8635

A brief study in comparative psychology, tracing the evolution of the mental and moral faculties in lower animals and the bearing of animal on human psychology. The author has made observations on such qualities as imitation, attention, imagination and admiration among animals.

Booklist 21:357 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 8 '25 200w

"The book makes no attempt to be either scientific or exhaustive, but it is so charmingly written that we believe it will find many readers." J. B. S. H.

+ Nature 115:219 F 14 '25 180w

"Mr. Patten scarcely maintains the standard of his predecessors. His style is often singularly awkward and his ideas sometimes dubious." H. M. Parshley

+ — N Y Tribune p12 My 31 '25 200w

Sat R of Lit 2:143 S 19 '25 300w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 8 '25 50w

"This book can scarcely be recommended. To those who are unfamiliar with the modern science of the animal mind, it may prove highly misleading, and those who are already acquainted with that study will find nothing new here." D. M. P.

— Springf'd Republican p12 Je 19 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p615 O 2 '24 80w

"I confess that I lack the scientific equipment to deal with some of its assertions and the book itself lacks the lucidity and beauty of Mr. Russell's style. Nevertheless, I find it interesting and thought provoking, if not entirely convincing." Norman Thomas

+ — World Tomorrow 8:383 D '25 320w

PATTON, HARDISON. Raising fur-bearing animals. 466p il $6 The author, 17 N. Wabash av., Chicago

639.1 Fur-bearing animals 25-10618

A very complete guide to the breeding and care of fur-bearing animals and to the skinning and cure of the fur. The many illustrations are from original drawings.

"A practical handbook."

+ Booklist 22:59 N '25

N Y New Tech Bks 10:39 J1 '25

PAXSON, FREDERIC LOGAN. History of the American frontier, 1763-1893. 598p $6 Houghton [30s Constable]

978 West—History. United States—History.

United States—Frontier and pioneer life.

24-23381

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"There is little that is new in the presentation, but the continuity of the narrative draws the material together in a suggestive way and there is some fresh discussion of the administrative problems of the land system." A. P. U.

+ — Am Econ R 15:94 Mr '25 220w

"An admirable history of the West. Somewhat less satisfying is the book when viewed not as a history of the West, but as what it purports to be, a history of the frontier. Strange as it may seem, Dr. Paxson apparently forgets at times that the two are far from identical." H. C. Dale

+ — Am Hist R 30:603 Ap '25 1200w

Booklist 21:191 F '25

Reviewed by S. E. Morison

Eng Hist R 40:441 J1 '25 450w

"His volume is timely for historical study and has great merit." L. E. Robinson

+ Nation 120:664 Je 10 '25 950w

"He can rightly claim to have written the first complete history of the expansion and settlement of the United States, and this book must be described as indispensable to students of American history."

+ New Statesman 25:486 Ag 8 '25 350w

"While the author has not merely pieced out the earlier volume by adding chapters, it is only fair to say that he has added little to the frontier narrative that was not already known. In other words, the book is a synthesis of the whole frontier movement, and in this and in the admirable style in which it is couched lies its chief value." H. J. C.

+ — Pol Sci Q 40:323 Je '25 350w

PEABODY, FRANCIS GREENWOOD. Church of the spirit; a brief survey of the spiritual tradition in Christianity. 208p $2 (7s 6d) Macmillan

230 Church. Christianity 25-9324

In this volume the author develops the contrast between organized Christianity and the church of the spirit. He traces the history of the spiritual tradition as opposed to formal organization, summing up the weakness within itself and the challenge from without.

"A heartening and beautiful message."

+ J Religion 5:447 J1 '25 40w

"A book by Dr. Peabody is always an event. No religious writer in America is gifted with deeper spiritual insight than this urbane son of Harvard. But there is a special reason why this book should have a wide reading and do much good. Its message is like a cooling wind from the hills after a time of severe heat. Those who have a sufficient detachment to desire the truth in the fierce battle which threatens to rive some of the Protestant communions will find the whole matter stated with perspicacity in Dr. Peabody's vivid contrast between the church of authority and the church of the spirit." J. A. MacCallum

+ Lit R p4 J1 18 '25 800w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p9 Ag 2 '25 1000w

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman
N Y Tribune p3 Ag 9 '25 60w
Outlook 140:371 J1 8 '25 20w

"Professor Peabody gives helpful suggestions, and his beautiful and poetic presentation of the ideal inspires and quickens our faith, but the gap between ideal and real, between hope and practice, is not yet bridged. The men of goodwill are still the true heirs of the kingdom. But how hard it is for them to give tangible, organic efficient form to the unity of the Spirit!" B. W. Bacon

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:136 S 19 '25 320w

PEABODY, JOSEPHINE PRESTON (MRS LIONEL SIMON MARKS). Diary and letters; selected and ed. by Christina Hopkinson Baker. 346p il $4.50 Houghton

B or 92 25-24016

Into her diary, which she kept for more than thirty years, and her letters Josephine Preston Peabody wrote much more than the outward events of her life. She poured out herself, her thoughts, her desires and joys, all the strivings of a creative artist.

"Not since the Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff, with which for several reasons this book is bound to be compared, has there appeared so significant a revelation of the inner life of a woman of genius. Romantically absorbing as is the story of this 'Cinderella' to whom her Fairy Godmother seemed to have given nearly all the gifts that women find most precious; illuminating as a study in the development of a poet's consciousness; it is perhaps the beauty of the subject matter itself that will give the book its high place in the world of letters." A. F. Brown

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 21 '25 2250w

"The reader feels with every page a certain joy at having been permitted to glimpse an inner life which could be of such rare and spiritual beauty while never losing the human contact. That the editor, Mrs. Baker, is to no considerable degree responsible for the effectiveness of the collection goes without saying. It is rarely one finds correspondence so skillfully used to make living the writer."

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 3 '26 1350w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 27 '25 1150w

PEARL, RAYMOND. Biology of population² growth. 260p il $3.50 Knopf

312 Population. Biology. Algeria—Population 25-23620

"Professor Raymond Pearl is one of the leading exponents of the application of mathematical methods to biological problems. In this book—the result of many years of work—he endeavours to show that the same 'mathematical law' governs the growth of cultures of yeast plant, the vinegar fruit-fly, and the native population of Algeria. His inference seems to be that when any kind of population reaches a certain phase of pressure on the local conditions, adaptive adjustments take place, varying in their nature with the nature of the population affected, but resulting in the same logistic curve of growth."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Professor Pearl's book affords the best evidence that biology still provides infinite material for new and original studies; that such studies may have tremendous human interest and importance; that experimentation and statistics are not only compatible but so mutually dependent that each seems almost impotent without the other; and that the reports of such scientific work can and should be not only comprehensible but beautifully written and highly entertaining to the intelligent general reader." H. M. Parshley

+ Nation 122:65 Ja 20 '26 820w

"Professor Raymond Pearl has become, during the last few years, one of the best known scientists in the country. Among scientists he is notable as a leading exponent of the statistical methods in biology, sometimes called biometry, whereby it is proposed to come at the laws that govern life and growth by taking a sufficiently distant view of these processes to treat them in the mass and so to discover the 'correlations' between causes and effects." C. E. Ayres

New Repub 45:223 Ja 13 '26 1350w

"It is not a volume for people with microscopic minds or people with lazy minds; but those who have the urge to know something of what Huxley said was the greatest of human problems, the colonial development of their species, will find plenty of food for reflection. . . . Altogether this is a book which deserves and which will have a circulation much larger than among physicians and scientists. The author is one of our most eminent scientists and the subject is one of our greatest riddles." E. M. East

+ Sat R of Lit 2:429 D 19 '25 1500w

"His book is a valuable exposition of patient study, but he cannot expect universal agreement on the methods of abstraction by which he has reached his mathematical law."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p899 D 24 '25 230w

PEARSON, RALPH M. How to see modern pictures. 228p il $2.50 Dial press

740 Design. Pictures 25-10123

The book explains the principle of design—the relation of lines, forms, colors and spaces to each other and to the picture as a whole—applying the principle to the study of pictures and showing how to look at them to see the design.

"The author is himself an artist and he is also a writer and a lecturer on art who is particularly well qualified to make an exposition for laymen of the principles and viewpoint that are fundamental in the new movement in art. His style is simple and he has a marked gift for so analyzing and expressing ideas somewhat abstruse as to make them understandable."

+ N Y Times p6 My 3 '25 280w

"Not many writers on modernist painting have approached the subject with the tolerance and liberality of Mr. Pearson. Besides being an artist by profession, he has had the advantage of years of lecturing to all sorts of societies and schools, and has become thoroughly familiar with the needs and difficulties of the layman and the amateur. His book is intended for the popular audience, particularly the women's club, and because of this is marked by certain unfortunate weaknesses and mannerisms. On the whole his book is neither profound nor important, but in practical matters dealing with the snobbery and destination of art it is decidedly worth while." T. Craven

+ — N Y Tribune p10 J1 5 '25 520w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 20w

"Give Mr. Pearson his case, that nothing but formal design is worth anybody's attention in a picture, he preaches his cause with clearness and pungency. He shows up and down what rhythm and balance are, reduces the Hambidgean dynamic symmetry to a manageable capsule, analyzes many pictures, produces abstractions of natural appearances, including an etching of his own in which a mountain is most instructively reduced to the scale and semblance of a bun. Finally there is guidance to such books and periodicals as are keeping the world safe for Modernism. It is all very simple and strong."

PEARSON, RALPH M.—Continued.

+ Sat R of Lit 1:779 My 23 '25 280w

PEASE, THEODORE CALVIN. Story of Illinois.
394p il $2.50 McClurg

977.3 Illinois—History 25-7566

"Dr. Pease, who is also the author of the second volume of the scholarly 'Centennial History of Illinois' is amply equipped for his task. More than a third of the book is given to the period of romantic adventure—the period stretching from the visit of Marquette and Joliet in 1673 to the organization of statehood in 1818. The great region known in early times as the 'Illinois Country,' which included everything up to the Mississippi which lay west and northwest of the vaguely defined 'Ohio Country,' is especially rich in the annals of adventure. With the narrowing of the field to the present political boundaries of Illinois, the beginnings of orderly communities and stable government, the chronicle takes on an altered tempo. Here, as must needs be, there is greater condensation and a more matter-of-fact narration."—Lit R

"Teachers and students of state history and government would find their work made easier and more interesting if for each state in the Union there could be prepared such a thorough and accurate history as The Story of Illinois."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:864 N '25 80w

"Dr. Theodore Calvin Pease has written an interesting and complete short history of Illinois."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 13 '25 160w

"This book is at once sound history and good story-telling." W. J. Ghent

+ Lit R p9 Je 20 '25 250w

"The book is more readable than the usual one-volume work of its kind."

Nation 121:123 JI 22 '25 150w

"A short, readable narrative which embodies the results of the latest research. His enthusiasm as a historian of this great American commonwealth might well be emulated by writers in other States."

+ R of Rs 71:672 Je '25 150w

PECHSTEIN, LOUIS AUGUSTUS, and MCGREGOR, ANNE LAURA. Psychology of the junior high school pupil. (Riverside textbooks in education) 280p $2 Houghton

136.7 Junior high schools. Adolescence 24-12139

Since the junior high school has been devised to meet the special needs of adolescent young people, a knowledge of the psychology of adolescence is necessary to an understanding of the peculiar place and work of this type of school in the school system. The foundations of this psychology are here presented and the application of these principles to the organization of a junior high school.

"All Miss McGregor's experience in working out these things and in expounding junior-high-schoolery to teachers who go to Rochester to join her summer classes has enabled her to parallel with specific application Dr. Pechstein's psychological facts. It makes a fine balance of principles and practices."

+ Educ R 71:54 Ja '26 650w

"The authors have done an unusually excellent piece of work in the organization of the content of both sections. The discussions are good examples of developmental procedure in the presentation of subject-matter. The handling of the details shows that the writers are talking out of a rich background of experience in dealing with adolescent pupils." H. W. Nutt

+ El School J 25:633 Ap '25 450w

"The book will be of interest and value to junior high school teachers and principals as well as to all others interested in the scientific handling of adolescents. It includes what is best in recent adolescent psychology, together with a description of junior high school practice based on experience in one of the country's foremost junior high schools." H. H. Ryan

+ School R 33:68 Ja '25 560w

PECK, HARVEY WHITEFIELD. Taxation and welfare. 269p $2.50 Macmillan

336.2 Taxation 25-6836

This study is in two parts, the first dealing with the problem of the justification of taxation in the necessary and desirable service to the state, the second dealing with the rate of taxation.

Reviewed by F. N. House

Am J Soc 31:410 N '25 80w

Am Pol Sci R 19:865 N '25 50w

"Abstract presentations like the one under review are much needed, but they should be supplemented by a popular treatment that will reach a wider audience." E. M. Patterson

+ Ann Am Acad 121:193 S '25 460w

Booklist 22:11 O '25

"An attempt at an impartial and scientific survey of the problem of taxation in its financial and social relations. The constructive suggestions in his closing chapter are logical and original." J. G.

+ Bookm 61:adv My '25 160w

"Those who are 'appalled' at the 'rapidly mounting tax burden' of the country and never go further than to consider gross totals and unit tax rates would do well to read this little book."

Eng N 94:863 My 21 '25 250w

"Interesting and useful volume." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 121:389 O 7 '25 80w

Reviewed by E. A. Bradford

N Y Times p26 My 24 '25 1600w

Reviewed by H: R. Mussey

N Y Tribune p10 Ap 26 '25 450w

Outlook 140:269 Je 17 '25 10w

"The virtue of Professor Peck's little volume is that it sets forth the principles which the great majority of scientific students of public finance the world over accept as the criteria of sound taxation. In finance as elsewhere, the doctors disagree. Where such is the case the present work presents the opposed views and seeks a fair appraisal. To a much greater extent than is common, Professor Peck's work thus fulfils the promise of its prospectus—an attempt at an impartial and scientific survey of the problem of taxation in its financial and social relations." J. H. Hollander

+ Sat R of Lit 1:914 JI 18 '25 480w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p336 My 14 '25 70w

"Interesting and scholarly book."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:194 JI '25

PECK, SAMUEL MINTURN. Autumn trail.
54p $1.25 Miner

811 25-8811

A book of newspaper verse, most of which appeared originally in the Boston Transcript.

"His verse, reflecting even the unseen sunlight and good, comforts and uplifts, like that wind of the sea of which he writes lovingly. Mr. Peck's sentiment shines star-like unclouded by any mush of modern sophistication." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 8 '25 700w

Ind 115:332 S 19 '25 10w

Outlook 141:168 S 30 '25 20w

"We like the author and his pleasant, simple lines, but we cannot find his work of great value." W: R. Benet

+ Sat R of Lit 1:933 JI 25 '25 30w

PEDLER, MARGARET (BASS) (MRS W. G. Q. PEDLER). Red ashes. 320p $2 Doran
25-8121

As expiation for the moment's unsteadiness of hand that cost a patient's life, Blake Carrington felt that he must give up his career and his friends to live a life of isolation. Pamela, when she knew the truth, felt otherwise. Pamela lived with her two brothers at Rakehill Manor, the down-at-the-heels estate neighboring Boscowen Manor where Carrington had gone to live in grim retirement. They met and promptly fell in love. This is the story of the tortuous progress of their love.

"There is a vital quality to Red Ashes; it possesses a story too good to be recast here; and it is written well."

+ Bookm 61:xix Ag '25 300w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 8 '25 1050w

Reviewed by E. H. Wyman

Int Bk R p742 O '25 350w

"If one could read the story without noticing the plot there is entertainment galore in the interplay of characters, in the snappy dialogue and in the author's swift and provocative style."

— Lit R p6 Ag 1 '25 300w

— N Y Times p6 Ag 2 '25 550w

N Y Tribune p8 S 20 '25 200w

"Like all Miss Pedler's novels, this is a thoroughly competent and well-written story."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p712 N 6 '24 200w

PEERS, EDGAR ALLISON. Spanish mysticism; preliminary survey. 277p $5 Dutton [12s Methuen]

248 Mysticism [25-10863]

An introduction to Spanish mysticism comprises the first part of the book. The second part contains passages from the writings of the great Spanish mystics themselves, prefaced by a short biographical account of the writer. The same selections in the original are grouped together in the final section of the book.

New Statesman 24:454 Ja 24 '25 900w

"Nowhere better than in an anthology of mystic writers like this are the sterility and wastefulness of the mystic better realized. Here are to be found important excerpts from thirteen of the greatest Spanish mystics of the sixteenth century, and three at least among them consummate artists besides. But outside of their occasional value as models of good prose and as data for the psychologist and the thinker—what other value do these 277 pages of printed stuff possess?" Eliseo Vivas

— + N Y Tribune p11 N 8 '25 1100w

PEIRCE, AUGUSTUS BAKER. Knocking about; ed. by Mrs Albert T. Leatherbee. 176p il $3 Yale univ. press
919.4 Australia 24-30404

This is an account of Australian life in its early days. In 1859, at the age of nineteen, Peirce shipped before the mast for a three years' cruise around the world. Conditions and treatment on board ship were so bad that young Peirce deserted at Melbourne and swam ashore. He remained in Australia for thirty years living a life of many adventures and changes, which he describes in a simple and lively narrative adorned with his own illustrations.

"Historically his descriptions of life and its conditions in the early days of Australia are not without value. And the narrative is entertaining by reason of its graphic descriptions, its ups and downs, its incessant change and movement, its unfailing human interest as the actual experience of one man in a life that was indeed

'knocking about,' when it was not even more being knocked about."

+ N Y Times p4 Ja 4 '25 280w

"Like most books published on a memorial fund, this volume is of more interest to those who enjoy the acquaintance of the author than it is to the general public... The narrative although it does not possess any great measure of literary style, presents a vivid picture of life in that remote corner of the world some sixty years ago."

— + N Y Tribune p9 Mr 15 '25 180w

PELLEY, WILLIAM DUDLEY. Drag; a comedy. 359p $2 Little

25-4857

Mr Pelley's latest novel pictures the plight of an American youth whose wife's family divests him of time, money and happiness. The scene is laid in the small town of Paris, Vermont, when David Haskell a raw-boned, country lad, by virtue of his ability and ambition, makes good as a reporter on the daily paper. In the office he meets Allie Parker, who sees in the boy a good provider and hypnotizes him into marriage. In a very short time David realizes his position. He has married the Parker family—parents, brother and sister—all of whom look to him for support. For nine years David endures this "drag" when with surprising alacrity, the worm turns and David comes into his own—freedom and happiness.

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 4 '25 1300w
Cleveland p87 S '25

Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 40w

"The book is hard to put aside. The conscienceless reviewer who attempts to 'skim it' gives up that notion in mingled despair and rejoicing. It must be read to its last savor-some and salty word. William Dudley Pelley has not written a great book. He never had that intention, but he has offered to his fellow-Americans a picture of what everybody has seen for himself and what must be recognized as one of the good books of the year." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p3 F 28 '25 650w

"The adventures of the 'hay-barn-scented' David Haskell as a youthful reporter in the 'picket-fence-and-hitching-post' (whatever that may be) town of Paris, in Vermont, are told with a gusto and a humor that double the serious interest of the story."

+ Nation and Ath 137:604 Ag 15 '25 200w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 25:451 Ag 1 '25 650w

"In spite of some rather obvious small town observation, the veracity of this novel does not establish itself. The characters are rubber stamps. It is too crudely and obviously documented to be convincing. It isn't New England or Vermont—it is a melodrama version of Vermont."

— N Y Times p16 F 15 '25 600w

Outlook 139:424 Mr 18 '25 250w

"The reader needs to be a bit cynical not to grow incensed at times at the long-suffering stupidity of talented David and egregiously complacent pig-sty selfishness of his gang of precious relatives and in-laws. If he can avoid that, he can watch with some satiric interest the unfolding of the bitter comedy."

— + Springfield Republican p7a My 31 '25 250w

"Mr. Pelley writes with a sense of humor and knowledge of character and the springs of human action. He presents people ruthlessly in their completeness, and tells an interesting story. David has charm always, in his endurance of his relatives in law, in his relation, wholly chivalrous, with Lil Whalen, the street girl, and in his more tenuous relation with Carrie Flynt, born to be his companion and his real love. The book is true and lively."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p508 J1 30 '25 350w

Wis Lib Bul 21:113 Ap '25

PENDEXTER, HUGH. Wife-ship woman. 338p
$2 Bobbs

25-4339

An historical novel of Mississippi in the early days of her colonization. Bienville was governor and was endeavoring to carry out the ambitious French plan, namely to link Canada and the Gulf of Mexico with a chain of forts. The hero is an English spy, the heroine a charming French girl who comes to Biloxi in one of the wife-ships sent out from France. The story is concerned with the hazardous journey of this gently bred girl thru the wilderness to the English settlements in Carolina.

"A wildly adventurous story, and a very readable one. Mr Pendexter has taken advantage of the latitude which the dimness of contemporary documents has given him, but he can plead a legitimate excuse in the entertaining result he has produced in this freedom." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 14 '25 450w
Cleveland p38 Ap '25

"A stirring historical novel that is both a novel and history." C. M. Morrison
+ Lit R p12 Ap 4 '25 400w

"The book has all the improbabilities of a movie plot."

— N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 150w

Outlook 139:460 Mr 25 '25 130w

"The action is swift and its interest keyed to a pitch that will thrill the juvenile pulse rapturously. Mr. Pendexter gives careful, if brief attention to the details of historic background and events, in which passages we found a grateful relief from the wallow of puerile carnage through which the main narrative wades."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:603 Mr 14 '25 200w

PENDRILL, CHARLES. London life in the fourteenth century. 287p il $5 Adelphi pub.
[10s 6d Allen & U.]

914.21 London—History. London—Social life and customs [25-13551]

"There are few towns which possess a more magnificent series of records than mediaeval London, and in this book they have been pilaged to give a graphic description of London streets, and the pageants and processions which took place in them: London citizens, with the freedom of the city in which they rejoiced, the trade and finance, work and wages from which they drew their livelihood, with some account of trade fights and the rise of early journeymen's unions."—Nation and Ath

"All told, he has collected a very large amount of valuable material, which he presents in an interesting manner."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 21 '25 540w

"For the general reader without much historical knowledge the book will make a lively introduction to an enthralling subject, and Mr. Pendrill's enthusiasm is pleasantly obvious on every page. To the serious historian, however, the work will be of less value; it adds nothing to what is already known, for it makes no use of the mass of unprinted material which still remains in the Guildhall, or of certain printed sources (such as wills) which throw considerable light on the domestic history of the period."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:146 My 2 '25 350w

"Mr. Pendrill has given us a popular story, but he has told us nothing that he does not or cannot confirm by reference to contemporary records. He has an easy and pleasant style, and he has given us a glimpse of the Middle Ages that whets even more than it satisfies our curiosity."

+ New Statesman 25:376 Jl 11 '25 850w

"Mr. Pendrill has delved to good purpose and with interesting results among the many archives in the Guildhall, London, which by happy chance or rare carefulness have survived from the period before the great fire of 1666. The most memorable passage in Mr. Pendrill's book is his description of midsummer eve in London."

N Y Tribune p18 N 1 '25 350w

"After reading this painstaking work one cannot escape from the feeling that a great opportunity has been lost. There is room for a book on life in mediaeval London, and there is a vast amount of material for such a work both in print and in manuscript; but the man who can write it has yet to be found. Mr. Pendrill gives us a series of sketches and tells us much that is interesting but little that is new. His indication of sources is of the vaguest kind."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p233 Ap 2 '25 800w

PENNELL, JOSEPH. Adventures of an illustrator. 372p il buck $12.50 Little

B or 92 Illustration of books. Drawings 25-25097

Mr Pennell's adventures were mostly in following his authors in America and Europe. His first commission was for the Century magazine. Then his adventures with authors began—with Charles G. Leland in Philadelphia, George W. Cable in New Orleans, and Howells and Vernon Lee in Italy. Then to London, which became Mr Pennell's home for many years. The book describes the social life which centered around the Pennell's home there, with Whistler one of its intimates. Later work took him to various parts of the world and he became interested in industrial drawings, including illustrations of the building of the Panama Canal. The book is most plentifully illustrated with Mr Pennell's drawings, etchings and lithographs.

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Bookm 62:345 N '25 160w

"To those who delight in a handsome book, this volume at once recommends itself, with its innumerable, finely reproduced illustrations and its general appearance of dignity and good taste." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 116:21 Ja 2 '26 1000w

"'Adventures of an Illustrator' is crammed with worth-while prints, and the text is a varied meal spiced with Tabasco sauce." C: de Kay

+ Int Bk R p116 Ja 26 2000w

"Mr. Pennell's entire book is itself a good illustration of the fact that it is not necessary to learn how to write in order to write well. He is also interesting throughout, another illustration of another fact that the most interesting writers are invariably wrong. We would not have Joseph Pennell otherwise than just as he is—a near-great human being, a great artist, a great non-voting American and a great heaver of bricks." T: L. Masson

+ Lit R p1 Ja 2 '26 1750w

"His book makes lively reading."

+ N Y Times p7 D 6 '25 100w

"There is nothing of insipidity in 'The Adventures of an Illustrator.' The book is disfigured and at the same time enlivened by an almost continuous growling. It would be the worst sort of injustice to Mr. Pennell if something were not said of the splendid pictorial quality of this volume. He supervised every detail of its printing himself, and the result is an achievement in bookmaking which reflects the greatest credit upon publisher and author alike."

+ — N Y Times p6 D 27 '25 1650w

"He has written his most readable book—an impossible book from a certain point of view, but an absorbing one from another. Its impossible traits cannot be ignored; they are, in fact, so grossly obtruded. Querulous and scolding, possessed of a conceit of himself which he cannot exploit without railing at what he believes to be the shortcomings of others, he gives his ego a prodigious airing." Royal Cortissoz

+ N Y Tribune p1 D 6 '25 1650w

"Exhilarating it all is. You may be amused, annoyed, enraged, but you are made to think—if you care to. With all this attitude towards the world a sense of humor almost boyish will crop up." Frank Weitenkampf

+ Sat R of Lit 2:368 D 5 '25 750w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 13 '25
1300w

PEPPER, GEORGE WHARTON. Men and issues; a selection of speeches and articles. (Contemporary statesmen ser.) 308p il $2.50 Duffield

304 United States—Politics and government 24-27680

A selection of speeches and articles by the senior senator from Pennsylvania. In the first group, Issues, he deals with such topics as politics for the college man, railway regulation, filibustering, injunctions in labor disputes, and the World court. The second part, Men, consists of addresses on Franklin, Lincoln, Grant, Roosevelt, Foch, Choate, Morris, Mellon and Harding.

"The book is worth the perusal of any one who is willing to get a better comprehension of many of the vital issues of the time. In things spiritual as well as in things material, the Senator is a mold of thought. The nation may be grateful that such men are not wanting in its councils." Robert Luce

+ Lit R p6 Ja 24 '25 950w

Reviewed by A. S. Will

N Y Times p1 Ja 4 '25 650w

"The Senator's faculty for stating his ideas is vigorously forceful, direct, penetrating. He seems to possess in abundance the qualities of an able lawyer and of a broadly cultured scholar."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:451 Ja 10 '25 120w

PERKINS, EDNA (BRUSH) (MRS ROGER GRISWOLD PERKINS). Red carpet on the Sahara. 223p il $3.50 Marshall Jones

916.61 Sahara—Description and travel 25-19847

"A charming description of a six-weeks' camel trip across the Sahara Desert made by a woman, author of The white heart of Mojave. The beauty of the desert and a sympathetic, vivid picture of Arab life are unfolded. Adults and young people will read this book of travel with pleasure."—Cleveland

"Miss Perkins's descriptions of the desert are passing beautiful, not only in verisimilitude but in interpretation." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 24 '25 950w

Cleveland p114 D '25

"Miss Perkins is a very keen observer and she gives us vivid pictures of the people and places she saw."

+ Ind 115:743 D 26 '25 100w

"Miss Perkins has the knack of making the small incident interesting, and the reader, particularly the feminine reader, can follow her and 'Charlotte' into the desert with enjoyment."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 1 '25 260w

PERRY, FREDERICK. Fair winds and foul; a narrative of daily life aboard an American clipper ship. 204p il $3.50 Lauriat [10s 6d Hopkinson]

910.4 Seafaring life. Voyages and travels 25-21587

"The story of life in a clipper ship. Mr. Perry writes from his own reminiscences. He went through an officially prescribed course of training to fit himself to become an officer in the mercantile marine; and after spending three years as cadet midshipman with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, he entered the service of the California clipper ships at the period in the seventies of the last century when they followed the deepsea routes from the Atlantic ports to the East Indies and China, and to California and the seaboard cities of South America. He passed eleven years at sea in all sorts of ships, and incidents from several voyages go to the making of this book."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"It is a quietly told, conservative story (made doubly valuable by that very conservatism), whose transcript of daily life on board the clipper ships is packed with anecdotes of sea adventure. And from beginning to end these are of that goodly company of 'true stories' in which perennially young hearts perennially delight." Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 5 '25 1500w

"Readers who delight in sea literature will find Mr. Perry's 'log' valuable cargo. It is not all tragic; there are many humorous episodes." Normal Stuckey

+ Int Bk R p86 Ja '26 400w

"The peculiar merit of Mr. Perry's book is Mr. Perry himself. He has a singularly full and balanced personality, and is the possessor of a literary style that responds almost perfectly to every demand made upon it. The sea, in all its moods, lives in his pages; his portraits of fellow sailors, afloat and ashore, take on real flesh and blood."

+ Nation and Ath 37:601 Ag 15 '25 500w

"He has described a life distinctly full of incident with fluency and humour."

+ New Statesman 25:736 O 10 '25 980w

"It's a rattling good book."

+ N Y Times p15 S 6 '25 1550w

N Y Tribune p15 O '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p541 Ag 20 '25 900w

PERRY, HENRY TEN EYCK. Comic spirit in restoration drama. 148p $2 Yale univ. press [9s Milford]

822 English drama—Restoration. Comedy 25-9044

"Professor Perry's object in writing this book was, his preface tells us, 'to analyze the comic theory and practice of the leading restoration playwrights, with the hope that through a close study of the texts themselves I may add something to the present estimate of the position of Etherege, Wycherley, Congreve, Vanbrugh and Farquhar in the history of dramatic comedy.' He has gone about his task by considering, after an initial chapter on the 'Theory and Practice of Dramatic Comedy,' each of these playwrights in turn, comparing and contrasting the development of the several dramatists, with regard to intention, plot, character and dialogue, and in a final brief chapter defining the 'Relative Position of Restoration Comedy.'"—N Y Tribune

Boston Transcript p4 J1 18 '25 300w

"Here, you must agree, is a temper more urbane and civilized, more intelligent and critical, in a word, than that of Jeremy Collier and his successors, Macaulay and Thackeray. Out of that temper has come a book which the general reader as well as the student will enjoy for its lucid exposition, its sympathetic understanding, and its thoroughly sound, critical temper." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 115:50 J1 11 '25 1150w

"Terse and lucid book." Babette Deutsch

+ N Y Tribune p16 Je 14 '25 700w

"That Professor Perry has read intelligently (if not perhaps widely among the minor dramatists) his book affords ample evidence. The very idiom of the Restoration has become so familiar to him that occasionally he lapses into it. The usefulness of Professor Perry's slender volume lies more in his admirable analyses of the structure of the plays than in his interpretation of their comic spirit." Hazelton Spencer

+ Sat R of Lit 2:48 Ag 15 '25 600w

"This is a freshly felt, discriminating and methodical survey, exemplifying the American thesis as a vehicle of sound literary appreciation wedded to sound scholarship. But it is not of marked originality or high importance, or infallibly mature and searching in its generalizations, and it may stand as an illustration of the proper function of the university in stimulating critical study and fostering appreciation."

PERRY, HENRY TEN EYCK—Continued

+ — Springf'd Republican p6 My 2 '25 200w

"A useful and fairly sound book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p765 O 29 '25 700w

"Professor Perry should find ample welcome as a stimulating interpreter of Restoration comedy. His sense of proportion seems sound. His analysis of plot and character is thorough and consistent. But the exclusion of the lesser comic dramatists and of the comic elements in Restoration tragedy and tragi-comedy suggests that his volume hardly fills the full implication of its main title." G: H. Nettleton

+ — Yale R n s 15:396 Ja '26 350w

PETRE, MAUDE DOMINICA MARY. Two cities; or, Statecraft and idealism. 116p $1.50 (4s 6d) Longmans

172.4 Peace. State ethics 25-5173

"Miss Petre's object is to ask whether a statesman can legitimately aim, through the polity of his own country, at the welfare of all mankind. This, of course, involves a chapter on Machiavelli, which is the best thing in the book. There are other well-thought-out chapters, such as that on the League of Nations with its criticism of the Communist. The closing chapter is devoted to an exposition from the writer's own standpoint of the clauses of the Sermon on the Mount. Pacifism is, in the main, the subject of the volume. She supports voluntary individual disarmament and adumbrates hopefully the formation of a 'League of Humanity.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Boston Transcript p3 My 23 '25 160w

"A remarkable little piece of social idealism."

+ J Religion 5:447 Jl '25 80w

"Despite some pages of useful thinking, Miss Petre's homiletic abstractions do not, on the whole, add much to what has been said in endless sermons and books during recent years on the theory of war, peace, and international relations."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p243 Ap 2 '25 220w

PETTENGILL, RAY WALDRON, tr. Letters from America, 1776-1779. Ltd ed 281p $7.50 Houghton

973.3 United States—History—Revolution—Personal narratives. United States—History—Revolution—German mercenaries 24-23159

"This volume is composed of letters written home by Brunswick, Hessian, and Waldeck officers who were serving with the German troops in the British army during the Revolution. They first appeared in print in a contemporary German serial publication during the war. In this form they were used a century later by Lowell in his volume on the Hessians which was published in 1884, and a translation of the letters themselves by William L. Stone, was brought out in Albany in 1891. The material, therefore, as pointed out by the translator, is not new but he states that he has added somewhat to it and corrected errors in translation."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by C. H. Van Tyne
Am Hist R 31:180 O '25 560w

Reviewed by J. F. Vance
Boston Transcript p3 N 22 '24 2600w

Reviewed by C. C. Buel
Lit R p5 My 16 '25 260w
Nation 121:628 D 2 '25 60w
N Y Tribune p4 N 22 '25 250w

"Pettengill's translation, though by no means flawless in its rendering of the German idiom, is more trustworthy than that of Stone. From the point of view of editorial expertness, the present volume leaves something to be desired. The most important section in this book consists of a series of letters from a German officer in Burgoyne's unlucky 'Convention Army,' describing the country through which he passed as a prisoner, from Saratoga to Cambridge, Massachusetts. There are also interesting glimpses of the Vermont frontier, of New York City and its vicinity, and of Philadelphia." E. B. Greene

+ — Pol Sci Q 40:457 S '25 280w

"The chief value of the letters lies in the picture afforded of life in America during the troubled years in which they were written. For the most part the writers were keen observers and men of considerable intelligence. The first letter in the book, written by a staff officer located at Batiscan in 1776, gives a remarkable account of Canadian life, and perhaps no other document of equal length presents so vivid a picture of any section of colonial society of the time." J. T. Adams

+ Sat R of Lit 1:628 Mr 28 '25 500w

"The handsomely printed volume does not add to solid historical knowledge but it has the authentic interest of an antiquarian work reflecting a point of view little known to us, and tending to foster a kindly feeling toward men of whom we know little and whom we have been inclined to treat with obloquy."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 1450w

PETTIBONE, ANITA. Bitter country. 318p $2 Doubleday

25-4211

Into the rain-drenched northwest country of salmon-fishers and lumber-jacks comes Ellen Fargo, a dainty young school teacher, to instruct the children of the Finnish immigrants. These stolid people look distrustfully upon Ellen and the new methods she uses in her work. Their indifference breaks the girl's spirit but her love for Eric Niemi, a stalwart young Finn with American ideals brings her happiness and an understanding of his people.

Booklist 21:341 Je '25

Boston Transcript p4 My 16 '25 350w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Int Bk R p656 S '25 150w

"A strong, vivid, well-written story that bears the stamp of intimate knowledge of the human heart and of the region where its drama is staged."

+ N Y Times p22 Ja 25 '25 400w

N Y World p9e Ja 25 '25 80w

"A story of 'local color' in the best sense; not written to exploit a new field, but told with the zest and freshness a new setting and accent give to the immemorial themes of human character and destiny. The storyteller makes her people very real to us; she is an artist and an interpreter."

+ Outlook 139:309 F '25 '25 300w

"Handicapped by such foundations, as are herein laid down, upon which to build a novel, an author's chances for successful achievement are almost hopeless, and Miss Pettibone has been unequal to a performance of the miraculous."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:841 Je 20 '25 200w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 29 '25 250w

PHELPS, EARLE BERNARD. Principles of public health engineering. 265p il $3 Macmillan

628 Sanitary engineering. Public health 25-10358

"There are many books on public health that take up its engineering phases and many on sanitary engineering that deal with public health but this is the first book on Public Health Engineering. It is condensed, the author says, from material for a course in Public Health Engineering first offered at the 1924 Columbia University Summer School. It is designed for two quite distinct classes of advanced students, one trained in medicine and the other in engineering, both with little or no public health background. The book deals with ventilation, water supply, sewage disposal, milk pasteurization, lighting, municipal refuse, mosquitoes and flies, the last three subjects coming in a chapter on Miscellaneous Environmental Control."—Eng N

"There has been a real need for a book on the engineering aspects of public health written so simply and clearly as to be intelligible to the medical officer of health; and this need the book here reviewed admirably fills." C.-E. A. Winslow

+ Am J Pub Health 15:720 Ag '25 280w

"It is notable for its scientific spirit and method throughout, for its grasp of essentials, and for its thorough accord with progressive ideas of what's what in that part of public health work with which it deals—all of which is to be expected from its widely experienced and well-known author."

+ Eng N 95:111 J1 16 '25 530w

PHELPS, EDITH M., ed. University debaters' annual; constructive and rebuttal speeches delivered in debates of American colleges and universities during the college year, 1923-1924. 409p $2.25 Wilson, H.W.

374 Debating

The tenth issue of this annual volume covers the following subjects: Legal status of strikes; California criminal syndicalism law; Unemployment insurance; Limitation of the powers of the Supreme court; League of nations; Bok peace plan; Conservative and liberal parties for the United States; Permanent court of international justice; Recognition of the present Russian government. Each debate is provided with a brief and a bibliography.

Booklist 21:183 F '25

Wis Lib Bul 21:85 Mr '25

PHELPS, EDITH M., ed. University debaters' annual; constructive and rebuttal speeches delivered in debates of American colleges and universities during the college year, 1924-1925. 416p $2.25 Wilson, H.W.

374 Debating

The Annual for 1924-1925 contains eight debates, on the following subjects: Cabinet form of government; Japanese exclusion; Uniform marriage and divorce laws; Participation of the president's cabinet in Congress; Birth control; Mencken school of thought; Amendment of the Volstead act; Child labor.

Booklist 22:145 Ja '26

PHELPS, WILLIAM LYON. Human nature and the gospel. 301p $2 Scribner

225 Bible. New Testament. Jesus Christ 25-5490

Professor Phelps here treats the books of the New Testament as he treated the books of the Old three years ago in his "Human Nature in the Bible." (Book Review Digest, 1922) He interprets the personality of Jesus Christ and his teaching and the characters of the men and women who make up the Gospel story. He also narrates the beginnings of the Christian church. Contents: The first Christmas; John the Baptist and the triple temptation; Prayer and miracles; The pessimism of Jesus; The betrayal, the death, the Resurrection; The law and the Gospel; The beginnings of the Christian organization; Peter and Paul; The rising tide; Paul's adventures in Europe and Asia; The conquering captive; Love-letters and romance.

Booklist 21:326 Je '25

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 21 '25 600w

Cleveland p92 S '25

"As usual the genial author is conversational, informal, intimate, anecdotal, and captivating. I dare not call him charming, it's too pretty. The hearty masculinity of him suffers nothing in this familiar yet dignified talk of sacred things." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:167 O '25 350w

"There is an ancient saying to the effect that a shoemaker should stick to his last. Professor Phelps is an assessor of current novels . . . and it is too bad that he does not confine himself to that task. Apart from the fluent command of language, in which he excels, and his wide use of literary allusions, which, though interesting, are often irrelevant to the subject under discussion, it is difficult to see that he has made any contribution to New Testament study that might not be made by a conscientious Sunday school superintendent." J. A. McCallum

— + Lit R p6 Je 27 '25 650w

"The work is modern, does not assume to be a scholarly research, and is adapted to the students of the university for whom it was presumably intended." Horace Green

+ N Y Times p11 My 10 '25 620w

"Professor Phelps believes that the spirit of Jesus is what the modern world needs. But he is less concerned to work out his personal creed 'with fear and trembling' than to make the Gospel story really palatable to, say, the readers of 'The Ladies Home Journal.' His book is a thorough, brisk and indeed almost jolly retelling of the New Testament, with frequent illustrative references to Maeterlinck, Ibsen, Browning, Stevenson and other good modern authors. What he himself likes in the New Testament is just its eternal human nature; and he applies his great talent for popularization to making 'Doctor Luke,' 'Captain Julius' and 'Governor Felix' as much like personages on a fruit steamer bound for Cuba as possible." S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p2 Ag 9 '25 1100w

"The result is a readable if not inspired commentary on the chief persons and situations of the Gospel narrative. The problems of Modernism and the higher criticism will not disturb the reader, for they do not disturb the writer. The book is especially successful in making clear the personalities of many figures who to most of us are confused or vague; notably of Paul and Luke, whose missionary adventures are the subject of a crisp and vivid narrative."

+ Outlook 141:30 S 2 '25 220w

Reviewed by H. A. Stimson

Sat R of Lit 1:854 Je 27 '25 680w

"It is worth saying that there is nothing sickly, mushy, or sentimental about this book. It is manly, vivid and vigorous and bears the impress of one in whom reverence, optimism and sanity go hand and in hand." J. J. R.

+ Springfield Republican p5a O 11 '25 950w

Wis Lib Bul 21:108 Ap '25

PHILLIPS, MRS ANNA M. LAISE. Hooked rugs and how to make them. 154p il $2 Macmillan

645.1 Rugs

25-18114

This small book describes various kinds of hand made rugs and tells how to make them, but more than that it makes a plea for the revival of this neglected household art. The author gently urges the prospective rug maker to eschew patterns and machines, and to learn the thrill that comes from designing a rug and executing one's own design.

"Mrs. Phillips writes readably, entertainingly, and above all clearly—so clearly indeed that the veriest amateur of colonial arts may achieve success through her directions."

+ Booklist 22:107 D '25

J Home Econ 17:727 D '25 120w

PHILLIPS, A. M. L.—Continued

"This little book will be found interesting not only to those who aspire to hook their own rugs but to all who admire this oldtime art."

+ N Y Tribune p18 N 22 '25 50w

Outlook 142:35 Ja 6 '26 40w

PHILLIPS, SIR CLAUDE. Emotion in art; ed. by Maurice W. Brockwell. 283p il $4.50 Houghton [15s Heinemann]

704 Art. Painting

[25-20134]

Essays on various phases of art, chiefly painting, by the distinguished English art critic who was for many years keeper of the Wallace collection. Contents: The quality of emotion in modern art; What the brush cannot paint; The Nativity in art; Children in art; Spring in art; Joy in art; Music in art; Dancing in art; Love in art; Death in art; The sublime in art; Great pageants in art; Plagiarism in art; Vandalism in art; Great painters by themselves; The Wilton diptych; Leonardo da Vinci's "Last supper"; The "Adoration of the lamb," at Ghent; Index.

Booklist 22:62 N '25

"An excellent literary approach to the plastic arts is afforded by Phillips' rounded articles; after reading his volume one might win prominent place in a group of layman discussing art. For the critic makes frequent striking statements and lights his points with candles of reference to a Shakspeare or a Wagner." J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p5 Ja 9 '26 400w

"Occasionally one winces at Sir Claude's sentimentality; at times one finds the Grand Style a little ponderous, a little set and finished. Sir Claude's appreciations, catholic though they were, apparently never got nearer our own time than Manet and the impressionists; and in dealing with painters of his own land he was too generous to mediocrity. But of their kind, these essays are good; and since they tend to widen the interest of a public still impoverished in imagery and blank in appreciation it would be a silly esthetic snobbishness to throw them aside." L. Mumford

+ N Y Tribune p4 N 8 '25 720w

"From the point of view of illustrating his attitude and powers these papers, mostly contributed to the Daily Telegraph, are extremely well selected. Sir Claude Phillips was always at his best when he took some general idea and traced its expression through the artistic ages, with illustrations from the innumerable works of art with which his memory was stored. That concentration upon the emotion itself, irrespective of how it was produced, sometimes led him to questionable judgments, as in his over-appreciation of Arnold Böcklin and Fritz von Uhde, must be allowed; but he generally made it clear to the reader how much was due to the work of art and how much to his own imagination."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p457 J1 9 '25 1000w

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN. Devonshire cream; a comedy in three acts. 110p $1.75 Macmillan [3s Duckworth]

822

"A play of English rural life, and English rustics. Beth, the daughter of Elias Widecombe, is in love with Bob Blanchard, the son of her father's bitterest enemy. Of course love triumphs, as it always must in comedy. But the play has its moments of near tragedy. The setting of the comedy is out of the ordinary, all of the action taking place in the great barn at Coombe farm, which has been garlanded and decorated for the celebration of the farmer's silver wedding."—N Y Times

"Excellent characterization, friendly humor, and mechanical correctness all combine to make this one of Mr. Phillpotts' most successful plays."

+ Booklist 22:152 Ja '26

"This is exceedingly poor workmanship. But the piece, notwithstanding the crude exaggeration of its central character, an egotistical and pig-headed old farmer, is well enough adapted to theatrical purpose, and is steeped in the appropriate rural atmosphere which he knows so well how to create. And some of the minor characters have genuine vitality. On the whole, it is a fairly good specimen of rustic drama." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p3 O 24 '25 120w

"The story is slight, yet not uneffective, because founded on that social phenomenon familiar in its ramifications to nearly every one—namely, the family feud. Attention will be focused upon the character of the farmer, Elias Widecombe. Phillpotts, with a rare ability for discriminating portraiture, has created in Elias a comedy figure fully competent to hold any audience."

+ N Y Times p5 O 4 '25 280w

"His characters, all rural, in 'Devonshire Cream' have vitality, humor, dramatic plausibility, and his story has body enough to give them scope." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p15 O 18 '25 80w

"Mr. Eden Phillpotts has conceived and executed his new play with just the right amount of mechanical precision to assure a second sentimental success on the stage of popular comedy. The atmosphere and tone of the play are similar in all respects to what was seen in his last great English success 'The Farmer's Wife.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 2:222 O 17 '25 120w

"It has not been so successful a play as The Farmer's Wife; but it is a pleasant thing to read and to dream over."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p353 My 21 '25 150w

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN. Treasures of Typhon. 250p $2.50 Macmillan [6s G. Richards]

[25-26171]

Like his "Lavender dragon," this is a fantasy written in a gently philosophic vein. It concerns a Greek youth, beautiful and of noble birth, but wayward, whose parents sent him to the philosopher Epicurus for counsel. Having first administered a potion which enabled the youth to understand the language of trees and flowers, Epicurus sent him out into the world in quest of the magic herb, Soter. Typhon had one adventure after another, each connected with some tree or vine or flower. With each experience he increased in understanding and patience and learned the value of humility and a civil tongue, but Soter eluded him. He met a beautiful maiden Aegle, grew to love her, and together they continued the search. A wiser Typhon went back empty-handed to Epicurus. The philosopher told him that there was really no such plant as Soter, that the search was all, the finding of no account whatever.

Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '25 1150w

"It is not an exciting book and few constant readers of Snappy Stories will be enthralled by it. Leisurely and cultured gentlemen of the old tawny port school will find it delightful."

Ind 114:219 F 21 '25 80w

"There is much that is beautiful in the book, as a poem is beautiful; there is much that is dull and satiric; there is much that is illuminating." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 Ja 17 '25 500w

"Something like calm and poise in the 'grand manner' seems to be Mr. Phillpotts' own earnest desire for his book. The result is perhaps a pompous pedestrianism of bombastic mediocrity rather oftener than that sheer lift of moral loveliness which the author designed. Yet the work is a welcome release from facts and a not altogether unsuccessful effort to amplify accepted values."

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 18 '25 750w

"Under the guise of conjuring up the flavor of antiquity, Mr. Phillpotts talks very much like our old friend Polonius. He not only talks very like our old friend Polonius, but he talks very much."

— N Y Tribune p14 Mr 15 '25 150w

"It is a pleasant thing to read, and inspires the pleasanter reflection that no doubt the change has done the author good, and his next fine, solidly based, and vigorously wrought Devonian novel will be the better for it." Ethel Parton

+ Outlook 139:228 F 11 '25 200w

"After reading the book an agreeable aroma of its atmosphere lingers in one's memory. It is not clear what it is all about or why it was written. There is a flavor of satire in some of the utterances of the talking trees, and an air of satire about some of the minor characters, but it is not manifest against whom or what the possible satire may be directed." E. L. White

+ Sat R of Lit 1:643 Ap 4 '25 650w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 350w

"It is all told in that clear, quiet Attic style of prose of which Mr. Phillpotts has more than once proved himself a real master. The book is full of calm wisdom, and though the writer severely trammels his imagination by his reason yet one is sometimes tempted to say of him, as Blake said of Milton, 'He is of the Devil's party without knowing it.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p745 N 20 '24 300w

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN. Voice from the dark. 320p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-4860

"Ringrose [a retired detective] drives up to the Old Manor House Hotel, that overlooks the British Channel, just at dusk. He has come to do a little shooting. He disposes of himself and belongings, eats a good supper and goes to sleep. He wakes in the night with the voice of a child ringing in the room. In its frenzied cries he hears a name. The next day he learns that more than a year before a child had somehow been craftily tortured to death in the room where he slept. Ringrose begins the hunt, not for the murderer, but for ways and means of fastening conviction upon the assassin. Very early in the tale the murderer and the method of murder are disclosed, but the job of the detective is to bring about a confession or prove guilt in some other way. The reader is taken into the full confidence of the detective and works and follows along with him to the dramatic ending of his task."—Lit R

Booklist 21:341 Je '25

"No one who enjoys a good mystery story should fail to read 'A Voice from the Dark.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 4 '25 460w

Cleveland p38 Ap '25

Ind 114:591 My 23 '25 70w

"The bounds of plausibility are never passed; we go step by step with John Ringrose through a series of thrilling events so well and convincingly narrated that they seem real." L. Moore

+ Int Bk R p471 Je '25 120w

"Not many of these $2 detective yarns are worth the money. This one most distinctly is." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p4 Ap 4 '25 320w

"It is a real thriller, and only a very strong-minded reader will find it possible to put the book aside before he knows the reason and origin of that very mysterious thing, 'A Voice From the Dark.'"

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 8 '25 750w

N Y Tribune p8 Mr 22 '25 450w

Outlook 139:503 Ap 1 '25 160w

"In 'A Voice from the Dark' Mr. Eden Phillpotts puts the brake on monotonous legends of crime and detection by offering a story which opens with a genuine mystery and must enthrall even the most experienced readers of detective fiction to the end." J. L. Ford

+ Outlook 140:30 My 6 '25 900w

"It is an ingenious tale whose complications follow plausibly one upon the other. Mr. Phillpotts manages to withhold suspicion as to the manner in which the initial crime was committed until well towards the close of his book, and if the devices he employs to bring about his situations are neither unhackneyed nor unmelodramatic they are at least presented so that interest in their development is sustained until the end."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:601 Mr 14 '25 250w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 300w

Survey 54:184 My 1 '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p282 Ap 23 '25 450w

PIER, ARTHUR STANWOOD. Confident morning. 325p $2 Houghton

25-12733

Nothing can pierce the Reverend Dr Kendall's complacent satisfaction with himself and his works, neither the outspoken sarcasms of his sons and daughters, nor the gentle witticisms of his wife. He is proof against them all. It is well enough for the children, for, absorbed in their careers and their love affairs, they leave home one by one. There appears to be no such relief for their mother. However, when the pompous doctor's hopes for the bishopric are defeated, he retires to Florida and accepts a parish there, leaving his wife free to escape to the children for a part of each year. "The passing of one who had been the dominant figure in the family life into remoteness and obscurity seemed to no member of the family either melancholy or important."

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 1200w

"It is written in a calm, unhurried style. It is genuine and decent and a good story."

+ Ind 115:366 S 26 '25 70w

"Mr. Pier's novel is not wholly praiseworthy. It is interesting enough, easy to read, and with certain excellent virtues which will be given due credit. But it is not integrated. It is, indeed, somewhat lazily put together. And at the outset a group of problems are posed for which there is never any attempt at solution." M. M.

— + Int Bk R p619 Ag '25 450w

"Swift and telling action," the jacket says. 'Swift and telling action,' however, is a little too steep. The charm of the book—for it has charm—lies entirely in deft and illuminating characterization, for there is no discoverable action in it at all." R. W. Thompson

— + Lit R p5 Ag 22 '25 250w

"Although thoroughly modern in its frankness and viewpoint, 'Confident Morning' has the novelty of being wholesome."

+ N Y Times p13 Jl 19 '25 600w

"The novel really is not plausible and it carries no conviction."

— N Y Tribune p7 O 4 '25 260w

"Excellent story."

+ Outlook 140:499 Ag 5 '25 350w

"The emotional complications of the story are of sufficient interest to engage the summer reader's attention."

Springf'd Republican p7a Jl 26 '25 900w

PIER, GARRETT CHATFIELD. Hidden valley. 236p $2 Stratford

221 Bible. Old Testament—Stories 25-8494

This narrative of the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt is colored by the tradition that the Hebrews had not worshipped Jehovah prior to the time of Moses, and that Moses himself had not heard Jehovah's name before his flight for sanctuary to the Arabian priest named Jethro. With Moses as the central figure, the dramatic events preceding and during the exodus are vividly recounted, and the characters, the greater number of them historical, are vested with life.

PIER, GARRETT C.—Continued

"This would be an excellent book for a school-book list or to stimulate a student's interest in the Old Testament."

+ Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 100w

"Not without its moments of drama, this story woven about the departure of the people of Israel from Egypt is still more interesting for its graphic accounts of life and ceremonial in Egypt in the time of Rameses the Great and his son, Mer-en-ptah."

N Y Times p22 My 31 '25 450w

Outlook 140:566 Ag 19 '25 10w

PIERARD, LOUIS. Tragic life of Vincent Van Gogh; tr. by Herbert Garland. 126p il $3.50 Houghton [7s 6d J. Castle]

B or 92 Van Gogh, Vincent [25-26896]

"An account of the life of that intense and passionate artist who worked with feverish energy as though against time—who went mad and killed himself. The volume contains twenty-four plates of his pictures."—Ind

Booklist 22:71 N '25

"A sympathetic account. The story is faithfully told without heroics or too exuberant praise. It is the first biography of Van Gogh available in an English edition at a reasonable price."

+ Ind 115:276 S 5 '25 60w

"M. Piérard's small book paints the life of this post-impressionist artist with bold and vigorous strokes. The book lacks detail, but it is dramatic and deeply absorbing." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p4 S 19 '25 320w

"The fact that the mining center of Le Borinage is M. Piérard's native place, considerably helped this biographer in the reconstruction of that period. Nevertheless his work wants that burning glow, that sullen intensity which must always associate themselves with Van Gogh's name. The awkwardness of the translation is not a little responsible for the lack one feels here. The twenty-four reproductions of the painter's work go a good way toward redeeming the book."

+ — Nation 121:628 D 2 '25 160w

"The present translation of M. Piérard's modest biography is welcome. Several reproductions of pictures are given, but M. Piérard refrains purposely from æsthetic criticism. He has been able indeed to throw new light upon some obscure places, and the life is strange enough and tragic enough to be worth reading, were there no question of the genius of the artist."

+ Nation and Ath 37:182 My 9 '25 280w

"M. Piérard's work has certain scientific value because it brings forward certain new facts about Van Gogh, but it is too slight to compete with M. Meier-Graefe's. Its price alone justifies its existence, and that is a good justification. Those who do not wish to spend the money on the expensive biography may well buy this."

+ — Sat R 139:560 My 23 '25 250w

"There was room for this new book, for M. Piérard gives us an admirable summary of the main facts of Van Gogh's life, with many well-chosen quotations from his letters, and the account of the critical years spent at Le Borinage is especially well done. The book is well translated by Mr. Garland, and contains twenty-four good photographs of Van Gogh's work."

+ Spec 134:1012 Je 20 '25 1000w

"M. Piérard has done little more than to imply the comment 'queer' in the margin. Nevertheless he has written a clear account of the artist's life; and though the biographer is not in the fortunate position of other writers who are not asked to comment on their own writings, even without comment the facts are of interest."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p378 Je 4 '25 1200w

PIERCE, EDGAR. Philosophy of character. 435p il $4 Harvard univ. press [20s Milford] 150 Character. Philosophy. Psychology 24-30790

"It is the aim of this book 'to discover a philosophic basis for a scientific psychology of character which will preserve the validity of scientific law and moral value of life.' This basis is found in a metaphysical theory which Dr. Pierce characterizes as 'pluralistic idealism.' The ultimate explanation of character is in non-materialistic terms; so the moral value of life is preserved. The material world is made up of those aspects of reality which are common to many minds and 'to the object,' and the laws of the behavior of which are fixed. Science has provided in the material world a field of unlimited extent within which its results are valid."—Int J Ethics

Boston Transcript p5 My 9 '25 220w

"This book merits reading alike on the score of the scholarship which it exhibits and the excellence of the style in which it is written." C. F. Arrowood

+ Int J Ethics 35:321 Ap '25 200w

"The chief value of the book, I should say, is that it helps to bring down to date the argument of pluralistic idealism. Due to the author's extensive use of quotations some chapters might almost form parts of a sourcebook in current theories. The wide range of subjects covered is, I think, commendable in a book on philosophy. One's criticisms of the book are chiefly criticisms of pluralistic idealism. The author's idealism is not altogether free of realism." G. P. Conger

+ — J Philos 22:155 Mr 12 '25 1500w

"In his scholarly thought-provoking volume Dr. Pierce presents a study which is, in a sense, an introduction to a purposive psychology." Mary Huntington

+ Lit R p6 Mr 28 '25 1000w

"There is nothing new in the book; but the revival of the empirical-scientific spirit of Aristotle, the delightful personal modesty of the author, his interest in the specific character of the material universe and of mind—these cover a multitude of sins and will render the volume attractive and suggestive to many who feel the call of the problems of philosophy." W. H. Sheldon

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:557 F 28 '25 850w

"We have no difficulty in assigning Dr. Pierce's 'Philosophy of Character' an honourable place in Montaigne's third division. It is an intelligent and sympathetic search for truth, never satisfied and never discouraged. Dr. Pierce quotes freely and extensively from recent scientific and philosophical literature. His selections are always good, and he has woven them dexterously into the main thread of his argument."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p360 My 28 '25 1650w

PIERSON, CLARA DILLINGHAM. Plucky Al-lens. 327p $2 Dutton

25-15851

Raymond and Frederic and Eleanor and Polly-dear live with Aunt Hannah in a Michigan town. Aunt Hannah is not their real aunt, but she is just as good as a real one, and the children have never known any other. They live in a large house, on a great many acres of land, and they all play together so merrily and work together so busily that their home is properly named "The valley of content."

"Here is a tale which puts on no airs whatsoever, but is content to be a simple and entertaining story. A good, brave, encouraging little tale." H: Beston

+ Ind 115:351 S 26 '25 80w

N Y World p7m N 8 '25 20w

"A simple, sturdy everyday book of the 'Five Little Peppers' school."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:245 O 24 '25 60w

PILLAI, PURUSHOTTAMA PADMANABHA. Economic conditions in India; with an introductory note by Gilbert Slater. (London school of economics and political science. Studies in economics and political science) 330p $5 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

330.954 India—Economic conditions

[25-14556]

After a preliminary glance backward thru the centuries, the author turns to present day economic problems of India. He writes with special reference to agricultural development among the teeming rural population, and to the demand for industrial expansion most urgently arising in the cities, and considers the problem of labor and wage as it affects both agriculture and industry.

"This study is a critical and well-documented analysis of the present situation in India, by a native. It shows mature scholarship and good judgment. The patriotism of the author is not dissembled, but merely serves to emphasize the point of view of the discussion without the slightest prejudice to the quality of the analytical work." A. P. Usher

+ Am Econ R 15:496 S '25 400w

"Well written and authoritative volume." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 850w

"For two reasons Mr. Pillai's book is welcome. In the first place it counteracts an unsound economic theory; and in the second place it provides a comprehensive study of the various industries of India and the conditions of the people who work them. Although Mr. Pillai rightly excludes politics from his pages, his work is of the greatest importance to politicians."

+ New Statesman 25:80 My 2 '25 850w

"Well-written, showing careful research and powers of sober presentation, free from excessive prejudice even when the Indian point of view differs from the British."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p231 Ap 2 '25 220w

PILNIAK, BORIS, pseud. (BORIS ANDREEVICH VOGAU). Tales of the wilderness; with an introd. by Prince D. S. Mirsky [tr. by F. O'Dempsey]. 223p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Routledge]

25-9557

"These stories, mostly wild and imperfect, cast a troubled light on the transitional state of Russian literature since Chekhov, the rivalry between realism and increasing poetry, the disturbing influence of the nature-stories of Kipling and Jack London, and the elemental stories of Hamsun. Prince D. S. Mirsky, in an introduction to this book, assures us that the Soviet stories of Pilniak are even more transitional, in fact, unreadable, but the page-sample he gives sharpens curiosity. These earlier stories recall the coloured, excited style of Bunin, but, less in art, they have a wider sense of the primitive."—Nation and Ath

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Bookm 61:223 Ap '25 80w

"It is a collection of impressions of a sad, silent people left high and dry upon their own wreckage—a collection of stories told with a crude beauty and poetic truth—but hardly a book for the melancholy reader." C. M. L.

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 24 '25 1000w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

Lit R p12 Ja 17 '25 300w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Nation 120:163 F 11 '25 450w

Nation and Ath 36:452 D 20 '24 200w

"It cannot truthfully be contended that he shows a 'complete inability to tell a story,' for in three or four out of the eleven selections he does display a faculty for straightforward and even interesting narration; but in a majority of cases he goes rambling off on sidetracks that divert one's attention from the central thread of the tale; and he seems so little concerned with telling a story for the story's sake and so much occupied with extraneous objects that he is in danger of frightening the timid reader away."

— + N Y Times p17 Ja 18 '25 400w

"The man has a strong sense of the natural scene and an ability to draw simple characters with direct powerful strokes. Among the finest things included is a Northern idyll of the woodman's existence, representing man as the beautiful and not ignoble beast. 'Death' is a striking study of human decay." Avrahm Yarmolinsky

+ N Y Tribune p11 Mr 15 '25 350w

"Pilniak is chiefly a descriptive writer, one of the few who is capable, through sheer poetic transcription, of stimulating all of one's senses. One feels that lyric verse is more his proper method than the prose which here represents him." Kenneth Fuessle

+ — N Y World p8e Ja 18 '25 200w

"In style he seems rather chameleon-like, and while the observation and feeling are his own, his manner takes color from various predecessors. One or two of the stories are done in the manner of Chekov and the realists of the last century. An animal, or rather bird, story, 'Over the Ravine,' would seem to come pretty straight from Jack London, picking up a certain poetic rhythm on the way. 'A year of Their Lives' suggests Knut Hamsun's 'Growth of the Soil.'" Arthur Ruhl

Sat R of Lit 1:595 Mr 14 '25 850w

Spec 133:sup838 N 29 '24 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p727 N 13 '24 400w

PIRANDELLO, LUIGI. The outcast; auth. tr. from the Italian by Leo Ongle. 334p $2 Dutton

25-18359

Condemned and cast out by husband and father for a crime she has not committed, Marta makes a brave attempt to build life over again, clean and new. She goes with her mother and sister to a town where she is unknown and there supports them by teaching. After a time happiness comes back to the three. Then the man for whose sake Marta was persecuted comes to their village. He finds Marta lovelier than ever, more than ever desirable. The result is inevitable. The outcry against her breaks forth afresh, and she is forced into the situation she has tried to escape. Too late her chastened husband sues for forgiveness. This drama of Italian life draws to a close in a moving scene of reconciliation.

Booklist 22:119 D '25

"'The Outcast' is real enough to break your heart, although so foreign that it fascinates you by its very strangeness. The thing is horribly vivid, but it is unquestionably immense."

Boston Transcript p4 O 17 '25 280w

"Altho the ending is somewhat weak and compromising, and altho one feels that the author has flinched in the face of the final issue and that the tale has not been completely told, yet the book on the whole is both vivid and convincing." S. A. Coblentz

+ — Int Bk R p135 Ja '26 450w

"It is all vivid, tense, dramatic; the scenes toward the close of the book, in the attic where Rocco's mother lay dying, are almost painful in their emotional intensity, while the climax leaves us wondering what happened afterward; a question which is always a tribute to the power and vitality of any story. It is a somber book, the more somber because one realizes that what happened to Marta might happen, and probably has happened, to many women. If 'The Outcast' is less unusual than some of its author's other work, it is an interesting and, one feels, a thoroughly truthful novel."

L. M. Field

+ — Lit R p2 O 24 '25 460w

PIRANDELLO, LUIGI—Continued

"Several characters in this novel are obviously in want of an author. Their want is not so severe as to press them to the point of actual search, but obviously they need attention. But there is enough human warmth to go round, and the book, whose inhabitants are still in the incomplete incubator stage in their author's imagination, has a pleasant temperature."

+ — New Repub 44:313 N 11 '25 150w

"The author has written a powerful novel, but pitched in a sombre key and shot through with a violence which in the minor characters at all events, who come and go without greatly affecting the course of the narrative, seems at times a gratuitous exercise of a talent for the superfluous."

+ — N Y Times p17 D 20 '25 860w

Reviewed by W: A. Drake

N Y Tribune p14 O 25 '25 410w

"I am ignorant of the chronology of Signor Pirandello's work, but I suspect that this is but an early effort after the theme and the manner of Echegaray's 'El Gran Galeoto.' In fact, I sincerely hope such is the case." J. J. Smertenko

— N Y World p7m N 15 '25 280w

"The emotions and passions of the characters are intensified to such an extent that they cease to present any semblance of reality. 'Hysterics in Sicily' would have been a fair title."

— Sat R of Lit 2:243 O 24 '25 460w

PITTENGER, BENJAMIN FLOYD. Introduction to public school finance. (Riverside textbooks in education) 372p $2 Houghton

379.11 Public schools—Finance. Education—Finance 25-10903

While there has been much literature written of late on the subject of public school finance this is the first attempt to sift, coördinate and analyze this widely scattered material within the limits of a single volume. Those phases of the subject which are still within the field of experiment and debate are presented impartially with a summary of the evidence on each side. At the end of each chapter there are topics for investigation and discussion, and a numbered list of references to which the reader is directly referred by corresponding numbers in the text. The work is indexed.

"The author has endeavored to treat his subject in a non-technical way so as to interest the more general reader."

Am Econ R 15:774 D '25 120w

"On the whole, the book constitutes a convenient introduction to the literature of the field and organizes the important subject matter of this literature in a manner serviceable both to the lay reader and to the student of the administrative problems involved in the support of public schools." N. B. Henry

+ El School J 26:227 N '25 750w

PLANCK, MAX. KARL ERNST LUDWIG. Survey of physics; tr. by R. Jones and D. H. Williams. 184p $2.40 Dutton [6s Methuen]

530.1 Physics 25-9568

A collection of lectures and essays in which the professor of mathematics and physics at the University of Berlin deals with the development of modern theoretical physics.

"The publishers are doing a real service to science by their publication of translations of foreign scientific works, but they are not always fortunate in their choice of books for translation. It might have been thought in a book with so attractive a title and by such an eminent scientific worker they had a real certainty. The book itself, however, somewhat disappointed our, perhaps unduly great, expectations."

+ — Nature 116:353 S 5 '25 180w

"In spite of the fact that some of these essays obviously 'date' they are well worth reading, as, indeed, one would expect, seeing that their author has one of the most original of modern scientific minds."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p603 S 17 '25 150w

PLAYGROUND AND RECREATION ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA. Normal course in play; practical material for use in the training of playground and recreation workers; prepared under the direction of Joseph Lee. 262p $2 Barnes, A. S. & co.

790 Play. Community centers 25-18386

"More than fifteen years ago twenty-three cheerful Americans brought out a 'normal course' in play. Now many more than twenty-three with the rich experience of managing playgrounds in Eastport, Westport, Northampton and South Bend, in New York, Oldtown, Saint Paul and Devil's Lake, have issued a coöperative book under the same name. . . . This volume considers the organization of community recreation, community drama, music, dancing, the play for adults, for adolescents, for little ones. It outlines the qualities of leadership. It treats of the layout and apparatus of playgrounds, of organization and administration and all the related necessities of community recreation for young and old."—Educ R

Booklist 22:109 D '25

Reviewed by W: McAndrew

Educ R 70:163 O '25 300w

"The sources of information listed at the ends of some of the chapters will be most valuable to the beginning student. It is unfortunate, however, that these references are given without comment and that the student is all too frequently given no hint as to their precise nature or value. On the whole, the book is a volume filled with exhortations and suggestions. Most of the latter will be stimulating to the beginning student who needs to know something of the current practices of playground directors and play leaders." H. C. Lehman

+ — El School J 26:231 N '25 800w

PLAYNE, CAROLINE E. Neuroses of the nations. 468p $5 Seltzer [16s Allen & U.]

340.311 European war, 1914-1918—Causes. France. Germany. Chauvinism and jingoism [25-16000]

"An exposition of the theory that nations, like individuals, have neuroses, that the whole of Europe was so affected for thirty years before the war and that the United States is acquiring a neurosis. Emphasis is placed on the neuroses of France and Germany."—N Y World

"The volume is a unique, distinguished, valuable, and unbiased contribution to the voluminous literature on the causes of the Great War." E. E. Sperry

+ Am Hist R 31:137 O '25 600w

"This study, while colorful and competent, can have only secondary influence in fostering peace. It merely tells how the inhabitants of states under economic pressures behave, whereas the why of these pressures is the riddle which a war-torn world must solve before it can insure peace by relieving them." R: Walters

+ — Ind 115:618 N 28 '25 1100w

"The world is in a bad way if Miss Playne is right. Fortunately for at least half the friends of all of us, mistaken opinions are not generally regarded as a sign of insanity."

— Nation and Ath 37:332 Je 13 '25 160w

"A bulky but extremely readable book. Miss Playne has made admirable use of pre-war novels, diaries, memoirs, and the more usual diplomatic and historical sources to show that the different national groups suffered from mass-neuroses for some decades before group-dementia held them in its grip as the War developed. It is regrettably true that Miss Playne fails to define what she means by a neurosis but with this important exception there is not a cloudy term or unsupported statement."

J: Bakeless

+ New Repub 45:141 D 23 '25 520w

N Y World p7m D 6 '25 50w

"In this book the nail is never hit on the head, which is a great pity; for there is undoubtedly a fact that we do act frequently against our better judgment and it is likewise with nations. It is useless to talk about herd-madness, or crowd psychology, in the light of an event which has just taken place, which is what the author does, when the real cause of that event, and therefore its true psychic significance, lies in the past."

— Sat R of Lit 2:387 D 5 '25 350w

"Written by a woman of poise, breadth of vision and picturesque diction." L. A. M.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 1500w

"It is a thorough and reasonably impartial analysis. Miss Playne has succeeded to an unusual degree in laying bare the state of mind of the chief protagonists of 1914."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 2 '25 280w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p822 D 3 '25 1050w

"Valuable book." V. D. S.

+ World Tomorrow 8:386 D '25 80w

PLIMMER, ROBERT HENRY ADERS, and PLIMMER, VIOLET GERALDINE (SHEFFIELD) (MRS ROBERT HENRY ADERS PLIMMER). Food and health. 64p $1.25 (2s 6d) Longmans

613.2 Diet. Vitamines 25-17600

"This small book is a summary in simple terms of the present knowledge about vitamins, or health-giving substances in the food. A special frontispiece has been prepared to show the different foods which are rich and poor in vitamins, so that it can be seen at a glance what to eat and what to avoid."—Publisher's note

Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 200w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:39 JI '25

"This little book is a welcome relief from the usual expositions on diet which are so often coloured by the peculiar idiosyncrasies of the author; for it is a plain statement of the results of the most recent work on vitamins and such matters, and of their practical bearing on our everyday life. Particularly useful are the lists of foods rich or poor in vitamins. It is pleasantly and clearly written."

+ Spec 135:720 O 24 '25 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p602 S 17 '25 60w

POE, EDGAR ALLAN. Letters, till now unpublished; introductory essay and commentary by Mary Newton Stanard. 1td ed 327p $15 Lippincott

B or 92 25-21040

In a packet of letters, till now unpublished, in the Valentine museum, Richmond, is revealed the estrangement between Edgar Allan Poe and his foster-father, John Allan. Of the thirty-one letters here included, twenty-nine are written by Poe to Allan. One is from Allan to Poe and one from Poe's aunt, Mrs Clemm, to Allan. The letters are given in typescript and in facsimile with enough editorial comment to fit them into the incidents of Poe's life.

"The 'Edgar Allan Poe Letters Till Now Unpublished,' form one of the most beautiful and the most important additions to the year's literature about literature." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:502 D '25 80w

"Books about Poe are many, but of more than common interest is the volume prepared under the editorship of Mary Newton Stanard. The present book is carefully arranged and handsomely printed and bound, each letter being accompanied by commentary upon it and relevant matter, with the printed text and facsimiles following each other in chronological order." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 17 '25 1250w

"For one who reads with understanding, Mrs. Stanard's 'Edgar Allan Poe's Letters' creates a new character and an almost wholly admirable one." C. W. Thompson

+ Int BK R p14 D '25 1100w

"Not since Mr. Woodberry made his discoveries have any facts in the life of Poe been made public which were of comparable importance to those contained in the present volume." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 121:518 N 4 '25 750w

Reviewed by Hervey Allen

N Y Times p1 O 18 '25 2500w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

N Y Tribune p6 O 25 '25 2600w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

N Y World p7m O 25 '25 1200w

Reviewed by H. L. Mencken

N Y World p6m N 1 '25 1250w

"For filling gaps in the biography of Edgar Allan Poe, the collection of his letters is invaluable; but it is a sad and painful business to read them."

Spec 135:987 N 28 '25 300w

"Their interest for the historian of Poe cannot be denied—they supply badly-needed information and throw a fair amount of additional light upon his habits and character—but they have scarcely any literary value otherwise."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p828 D 3 '25 450w

POLING, DANIEL ALFRED. The furnace. 311p $2 Doran

25-10306

Colonel Malcolm Frank returns from the war with the simple credo, "I am for men." In order to put his ideals into action, he accepts a position as assistant superintendent of the steel mills where years before, the son of an idealistic Finnish immigrant, he had worked. Strike agitators arrive to upset the harmonious relations between employers and employed. A strike is precipitated and the mining town becomes a battlefield. Between Frank and Brudidge, the leader of the agitators, an enmity develops which reaches its climax in a titanic struggle in a burning building when Frank slays his enemy to rescue the woman he loves. Frank is brought to trial, and months elapse before the final vindication and peace.

"This is a novel of principle and action. It is powerful and compelling in spite of very ordinary technique. It will not have a particularly wide appeal, as is unfortunately the case with many worthwhile books, but it is worth a dozen of the ordinary run of 'popular' fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p6 JI 29 '25 300w

"An interesting love story makes us pardon the author's talkiness and his occasional lapses of bad taste and vulgarity."

+ Cath World 122:141 O '25 80w

Cleveland p83 JI '25

"A gripping, dramatic story of the steel industry."

+ Ind 115:52 JI 11 '25 150w

"The robust belief in righteousness as a solution, held by the three friends who came through 'The Furnace,' strikes one as a good thing to hold to when the world rocks." H: L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p9 Je 21 '25 950w

"A lot of people will read 'The Furnace' with the mixed emotions that come from finding it a wholly good story in which they themselves are characters, so thinly disguised that even casual acquaintances may recognize them." W. P. Beazell

+ N Y World p4m Je 28 '25 550w

POLING, DANIEL ALFRED—Continued

"The author, a New York clergyman, who was concerned in the Interchurch investigation of the steel trust, writes forcefully and with moral vision, though his episodes are sentimentally conceived."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a J1 5 '25 600w

POLLARD, ALBERT FREDERICK. Factors in American history. 315p $2.50 Macmillan [8s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

973 United States—History 25-17033

These lectures, delivered on the Sir George Watson Foundation in 1924 by the professor of English history in the University of London, bring light to bear upon the interpretation of certain interesting aspects of American history, especially the progressive improvement in the relations between the two great branches of the English-speaking world. Among the factors which Dr Pollard discusses are American inheritance, tradition and conservatism, the attitude of America toward imperialism and international idealism, the development of mutual understanding between Great Britain and America and the value of American history in British historical education.

Cleveland p113 D '25

"Inasmuch as Professor Pollard's lectures were intended for English audiences frankly unfamiliar with American history, his treatment of the subject was necessarily limited to a fairly elementary sort of synthesis. That he could make such a synthesis inclusive of some of the most original and the best of American historical writing is a tribute to his scholarship and literary skill." E: M. Earl

+ Hist Outlook 17:37 Ja '26 280w

"A volume which is the most valuable, and the most discussable, contribution to Anglo-American history produced under any of these foundations in recent years. The eight lectures are full of fresh interpretation and criticism, delivered always with a union of candour and friendliness."

+ New Statesman 25:532 Ag 22 '25 280w

"There are many minor errors in the book, but these will distress only pedants, for whom the book was not primarily intended." A. M. Schlesinger

+ N Y Tribune p6 D 13 '25 580w

"Lectures which should be even more interesting and profitable to Americans than they were to the English audiences that heard them." W. F. Johnson

+ No Am 222:380 D '25 320w

R of Rs 72:557 N '25 80w

"His method is, we think, ideally suited to the end in view, namely, to familiarize Englishmen with the salient features of American history. For that purpose this little volume may be highly commended, for we doubt whether many people in this country have more acquaintance with the history of the 'larger half' of the English-speaking race than a few (usually inaccurate) ideas about the War of Independence and the Civil War."

+ Sat R 140:292 S 12 '25 560w

"The essays in this volume, delivered originally as addresses to British audiences, have a value out of all proportion to their size, not because of any new facts contributed, but because of the abundant generalizations."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:454 D 26 '25 320w

"While the interpretation is wholly Prof Pollard's, he steadily relies on judgments in the writings of American experts, largely contenting himself with adapting those judgments to a fresh and luminous point of view, British rather than American, but impartial and international more than merely British."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 4 '25 1700w

"It is possible, here and there, to disagree with Mr. Pollard; in general, however, his attitude is as sane as his analysis of a very complicated period of history is clear."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p527 Ag 13 '25 1750w

POND, DE WITT CLINTON. Drafting-room mathematics. 153p $2.50 Scribner

510 Mathematics. Architectural drawing 24-22936

"Introduces practical mathematics through the solution of problems relating to architecture and construction. Presents applications of trigonometry, logarithms, and simple formulas, and discusses use of slide-rule. Appropriate, but rather indefinite, references to other sources of information."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:291 My '25

POOLE, ERNEST. Hunter's moon. 210p il $2 Macmillan

25-17273

Amory escaped from the tense atmosphere of the flat to his loved corner on the roof-top. There he sat with feet drawn up and crooned to himself the songs Grandfather Wade had taught him. Presently Grandfather Wade would come himself, and they would make more plans for their wonderful trip. They were going away together far from the harsh outbursts and the long strained silences of the flat, to find woods and water, and peace. There was no longer peace at home. Suspicion and unkindness had driven out love. Grandmother Barnes did not want Amory's mother and her father there, but she did want the little boy. She was quarreling now, downstairs to keep him. But the Grandmother Barnes was big and rude, and Grandfather Wade was small and quiet, Amory knew which would win. He knew that, if he waited, some day his dream of the woods would come true, under the hunter's moon.

Booklist 22:163 Ja '26

"This latest story by Mr. Poole at first reading seems slight. Yet it is a story that grows on one, that one recalls in odd moments; a story whose significance is revealed little by little, so that what disappointment may have come at first opening the book with memories of the 'Harbor' or 'Blind' fresh in mind, gives way to a sure admiration for the writer who has conceived it." S. L. R.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 N 28 '25 440w

Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 40w

"The Hunters' Moon' is written with the same skill that produced 'The Harbor.' The boy's thoughts are given voice in their natural speech; but that the book is one for adults is sufficiently proved. Mr. Poole has accomplished the rather unusual thing that he undertook to do, demonstrating his power of interpreting a boy's mind." Albert Mordell

+ Int Bk R p823 N '25 400w

"This is quite the most charming story we have read among all the fall books which have already swarmed to our table. We read it at one sitting—it isn't a very long novel—and it isn't often we feel compelled to do that, even when the book is a small one. No syrup in this tale. It is strong and sinewy with the grimness and the tragedy of life. It is bright with understanding; crisp with the sun and the wind of fields, of long roads, of the harbor that looks out to the sea." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p4 O 3 '25 480w

"It is a case of a man who tells a story with two things in his mind. One is to tell the story; the other is to ride his hobby through the pages with the story on its back. The story suffers from the jolting it gets that way—and the hobby runs away and grazes by the roadside and forgets all about where the story is going." H. I. Brock

N Y Times p2 O 4 '25 1000w

"The escape of one small boy from the city is a matter perhaps not vitally important to the world at large, but it is matter enough for a story of much charm in the hands of Ernest Poole."

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ja 10 '26 400w

"Amory both pleases and puzzles. He seems a bit foggy and forced at times and it is to be wondered if Mr. Poole has quite mastered the child-psychology that is necessary for the success of his book. Amory is poetized a bit too much but perhaps this is required for the peculiar type of child that the author had in mind. After all, there are as many kinds of children as there are psychologists, and it is a well-known fact that there are as many psychologies as there are psychologists!" H. S. Gorman

+ N Y World p4m O 11 '25 700w

"A fine and sympathetic study of boy psychology." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 141:486 N 25 '25 90w

"He shows us an unusual lad, yet he makes of him altogether too simple a psychological study. The incidents chosen do not exhibit him with enough variety. He touches us, but he does not impress us as a living individual. After all, it is the adults in whom the reader finds himself chiefly interested, and it is the grandfather who remains the most vivid character. Mr. Poole should stick to the adult world." Allan Nevins

— + Sat R of Lit 2:235 O 24 '25 600w

POOLE, ERNEST. Little dark man; and other Russian sketches. 141p $1.75 Macmillan

25-8741

Sketches and tales of the old Russia picturing the simple life of the villages and the mysticism and superstition of the Russian peasant. Contents: The Dormouse; The little dark man; Stories that his uncle told; Mother Volga.

"It is with the mystery of hidden forces within us that these sketches deal, and it is a subject the borders of which Mr. Poole himself touched in his novel, 'The Avalanche.' Here he has shown himself a sympathetic and delightful interpreter of that feeling in others. 'The Little Dark Man' has appeared in magazine form before; in this permanent guise it should win additional friends." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 18 '25 550w

Ind 114:563 My 16 '25 100w

"The value of the book lies in its glimpses of the underlying material of primordial mysticism in which the Slav peoples seem to be rooted." H. Walker

Int Bk R p555 Jl '25 180w

"Mr. Poole's presentation of the mysterious does not inspire belief—or, what is more important, it does not inspire. . . He appears to be skeptical of miracles even while writing of them. He sees stories in them—thrilling moments with distinctive patterns. But mysticism, to communicate itself to the reader, must be allowed to pour itself out as a life-force and not be confined in the channels of deliberate 'art.' Mr. Poole's interpretation of the mystical qualities of Russian life is like oil on the waters; it does not mingle with them; it only hides the turbulence that is an essential part of their nature." Eva Goldbeck

+ Lit R p3 My 2 '25 550w

"Mr. Poole picked up much good ore in Russia, and continues to turn it to good advantage. These sketches—some light and some somber—supplement the collections entitled 'The Village,' and 'The Dark People.' They invite the reader to an understanding of the Russian peasant through the wide-open door of folklore."

+ Nation 121:241 Ag 26 '25 50w

"One feels the value of the collection as a contribution to folklore, but there is no wider appeal in the peasant tales. The stories dealing with 'supernatural' occurrences—apparitions, warnings and whatnot—although comparatively commonplace, have a broader range of sympathy. It is disappointing to find a sincere effort by an able craftsman so curiously lacking in the essential quality of magnetism." D. B. Woolsey

+ New Repub 44:129 S 23 '25 200w

"To those who have judged Ernest Poole by such essays in realism as his incisive 'The Harbor' or 'His Family,' this book will come as an unexpected and pleasant change in the literary manner with which his name has hitherto been associated. In four longish short-stories, the last two of which are in themselves fagots of folklore, fable and anecdote, Mr. Poole brings forth some of the fruits of his Russian experience. These fruits are reflected in a quiet, objective style, a rather serene and slightly skeptical philosophy in which mysticism, pessimism and fatalism seem equally blended."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 26 '25 780w

"The absurd convolutions of speech which Mr. Poole would have us believe are characteristic of Russian conversation do not achieve any particular tang or rhythm. They cannot by any stretch of generosity be called Russian; and they certainly are not English."

— N Y Tribune p3 Ag 9 '25 120w

"There is much fictional skill in Ernest Poole's 'The Little Dark Man,' but little warmth. A story teller as able as Poole should know how to reconcile matter with manner."

+ N Y World p9 Jl 5 '25 150w

"On the whole a palish collection of little representative stories."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:764 My 16 '25 400w

Spring'd Republican p7a Je 28 '25 160w

POORMAN, ALFRED PETER. Strength of materials. 313p $3 McGraw

620.1 Strength of materials 25-14935

"A companion volume to the author's 'Applied mechanics.' Is intended for undergraduate courses but assumes a knowledge of physics, calculus, and statics."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:603 D '25

POPE, KATHERINE. Hawaii, the rainbow land. 364p il $3 Crowell

919.69 Hawaiian islands 24-20773

The author lived in Hawaii for ten years gathering facts, legends and impressions. Part one of her book is an account of the old Hawaiians and the way they lived—their houses, clothing and arts—with a glance at their early history. Part two is a selection of their folktales. Part three describes the coming of the white man—Captain Cook and the early voyagers—and the acquisition of the islands by the United States. Part four is an account of the island life of today.

Booklist 21:298 My '25

Boston Transcript p5 O 18 '24 700w

Cleveland p56 Je '25

"The very first paragraph of Katherine Pope's book stamps it as a travel book for children; notwithstanding the statement on the jacket that 'Young folks will be no less pleased with this attractive book than their elders.' A travel book for children is sufficiently uncommon to find a wide market, whereas among adults this 'Hawaii, The Rainbow Land,' is hopelessly out of place. The book is without literary or imaginative quality, but its writer is thoroughly familiar with her material." Blair Niles

Int Bk R p598 Ag '25 280w

"More given to interpretation than to pure description, this book affords a very good means of understanding the islands. Written very simply, and makes easy and attractive reading."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:55 F '25

POPENOE, PAUL BOWMAN. Modern marriage; a handbook. 259p $2.50 Macmillan

332.5 Marriage 25-7448

In a practical and plainly expressed book the author attempts to lay down the principles upon which happy and successful marriage rests. He discusses the qualifications of the ideal wife and the ideal husband, the way the courtship and the engagement period should be conducted and the physiological and biological facts about marriage. There is a chapter on children, and one on the conditions of health which may affect marriage.

Booklist 21:362 J1 '25

"'Modern Marriage' is a book numbers of persons would be the better for reading. It is delightful to find these things treated normally, with no references to complexes, suppressed desires, neurotic emotionalism, and psychoanalytical values; infidelity, satiety and coldness in marriage, called by these old fashioned names, seem somehow more manageable." Kathleen Norris

+ Bookm 61:475 Je '25 300w

Cleveland p91 S '25

"Handbooks of information for persons considering marriage are more conspicuous for quantity than for quality. The present one is by a well-known eugenicist and former editor of the Journal of Heredity and so escapes many of the biological pitfalls into which the well-meaning layman or clergyman is likely to stumble. The material is presented in orderly fashion and readily referred to. The discussion is handled with both frankness and decency, and makes interesting, agreeable reading."

+ J Home Econ 17:461 Ag '25 500w

"Not many readers will deny that Mr. Popenoe discusses the subject with sanity. The purely biological and pathological parts of the book, which is written primarily but not exclusively for men, are plainly expressed and enumerate facts vital to the well-being of the race which ought to be more widely known than they are." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p6 My 9 '25 520w

"It is not fair to leave Mr. Popenoe in the situation in which his own great earnestness sometimes places him. Even though his readers may balk at the installation of his filing system, they will find that Mr. Popenoe is not without wisdom in these things."

+ N Y Times p13 Ap 19 '25 800w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 20w

St Louis p339 S '25

"Mr. Paul Popenoe's Modern Marriage is about marriage, but it is far from modern, except in its insistence on good health as a factor of importance. He has found out from questionnaires what sort of wives men hope to find, and the kind of husbands in demand. Mr. Popenoe's etiquette of courtship is very funny, as codes of etiquette usually are, and a bright sixteen-year-old could give him points."

World Tomorrow 8:286 S '25 100w

PORTER, MRS GENE (STRATTON). Keeper of the bees. 515p $2 Doubleday

25-16601

The story concerns a war veteran, James Macfarlane, who slips away from a reconstruction hospital where he is not making satisfactory progress rather than go to a tuberculosis camp. On his travels he passes the bee master's home just in time to render a service and stays on to help in the apiary. The bee master, the Little Scout who becomes his pal, and the Storm Girl who makes an amazing request, all contribute to restore his fighting courage. But it is Margaret Cameron, the bee master's white haired neighbor who helps Jamie win his way back to health. In a way that neither of them can predict Jamie is able to pay back her kindness in full.

"As a novel it cannot truthfully be said to be a work of high literary craftsmanship. It has its moments when it almost approaches

'fine writing,' and then again it descends to the level of the Sunday supplement." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 920w

"The story as a whole is less skilfully told than were Mrs. Porter's earlier tales. It is burdened with much excessive verbiage, there are repetitions and clumsiness of narrative, and the story is burdened with even more minute description of nature than the author always has insisted upon. The plot unfolds without subtlety along a central line and with not too many complications, keeping the hero always well in the limelight and having many dramatic situations and striking moments, so that it is exactly suited to the needs of the movies. And also it will doubtless be found fascinating and thrilling by Mrs. Porter's large and devoted circles of readers." F. F. K.

+ Int Bk R p62 D '25 450w

Reviewed by J. J. McLaughlin

Lit R p13 N 28 '25 250w

"Despite the coolly calculated appeal of 'The Keeper of the Bees,' a sense of sincerity shines out through its pages. Mrs. Stratton-Porter wrote as she did because she felt what she was saying and believed in it thoroughly. She has packed it full of her cheery optimism, her homely wisdom, her love of fields and flowers, and her own abundant and abiding faith." F. F. Bond

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 16 '25 850w

N Y Tribune p8 S 13 '25 250w

"It cannot conscientiously be recorded that 'The Keeper of the Bees' is a good novel. It is undistinguished in plot, flavorless in characterization. It is distinctly second-rate writing, relieved only by its evident sincerity. There is faith in the fiction of Mrs. Stratton-Porter, and faith is a keel to the craft of any one's adventure." Wells Root

+ N Y World p3m Ag 16 '25 620w

"The whole book radiates sweetness, hope, and light with the unreasoning intensity of an August sun."

Sat R of Lit 2:128 S 12 '25 200w

Spring'd Republican p5a O 11 '25 600w

Wis Lib Bul 21:232 O '25

PORTER, MRS GENE (STRATTON). Tales you won't believe. 327p il $3 Doubleday

590.4 Natural history 25-8570

The author relates in a chatty way some fascinating tales about moths, birds, flowers and animals. Each tale discloses some nature wonder, a miracle, which Mrs Porter witnessed during her years of field work. The book contains interesting photographic illustrations.

Booklist 22:16 O '25

"The book is chatty, nature informing, autobiographical."

+ Bookm 61:484 Je '25 120w

"The stories have previously appeared in serial magazine form. Read for the first time, or re-read, they will prove equally captivating. If one were to choose among them, it would be difficult not to include the whole list! Yet to us, a unique appeal attaches to the 'wonder tale' of the wild geese." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 9 '25 550w

Cleveland p97 S '25

N Y Times p15 My 10 '25 800w

"These stories of outdoor adventures were written as magazine potboilers; but stamped on most of them are the vigorous personality and genuine enthusiasm which made Gene Stratton-Porter's nature books beloved by thousands who would never read Muir and would find Thoreau incomprehensible and alien."

+ N Y Tribune p3 My 17 '25 130w

Outlook 139:622 Ap 22 '25 50w

"Interesting sketches with attractive illustrations."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

POST, MRS EMILY (PRICE). Parade. 382p $2 Funk

25-16815

Beneath her languid softness of manner Geraldine is cold and calculating. She jilts her first suitor to marry a man who can give her comparative wealth, an entrance into society and the ease which she has craved. Incapable of interest in anything besides her looks and her social position, she gradually loses the only genuine friends she has ever known. Her husband kills himself. The shock rouses her to momentary honesty with herself, but the mental habit of years cannot be lightly shaken off. Old age overtakes her with nothing in life save the lying youthfulness of face and figure that assures her place in the fashionable parade.

Booklist 22:164 Ja '26

"The novel is carefully written. The character study of Geraldine is a painstaking one. But the spangled suit of wit that so becomingly clothed 'Etiquette' is utterly lacking." G. B. B.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 O 3 '25 500w

"The novel is very interesting, it has a good many effective scenes, its descriptions are vivid, and Geraldine's development is altogether logical. The fate to whose dreariness we leave her looking shudderingly forward is the all but inevitable result of the sort of life she had led, and the sort of person she was." L. M. Field
+ Int Bk R p669 S '25 1200w

Reviewed by E. A. Hackett
Lit R p7 N 21 '25 160w

N Y Times p9 Ag 30 '25 620w

Reviewed by K. A. Porter
N Y Tribune p13 D 20 '25 900w

"The jacket of 'Parade' tells us that Miss Post is the author of a celebrated etiquette book. 'Parade' makes this fact obvious. Hidden unobtrusively throughout the book are clichés that a high school girl would hardly dare use."

— Sat R of Lit 2:500 Ja 16 '26 130w

Springf'd Republican p7a O 4 '25 250w

POSTGATE, RAYMOND WILLIAM. Murder, piracy and treason; a selection of notable English trials. 254p $2.50 Houghton [10s 6d J. Cape]

343.1 Trials

Stories of sixteen famous trials, the earliest, a trial by combat in 1380, the most recent the trial in 1879 of Charles Peace, notorious thief and prototype of the modern master criminal. Here are the clever and dashing crook, Jack Sheppard, the thoroughly wicked Jonathan Wild, Richardson the New York pirate and gallant, and other famous wrong doers in the milder company of William Penn, indicted for addressing an unlawful assembly, and Zenger, a New York editor on trial for seditious utterances. From these studies, for which the author has gleaned his material from documents and records contemporaneous with each event, the reader gathers an accurate impression of the social, moral and political conditions of the times.

"It is a fascinating book—and a book without undue horror for even the sensitive minded." Merton Winship

+ Lit R p3 N 14 '25 300w

"There are several fascinating chapters in Mr. Postgate's book. The real stories of Jack Sheppard and Jonathan Wild the Great were well worth retelling, for the facts are certainly not known to many people. The stories of Thistlewood and the Cato Street conspiracy, of Zenger and Governor Cosby, and of the trial of John Frost, the Chartist, are somewhat different; besides being good stories in themselves, they have real historical interest." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 38:183 O 31 '25 550w

"Adequately written, and well arranged, it displays a critical spirit and is not lacking in constructive ability."

+ New Statesman 26:supvi N 14 '25 600w

"Judged as stories, the tales are well done: they have directness, simplicity and suspense, and have been most intelligently chosen. A book, this, for a chimney corner at night, when the fire is whispering and the clock is ticking through the silence." H. Beston

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ja 10 '26 280w

"The author has made only a fairly interesting book out of material which was very promising."

— + Outlook 141:677 D 30 '25 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p703 O 22 '25 50w

POUND, ROSCOE. Law and morals. (McNair² lectures, 1923, delivered at the University of North Carolina) 156p $1.50 Univ. of N.C. [7s Milford]

340.1 Law. Ethics

24-18890

"The book consists of three lectures giving the views on the relation of law and morals held by the historical, the analytical, and the philosophical schools of jurisprudence, together with the interpretations and comments of the author thereon. At the outset we are given a very condensed but interesting sketch of the development of law from its beginnings as a form of social control not yet differentiated from religion and morals, through the stage of strict law to the period when again morals begin to modify it in the name of natural law."—Int J Ethics

"The book is so small and the treatment so necessarily limited that criticism of it seems hardly called for. Yet one might suggest that if Dean Pound would take more thought for the structural form of his writings it would be a great boon to his willing readers. Each sentence is clear and each paragraph is usually a unit, but single chapters and the book as a whole present confusing repetitions and shiftings of the point of view such as to make the following of the arguments needlessly difficult." Norman Wilde

+ — Int J Ethics 36:97 O '25 1250w

"Dean Pound's little book is all compact of learning, of fine discrimination and of indefeasible candor. It ranges, with a concentration of statement sometimes puzzling to the reader, through the whole field of the history and philosophy of law. But its essential spirit is of the freshest and most progressive modernity, the most luminous common sense." J. Corbin

+ N Y Times p6 O 19 '24 950w

"The book is a standard for condensation and summary. In this fact there is both merit and demerit, as the book lacks something of the quality of readability. The subject would provoke more discussion if its scholarly treatment were only made attractive to a larger group of readers than those who will appreciate it in its present form." C. J. Ritchey

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 25 '25 680w

POWELL, DAWN. Whither. 305p $2 Small

25-5543

"'Fed-up' and bored by her existence in a small town, with its mediocre people, its monotony of life, and its circumscribed mental outlook, Zoe Bourne cuts loose and comes to the metropolis. Follow then—life in a theatrical boarding house with its quota of career-hunters among the arts, the search for a job, the office itself, a modest share of the good times which New York has to offer, hardship, disappointment, and then, romance."—N Y Times

"'Whither' is a first novel, and a very good one. It is not deep, in the sense of searching character analysis nor of effective plot. It is, in fact, in common with so many products of today's authorship, more of a chronicle than a novel, but it is entertaining and delightful for all that." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 14 '25 500w

"'Whither' is a much finer conception of the jazz age than even 'Processional.' There is an ironic, tender mockery in Miss Powell's book, and a delicate, refreshingly humerous satire. I laughed aloud over many paragraphs. For escape from the heavy, all-observing (and all-recording) popular novels, I recommend 'Whither.' C: Norman

POWELL, DAWN—Continued.

+ Lit R p5 Ap 11 '25 350w

"The cleanest of clean book enthusiasts would be hard put to it to find even the shadow of a smudge on any of its three hundred or more pages. While not glaringly original in either conception or treatment, Miss Powell's story has a refreshing naturalness and normality about it."

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 15 '25 380w

"While the author writes with earnestness and evident sincerity and produces a thoroughly readable story, the book is neither searching in its insight into character nor conspicuous as a study of life. The plot is thoroughly conventional in texture and the ending departs not at all from the usual."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:694 Ap 18 '25 180w

POWELL, EDWARD ALEXANDER. Beyond the utmost purple rim. 431p il $3.50 Century

916.3 Africa, East—Description and travel. Abyssinia. Madagascar 25-7918

Colonel Powell deals with areas of Africa which are comparatively unknown to Europeans—Abyssinia and Madagascar, with passing glimpses of Somaliland, Kenya Colony, Zanzibar and the Comoro islands. The book is not all colorful description, as the title would suggest. A background of history and customs is supplied and there are comments on politics and economic conditions. Numerous illustrations from photographs.

Booklist 21:377 J1 '25

"The author writes with absorbing clearness and interest." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 11 '25 800w

"A thoughtful informative account that is never dull in the telling and is often alluring or humorous."

+ Cleveland p114 D '25

"Colonel Powell's book may be recommended to all those contemplating a trip to any of the countries named; it serves very well, too, for those of us who never expect to see them except through the eyes of some one less bound to the deadly routine of life." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p4 Ap 4 '25 300w

"The whole book is written in Colonel Powell's flowing, colorful and engaging style."

+ N Y Times p26 Ap 19 '25 580w

Reviewed by Janet Ramsay

N Y Tribune p12 Je 7 '25 650w

N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 100w

"Colonel Powell covers much territory in his book, but not superficially. It is notable for thoroughness, competence, a pleasant humor, and an astonishing amount of information."

+ Outlook 140:223 Je 10 '25 200w

Pratt p32 autumn '25

R of Rs 71:560 My '25 130w

"Although these 400 pages are crowded with information, Col. Powell has managed to be diverting and at times vivid. The book would have been much better if devoted wholly to Abyssinia instead of bringing in Madagascar and other countries, and the effect of the excellent photography of Mr. Rexford W. Barton is lessened by the same attempt to offer a complete record." T. M. Longstreth

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:880 J1 4 '25 420w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p628 O 1 '25 600w

Wis Lib Bul 21:230 O '25

POWELL, EDWARD ALEXANDER. Map that is half unrolled; equatorial Africa from the Indian Ocean to the Atlantic. 355p il $3.50 Century

916.7 Africa, Central—Description and travel 25-20151

In "The map that is half unrolled" Colonel Powell tells of a coast to coast journey across Central Africa thru the heart of the Belgian Congo. His book is a vivid description of jungle scenes and savage tribes, and more; it contains interesting information on the administration of the Congo, and compares in passing the differing policies of the British and Belgian governments. The author was accompanied by his wife and a friend who made the photographic record of the trip. There are two maps showing the colonel's route.

Booklist 22:113 D '25

Cleveland p114 D '25

"The odd and interesting gravitates naturally towards this explorer, although he does not believe everything he hears. He is an honest critic who never hesitates to speak his mind. He believes, for instance, that the Belgian Government is too lenient with natives in the Congo, and that it will be a calamity for Tanganyika if Great Britain ever surrenders its mandate." Earle Walbridge

Outlook 141:448 N 18 '25 150w

R of Rs 72:555 N '25 120w

"This is not a book written for the tourist, but an account of observations accumulated over a considerable period of time. For that reason it makes particularly good reading."

Dale Warren

+ Sat R of Lit 2:412 D 12 '25 120w

POWELL, LYMAN PIERSON. Human touch; memories of men and things. 193p il $2.50 Putnam

B or 92

25-5350

"Mr. Powell has lived a busy American life as lecturer, traveler and publicist; and his account—a sort of log-book—of his voyage down the years is a rapid succession of contacts with men and participations in events. There are recollections of Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson, of Dr. Osler, victim both of fame and of notoriety, of actors and editors."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 21 '25 100w

"Men and Things' is throughout a book concerned both with aspirations and inspirations, but ever written in a homely, simple way which removes the stigma of 'preachiness' which might otherwise incur."

N Y Times p13 Mr 8 '25 280w

"Dr. Powell has not left a very legible impression on his generation, and his book does not leave a very legible impression on the mind of the reader. True, he is a genial, human soul, and he has met some big men in his time. But there are perhaps hundreds of other men of like experience. He lacks vivacity of mind; his literary equipment is of the most meagre sort, and his benevolence occasionally becomes too promiscuous to be repaid with a like emotion."

— N Y World p6m Mr 15 '25 200w

R of Rs 71:446 Ap '25 100w

"Dr Powell's descriptions are free from any taint of bitterness. He laughs at no one but himself. Friendly and straightforward, this collection of personal experiences affords fleeting glimpses of many celebrities about whom the public is curious."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 300w

POWELL, RICHARD STILLMAN, pseud. See Barbour, R. H;

POWERS, SAMUEL LELAND. Portraits of a half century. 285p il $3 Little

920 United States—Biography 25-24284

First appearing as a series of articles in the Boston Herald, these portraits are character sketches of distinguished men personally known to the author during his long association with the Boston Bar, and his career in Washington as congressman from Massachusetts. In the present form the articles have been rearranged in chronological order, and many new sketches have been added.

"The book is a human record which deals with the men we all have known, with no dry pages, no 'moral,' no advice to succeeding generations. It is one many will try to finish at a sitting."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 4 '25 1900w

"It is an interesting backward glance that he makes and it is quite worth while for a generation rushing on toward the future as fast as it can go to listen to his memories of the men of consequence he has known."

+ N Y Times p24 N 29 '25 400w

"An entertaining volume of reminiscences."

+ N Y Tribune p18 D 6 '25 180w

"Mr. Powers is of the aristocrats of democracy. He is a gentleman writing of his peers; perhaps for that reason his kindly portraits are unblurred by any of that conscious or unconscious hope for reflected glory which often mars reminiscences."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:499 Ja 16 '26 300w

POWICKE, FREDERICK JAMES. Life of the Reverend Richard Baxter, 1615-1691. 326p $4 Houghton

B or 92 Baxter, Richard [25-11568]

Richard Baxter, 1615-1691, was an English puritan divine, chaplain in Cromwell's army, best known, perhaps, as the author of the "Saints' Everlasting Rest," long the admiration of pious readers. His biographer was born at Kidderminster, where Baxter had a notable twenty years' ministry, and from childhood has been reading and learning about Baxter the pastor, whom he places higher than Baxter the theologian. Part two of the book is given to Baxter's controversies.

"Dr. Powicke writes sympathetically, but he lacks the clarity of style and the ability to bring essential qualities into focus. Nevertheless, anyone who has the desire to read the book carefully will see Richard Baxter grow before him from the close-packed pages." W. K. Rugg

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 23 '25 1600w

"It is as a cold compress for quarrelsome Christians that Dr. Powicke's life of Richard Baxter, stiff with scholarship, is to be warmly recommended. The careful application of its elaborate detail will relieve a high theological temperature and reduce to normal the blood pressure of sectarian disputants. Here is a magic mirror in which we can judge the future by the past." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p14 Ag 9 '25 1900w

"Acute and exhaustive work. It is not always an easy task for the present-day thinker to get a clear notion of the differences which, to a mind like Baxter's, loomed nearly impassable between Puritanism, Presbyterianism, Independency, and the two kinds of Prelacy, one of which he could recognize and the other not. Dr. Powicke makes them all admirably plain."

+ Spec 134:893 My 30 '25 850w

POWYS, JOHN COWPER. Ducdame. 458p $2 Doubleday

25-6199

This is the story of an English country family in decline. Ashover House in Dorsetshire had been a spacious house in the seventeenth century, but there was a taint in the Ashover blood. The family had dwindled and seemed about to die out with Rook, the last of the line. Tho the tragedy of the family's extinction is averted when his cousin, Lady Ann, bears him a son, it is an empty victory, for Rook is murdered on the night of the birth of his first-born. An atmosphere of decay lingers about the house and this morbidness affects almost all the characters of the story.

"A fatalistic atmosphere envelops the story from beginning to end. Of itself, it is strong; but if the least ray of humor or modernity be allowed to touch its gloomily intense fabric, it becomes anachronistic, almost absurd. Nevertheless one must admire it as a sustained, consistent effort." Isabel Paterson

+ Bookm 61:85 Mr '25 200w

Boston Transcript p6 F 25 '25 350w

Dial 78:426 My '25 130w

"Monstrosities as they are, all these folk have a curious solidity; one believes in them, despite their improbability. For Mr. Powys is something of a magician, with the faculty of making you see his fantasies vividly while he is putting them through their paces, however they may fade when you try to look back at them after the curtain is rung down." H. L. P.

+ Int Bk R p283 Mr '25 760w

"Mr. Powys's grip on his characters is intermittent; he vitiates the organic strength of his story with purple patching; something perhaps of the decadent weariness that flows through Rook Ashover has entered its pages. But two things of beauty thrust 'Ducdame' forth from the ruck of contemporary novels: first, the tender and daring treatment of the love between Rook and his brother; and second, the swiftly evocative rendering of various aspects of nature." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 120:720 Je 24 '25 520w

Nation and Ath 37:712 S 12 '25 220w

"They are not commonplace folk, nor is their case a hackneyed one. But their story falls short of its pretensions. This is due to no lack of fine writing or of conscientious labor. But in spite of all, it fails to live. Ducdame bears out its name too literally. The life it presents is so witless a maze that it seems hardly worth recording." B. G.

+ New Repub 43:328 Ag 12 '25 180w

"If the author of 'Ducdame' has seemingly drawn from his contacts chiefly a grand manner in style and heroic proportions in content, he has at least contributed a vitality and a complexity of expertly handled subtle recognitions that are equal to the frame."

N Y Times p8 F 15 '25 650w

"Mr. Powys has taken upon himself the burden of interpreting petty complexities in terms of high tragedy, and the effect is similar to that produced by bad actors in a great play badly learned, in no wise comprehended." K. A. Porter

+ N Y Tribune p12 Jl 5 '25 1000w

"In 'Ducdame' John Cowper Powys compels belief in his world of a doomed family, but too much I think, as if Bulwer-Lytton were for once possessed of intelligence and a literary culture crossed with a faint infiltration of Michael Sadleir. Yet the picture remains, haunting and malicious and unforgettable like the earth, but unlike the earth swathed in metaphor and quotation and the metallic rhythm of surcharged words." Donald Douglas

N Y World p7m F 15 '25 650w

"The best that can be said for Mr. John Cowper Powys is that he means well, and that by taking immense pains he may one day become a good novelist. Here and there in the pages of 'Ducdame' one finds flashes of an independent vision, but the book as a whole is commonplace." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 140:214 Ag 22 '25 420w

"He is, in fact, so able and in many ways so likeable a writer that one is impelled to quarrel violently with him for his quite unnecessary errors of judgment, since Ducdame is, in spite of everything, a good and intelligent novel, and the story of Rook Ashover's final surrender to family claims is, some crudities excepted, well imagined and ingeniously told."

POWYS, JOHN COWPER—Continued

+ — Spec 135:313 Ag 22 '25 750w

"John Powys in this queer story with the queer name remains a better lecturer than novelist. Here, in the manner of the new psychology, he has drawn a circle around several rather inhuman and unreal people, of no particular clime, and then proceeded to work out their destiny behavioristically." F. N. Trager

— Survey 54:503 Ag 1 '25 350w

"The immediate effect of this novel though powerful, is as confusing as that of the supposed Greek, or Celtic, invocation from which he has taken his title. The forcible union of idea and situation is disturbing. There is sound workmanship and constructive power in the book, but the dual mode is uncertain. We are left with the impression of a harsh plot forced into a narrow mould of ideas."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p532 Ag 13 '25 450w

POWYS, JOHN COWPER. Religion of a sceptic. 51p $1 Dodd

230 Religion

25-7959

To Mr Powys modernism is even more objectionable than fundamentalism. He is wearied with the attempts to reconcile religion and science. Instead he offers a religion of beauty, an esthetic delight in the poetry of ancient beliefs quite apart from their meaning. "What we need," he says, "is mythology, not theology. . . . It is, in fact, in the intangible atmosphere which emanates from the quaint and curious poetry surrounding the Virgin Birth that the essence of Christianity is to be found, rather than in the hymning at any definite hour, in any particular church."

Booklist 21:358 Jl '25

Cleveland p93 S '25

"Intriguing little book and a very charming one to read."

+ N Y Times p26 Ap 12 '25 460w

N Y Tribune p9 My 10 '25 450w

Outlook 140:33 My 6 '25 10w

Reviewed by Adrian Richt

Sat R of Lit 1:892 Jl 11 '25 560w

"There is much of poetry, sensitiveness and imagination in 'The Religion of a Sceptic.'"

+ Spring'd Republican p8 Jl 21 '25 600w

POWYS, LLEWELYN. Skin for skin. 147p $2 Harcourt

B or 92

25-17842

"Here within a compass of only 147 pages Mr. Powys has compressed an amazing quantity of the mystery and the beauty and the strangeness of life and death; caught it fast in that curiously dry, crystalline style of his. 'Skin for Skin' is a slice of autobiography—the story of the author's fight against tuberculosis at Davos Platz and Arosa, with visits between to the Powys home and unforgettable pictures of Dorset and other West of England counties."

—Lit R

Booklist 22:114 D '25

Bookm 62:504 D '25 250w

"Stylists will find a peculiar method of writing here. Mr. Powys is eccentric in his use of words. He adheres to the Latin in words such as nimbus and tumulus. He uses uncommon words, for example, sudorific and azygous. He jumps from one incident to another, rarely completing his ideas. He mentions people as if the reader knows them, although they have not been heretofore mentioned. He writes beautifully in one paragraph and in the next he writes boss."

Boston Transcript p6 O 7 '25 450w

Cleveland p106 N '25

Dial 79:517 D '25 100w

"At times Mr. Powys writes superbly. He is always different from the run and ruck of authors, a personality in his prose as in his life. The book is not quite what sound Victorians would call 'a healthy book.' It is not quite morbid nor is it always decent. The author is guilty of unnecessary crudities and brutalities which at least indicate a lack of taste and seem to indicate even more—a lack of harmony with the world, an independence which approaches the braggadocio of indecency. One wishes the author a long life and happiness—the happiness of health and the satisfaction of creative effort. He is an artist always, but at present a sick artist."

+ — Ind 115:424 O 10 '25 200w

Reviewed by Sidney Schultz

Int Bk R p722 O '25 350w

"'Skin for Skin' is like an exotic fruit, acid, even bitter, and yet titillating to the palate. A thin book, which one may read pleasantly in an hour, and then read again, and put away to read again. It shares the same unusual qualities that make Mr. Powys' 'Black Laugh-ter' and 'Ebony and Ivory' remarkable books—books that burn with the vital flame of an extraordinary personality." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 S 12 '25 260w

"The new book is the most interesting of Mr. Powys' five only in part because it is the most richly written. Its chief importance derives for the moment from the fact that it seems to give a full, explicit motivation of the mood which distinguished its predecessors." Mark Van Doren

Nation 121:490 O 28 '25 920w

"In 'Skin for Skin' there are passages of remarkable writing; passages of terrifying splendor, of rare and distinguished beauty. There is little to be said in justification of such a book. . . . Lest he should have been swayed by prejudice on the first reading, the reviewer read the book a second time. His impression of distaste and revolt was, however, only deepened. He is not at all sure what literature is; but he is very sure that 'Skin for Skin' is what literature is not. It is mental and emotional exhibitionism—nothing more."

— N Y Times p6 S 20 '25 1200w

"Mr. Powys emerges for us out of a background reekingly British. He emerges by virtue of his talent for bringing into high and often into startling relief the universal interest in whatever theme he touches. He has, for a minor example, the habit of talking in print about the members of his own family, and the habit of dedicating his books to them. What with affection, derision, humor and cutting irony he has, within the limits of 'Skin for Skin' given a distinct flavor and a memorable word to both his parents and to nearly all his numerous brothers and sisters." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 O 18 '25 4550w

"In my opinion this is one of the minor literary achievements of the year. It is a very personal book, and for some tastes it may be too personal; but it is filled with personality that is vivid and undisguised, and it is written with sonorous splendor." L. Kronenberger

+ Sat R of Lit 2:291 N 14 '25 400w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 1 '25 580w

POWYS, THEODORE FRANCIS. Mr Tasker's gods. 280p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

"Except, apparently, for a few choice souls who suffer persecution meekly, Mr. Powys sees humanity as a swarm of degraded brutes. To the illustration of this vision he applies no mean powers of observation, connecting by a slight thread of narrative a series of sketches in which the nastiness of English village life is shown to be incompatible with the faintest movement of decency or tenderness. Brutalised children, pigs eating dead horses (and dead tramps on occasion), greedy and adulterous clergymen, mean-mouthed women,—what a contrast between the facts as they are and things as they ought to be or might be! The irony of this contrast is the essence of the cumulative method that Flaubert invented, and Mr. Powys is often quite the little Flaubert."—New Statesman

"The author writes guilelessly and with the calm, detached preciseness of an accuser declaring charges against the prisoner. His attitude is wisely chosen. Were he to write in a familiar style he would be suspected of maudlin sentimentality and melodrama for he is an idealist painting on a soiled canvas for contrast's sake, and his story is an intense one. With Poe-like genius, he offers a climax that has an obvious effect. The flippant reader will gulp hard once or twice. The gentle reader will probably, with a happy, unconscious psychology, start a brave whistling or singing. So much is inevitable." C. M. L.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 18 '25 450w

"For those fastidious connoisseurs, lovers of all the strange growths of certain gnarled tree-like minds, whose 'branched thoughts new-grown with pleasant pain. . . murmur in the wind,' Mr Tasker's Gods will be a veritable delight. For the book contains every one of those astringent bark-bitter juices that make up the curious sap of Mr Powys' inventions."

+ Dial 79:76 J1 '25 120w

"This is supposed to be stark realism. Actually, it is unnecessary, untrue, and rather stupid ugliness. Mr. Powys is badly in need of a change of scene and a change of heart and a ray of merry sunshine in his life."

— Ind 114:535 My 9 '25 130w

"Essentially this book is an ironical contribution to the study of the varieties of religious experience. It examines the ultimate gods of the men and women with whom Mr. Powys is preoccupied. Out of the profound play of the twin forces of moral indignation and mystical fervor have arisen Mr. Powys's five published volumes. 'Mr. Tasker's gods' is the finest of these." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 120:720 Je 24 '25 400w

"Mr. Powys is a very talented writer, but he has a bad fault: he is monotonous, which is to say that his scope is narrow. Interested chiefly in evil, he can see little else in life than that; and the evil which he sees is roughly of one kind; it resolves itself into bestiality. In 'Mr. Tasker's Gods' he only repeats what he has stated in his other books. That is something which, said once, might impress anybody; said four times, it must appear absurd." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 36:780 Mr 7 '25 550w

"Mr. Powys falls into line with other writers of the contented class whose writing is an overflow from their enjoyment of life. There are many ways of enjoying oneself, and among them is an obsession with the coarseness of one's fellow-creatures and one's own superior sensibility." J. Franklin

— New Statesman 24:570 F 21 '25 400w

"Peasant life in any country is undoubtedly brutal; but Powys draws such an indictment of the British peasant—and convicts him on the indictment—the like of which will not be found elsewhere outside of the Russian novelists."

— N Y Times p9 Mr 29 '25 700w

"You feel, when the book is finished, that its horror will never go and you find yourself relishing the horror in a more subtle way, possibly, than Mr. Tasker watching his pigs. You feel that you are enjoying this, not only with the characters but with the author. He, too, seems carried away by the illusion of bestiality in the worldly." Margery Latimer

— N Y Tribune p5 Mr 29 '25 780w

"It is a pity that Mr. Powys's view is so one-sided; for he has a considerable literary gift."

Sat R 139:219 F 28 '25 150w

Sat R of Lit 2:245 O 24 '25 180w

"Always, for full effect, even villainy must be described with a greater detachment (or a greater sympathy, if you will) than Mr. Powys displays: the issue must not be prejudged; we must be allowed to form our own opinion upon the actions of the characters. Now Mr. Powys writes with much analytical power; he can see hypocrisy and coarse behaviour where it would escape the observation of most of us. In other words, his novel is, in many details, illuminating. But he is committed by his insistence upon calling his characters wicked to a kind of subtle self-righteousness that throws us out of sympathy with him."

— Spec 134:333 F 28 '25 1000w

"His picture of life, though crammed with realistic detail shrewdly observed, bears in its general effect little relation to ordinary mortal existence. The book is an untiring but tiresome chronicle of all uncharitableness. The author's imagination moves in a dark underworld of hobgoblins and half-wits; and these creatures, which are scarcely more complex than the figures in a medieval allegory, he presents to us disguised as men and women."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p102 F 12 '25 320w

POWYS, THEODORE FRANCIS. Mockery Gap. 275p $2.50 Knopf [7s Chatto & W.]

"The scene of Mockery Gap is close by the rural setting of Mr. Powys's former book, Mr. Tasker's Gods, but nearer the seashore. Greed was the subject of the last book and stupid malice the subject of this. He has sympathy only for the weak, foolish ones, like the little old maid in Mockery Gap who is dying of cancer, and still waiting for the reply to a love-letter she wrote to a neighbour fifteen years before. The bearer of the letter is a mean lunatic, and all the other inmates of the seaside village depicted are as bad or worse. True, in a country village there is mischief-making, there are cruel and terrifying rumours, much folly and some suicides. In Mockery Gap there is nothing else."—Spec

"'Mockery Gap' is in every sense of the word extraordinary. It is bad, when it is bad, almost beyond censure; good, when it is good, past the commonplaces of praise; and throughout of a queer, almost eerie quality, which is hard to analyze or describe. Yet when we have admitted or discounted, according to our dispositions, the various impossibilities, the fact remains that 'Mockery Gap' is a beautiful and moving work." Edwin Muir

— + Nation and Ath 37:767 S 26 '25 550w

"Mr. Powys goes on his freakish way. He has found, as negotiators say, a formula. It made him, and will unmake him. His lecherous peasants; his obscene-minded children, his rural paradise of cruelty, insanity and spite, began by being terrible and have become funny. One cannot help regretting the declension, for of his real imaginative gifts there can be no doubt." P. C. Kennedy

— New Statesman 25:727 O 10 '25 60w

"'Mockery Gap' is a glimmering book, iridescent; and if it has something too much the sheen of the cellulosed product which used to be palmed off as silk, and too little the texture of the genuine article, the author should not be too harshly dealt with. He has at least striven to make up his deficiencies with a plenitude of wit—and that in itself is no small gain. But one cannot close without a word of warning to the author. T. F. Powys has about exhausted the literary and dramatic possibilities of the English peasant; that is, if he intends to adhere to his present methods and his present point of view. There is repetition, a deal of repetition, from his earlier stories in 'Mockery Gap.' Unless readers are to be alienated this cannot go much further." P. A. Hutchison

— + N Y Times p2 N 1 '25 1400w

"Never was there an author who hated his creatures more savagely. He cannot allow them a single virtue, but must be for ever snarling and sneering at them and cudgelling their faces out of all human likeness. If they were anything but puppets one's impulse would be to rush forward with sponge and bandages to administer first aid: as it is, one is vaguely

POWYS, THEODORE F.—Continued
 irritated and decidedly bored by this protracted display of temper." Gerald Bullett
 — Sat R 140:290 S 12 '25 1300w

"If the misfortune of Mrs. Moggs and Mrs. Topple and Mrs. Pattimore are related calmly and obliquely, they are also related sympathetically and almost tenderly. 'Mockery Gap' has the warmth of all fiction that is touched by high imagination and by deep sympathy, even though it has a cool irony that could not be surpassed by Mr. Norman Douglas himself. And it is written in a prose that is always delicate and clever and flexible."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:323 N 21 '25 280w

"It is a pity, seeing that he is a painstaking writer gifted with an agreeable clarity of vision and economy of style, that Mr. Powys's hatred of mankind so completely gets the better of him."

— Spec 135:560 O 3 '25 300w

"Whether because he is limited by his peculiar method, or because the substance of his communication was too quickly exhausted, Mr. Powys's art has not moved on from experiment to achievement. He has been content to present again and again the same picture, at once naïve and harsh, of rural depravity; and he is now apparently established in the habit of self-repetition."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p582 S 10 '25 400w

PRATT, CAROLINE, ed. Experimental practice in the City and country school. 302p $2.50 Dutton

371.3 Education of children. Schools. Experimental 24-25119

The City and country school was founded ten years ago in New York by Caroline Pratt. Known at first as the Play school it has been one of the pioneers among experimental schools. In the opening pages Miss Pratt sketches the results of her experience in the school. The greater part of the book is based on the actual record of a seven-year-old class, describing the work that developed from month to month during a year.

"The book is well worth reading." G. T. Buswell

+ El School J 25:397 Ja '25 600w

"Those who have participated in such experimental work as that pictured by Miss Pratt and Miss Wright will be the most understanding readers of this interesting report, which transports them immediately into the classroom with Nancy, Douglas, and the rest. From the standpoint of home economics the book appeals in two different ways. First, it is suggestive to those interested in the training of little children, and second, it offers to students and teachers of educational method a good picture of an experimental elementary school already firmly established." F. E. Winchell

+ J Home Econ 17:223 Ap '25 220w

"At one point in particular the book furnishes ground for misgiving. The argument that 'youth is particularly not to be trusted to pass judgment upon others'—as though there were any way of preventing it!—has a disquieting resemblance to the view that youth is incapable of reasoning until it has reached the period of adolescence. In spite of such criticism, however, there is much in this educational philosophy that is sound, and the disposition to embody theory in practice is bound to mean much for education in the future." B. H. Bode

+ — Nation 120:387 Ap 8 '25 850w

"Such copious note taking as these records involve is arduous work for the teachers, but it is from such raw material, vivid and concrete, that we can study education in its making, count our gains and make the necessary revision which will insure future progress." Agnes de Lima

New Repub 40:303 N 19 '24 680w

Wis Lib Bul 21:194 Jl '25

PRATT, JULIUS WILLIAM. Expansionists of 1812. 309p $2 Macmillan

973.5 United States—History—War of 1812.
 United States—Territorial expansion

25-8032

"The purposes of the present study have been: to examine the development in the Northwest of the demand for the conquest and annexation of Canada; to trace the rise in the South and Southwest of the plan to annex the Floridas and possibly Mexico; to discover the relations of these two proposals to each other and to the question of war with Great Britain; to determine the position of the executive branch of the United States government (especially of Madison and his Secretary of State, Monroe) toward the plans for expansion, north and south; and finally, to determine the causes for the failure, all along the line, of the expansionist hopes with which the war began."—Introd.

"The main thesis is not new and a considerable portion of the book is merely a representation of well-known views of statesmen and newspapers, with frequent references to the Annals of Congress and the American State Papers." K. C. Babcock

Am Hist R. 31:364 Ja '26 480w

"The book is not intended to be a comprehensive history of the War of 1812, and the Canadian campaigns are concisely traced. The military operations in the Floridas, on the other hand, and the questions which arose in connection with the American occupation, are treated with exceptional fulness. Much of the material has been drawn from manuscript sources, especially from those in government repositories at Washington."

N Y Tribune p11 My 17 '25 550w

"The book is a notably important addition to American history."

+ Outlook 140:158 My 27 '25 250w

Spring'd Republican p12 N 11 '25 440w

"Mr. Pratt's 'Expansionists of 1812' is another example of the carefully written monographs which America now produces in considerable numbers. We cannot remember meeting with any treatise at once so compact and so clear as Mr. Pratt's which so well shows how far the States of the Union were in 1812 from forming a truly national polity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p439 Jl 2 '25 950w

PRATT, VERNEUR EDMUND. Selling by mail; principles and practice. 428p il $4 McGraw

658.872 Mail-order business. Advertising 25-329

"Based on the author's personal experience. Treats of the development of a mail-order business from the standpoint of advertising." —Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:166 Mr '25

PRATZ, CLAIRE DE. French home cooking; ed. by Day Monroe. 295p $2.50 Dutton

641 Cookery, French 25-10560

"Its dishes are not the familiar ones of restaurants and its recipes are different from those French ones that are sometimes inserted in American cook books. They are distinctively and representatively French. For Mme. de Pratz has gathered them from all parts of France, from city homes and peasant kitchens, from Normandy and the region of the Loire, from the coast of Bretagne and the valleys of the French Alps, and so has made her collection a fused exhibit of a whole nation's cookery." —N Y Times

Booklist 22:107 D '25

Cleveland p119 D '25

"An excellent collection of genuine French recipes. A bad book for a hungry man to read, but a real contribution to the literature of the kitchen. A very sound work."
+ Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 100w

"Of the many available cook books, only a few are outstanding. In 'French Home Cooking' by Madame Claire de Pratz we have one that makes a real contribution to the field and is not merely a compilation of recipes found elsewhere. The recipes are not only decidedly unusual and interesting but most of them are simple and inexpensive enough to be prepared by the average American housewife in the average home without a maid." D. A. Kugel
+ J Home Econ 17:517 S '25 560w

"Women with kitchens, women with kitchenettes, women with chafing dishes will all find this cook book a useful and fascinating guide."
+ N Y Times p19 Jl 5 '25 280w
N Y Tribune p13 N 22 '25 40w

"In addition to the usual conservative and well-known French dishes there are included many original recipes, which were had as rare treasures from friends of the author. And around each recipe clings a certain authenticity, an orthodoxy, of perfection."
+ Sat R of Lit 2:114 S 5 '25 180w

PRESCOTT, FREDERICK CLARKE, and NELSON, JOHN H., eds. Prose and poetry of the revolution; the establishment of the nation, 1765-1789. 226p $1.50 Crowell
810.8 American literature—Collections
25-14486

"A companion volume to 'Colonial Prose and Poetry' (Trent and Wells) continuing early American literature down to the beginnings of the Republic. The momentous years 1765 to 1789 are here surveyed, with excerpts from both well-known and lesser known men of the time."
—Publisher's note

"The editors have culled a good deal of very sound, vigorous prose and a good deal of stilted verse from the works of American writers before, during, and after the Revolutionary War. The book is worth while as an anthology of the revolutionary spirit of that time and place."
+ Ind 115:192 Ag 15 '25 70w

Springf'd Republican p5a N 22 '25 180w

PRESCOTT, H. F. M. Unhurryng chase. 360p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Constable]
25-17149

"This story is inspired to a great extent by Francis Thompson's poem, 'The Hound of Heaven.' Yves when we first meet him is squire to the Count of Angouleme, and is on the eve of knighthood when Richard, Count of Poitou—afterwards Richard I. of England—invades the territory of Angouleme, and, among other places, takes and sacks the border fief of Rifaucon to which Yves is heir. Thenceforward to the end of the story Yves is obsessed by the idea of revenge on Richard, and seeking it, he sinks so low as to become one of the hated Routiers, then, either as free bandits or as mercenaries, harrying France. So much perhaps is explicable, but what is not so explicable is the utter baseness of the man he becomes. The suggestion is, of course, that Yves is fighting always against his better nature, flying from the Hound of Heaven."—New Statesman

"Aside from its psychological intent, it is an excellent period romance describing all classes from courtier to beggar, and moves with a swing. Certain episodes limit its use as a historical novel for young readers."
+ — Booklist 22:164 Ja '26

Boston Transcript p4 O 31 '25 1300w
Cleveland p108 N '25

"The language harks back with many a troth and wot and thee. But somehow the whole thing doesn't come off. The total effect is of more pains than pleasure in the writing."

— New Repub 44:313 N 11 '25 140w

"Taken simply as a 'period' romance of the last quarter of the twelfth century this story is full of colour and incident, and can be enjoyed for its bustling movement and vigorous description without troubling about its psychological content. But Mr. Prescott tries us, as he tries his hero, too far, and when repentance and submission come, we have already lost faith in the reality, not of the penitence, but of the penitent."

+ — New Statesman 25:114 My 9 '25 300w

"Nothing could be more chastely amusing."
N Y World p4m S 6 '25 30w

"A fine specimen of the historical novel in its modern form. His aim was high, for no more difficult period could be chosen for an exercise in what may be called intellectual treatment than the early Middle Ages. He does not always succeed in keeping the note tuned to medieval thought and motive, but on the whole his success is surprisingly great."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p278 Ap 2 '25 450w

PRESCOTT, WILLIAM HICKLING. Correspondence of William Hickling Prescott, 1833-1847; transcribed and ed. by Roger Wolcott. 691p $7.50 Houghton
B or 92 25-24032

The historian's letters, edited by his great-grandson, belong to the period of his greatest literary activity, the fourteen years during which his three most important works were written. The letters are concerned chiefly with the writings on which he was engaged and tell much about his methods of working and research, made most difficult by reason of his half-blindness.

"These letters are rich in their contribution to American literary history as well as in their revelation of many phases of the life and activities of the great historian." E. F. Edgett
+ Boston Transcript p4 D '5 '25 2700w

"The present compilation contains but an occasional brilliant patch scattered among many unilluminated passages, and is of interest less to the lay reader than to the prospective biographer of Prescott. Admirably appropriate for their original purpose, the majority of these letters yet contain nothing of enduring value. . . . Concerning the man Prescott they tell us about as little as is humanly possible. . . . When one remembers that Prescott made close friends of some of the foremost statesmen and writers of his country, one feels all the more keenly that the letters reflect but a stiff and pallid image of the man." Stanton Coblentz
N Y Times p26 Ja 10 '26 1200w
R of Rs 73:110 Ja '26 160w

"That the most delightful of American historians, a master of vivid and picturesque style, should also have been one of the duller correspondents on record is an interesting fact now amply demonstrated by over six hundred pages of evidence. . . . The fact that the letters of George Bancroft and others represented in the volume are equally uninteresting, would seem to indicate, however, that the causes must have been largely impersonal."

Sat R of Lit 2:483 Ja 9 '26 250w

FRESLAND, JOHN, pseud. (MRS GLADYS SKELTON). Dominion. 312p $2 Stokes [7s 6d P. Allan]
25-6315

This historical novel of South Africa centers about the powerful figure of Cecil Rhodes. At the time the story opens Rhodes was premier of Cape Colony. Political trouble in the Transvaal caused by racial antagonism incites him to progress with his plan to organize a federation of South African states under the British flag. Thru the treachery of a beautiful woman and the secret scheming of factions Rhodes becomes involved in the famous Jameson raid on Johannesburg which brings his political career to a swift close.

PRESLAND, JOHN, pseud.—Continued

"John Presland's story has done better than he can have known. He fires our imagination with the portrait he has drawn of the great Empire Builder in the most disastrous moment of his career." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 11 '25 1250w

"So far as giving the reader anything approaching a life-like picture of the Great Colossus, it presents merely a caricature. Dr. 'Jim' gets a squarer deal, but, as we have said, the outstanding character of the story is Evelyn Maitravers, who comes no nearer to being the real thing than most of the other celebrities in the book are like the originals they are copied from." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p3 My 23 '25 800w

"Though Mr. Presland's portrait is sympathetic, Rhodes does not emerge a glamorous giant. He seems to have been a heavy man, without humor, without profundity."

+ N Y Times p25 My 24 '25 800w

N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 100w

"Dominion" contains the essence of romance; filled with suspense, momentum and the influence of great figures, its stuff unfolds powerfully."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:650 Ap 4 '25 350w

"The author describes this book in the preface, as a historical novel, and states that he has not attempted to write history. It is not easy to accept fully either the description or the statement. Less happy than Æsop's bat, which successfully claimed to be a bird among birds and a beast among beasts, the author tries, and fails, to 'have it both ways.' The result is neither fiction nor history."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p157 Mr 5 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:199 J1 '25

PREVOST, ANTOINE FRANCOIS. History of Manon Lescaut and the Chevalier des Grieux; tr. with an introd. by George Dunning Gribble. (Broadway translations) 266p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

A translation by George Dunning Gribble of the Abbé Prevost's immortal story of the unhappy Chevalier des Grieux and his beautiful, loving, faithless Manon.

"How many of our young and vigorously protesting iconoclasts can draw so excellent a picture? How many, boldly asserting that facts and truth are synonymous, can draw so lasting a picture of a light woman?" S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 8 '25 580w

"Like 'La Princesse de Cleves,' this book is one of the landmarks in the history of romance-writing. In it Prevost reached the height of art, simplicity of language, direct and forcible style, sympathy and power, which put our judgment on one side, and leave us passionate admirers of Manon, compassionate fellow-sufferers with Des Grieux. Even after the lapse of two centuries the book retains its charm, which is not lost in the translation of Mr. Gribble."

+ Sat R 139:250 Mr 7 '25 150w

"The preface to this book is a little gem of wit and literary summary, and leads us to expect the excellent translation which follows."

+ Spec 135:372 S 5 '25 680w

"Mr. Gribble's translation is, we believe, as successful an attempt to preserve the elegance of Prevost's diction as was possible. Despite his modesty, he has retained much of the urbanity and courtesy of the original work. His version is not altogether Prevost, but his effort to copy the dramatic accent and rhythm of the language is extremely interesting."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p186 Mr 19 '25 1100w

PRICE, EDITH BALLINGER. My lady Lee
384p $2.50 Greenberg

25-18064

"Lee Kelton, born blind in a cabin in the Kentucky mountains, becomes a State charge and is later tentatively adopted by an artist—Anne Ramsey. Lee is returned to the State when she becomes a burden which circumstances in Anne's life do not permit her longer to bear. At a State school for the blind Lee discovers pain and something of her own helplessness. She shrinks in an atmosphere of necessary institutionalism. Whisked away once more, she must learn again naturalness; she must puzzle out the relation of beauty and ugliness; she must learn, with pain, that to see clearly one must first understand. The story carries her to wealthy New York and then to Bohemian New York. In the end, she returns to the 'white house' and to Anne—to build anew on stancher foundations."—Lit R

"Miss Price with deftness of touch produces a plastic portrait which serves to dispel the impression that all blind persons are surrounded by perpetual gloom. Perhaps the picture is not quite fair to those others who will never have the good fortune as did Lee of being adopted by one who instinctively understands how to draw pictures for their imagination. But after all, such criticism of a book which pretends to nothing more than fiction would be gratuitous."

+ Ind 115:220 Ag 22 '25 180w

"Lee's story is beautifully and revealingly handled. As a study in child psychology it is stimulating. The novel continues to be rich to the last page in spite of the handful of figurines in the second half and an unnecessary postlude summary of the main situations by the two principal characters at the close of the book. Folk don't do that. And this is a study in realities—and an acute one." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p2 Ag 22 '25 360w

"The novel has been carefully written, with understanding and apparently with full knowledge. It is sympathetic and appealing, but it is also more than a little monotonous. But one is grateful to the author for avoiding the conventional ending threatened by Robin Andrews's entrance into the tale."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 2 '25 400w

"The book seems to me to be decidedly above the average. It is repetitious and overburdened with the author's serious purpose of teaching us how to live with the blind. But it has most convincing handling of the psychology of the blind, one field of psychology which has not been overdone in fiction." A. M. Day

+ N Y Tribune p12 Ag 23 '25 350w

"The story is unusual for its delicate but masterly grasp of character values, its complete avoidance of the maudlin and sensational (considering the theme, no simple accomplishment), its command of unforced pathos, and a singularly able style."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:91 Ag 29 '25 220w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 6 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:232 O '25

PRICE, OLIVE M. Short plays from American history and literature; pref. by William M. Davidson. 245p $1.75; school ed $1.35 French, S.

812 Children's plays

25-7496

This group of plays for the classroom have been successfully used in the Pittsburgh schools for which they were originally written. They dramatize episodes that had been read or studied in literature or history classes. Contents: Lantern light; Evangeline; Hiawatha; Little Lady Dresden; Around the blue wigwag; White asters; Memories; Appendix.

Booklist 21:373 J1 '25

"The group of plays herein compiled are intended for the students of younger grades. If one is to find fault, and there is, to be frank, much room for such unkind commentary in this case, it should be against the crudeness of expression. The author admits to filling a supply on demand. Save for the plays on 'Hiawatha' and 'Evangeline,' which are mere dramatic editions of Longfellow's simply swinging verse, all the dramas display an undeniable hammering out. How much better they could have been will inevitably be the substance of one's regret, as he lays down the book." W. E. H.

— Boston Transcript p1 Je 20 '25 350w

"A fine group of seven plays in a dignified volume." W. McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:164 O '25 350w

"Miss Price claims no literary triumph for the sentimentalized dramatic episodes she presents from 'Evangeline,' from 'Hiawatha' and from the days of witchcraft and the Revolution. As examples to put in a school library these plays are satisfactory; they can even be pleasantly produced. But for educational value even a far better collection could not equal the creations that children, when proper suggestion has been made, will eagerly offer." J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p9 Ap 25 '25 150w

Outlook 139:118 Ja 21 '25 30w

St Louis p349 S '25

Theatre Arts Mo 9:564 Ag '25 150w

Wis Lib Bul 21:141 My '25

PRICE, WILLARD DE MILLE. Negro around the world. 75p 75c Doran

326 Negroes 25-9188

Mr Price summarizes briefly the condition of the black race in the different countries of the world, giving statistical information as to numbers, progress, education, etc.

"A concise, realistic treatment of the subject for the general reader."

+ Booklist 22:11 O '25

"The only trouble with Mr. Price's missionary zeal for the benighted black race is that his theory is too dogmatic and tintured with white snobism. How can we be so sure our white civilization is so superior to that of the blacks—at least as far as they are concerned?"

Sat R of Lit 1:900 Jl 11 '25 250w

PRICEMAN, JAMES, pseud. Chaos and creed. 270p $2.50 (7s 6d) Harper

230 Faith. Christianity 25-4634

Writing under a pseudonym to allow himself greater frankness in confession, the author explores his own belief, explains the reason for it and shows the steps by which he has arrived at his present faith. For him, "the clue to the universe is the personality of Jesus."

Booklist 21:359 Jl '25

"James Priceman's search for a personal religious belief makes a personal religious pilgrimage out of which he reached much solid ground and inspiration for himself, and which he offers to others in this well written, layman's exposition that commands respect and serves a fine purpose." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv Ap '25 250w

Boston Transcript p5 My 2 '25 200w

"The book seems a perfectly honest, candid, and well-thought out presentation of the author's private feelings and viewpoints. He would seem, however, to be singularly lacking in spiritual insight and ethical depth, and his book is of no value to those who already have the happiness to possess full and unquestioning faith in Jesus." W. P. H. K.

+ Cath World 122:132 O '25 450w

Cleveland p93 S '25

"It argues the case for a personal creed based on the Gospels with a restraint, an understanding, and a reasonableness which can hardly be admired too strongly. In addition, it is a book in which arguments are presented as brilliantly as they are modestly, in which a real talent for plain exposition of ideas is portrayed as a series of spiritual adventures."

+ Ind 114:480 Ap 25 '25 170w

"Of all the books upon religious subjects which have come to me in years this book by James Priceman, 'Chaos and Creed,' has made the deepest impression. The source of its power is mysterious, but it is undeniable, and what I have found in this book, through its influence on my thinking, has made me a better man." Philip Cabot

+ Ind 115:478 O 24 '25 1850w

"There is no questioning the sincerity behind it. The book is the product of an eloquent mystic who most passionately desires to believe and to make others believe." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p16 Ag 30 '25 850w

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes

N Y Tribune p16 My 3 '25 220w

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p2 Ag 9 '25 160w

Outlook 140:304 Je 24 '25 30w

St Louis p402 N '25

"In 'Chaos and a Creed' we are face to face with the clearest, the most sincere, and the most betraying statement which has yet appeared of the average man of today, in respect to man's need of a formal faith." Mary Austin

+ Sat R of Lit 1:726 My 2 '25 780w

"A clever popular work on theology. Nowhere is he technical or abstruse. Everywhere he is clear, open and convincing."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 Ap 21 '25 400w

"The book itself is a study of the background, personality, and deeds of Jesus done with such a freshness of approach and a kind of noble common sense that the book remains in mind as the most religious and inspiring testimony of faith that the whole controversy has produced. It is refreshing to have an acute and well-stocked intellect stand on its own feet and tell you why it believes that Jesus did miracles and rose from the dead. You may not believe with this man, but you respect him for both courage and conviction." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 54:500 Ag 1 '25 460w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p271 Ap 16 '25 220w

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 Jl '25

PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON. English comic characters. 276p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

827 Humor. Shakespeare, William—Characters. Dickens, Charles [25-10689]

"In a group of essays on 'English Comic Characters,' J. B. Priestley makes a survey of certain phases of literary humors from Bottom and Touchstone to Sam Weller and Micawber. Shakespeare is represented in four essays by single characters and groups from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'As You Like It,' 'Twelfth Night,' and the historical plays in which Falstaff figures. The others selected by Mr. Priestley all emerge from the pages of the novelists, from Fielding, Sterne, Jane Austen, Thomas Love Peacock and Dickens."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p6 O 10 '25 750w

Nation 121:549 N 11 '25 40w

"His last book seems to me a great advance upon his former one. It is, to begin with, a book and not a mere bundle of articles; it has a good subject and one which Mr. Priestley writes about with a zest and enjoyment which strike one as much more genuine than the high spirits of some of his previous essays. The thought and writing are never superficial or perfunctory; such intimate knowledge of writers like Shakespeare and Sterne and Dickens as he displays is by no means common; thought, knowledge, and a real enjoyment of English literature and English humour combine to give him nearly always something interesting to say." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 37:177 My 9 '25 1100w

PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON—Continued

"A whole philosophy of comedy exhales from this vivacious gathering of kindred spirits, portrayed by Mr. Priestley with irresistible enthusiasm. So vivid and cordial are his re-presentations, revealing so true and personal an understanding, that we are newly assured of the immortality of these personages." D. B. W.

+ New Repub 45:25 N 25 '25 180w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky
N Y Times p4 O 18 '25 2100w

"The richness and profuseness of the characters, the diversity of the worlds in which they move, together with Mr. Priestley's excursions in their wake, have gone to make a book almost too discursive to review in this brief space. It is essentially a book to be read. One further comment, however, should be made, and that on the unusually fine quality of the author's prose style." E. Davison

+ N Y Tribune p8 Ja 3 '26 820w

"We do not doubt that the public which has already learnt to appreciate Mr. Priestley's peculiar mingling of scholarship and discernment with broad human sympathies will seek, and find, some further taste of his quality here. But we miss that unifying vision, that large constructive criticism, which we expect from Mr. Priestley: and we hope he will give us another book about comedy."

+ Sat R 139:680 Je 20 '25 250w

"He is more appreciative than critical; he takes no great pains to erect standards for his own judgments, but writes in easy, competent style in praise of great writers. So he makes excellent casual reading."

+ Spec 134:726 My 2 '25 120w

"The main flashes of real illumination are those taken, with due acknowledgment, from Mr. Chesterton. Mr. Priestley draws freely, indeed, not only upon his chosen characters themselves, but upon the critics and commentators. But his quotations are always well made, and are spun together with the skill of a 'journal-essayist' who has a zest not only for literature but for life. The result is a book that makes good desultory reading, but can hardly claim to do more than that."

+ Spec 134:815 My 16 '25 420w

"A book as remarkable for its genial humanity as for its firm critical grasp."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p297 Ap 30 '25 1700w

PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON, ed. Essayists, past and present. (Fireside lib.) 319p $1.50 Dial press [5s Jenkins]

824 English essays

"This is a collection of essays from the days of Steele and Addison to our own time of Robert Lynd and Hilaire Belloc. Mr. Priestley has made his selection with an effort to stimulate taste by giving samples of the delectable dishes to be found at the English literary board. Eschewing more weighty material he has confined his choice to the 'personal essay,' keeping in mind De Quincy's distinction between Literature of Knowledge and Literature of Power. Among the contents are Swift's 'A Country Visit,' Lamb's 'Imperfect Sympathies,' Hazlitt's 'Merry England,' Thackeray's 'De Finibus,' Stevenson's 'The Lantern-Bearers,' and Chesterton's 'A Piece of Chalk.'"—Sat R of Lit

N Y Tribune p10 O 11 '25 150w

"It is a delightful and scholarly volume and serves to remind the reader of an easy and gentlemanly method of composition that is fast passing out of fashion."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:344 N 28 '25 160w

"Mr. Priestley's collection of essays is a little disappointing. Not that his book is not pleasant and companionable; it is. But it is full of the old familiar faces. We cannot renew these admirable acquaintances too often, but we hardly require a new book for the purpose."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p506 Jl 30 '25 1100w

PROCTOR, MARY. Evenings with the stars. 219p il $2.50 Harper

523.8 Stars 25-21712

The daughter of a great astronomer, Richard A. Proctor, the author learned from her father to know and love the stars. She identifies the constellations and their conspicuous stars, tells when and where to look for them in the sky and recounts their stories in history and legend. Illustrated with twenty-one charts drawn by the author and four plates from photographs.

"Each chapter is illustrated by a series of very clear and well-drawn original charts, by means of which the reader and student is safely piloted through the constellations. The book, too, is very well printed. Both for its astronomical and its literary excellence it can be highly recommended, and is deserving of a wide circulation. It is the work, too, of an expert." A. L. C.

+ Nature 115:115 Ja 24 '25 300w

"With the aid of her simple diagrams and lucid text the most earthbound layman should be able at the first sitting to achieve a seeing acquaintance with Ursa Major. This is an excellently planned manual."

+ N Y Tribune p9 N 1 '25 130w

"Much interesting information as to the origin of the constellation groups and the names of the bright stars adds greatly to the attractiveness of the book. It is a pity that a little more attention was not given to the proof reading as a complete list of errata would occupy a good deal of space."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p59 Ja 22 '25 200w

PROCTOR, MARY. Young folk's book of the heavens. 256p il $2 Little

520 Astronomy 25-26894

The book of the heavens for boys and girls presents an always interesting subject in a captivating manner. Legends of the heavenly bodies, incidents from lives of famous astronomers and personal anecdotes enliven the text which is further illustrated by numerous pictures, some of them in color.

"The book is written with the caution of the true scientist, and with the charm of the storyteller. It will be a delight to the boys and girls, and doubtless to the older folks also." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 22 '25 560w

"Boys and girls are looking for simple, clear-cut exposition of scientific truth and for that detailed first-hand information which makes an explorer a real person of absorbing interest. Miss Proctor's legends of sun, moon and stars, her little true stories of astronomers and the observatories where they work are so placed in the book as to make it difficult to keep a clear head while reading it."

+ N Y Tribune p6 Ag 16 '25 120w

PRODGERS, CECIL HERBERT. Adventures in Peru. 250p il $4 Dutton [12s 6d Lane]

918.5 Peru—Description and travel [25-9897]

The book describes in an easy chatty style the knockabout adventures of an English traveler in Peru and contains many observations on travel, sport and living in South America. There are chapters on sea serpents and snakes, on hunting pumas and guanacos, an account of a journey into the interior and a crossing of the High Andes, and a description of Juan Fernandez island, an old haunt of the buccaneers. The traveller's love of nature is everywhere apparent and there are many allusions to the flowers he found.

Reviewed by H. J. Massingham
Nation and Ath 36:sup386 D 6 '24 60w

"It is that absorbing stuff that you so seldom encounter ashore but not infrequently hear over a table in the corner of the smoking saloon at sea on one of the longer and less sophisticated voyages, where men with interesting and unconventional jobs swap experiences. One can almost hear the periodical click of the pipe knocked out on the heel, the call to the bar-steward for another tongue loosener, and the roar of the rising gale, between his curt, close-clipped sentences. There are a good many 'Prodgers' about the world, and their bluff address, resource, application and fair-dealing does more than home birds suspect to contribute to our high reputation out in the world. More of them should write books like this."

+ New Statesman 24:146 N 8 '24 220w

"It all hasn't the slightest importance, yet I certainly read it straight through, and it delighted me." K. A. Porter

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ap 12 '25 620w

Outlook 139:349 Mr 4 '25 200w

Sat R of Lit 1:716 Ap 25 '25 300w

"His second book, Adventures in Peru, moves on the same lines as the first, Adventures in Bolivia. There is still the feel of open air about it, still the same spirit of adventure and the joy of life. One feels that the writer was a man speaking to men, and not a phrase maker, with one eye on the public all the time. An interesting book, discursive and written in a style that one is apt to think perished with Captain Cook and Mungo Park, but that crops up now and again and shows that the old Elizabethan never dies amongst the English race." R. B. Cunninghamham Graham

+ Spec 133:461 O 4 '24 1950w

"Its charm and interest lies in the fact that you read it as you would read the local news in the daily paper, for the interest of the author is in the everyday occurrences, and he reports his observations as the editor of the society column does."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ap 13 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p699 N 6 '24 600w

PROUST, MARCEL. Guermantes way; tr. by C. K. Scott-Moncrieff. (Remembrance of things past, v 3-4) 2v 428;395p $6 Seltzer

25-9635

"The Guermantes Way" makes the third and fourth parts of "Remembrance of Things Past," of which "Swann's Way" was the first, and "Within a Budding Grove" the second part. As in the case of the first two parts, these volumes form a unit which can be read independently of the other parts.

Booklist 22:35 O '25

"Marcel Proust is perhaps the greatest psychological novelist of his generation. It was years before his own country discovered how great a writer they possessed and he has been even longer in coming to his own in other countries. When we realize the confused intricacies of his style we are not surprised that this is so. Even a cultivated Frenchman must find him hard reading. His lucidities are hidden. He does nothing at all to help you. If you would read him the effort must be yours. He does not descend even one step to meet you. He sits in a certain splendid isolation and demands that you come to him if you will. To him the matter is of an insignificance!" D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '25 1100w
Cleveland p82 Jl '25

"They show no inferiority to the volumes which have already appeared; they are on the whole, indeed, more steadily excellent." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:20 O 3 '25 760w

Reviewed by Edith Rickert

New Repub 44:supl S 30 '25 1700w

"Six volumes have appeared in English translation. They are all in the same key, quiet, rational and very leisurely, so that it is possible to open any volume at any page and continue from that point with a good deal of understanding. But to grasp the full intention of any chapter, it is necessary to have read all the preceding ones." Rose Lee

+ N Y Times p8 Jl 5 '25 3000w

"In many cases, his version of a delicately balanced, closely articulated sentence becomes a mere cumbrous string of words, the interrelation of the clauses no longer unmistakably clear, the rhythm and the memorable atmosphere of the original completely lost. Often, too, the translation, in simple passages, becomes mechanical, and words are rendered into the easiest English equivalents without regard to idiom." O. H. Dunbar

Sat R of Lit 1:871 Jl 4 '25 1000w

"There is little that is new to be said of 'The Guermantes Way,' and the translator must pay the penalty of having caused us all to exhaust our adjectives in his praise. And yet, as we go forward, the wonder grows; for, far from appearing to be bored, Mr. Moncrieff is this time, we are inclined to think, better than before. Here Proust is at his best, surest in touch, most subtle in description and analysis, and very rarely fatiguing us by losing himself in the later undertaking."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p580 S 10 '25 460w

PRUETTE, LORINE. Women and leisure; a study of social waste; with an introd. by Harry Elmer Barnes. 225p $3 Dutton

396 Woman—Employment. Woman—Social and moral questions 24-23660

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Reviewed by M. P. Redfield

Am J Soc 30:748 My '25 100w

"It reads less like a narrative than a loosely strung series of essays on the same general topic. Very likely intellectual honesty is the explanation. Where the connection is rough or uncertain for want of assured facts, the author refuses to smooth it over with a putty of emotional appeal. Long study has saved her from the folly of attempting to predict the whole course of revolution from the outset, or attempting too much at once." M. M. Knight

+ Am R 3:379 My '25 1100w

"It is not often that affairs peculiar to the life of the mass of ordinary women receive the sympathetic, penetrating, and scientific treatment accorded by Dr. Pruette to the problem of what use married women are to make of the free time left on their hands by the industrial revolution."

+ Ann Am Acad 118:182 Mr '25 680w

"There are many who will agree with Dr. Pruette; there are many—perhaps the majority—who will disagree; but both classes will find her book interesting and elevating reading."

+ Bookm 60:645 Ja '25 250w

"A book of some interest to educators but bearing no breath-taking message to a world quite bored with books about women." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p13 Mr 7 '25 520w

"This is a volume which is both illuminating and serviceable. Her discussion of woman's place in this century rests upon both psychological and cultural analysis, and the particular combination of these two makes her contribution of significance." M. M. Willey

+ Nation 120:663 Je 3 '25 520w

"It is very hard to be fair to this book. Stripped of its interesting irrelevancies, surely it does not much more than guess by a special sort of observation what can be just as well guessed by general observation. Dr. Pruette admits herself it is not science. Yet it has the merit of applying a reasonable, humble method to a highly controversial subject. In a limited way it supports an opinion by facts, and it certainly contains a great many facts which are intensely interesting whether or not they can be conscientiously used for a blanket opinion. It makes the question clear. That is the merit of the book, and yet, of course, the question is not clear, for it is on too many planes, and too closely tangled up in the whole cumbersome arrangement of society." Elizabeth Vincent

PRUETTE, LORINE—Continued

+ — New Repub 42:135 Mr 25 '25 850w

"By an interesting but somewhat doubtful use of the questionnaire method Miss Pruette comes to the conclusion that women want homes and husbands and at the same time a chance in industry." R. G. T.

Pol Sci Q 40:329 Je '25 120w

PRYDE, ANTHONY, pseud. (AGNES RUSSELL WEEKES). Spanish sunlight. 340p $2 Dodd

25-5461

The scene of the story is the island of Majorca where an English family, the Faneaux, lived the year round. The illegitimate children of an English father and a Spanish mother, they had inherited pride both of race and of family, but they lived without the pale and had nothing to do with the English colony at Palma. St Mildred, the eldest, was the family bread-winner, Emilia kept the home and Roden, the scapegoat younger brother, gave only intermittently of his presence and support. Clare Hautrive, son of a great Kentish land owner came to Spain in search of material for a book he was writing, saw the beautiful Emilia and after some adventures, which included her rescue from the villain of the piece, took her to England as his wife. The scene is richly colored thruout by the Spanish sunlight.

"It is delightfully, refreshingly original."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 400w

"Well written and interesting the book certainly is, but hardly convincing except in its carefully observed background."

+ — Ind 114:478 Ap 25 '25 100w

"Finished, altogether delightful story." Robert Crane

+ Lit R p12 Mr 21 '25 900w

"Barring some graceful but retarding description, the Anthony Pryde novel runs entertainingly and swiftly on its way. It holds no particular thrill of excitement. It reveals nothing of unusual import. But it does have between its covers a thoroughly pleasant little story, a deal of careful and at times quite memorable prose."

+ — N Y Times p9 My 24 '25 650w

"It not only would, but undoubtedly will make a highly successful moving picture; but it isn't earmarked 'scenario' as so many of the present-day novels of action are. It is clever, well bred, sprightly and just romantic enough."

+ N Y Tribune p14 Mr 15 '25 550w

"A melodramatic and occasionally lurid tale."

— N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 100w

Spec 134:644 Ap 18 '25 70w

"Pleasant and intensively wholesome reading."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p86 F 5 '25 330w

PULSFORD, HENRY A. Old Brig's cargo. 278p $2 Little

25-7275

Envid of all adventure loving boys must be the young hero of this book, one William Sloucum. His wildest dreams of daring are realized in his enforced voyage on the Wanderer, his father's beautiful ship, stolen from her moorings by a desperate Portuguese crew. Pirates and lost treasure, storm and shipwreck, danger and all but sudden death, these are some of the experiences that make the voyage memorable, and the homecoming sweet.

"Because of the most appealing sincerity and humor of the author, together with his photographic and fluent style, we may eagerly await a second story from his pen."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 25 '25 350w

Ind 114:423 Ap 11 '25 60w

"The plot is skillfully constructed. The author is not without a sense of humor, which aids considerably when some old salt quite oversteps the bounds of possibility in his tales of past perils of the deep. There's an interesting account of a trip from Norfolk to New Bedford by the first steamboats and railways. The book will be bought for the growing boy, but many a father will read it."

+ Lit R p5 J1 25 '25 200w

"Mr. Pulsford in 'Old Brig's Cargo' stretches the long arm of coincidence even beyond the generous limit usually allowed to writers of adventure stories. But his characters begin to take on individuality and the book carries a message of tolerance toward one's enemies which, without being priggish, strikes a much needed note in tales of daring." Ruth Sapin

+ — N Y Times p12 Je 21 '25 450w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

N Y Tribune p6 My 3 '25 150w

"There is more than a suggestion of Stevenson in this story. There is novelty in the introduction of a Quaker background, in the occasional humorous flashes and in the idealistic dedication of the salvaged treasure to the cause of human freedom. The audience to which the volume addresses itself will doubtless approve of these excellent innovations, and will certainly not object to the suggestion of Stevenson."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 19 '25 120w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 10w

"The plot is cleverly contrived without undue evasions of probabilities, the author's crisply marching style and keen imagination for detail never falter, while the final recovery and disposition of the treasure are handled with a neat little quirk of novelty."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:32 Ag 8 '25 120w

"A rattling good sea story."

+ Springfield Republican p5a Je 14 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:145 My '25

PULSIFER, HARRIE BRIDGMAN. Structural metallography; an illustrated text with laboratory directions for students. 210p il $5 Chemical pub.

669 Metallography 24-27730

"Purpose is to present the principles, scope, and significance of metallography. Includes a number of good photomicrographs, explains how these structures can be discovered and pictured, and tells something of their origin and the change in properties dependent upon them."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:429 J1 '25

PURDY, NINA SUTHERLAND. Wide-Open-Eye. 218p $1.50 Doubleday

25-8122

Her right name was Jane-Esther-Marie, but Auntie-Lou called her Robin, and the fairies just among themselves, called her Wide-Open-Eye because her eyes were always open for magic. This is the story of a little girl's life on the farm with her family of grown-ups, Tudor the dog, and Jimmy her little cousin. There are fairies and gypsies and real live robbers, maple sugar making, Christmas in the country, and plenty of make believe for good measure.

"The charm of Miss Purdy's little story lies in its true appeal to the imagination of a child. in a tale of familiar and everyday happenings."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 27 '25 200w

"It is a breezy, joyous book which children of six or seven or eight would particularly like." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p490 Je '25 120w

N Y Times p6 J1 19 '25 250w

"Robin will win the hearts of all small girls, who will find her just a little girl like themselves and will love her odd, old 'play pretend' grandfather and the hens and the cats and the dogs and the cows that lived on the farm with Wide-Open-Eye."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:92 Ag 29 '25 130w

PURINTON, HERBERT RONELLE, and PURINTON, CARL EVERETT. Literature of the New Testament. 186p $1.25 Scribner

225 Bible. New Testament—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 25-16681

"This is a popular introduction to the New Testament. In twenty-nine brief chapters the authors have dealt with all the New Testament books. The modern viewpoint prevails throughout. The reader is aided in understanding how we got our New Testament by the arrangement of the chapters under five main heads: the Oral Period, the Period of Paul, the Period of the Fall of Jerusalem, the Period of the Persecutions, and the Period of the Beginnings of Heresy."—Publisher's note

"While depicting the literature of the New Testament as a literary product and a part of the human history of that time, the authors centre it all around the person and mission of Jesus. The book is apparently intended for Sunday School use, as each chapter is followed by directions for study and discussion."

N Y Times p23 S 20 '25 350w

N Y Tribune p18 O 11 '25 100w

PUTNAM, DAVID BINNEY. David goes voyaging; with a solemn foreword by William Beebe. 132p il $1.75 Putnam

910 Voyages and travels, Juvenile 25-19287

David Binney Putnam is the twelve-year-old boy who spent three months in the Pacific with the Arcturus expedition directed by William Beebe. David promised his father he would write a "little story" about his trip and this book is the result. He describes with much gusto sea life on or near the equator; volcanoes, birds, pirates, sharks and lost treasure all come in for a share of his attention.

Booklist 22:123 D '25

"His modest little book, delightfully illustrated with line drawings by Isabel Cooper and excellent photographs, is a unique contribution to books for children from which parents and teachers may learn something to their advantage." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:178 O '25 320w

"It is the genuine book of a natural boy, evidently left pretty much as he wrote it, except for straightening out an occasional long word; and the things it tells are all worth telling. There are many good pictures from photographs, and the book is decorated throughout with clever pen-sketches. The only fault that boy and girl readers will find with David's book is that it comes to an end too soon." E. L. Shuman

+ Int Bk R p726 O '25 1500w

"His book is worthy of a sailor and a man of honor, and it will arouse in the breasts of many less fortunate 12-year-olds the bitterest envy." Dorothy Graffe

+ Nation 121:602 N 25 '25 100w

"Reading the book in galleys before I had seen the pictures or read William Beebe's thought-compelling foreword—before I had had the good fortune to meet David himself—I was impressed by the clarity of the text, the sound judgment registered in the selection of incident and observation and by the personality of the boy behind it. A very real American boy with a fun-loving nature as well as a keen interest in birds and fishes, volcanoes and desert islands looks out from the printed page no less surely than from his photographs." A. C. M.

+ N Y Tribune p6 S 27 '25 800w

N Y World p7m N 8 '25 50w

PUXLEY, W. LAVALLIN. Green islands in glittering seas. 316p il $3.50 Dodd [12s 6d Allen & U.]

919.6 South Sea islands

[25-10252]

This is an informal account of the author's wanderings among the islands of the South seas. It describes the flora and fauna of the lesser known islands, their primitive inhabitants and their curious customs. There are numerous illustrations from photographs.

Reviewed by F. O'Brien

Lit R p4 D 12 '25 220w

"This is one of the most interesting books that have been written about the Western Pacific, imparting a great deal of information in an easy, conversational manner, and sparing the reader the many tedious passages describing routine and personal details, that mark previous works of other writers in this vein."

+ New Statesman 24:662 Mr 14 '25 580w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p14 S 6 '25 780w

"Ethically, the book is miles above the tawdry stuff which often finds an audience, but it is equally far below the standard set by literary travel." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 11 '25 480w

"The author gives a detailed and often vivid description of the fairy-like jungles and lagoons, the primitive, savage peoples, the marvelous reefs and volcanoes, the beautiful or terrifying birds, insects and fish of this little visited part of the globe. If his method is undramatic, it is straightforward, patient and sincere." F. O'Brien

+ N Y World p3m Ag 23 '25 650w

"With singular ineptitude of phraseology and clichéd metaphor Mr. Puxley turns what might have been an engrossing account of a private voyage through a sector of Polynesia into a piece of heavy-going compilation. What a difference a sense of humor does make!—if it is lacking. Yet it is highly informative in its way."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:128 S 12 '25 160w

"Had no one ever written a book describing his wanderings in the lesser-known islands of the Pacific' Mr. Puxley's would be welcome enough; as it is, such books may be counted by the score, and most of them cover much of the same ground. It is also true that Mr. Puxley does not present these 'jottings' with any literary grace but a little more care would have enabled him at least to avoid many unnecessary repetitions, which irritate the reader."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p185 Mr 19 '25 1000w

PYESHKOFF, ALEXEI MAXIMOVICH. See Gorky, M., pseud.

PYM, THOMAS WENTWORTH. More psychology and the Christian life. 178p $1.60 Doran [4s Student Christian movement]

201 Religion—Psychology. Christian life [25-19443]

The book discusses the place of the imagination in religious experience, its use and misuse, the practice of auto-suggestion, instinct, religious emotion, etc.

Bookm 61:xxix Jl '25 80w

"The author's former work entitled 'Psychology and the Christian Life' attracted considerable attention as being a simple introduction to the study of what is nowadays called religious psychology. The present book is a sequel to it, and it is equally untechnical and practical. . . . The book is marked by sanity of judgment in its vindication of the reality of the super-natural, and the attentive reader will glean from it much of real importance for himself in the round of his working day as well as in his reflection on the deeper meaning of life."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p206 Mr 19 '25 120w

Q

QUEEN, STUART ALFRED, and MANN, DELBERT MARTIN. Social pathology. (Crowell's social science ser.) 690p $3.50 Crowell

360 Social problems. Social service 25-17441

Intended as a textbook for students of social science and social workers who have had introductory courses in biology, psychology, economics and sociology this book deals with certain difficult human situations met with in the family—divorce, desertion, non-support, illegitimacy; in industry—poverty, irregular work, child labor, fatigue and industrial accidents; in problems of disease and disablement. The book inquires into the nature and causes of these crises in the lives of individuals and groups. With each chapter projects for further study and a bibliography are provided.

"A well-written and richly informed treatment. It is a textbook in its way. But the volume appeals also to the general reader and is entitled to attention from all whose interests or sympathies turn them towards the problems of human betterment." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 31 '25 1000w

"The diagnosis made and the remedies suggested may be said to be exceptionally correct and in accord with sound ethics. The book is replete with interest. As usual, however, in modern books of sociology, religion remains in obscurity." P. H. B.

+ Cath World 122:423 D '25 620w

Educ R 70:283 D '25 600w

"An excellent textbook and source book for students of social conditions and for social workers as well. The bibliography is excellent."

+ Ind 115:424 O 10 '25 100w

"The book is more than a college text. It is a general source book of problems and materials in this field. It is interestingly written, and should appeal to all men and women who are interested, either personally or professionally, in such problems and materials. The Survey Book Review Department strongly recommends this book to all readers." J. K. H.

+ Survey 55:248 N 15 '25 240w

QUENNELL, MARJORIE, and QUENNELL, CHARLES HENRY BOURNE. Everyday life in Roman Britain. (Everyday life ser.) 255p il $2.50 Putnam [5s Batsford]

913.42 Great Britain—Antiquities, Roman. Great Britain—Civilization [25-16001]

This volume is the third in the Everyday life series of history for young people. It portrays in word and picture, the everyday life of the Romans in Britain, tracing manners and customs back to their origins in the home country.

Booklist 22:69 N '25

"Not so good as the admirable History of Everyday Things in England. But good, excellently illustrated and written so as to appeal to the imagination."

+ New Statesman 24:402 Ja 10 '25 120w

Outlook 141:203 O 7 '25 20w

"This is a very British book, designed for youngsters to whom Roman Britain is the underlying part of their own world. Yet in its working out it is so good an account of Roman life that American children will find it interesting and really valuable. The book is abundantly illustrated."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:92 Ag 29 '25 120w

"Their work is something different from a museum catalogue, for they depict the carpenter in his workshop, the cook in his kitchen. Historical imagination stands them in place of learning, and atones for occasionally superficial judgments, while the assistance which they acknowledge having received from

Mr. Reginald Smith is in itself a credential for accuracy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p767 N 20 '24 600w

QUICK, HERBERT. One man's life; an autobiography. 408p il $5 Bobbs

B or 92

25-21682

The author of the trilogy of Iowa novels which began with "Vandemark's folly" was himself a son of the prairie. His parents began their last trek westward by ox-teams in 1857 and he was born four years later. His story is the story of Iowa pioneers, their hardships and resourcefulness. Mr Quick's leisurely book filled with incident, reflection and personal philosophy is only a fragment, for its 400 pages or more carry him no further than his twenty-eighth year.

"Mr. Quick's firm, sure, yet dignified and leisurely touch goes admirably with his almost epic subject matter."

+ Booklist 22:159 Ja '26

"'One Man's Life' is a trifle disappointing, but it is nevertheless a fine, a very fine book. Leisurely, balanced, filled with entertaining incident and with personal evaluation, it will be one of the books most read in the autobiographical field this winter. My quarrel with the book is that he does not make the most of his material, as he did in the novels." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:207 O '25 480w

"Having in mind the wide vision of the man, his strong arm, the epic sweep with which he embraces into one canvas broad movements, one can not but feel that this autobiography, fragment as it is, is one of the most significant of his books. Herbert Quick always had the courage to be himself. Or rather with him it required no courage to be himself. Nothing better reveals the man in his simple steadfastness and passionate humanity than this fragment of autobiography." T. H. Dickinson

+ Int Bk R p787 N '25 2350w

Reviewed by P. H. Boynton

New Repub 45:225 Ja 13 '26 350w

"Outside of the portraits and narratives of his early years there is an importance in 'One Man's Life' that is more on the speculative side than on that of the pictorial. There is a meditative urge in this book, for Mr. Quick liked to take his time and ruminate about the scenes that molded him. It is through these moments of reasoning that we begin to see how much character and peculiarity of personality were developed by those pioneer days. There is an atmospheric unity in his book, a cumulative rendering of the development of a human being under extraordinarily interesting circumstances."

+ N Y Times p7 N 15 '25 900w

"I find 'One Man's Life' a very admirable book. A practiced writer who is such a good story-teller as Quick, and who has such a varied and witty intelligence as he had, could hardly fail to write a good autobiography. It has much wisdom in it, it is extremely readable." F. L. Mott

+ N Y Tribune p6 D 6 '25 1150w

"'One Man's Life' is delightful reading. In it are a whimsical humor, poetry, philosophy, beauty, pathos, all bound together so skillfully that the story never drags." Hugh Logan

+ N Y World p6m N 8 '25 680w

Outlook 141:487 N 25 '25 180w

R of Rs 72:663 D '25 150w

"Herbert Quick had recounted only the first twenty-nine years of his rich and varied life when Death—rarely more unkind to us—cut short the record. Even in its unfinished form, however, it stands as the only piece of recent American autobiography comparable with 'The Education of Henry Adams.' Written in a simple yet imaginative style, without a trace of affectation, it concerns far more than the modest time would indicate." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:293 N 14 '25 680w

QUICK, HERBERT. There came two women.
122p $1.25 Bobbs

812

25-430

"A naturalistic play in four acts. It is a tale that takes place in South Dakota and Iowa and involves the marital fortunes of Richard Evans, Government engineer, and Ruth Marbury, who loved each other legitimately but rather hastily. The conflict ensues as a result of their lost child, who finds itself in the protective arms of a woman who is a friend of both of them."—N Y World

"The plot is frankly melodramatic, and in prose would be, perhaps, more effective on the stage. As it is, the many tense moments are well handled, with an occasional fine lyrical note, but realism is lacking." L. S. K.
+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ja 31 '25 370w

"There is no touch of lightness in the play. It is a shade too somber for pleasant reading." C. M. M.

— Lit R p9 Mr 21 '25 160w

"The dialogue of the play is convincing and redolent of Mid-West soil; but the characters are occasionally melodramatic, and, under close observation, slightly synthetic. Nevertheless, the play has a vivid theme that displays an entirely new aspect of Herbert Quick."

+ — N Y World p7m F 8 '25 180w

"This four-act play is a curious and not altogether successful attempt to dramatize a realistic, conventional story in the terms of the stage and the language of blank verse. The situation should be dramatic; perhaps it might be if it were not so long drawn out and if the dialogue, which should be simple and realistic as the South Dakota characters that speak it, had not been carefully set down in iambic-pentameters."

— Sat R of Lit 1:935 J1 25 '25 120w

QUIGLEY, HUGH. Lombardy, Tyrol and the Trentino. 276p il $3.50 Dutton [8s 6d Methuen]

914.5 Lombardy. Tyrol

A book of travel sketches among the towns of northern Lombardy and the mountains of the Italian Tyrol. Supplying the background of history, art and literature, the author describes the hill towns of Bergamo and Brescia, the Val Camonica and its little villages, the castles of Southern Tyrol, Cadore, the land of Titian, and the wonderland of the Dolomites. A chapter is included on that soldier of the renaissance, Bartolomeo Colleoni. There are twelve illustrations and two maps.

"Twelve illustrations from photographs and a couple of originally drawn maps, help the author to success in his task of reproducing the varied charm of this delightful holiday ground."

+ New Statesman 25:322 Je 27 '25 320w

"His descriptions of scenery are sometimes little masterpieces in the art of painting with words, and should appeal to any reader who longs for a permanent record of the sensations once produced by past visions. But, what is rare with travellers who see with an artist's eye, the author has a good word also for the march of progress even when it comes in the smoke-grimed form of industrialism. . . . Everywhere he is a good travelling companion, enthusiastic, learned, with a lively sense of beauty and a quite sufficient sense of humour."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p456 J1 9 '25 280w

QUILLER-COUCH, SIR ARTHUR THOMAS (Q., pseud.). Charles Dickens and other Victorians. 240p $2.50 Putnam [10s 6d Cambridge Univ. press]

824 Dickens, Charles. Thackeray, William Makepeace. Authors, British 25-16513

Most of the papers here collected were lectures to students in Cambridge university where Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch is professor of English literature. The five essays on Dickens are an attempt to explain the secret of his amazing popularity. There are three essays on Thackeray, one each on Disraeli, Mrs Gaskell and Anthony Trollope and another discussing the Victorian background.

"In these days when we spend much time discussing current letters, a book such as Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch's is welcome for many reasons. In the first place it is, of course, well written. It contains a large measure of thoughtful comment on life as well as letters. Then, too, quite apart from the merits of the writing, the book is printed beautifully."

+ Bookm 72:74 S '25 350w

Cleveland p122 D '25

"There is something human about Q. if it is only the merry sarcasm with which he flings his repeated 'gentlemen' at his audience." R. Aldington

Natlon and Ath 37:18 Ap 4 '25 750w

"No one, reading these lectures, can deny that they are the overflowings of a richly-stored mind, from which the scribe can at any moment bring forth things new and old. There is, of course, much repetition: some things, whether true or not, are at any rate said three times; and there are several points made in these lectures which we remember in Shakespeare's Workmanship. But 'all this is portable, with other graces weighed'; and if there is a certain lack of precision also, we may recall the dictum of Burke, that 'it is the nature of all greatness not to be exact.'"

+ — New Statesman 25:46 Ap 25 '25 950w

Reviewed by H. B. Fuller

N Y Times p4 Ag 30 '25 2000w

"All but one of the essays were delivered as lectures at Cambridge to exceedingly modern un-Victorian youths, before whom the lecturer perhaps felt it necessary to vindicate himself from any charge of soft-heartedness. Thus, the rather long study of Dickens with which the volume opens reads strangely like an apology. The latter half of the volume, however, which treats on Disraeli, Mrs. Gaskell and Trollope moves with more freedom." E. S. Bates

+ — N Y Tribune p19 D 13 '25 580w

"The good Sir Arthur has given us another book, and a very fine book it is."

+ Outlook 141:290 O 21 '25 620w

Sat R 139:331 Mr 28 '25 720w

"Sir Arthur has little to say that is original. But, if he offers us commonplaces, they are, in the words in which he himself characterizes all true literature, 'commonplaces exquisitely turned to catch and hold new hearts.' All the chapters in his present volume, with the possible exception of that on Disraeli, maintain a finely-tempered excellence of wisdom and vivacity, and we are particularly grateful to 'Q' for his noble tribute to Mrs. Gaskell, whose fame as the author of Cranford has too long over-shadowed her other and equally great claims to attention."

+ Spec 134:640 Ap 18 '25 400w

"Sir Arthur is graciously informed and disarmingly cordial, but the ease and charm are not necessarily more individual than other qualities found in the writings of academic celebrities. But there is a human and humane freshness in his approach to a subject—attack would be too pungent or ponderous a word, suggestive either of caustic malice or desperate assiduity—which is quite his own and tempts the reader to condone any lapse from thoroughness on his part. But for the most part he says something new and suggestive as well as soundly appreciative or soundly critical."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 15 '25 420w

"He is happier in the company of his other instance of the new spirit in fiction, Mrs. Gaskell [than in the case of Disraeli]; and this lecture is the mellowest, the most gracious thing in the new book. The author has enjoyed himself amid the untidy, unequal greatness of great men with very obvious failings. All the man of letters in him, all the artist, which, as Professor, he is careful to subordinate to what seem to him greater needs than art, welcomes the literary rectitude and purity with which this too little valued woman created her world of reality."

QUILLER-COUCH, A. T.:—Continued

The Times [London] Lit Sup p219 Mr 26 '25 2000w

QUINBY, HENRY COLE. Richard Harding Davis; a bibliography. ltd ed 294p il $7 Dutton 012 Davis, Richard Harding—Bibliography 24-31613

"Whether or not it will be greatly demanded by book collectors, Mr. Quinby has made one of those bibliographies which is almost of the nature of creative work. It is not merely a compilation. It records, with many interesting illustrations Davis's college writings, his separately printed works (in two lists, alphabetical and chronological), his uniform editions, his plays, translations, moving pictures—all, in fact, of his adventurous literary career. It gives references to criticisms of his works and a list of the characters in his fiction."—Outlook

Boston Transcript p6 N 7 '25 500w

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Int Bk R p458 Je '25 1900w

"Doubtless the completest record that will ever be made of the literary activities of this likable war correspondent and story-teller. Considering the transitoriness of most if not all of Davis's work, one finds the late Mr. Quinby's thoroughness in reference and cross-reference even a little painful."

+ Nation 120:473 Ap 22 '25 50w

"Very readable, and also very accurate."

+ N Y Tribune p15 My 17 '25 480w

"Mr. Quinby has made one of those rare and fascinating books: a work of reference which contains a great deal of good reading."

+ Outlook 139:232 F 11 '25 250w

QUINN, VERNON. Beautiful Canada. 382p il 2 $4 Stokes

917.1 Canada—Description and travel 25-20062

Bits of history and Indian legend enliven these pages, which describe the beauties of Canadian scenery, mountains, lakes, and plains, from Nova Scotia to Vancouver Island. The concluding chapters are on Canadian national parks and scenic roads for motorists. Sixty-five illustrations from photographs.

Booklist 22:157 Ja '26

"No one who reads it can possibly resist the temptation to cross the invisible frontier and see for himself the noble land that lies beyond."

+ Bookm 62:616 Ja '26 220w

"Here and there, much as we would like to know more of places and scenery, we realize the necessity of saving space for more essential descriptions. And when the end had been reached we felt as if the author's plan of presenting a general knowledge of Canada, with the hope of stimulating further inquiry, had been well fulfilled."

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 26 '25 220w
N Y Times p7 D 6 '25 70w

R

RAINE, WILLIAM MACLEOD. Roads of doubt. 327p $2 Doubleday

25-8117

Jarvis Elliott attempts a perilous piece of engineering work in trying to build a railroad thru Gateway Pass in the Rockies. His selfwilled daughter Joyce, an extreme expression of imperious youth, is in love with her father's business rival, Winthrop Ordway. An accident to her father brings Joyce's carefree life to a sudden halt, and in the consequent upheaval of business interests Ordway's dishonest methods come to light. Joyce, seeing the serious condition of affairs, courageously takes hold, but the great work would never have been achieved had it not been for the genius and tremendous energy of Bob Hallack, Elliott's superintendent, to whom the impulsive girl transfers her affections.

"The scene happens to be the 'Rockies.' It might just as well have been laid anywhere else, save that Mr. Raine has a loving eye for things 'western' and sometimes 'south-western.' But equally and perhaps more to his advantage is a terse and thrilling style that carries a tale along with little lost headway, with little wayside adornment, but a great deal of action."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 220w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Int Bk R p656 S '25 280w

"A western railroad story that grades a bit higher than the average. 'Roads of Doubt' is written by the usual formula. It is the writing that makes the difference. The characters have some snap to them. They seem to be interested in what they are doing. There is no desperate adventure along these 'Roads of Doubt,' but there are a few ambushes, a gang or so of gunmen, a couple of fights and a very engaging girl or so." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p5 S 5 '25 180w

"The simple test by which stories of this kind are to be judged should preclude all qualifications of merit except an affirmative response to the vital demand: 'Is it interesting?' We are confident that Mr. Raine's novel fulfils that essential in a measure as generous as that which his numerous following have found in the twenty odd preceding volumes from his pen."

Sat R of Lit 1:731 My 2 '25 100w

"There is plenty of action, with the tale terminating according to the wishes of the reader."

Springfd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p546 Ag 20 '25 120w

RAINE, WILLIAM MACLEOD. Troubled waters. 309p $2 Doubleday 25-17151

The wild West once more. Ruth Trovillion is the girl from the East, Rowan McCoy is her super cowboy husband, Joe Tait is the villain, and a clash between the sheep and cattle interests on the Fryng-pan is the occasion for the gun play. Tait and another sheepman are killed. When McCoy goes to jail with his friends rather than tell what he knows, Ruth's faith in his integrity wavers. Later a convict makes a confession that sets the innocent free and Ruth and Rowan start on a belated honeymoon in the hills.

"Despite the fact that William MacLeod Raine already has a long list of exciting Western tales to his credit, he is still possessed of fertile enough imagination to produce another original story."

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 12 '25 320w
N Y Tribune p9 O 18 '25 140w

RAMSAY, ROBERT E. Constructive merchandising; effective plans for increasing sales. 718p il $6 (21s) Appleton 658.8 Sales management 25-4192

"A very complete manual of merchandizing plans and practices. It has been built almost entirely on experience. All the problems that may confront every type of distributor are discussed and, with very few exceptions, the author has been able to find some concern that successfully solved each particular problem and was willing to outline their methods in such a way that others in widely different fields might benefit by their experience. Because of this very strong flavor of successful experience backing up the author's statements, the book is thoroughly practical. Illustrations are used profusely to clarify and amplify verbal statements concerning methods or mechanisms."—Management and Adm

Boston Transcript p4 F 21 '25 700w

"Not the least valuable part of the book is an exceptionally comprehensive index. To distributors of every type this book should be a valuable text and reference book on merchandizing."

+ Management and Adm 9:288 Mr '25 130w

RANDELL, WILFRID L. Michael Faraday (1791-1867). 187p $1.75 Small [4s 6d Parsons]

B or 92 Faraday, Michael 25-13886

"The scientific aspect cannot, of course, be omitted—it is the reason for Faraday's fame as a pioneer; but my immediate aim has been to present the man himself, and in endeavoring to do this I have included many quotations from letters and papers which while not of vital importance, serve to throw some additional light upon his charming personality."—Preface

"If we have in Faraday the first essential for interest-biography, we have in his present biographer the second. Mr. Randall writes with a loving hand. He is able to touch Faraday with the warmth of life because he so ardently wishes to make him live for the reader. His book is well arranged and his quotations from letters and journals, of necessity short, are well chosen." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p9 My 2 '25 600w

"He scarcely does justice to Faraday as a letter-writer. He quotes his early letters to a friend named Abbott, and complains of them as ponderous stuff. But this correspondence was definitely for the purpose of discussing set subjects of serious interest. In other respects he deals with the facts of Faraday's life adequately, places him against the background of the times, and explains his discoveries in non-technical language."

+ New Statesman 34:56 O 18 '24 580w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:24 Ap '25

"Carefully, agreeably and competently written." W: MacDonald

+ N Y Tribune p12 My 3 '25 120w

RANKIN, ENID SCOTT. Dominion of sea and air. 339p $2.50 Century

341 International law and relations. Communication and traffic 25-3098

The author maintains that our present conception of international law is only a theory with no principle to give it life and enable it to withstand the pressure of national expediency and self-interest. She proposes a way out of our international anarchy which involves a new principle. It is that the seas and air, being a common necessity to all nations, must be made the basis of all international intercourse and law. She believes that by no other means can disarmament be brought about.

"One gets the impression that she goes to secondary more often than to primary sources for her material. While her proposal seems to have real merit she surrounds it with a certain verbal mysticism which gives it an air of unreality. This sense of detachment from the practical is increased by her apparent lack of concern for a method by which her plan may be put into operation." M. E. P.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 28 '25 500w

Cleveland p94 S '25

"The book is well written and the ideas developed in it are reasonable, logical and sound. She writes on world politics intelligently and suggestively, and her book will be read with approval by internationally-minded people."

+ Ind 114:219 F 21 '25 130w

"Any attempt to frame the 'restrictions, regulations and enforcement' of which she speaks would be difficult in a high degree, and it may be that it would be found impracticable. On the other hand, it might be found practicable if a determined and widespread attempt were made under leaders who were not only competent but sincere. Certainly it is worth thinking about; certainly thinking about it would help to clear up the fog now filling the minds of the people concerning the facts of international relations." Rear Admiral Fiske

N Y Tribune p16 Ap 12 '25 600w

"Mrs. Rankin's contribution to the science of peace is weak on the practical side; she is guilty of a good deal of irrelevancy, repetition, looseness or argument and rhetoric. But she does not, like most writers on such themes, altogether flap her luminous wings in the void in vain. She has made an intelligent study which the pundits cannot afford to ignore."

+ Outlook 141:165 S 30 '25 200w

"The author writes with a certain masculine vigor and terseness. She is afraid neither of dogmatization nor of prophecy. She has done her job well enough to entitle her to the rank of 'publicist.' It is unfortunate that she fails to realize that there are many roads to peace." Hamilton Holt

+ Sat R of Lit 2:68 Ag 22 '25 420w

Wis Lib Bul 21:228 O '25

RASCOE, BURTON. Theodore Dreiser. (Modern American writers) 91p $1 McBride

B or 92 Dreiser, Theodore 25-13761

This volume is the third in a series of monographs on modern American writers. It contains a critical study of Dreiser's writings, an appreciation of his position in American letters and a brief sketch of his life and literary background.

Booklist 22:30 O '25

"Who knows but that the heat of this little booklet—a not unwelcome phenomenon in a none too exciting field—may bring more light to bear upon a vexed problem of our letters? Readers who may condemn the treatise on the grounds of mere politeness should still find measurable entertainment in the author's reflections on 'Mr. Brownell's kittenish wit,' 'Mr. Sherman's oily periods' and so on."

Bookm 62:218 O '25 220w

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 22 '25 280w
Cleveland p106 N '25

"Mr. Rascoe has written a downright, hard-hitting book, striking out lustily for an author who is just beginning to come into his own."

Ind 115:247 Ag 29 '25 300w

"The best feature of the study is its stimulating quality. It tells a good deal about its subject, and at the same time lures the reader on to finding out more for himself. A thoroughly readable sketch, with a good list of articles and books on Dreiser in a final chapter, and a bibliography." H. B.

+ Lit R p5 Ag 15 '25 200w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan
Nation 121:361 S 30 '25 420w

"An ardent, rather rough-and-tumble defense of Theodore Dreiser against certain staid supporters of social decorum. I could wish for Mr. Rascoe, with all my admiration of his energy, a cultivation of the amenities; and I would add that one who is so admirably and energetically self-expressive might well avoid a certain top-heavy employment of quotation, Dreiserian and other." H: B. Fuller

New Repub 44:104 S 16 '25 280w

RASCOE, BURTON—Continued

"Burton Rascoe's essay on Theodore Dreiser could fittingly be entitled 'Dreiser and Stuart P. Sherman'; for, in the rare passages in which the author is not delivering lyrical panegyrics on the subject of Dreiser, he is engaged in a bitter and somewhat indecorous polemic against Professor Sherman." J: Carter

— N Y Times p5 Ag 9 '25 1800w

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p4 Ag 23 '25 520w

Outlook 141:168 S 30 '25 60w

RATH, E. J., pseud. Brains of the family; a side-splitting domestic comedy. 284p $2 Watt, G. Howard

25-4767

"Armed with Dr. Pagan's ten little books on self improvement, dyspeptic Mr. Warren, over-plump Mrs. Warren, their children and the servants determine to spend a profitable and meditative vacation on a lonely island. Their routine is disturbed by the advent of Jerry, a resourceful young man who finds that 'the whole island is nothing but a riot of memory stunts, character analysis, reformed eating and the science of making people like you' and proceeds to remedy matters."—Wis Lib Bul

"There is a certain amount of amusement to be found in the dialogue and in the situations in the Warren family, but it is far from 'side-splitting'—even when the two lovers of the story decide to try cave man methods in winning their lady loves. It is very mild entertainment, and harmless."

— + Boston Transcript p6 Jl 25 '25 200w
Cleveland p83 Jl '25

"Clearly the book is of no great moment. Equally clearly 'The Brains of the Family' will provide a ready means for expediting many an otherwise tedious moment."

— + N Y Times p7 Ag 2 '25 420w
N Y Tribune p14 S 20 '25 120w

"Diet, memory, will power, efficiency, winsomeness, physiognomy, are some of the fads under experiment, and the result is highly entertaining to the reader."

+ Springfield Republican p14 N 13 '25 160w

RAYMOND, ALLEN. Heart of Salome. 320p $2 Small [7s 6d Duckworth]

25-16485

"We meet Sir Humphrey Leinster, one of the richest men on earth, with a house in the shadow of Downing-street and another on the Champs Elysées, not to speak of many others elsewhere. We meet also 'The Mayfield,' a Franco-American, the most beautiful woman in the world and apparently an adventuress. The story is chiefly concerned with the fortunes of Monte Carroll, who has been suspected of cheating at cards, but now under another name is countering Leinster's schemes to get a complete control of oil production. Piqued by Monte's indifference, Mrs. Mayfield betrays his identity to Leinster, but, of course, only one end is possible."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"It is an eminently readable story."

Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 350w

"'The Heart of Salome' is a slightly over-written thriller of international intrigue and a proof that a beautiful woman may still be pure and good, however adverse circumstances may appear."

— N Y Times p6 Ag 16 '25 820w

"It is probable that Mr. Raymond's book was written with no intention of 'making comical,' yet we are in his debt for many a hearty chuckle. We are sorry we laughed, but there are certain types of bad writing which always affect us that way."

— Sat R of Lit 2:164 S 26 '25 100w

"Unreal and conventional tale."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p204 Mr 19 '25 130w

RAYMOND, MRS DORA (NEILL). Political career of Lord Byron. 363p $3 Holt

B or 92 Byron, George Gordon No81 Byron, 6th baron 24-10051

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Limiting herself rather strictly to his political career, she has touched only incidentally upon his amatory adventures, his travels, and his poetry. This volume, nevertheless, presents perhaps as accurate and as clearly drawn a picture of Byron's complex personality as can be found in any of the longer biographies." C. M. Fuess

+ Am Hist R 30:391 Ja '25 460w

"Miss Raymond has written an interesting book on Byron's political career from the conventional point of view of the admiring biographer. . . but she takes his exalted position and virtue on trust and fails to understand his real social and personal situation." Edmund Wilson

+ — Dial 78:511 Je '25 580w

"It is a book of merit and the fruit of inquiry, and is for us all the more interesting because proving the endurance and continued vitality of the great Byronic tradition." Augustine Birrell

+ New Statesman 25:553 Ag 29 '25 850w

"The few references to Byron's married life are not well-informed. Dr. Raymond is careful to mention her authorities in her notes, but through lack of page headings these notes are very difficult to find."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p497 Jl 23 '25 220w

RAYMOND, EDWARD THOMPSON. Disraeli: alien patriot. 346p il $4 Doran [18s Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Beaconsfield, Benjamin Disraeli, 1st earl of 25-24286

Mr Raymond's interpretation of Disraeli, the man, the author, the statesman differs from other accounts of this "unquestionable genius of his age" in its point of view. The writer consistently and persistently sees Disraeli as a Jew, a man of alien birth who came to love the land of his adoption, but who remained throughout life a Jew in thought, in feeling and in deed. In support of this theory Mr Raymond points to the self-portraiture in Disraeli's novels.

"Mr. Raymond's book suffers from some serious faults. It has a certain flashy brilliance and superficiality which, I suppose, will appeal to a good many people. Mr. Raymond does not possess that respect for historical truth without which the work of a biographer becomes either mere foolery or propaganda." Leonard Woolf

— Nation and Ath 38:292 N 21 '25 560w

"In 'Disraeli: Alien Patriot,' Mr. Raymond has done history a service, and has cast a novel light on one of the great figures which made history." J: Carter

+ N Y Times p7 Ja 3 '26 1900w

N Y World p7m D 13 '25 60w

"On the whole it is difficult to see how Mr. Raymond could have written a better book on such a subject, at such a time as this." W. C. Abbott

+ Sat R of Lit 2:461 Ja 2 '26 900w

"For all its occasional flimsiness this interpretation of Disraeli is a striking work, particularly in its earlier chapters. It honourably asserts the greatness of a great man, and its style is easy and distinguished."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p729 N 5 '25 1200w

RAYMOND, WILLIAM GALT. Public and its utilities. 339p $3.50 Wiley

380 Public utilities

25-7902

"After a short Introduction and a chapter on The Creation and Earnings of the Utilities, there comes a five-part chapter on Operating Expenses—for water, gas, electric light and power, heating and refrigeration and miscellaneous utilities. Depreciation also occupies five chapters, after which there is a chapter on Emergency Fund, Interest and Sinking Fund, and one on the important subject of Taxes. Next there is a general chapter on rate systems and another on forms of rates; then separate chapters on various kinds of utilities—gas, water, etc. There are four chapters on utility companies, franchises, public control of privately owned utilities and rate control. This brings the author to value and valuations, on which there is a general chapter, and chapters on Going Value, Depreciation of Valuation and Appreciation, and Fair Return. The concluding chapter is on Engineer's methods of Inventorying and Valuing Public Utility Property."—Eng N

"Looking at the book from the point of view of the teacher, we must say that, although much useful information is presented in this work, the subject-matter as a whole is not presented in a way to afford the student an organic theory of regulation." M. G. Glaeser

+ Ann Am Acad 123:227 Ja '26 700w

"A puzzling thing about the book is its failure to mention earlier ones in the same field, either in the text, in footnotes, or, what might at the least be expected for a variety of reasons, in a bibliography. The failings mentioned—if failings they be—are of minor importance. The book as a whole promises to be practically useful and unusually provocative of thought and discussion."

+ Eng N 95:109 JI 16 '25 800w

"As a whole, this volume is a constructive addition to the literature on the subject, particularly because it sets forth the principles of public utility control in a sufficiently simple manner to enable them to be readily understood."

+ Railway Age 79:789 O 31 '25 920w

REAWAKENING of the Orient, and other addresses, by Sir Valentine Chirol, Yusuke Tsurumi, and Sir James Arthur Salter. (Inst. of politics publications. Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 176p $2 Yale univ. press

950 Eastern question. European war, 1914-1918—Economic aspects. India—History. Japan—Politics and government 25-10403

Contents: Reawakening of the Orient; The great Indian experiment, by Sir Valentine Chirol; The liberal movement in Japan; The origin and growth of the labor movement in Japan, by Yusuke Tsurumi; Economic recovery in the world; Economic conflicts as the causes of war, by Sir James Arthur Salter; Index.

Am Pol Sci R 19:861 N '25 100w

Outlook 140:342 JI 1 '25 10w

"The connection of these articles written by three different authors is rather loose, except for the fact that they treat all of the unsettled conditions of the world after the Great War, but this does not make them less interesting nor attractive. On the contrary the variety stimulates the attention of the reader." A. D. Kalmykow

+ Sat R of Lit 2:108 S 5 '25 700w

RECORD, SAMUEL JAMES, and MELL, CLAY-² TON DISSINGER. Timbers of tropical America. (Amasa Stone Mather memorial publication fund) 610p il $10 Yale univ. press [45s Milford]

582 Timber. Trees. Forests and forestry 24-29653

"Reviews briefly the forest resources of the various countries, but is devoted mainly to a systematic study of the species and the characteristics of the woods produced."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:601 D '25

RECTOR, THOMAS M. Scientific preservation of food. 213p $2 Wiley [10s Chapman & H.]

664.8 Food preservation 25-717

"This book of approximately two hundred pages is divided into sixteen chapters. The first two chapters contain a description of the various classes of foods. Four chapters are devoted to the causes of food spoilage due, respectively, to animals, insects and microorganisms; to enzymes; to physical and chemical decompositions; and to contamination with foreign substances such as metals. About one hundred pages are given to a discussion of food preservation methods and processes—simple storage, refrigeration, dehydration, chemical preservation, preservation by fermentation, hermetic sealing, heat sterilization and pasteurization, combination preservation methods, food containers, and practical application of food preserving principles."—Ind & Eng Chem

"Outside of the suggested use of inert gases such as nitrogen or carbon dioxide to replace air in conjunction with hermetic sealing to preserve products of the nature of dried fruits, dried vegetables, dried milk and dried eggs, it cannot be said that anything really new is presented, but nevertheless the book has real merit and value by reason of the fact that the subject is important and the treatment is sound. The printing and binding are well done." H. W. Redfield

+ Am J Pub Health 15:552 Je '25 280w

"The book is readable and interesting. The principles involved in the preservation of food are presented in a logical and systematic manner." A. L. Sullivan

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:766 JI '25 160w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:428 JI '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p159 Mr 5 '25 80w

REDFIELD, BESSIE G. Aid to rhyme. 533p $2 Putnam

426 Rime. English language—Rime 25-12532

"The fruit of ten years of labor, according to the publishers' foreword. The work is made on a practical plan which renders it easy to consult, the divisions being on the dominant vowel sound in the rhyme. The first column of the page is filled with groups of rhyming words of similar form, the second column refers to the same rhyme elsewhere in somewhat dissimilar forms, while the righthand column carries the rhyming syllable. This arrangement of groups and endings makes the book very convenient for consultation. There are also warning stars that indicate different pronunciations."—N Y Times

"For ten years Miss Redfield has labored to put together this little volume. It is one of the most compact and at the same time useful rhyming compendiums ever issued."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 8 '25 80w

"Miss Redfield has done a thorough job. The book should have a great sale."

+ Ind 115:110 JI 25 '25 100w

"In the main the rhymings bespeak good taste and a finely tuned ear on the part of the author, but now and then one comes across a word included in a group that harmonizes with the others not at all. But such lapses are unusual, and the book can be commended as an efficient first aid to the distracted poet. Unique and helpful is the introduction of a blank page opposite each printed page for the poet's use in noting down his own additions, comments and suggestions"

+ N Y Times p16 Ag 23 '25 250w

"Simplicity, clarity, comparative brevity and skilled method are virtues of Miss Redfield's

REDFIELD, BESSIE G.—Continued

stout volume which should win the friendship of all those who are inclined toward versification."

+ N Y Tribune p12 Ag 2 '25 150w

"A really practical 'Aid to Rhyme.'"

+ Springfield Republican p7a Ag 30 '25 80w

REED, AMY LOUISE. Background of Gray's Elegy; a study in the taste for melancholy poetry, 1700-1751. (Columbia university studies in English and comparative literature) 270p $2.50 Columbia univ. press [12s 6d Milford] 821 Gray, Thomas. English poetry. Melancholy 24-28135

"These pages endeavor to explain the furor created by Gray's Elegy in 1751 on the theory that the poem came before its public not as a presentation of novel thought but as the perfectly adequate expression of a widespread popular feeling, the 'melancholy' of the first half of the eighteenth century. . . It was a sentiment widely diffused among everyday, average people, and had been repeatedly the subject of poetical effusions by authors who had found the largest popular audience. Against such a background of melancholy literature, Gray's skilful synthesis of the mood and thought of the moment stood out with peculiar effectiveness, and was therefore destined both to find instant popularity and to become a new center of influence radiating melancholy lyricism throughout the second half of the century."—Chapter I

"The strength of the work lies in its painstaking accumulation of fact; its weakness lies in the author's reluctance to interpret fact—to come to philosophic conclusions. The reader is reminded at times of a student's note-book of summaries. However, this book is an invaluable aid to the study of the period." H. H. Clark

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:416 D 27 '24 450w

Spec 134:294 F 21 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p26 Ja 8 '25 270w

REED, CHARLES BERT. Four way lodge. 238p il $4 Covici, P.

917.7 Superior, Lake. Canada—Description and travel. Indians of North America—Canada 25-2773

"The book is concerned with stories of travel on the northern shore of Lake Superior, and with Indian legends as revealed to the travelers by two notable Ojibwa guides. Round the younger Indian a considerable story is woven; a story which opens with his inheritance of a hunting ground and a bitter feud from a dead uncle, and which closes with the death of his enemy. We are given many accounts of Indian magic and Indian beliefs."—New Statesman

Booklist 21:299 My '25

"Well told and makes enjoyable reading. The volume contains several charming illustrations in monochrome by Earl H. Reed."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '25 200w

"This volume is so handsomely attractive that it is perhaps inevitable that its literary and artistic contents should prove a little disappointing. Not that it is bad, but the hand-made paper, fine type, wide margins and beautiful reproductions of what, presumably, are pencil sketches, excite expectations that are not realized. The descriptions at times are almost lyrical, but they are never vivid; the illustrations tend towards prettiness rather than vigour."

+ New Statesman 25:54 Ap 25 '25 300w

"Not often does one find a book by a fisherman, camper and wilderness lover that is written with so much literary grace as this or so colored with poetic and imaginative appreciation of nature."

+ N Y Times p20 F 15 '25 550w

"Instinctively, or with deliberate skill, Mr. Reed contrives to make us feel that Waboons, Waboons, and Wabeno, wholly Indian as they are, and subject to all the limitations of their race, are nevertheless universal types, and might serve equally well, with a different set of attributes, for the figures in a tale of political intrigue in a modern civilized community. The full-page illustrations hardly rise above the character of prettiness."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p106 F 12 '25 200w

REED, LANGFORD, ed. Complete limerick book. 154p il $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Jarrolds] 827 Limericks 25-7232

"Herein are listed limericks of the church, the stock exchange, of literature and literary criticism, tongue-twisters, old favorites, new aspirants and what not, together with an account of the great limerick boom in England in 1907-'08, and advice on what to do if it should break out in this country. The illustrations are by H. M. Bateman."—N Y Tribune

Boston Transcript p1 J1 11 '25 400w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman
Lit R p12 Ap 18 '25 900w

"The book ought to add to the joy of nations and the happiness and longevity of individuals."

+ N Y Times p26 Ap 5 '25 500w

N Y Tribune p10 Ap 19 '25 420w

"This is a book of great merits and one grave fault. He has also included, I am sorry to say, among his 350 [limericks] at least 150 which are so tame, flat, and unprofitable that his book would have been better if they had been omitted altogether." E. L. Pearson

+ — Outlook 139:380 Mr 11 '25 1650w

Pratt p28 autumn '25

"Mr. Langford Reed has literally scoured the English speaking countries for the finest examples of the art. Several hundred of these he has put in 'The Complete Limerick Book,' whose pages are further enlivened (though not so thoroughly as one might expect) by occasional drawings of H. M. Bateman. There is considerably more verse here than Poe would swallow at a sitting, if ever. But one may be particular and discriminating with limericks and conclude that Mr. Reed's detritus only goes to prove the precious quality of the gems."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:32 Ag 8 '25 280w

Springfield Republican p7a My 10 '25 70w

REES, ARTHUR JOHN. Cup of silence. 349p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

25-755

The desolate Sussex Downs are the background of this love and mystery story. Pretty Ailsa Rose, upon the sudden death of her grandmother, becomes companion to Lady Hilmerceux, who lives alone in an old mansion across the downs, about which still hangs the tragedy of Harry Hilmerceux who, forty years ago, was lost at sea. Into this melancholy atmosphere comes young Harry Vivian who after having followed the sea for twelve years is now proclaimed the twelfth baron of Hilmerceux. He falls in love with Ailsa but their romance is constantly overshadowed by the Hilmerceux tragedy. The story of that tragedy is revealed to them one foggy night in the shelter of Mouldering House which years before had played an awful part in the life of Ailsa's grandmother.

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"It is a well-told romantic tale of ancient wrong and long-delayed vengeance, with plenty of color and suspense and mystery." L. M. F.

+ Int Bk R p615 Ag '25 260w

"It is good old fashioned melodrama, a little modernized in manner and fairly free of sentimentality, but entirely true to form in the essentials of its plot."

Lit R p10 Ja 17 '25 300w

"Descended straight from Wilkie Collins."
J: Franklin

New Statesman 23:648 S 13 '24 70w

"The author's screen is rather thin in spots and some of his dénouement falls flat in the end. Other bits are skillfully concealed to the very finish."

— + N Y Times p17 Ja 18 '25 450w

"'Cup of Silence' contained for me a satisfying draught. It runs slowly and is mixed according to a time-honored recipe, but the ingredients are of the best." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ja 18 '25 370w

N Y World p9e Ja 18 '25 110w

"The novel is well-written, entertaining, and interesting all the way through."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p524 Ag 28 '24 420w

Wis Lib Bul 21:200 J1 '25

REEVE, ARTHUR BENJAMIN. Craig Kennedy on the farm; with an introd. by Loring Schuler. 359p $2 Harper

25-17274

"Having turned his back for a space upon the urban scene, Craig Kennedy has been operating at some distance from the madding crowd. The ten detective stories in this collection show him obstructing the cause of injustice at widely separated points."—N Y Tribune

"There is no lack of excitement. But we are forced to admit that most of the villains are a bit obvious. Probably that is merely because we are hardened detectives."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S '25 550w

N Y Tribune p22 O 25 '25 160w

"Occasionally the yarns are not built up to the rattling climax which a first rate detective story should have, but the book will give the reader a satisfying evening in an armchair."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:262 O 31 '25 120w

REEVE, ARTHUR BENJAMIN. The fourteen points; tales of Craig Kennedy; master of mystery; with an introd. by Robert H. Davis. 456p $2 Harper

25-6947

"Arthur B. Reeve's Craig Kennedy, dropping his mechanical appliances for once, relies on his brains to solve 'The Fourteen Points,' each of them a mystery."—Int Bk R

"These stories are well enough among the mass of mystery fiction but they are not what Mr. Reeve has given us when at his best."

— + Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 380w

"His triumphs depend too often on knowledge the reader does not share for the volume to rank among the best of its kind."

L: Moore

— Int Bk R p471 Je '25 50w

"The book isn't all mystery. One of its most obvious parts is the title-scheme of the stories. It is very evident that Mr. Reeve listed the titles of his stories and then did the best he could to make them serve as clues for the reader."

N Y Times p24 Je 7 '25 180w

N Y Tribune p13 Ap 19 '25 120w

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 100w

"Even so flatly mechanical a production as this manages to hold one's interest fairly well, for most of Mr. Reeve's crimes are at least ingeniously devised though some of his murders come a bit too near to the fantastically improbable."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:714 Ap 25 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:200 J1 '25

REEVES, WILLIAM PEMBER. New Zealand (Ao Tea Rao). 3d ed rev 390p il $5 Houghton [16s Allen & U.]

993.1 New Zealand

This book, first published in 1898 has been out of print for seventeen years. In its third edition it is thoroughly revised and brought up to date, with a sketch of recent events in New Zealand by Cecil J. Wray. The author, a government official, has served as minister of education and labor and has carried thru an advanced code of labor legislation for New Zealand. His book is a descriptive history of New Zealand from its discovery to the present, including an account of its first colonization by the Maori, their civilization, tribal system and folklore.

"To an American this is an important book. This is a carefully conceived, well written history of a progressive country." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 15 '25 400w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

N Y Times p11 Ag 30 '25 1200w

"First published in 1898, Mr. Reeves's volume remains a standard work on New Zealand. Its appearance in a revised edition will be welcomed by students of the subject."

+ N Y Tribune p7 S 13 '25 130w

"Fascinating to read. Mr. Reeves has, of course, intimate personal knowledge of the political and economic developments of the colony in later years. For the earlier times he has gathered information from trustworthy sources, and woven his material into a story at once clear and attractive."

+ Sat R 139:222 F 28 '25 300w

"Both Mr. Wray who brings the masterpiece up to date, and Mr. Reeves author of the original work, write in an engagingly simple, direct style, and with open-minded candor."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:111 S 5 '25 180w

REEVES, WILLIAM PEMBER. State experiments in Australia and New Zealand. 2v 391; 367p $8 Dutton

994 Australia—Politics and government.

New Zealand—Politics and government

[24-14768]

Reprint of a standard authority on legislation in Australia and New Zealand first published in Edinburgh in 1902. The author surveys the more interesting experiments in progressive legislation and administration during twenty years.

"To give us this illuminating account of how it has gone with social life, industry and politics 'by the long wash of Australasia seas,' Mr. Reeves is well qualified. He does present facts, but they lose their hard outlines in the setting he provides for them; often they grow picturesque under his touch until it is seen that in life at the antipodes there is romance as well as prose." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 29 '25 1000w

"Mr. Reeves's 'State Experiments' is not one of those classics of literature or history to which one may turn again and again, sure always of finding new beauty or truth or fresh lessons for the days that now are. It is a thorough and scholarly, if at some points decidedly biased, account of some of the most interesting social experiments in economics and government that have been made anywhere in recent years, and as such was entirely worthy of reprinting." W: MacDonald

+ N Y Times p11 Ag 30 '25 950w

REICHWEIN, ADOLF. China and Europe; intellectual and artistic contacts in the eighteenth century; [tr. by J. C. Powell]. (History of civilization) 174p il $5 Knopf [12s 6d K. Paul]

951 China—Civilization. Europe—Civilization. Art, Chinese [25-9577]

"The purpose of Herr Reichwein's book is to show the influence of the Orient and especially of China upon the artistic and cultural life of Europe up to and during the period in which Goethe was one of the powerful literary personages of the Old World."—Boston Transcript

"The illustrations are very good and the translation by Mr. J. C. Powell is well done. It would seem that in the study of the history of

REICHWEIN, ADOLF—Continued
 roccoco there is much room for research of antiquarian as well as historic value. Herr Reichwein has given an admirable and refreshing, if brief, start in this direction."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 24 '25 520w

"Suggestive if by no means complete."

Nation 121:99 J1 15 '25 50w

"China and Europe is an important book on a fascinating subject, but it is unfortunate that a book in which so much learning is made so entertaining should be marred by an inadequate index." J: Bakeless

+ New Repub 43:271 J1 29 '25 650w

Reviewed by H: K. Norton

N Y Tribune p8 S 13 '25 900w

Reviewed by Sidney Greenbie

Sat R of Lit 1:860 Je 27 '25 950w

REID, MRS ALBERTA (BANCROFT). Goblins of Haubeck. 117p il $1.50 McBride

25-23369

Every house in Haubeck had its goblin. They were all very good little goblins, too, even Hautchen, for it was really his kind heart that got him into trouble occasionally by making him interfere for other people's good. When Hinzelmänn came to Haubeck, Hautchen, pitied the unhappy little elf who should never have been sold to a human, and helped him out of his troubles.

"These stories show a real understanding of folk and fairy lore, and are charmingly told.
 The illustrations add much to the enjoyment of the book."

+ Booklist 22:167 Ja '26

"A delightful tale. It is excellent reading for the quite young." H: Beston

+ Ind 115:351 S 26 '25 70w

"Alberta Bancroft's goblins are most ingratiating creatures, and surely Haubeck must be a heavenly town for a child to live in,
 for each house has its goblin, to play with the children, to keep everything neat, and to bring luck to the family. Short of living in Haubeck, which very few can do, it is almost as good to read about them in Miss Bancroft's book."

+ N Y World p7m O 18 '25 80w

"A children's book of fairy-tales that stands out from the general run of such stories, both by reason of Miss Bancroft's engaging style and of Harold Sichel's delightful illustrations."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:302 N 14 '25 100w

REID, LESLIE. Rector of Maliseet. 2nd ed
 272p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

[25-13305]

Leonard Carr, who tells this curious and compelling tale, comes to Maliseet as secretary to the Reverend St John Clare. He is at once drawn and repelled by the indefinable atmosphere of mystery and the uncanny which surrounds the rectory and its inhabitants—the rector, his mother and daughter. In pursuing his secretarial duties, Carr discovers the key to the forbidding character of his chief. The rector believes himself to be possessed by the spirit of a certain Abbot Ambrose, half saint, half devil, whose life had been the sensation of the neighborhood, hundreds of years before. Thus, in the clergyman's soul, between his deeply religious, highly spiritual nature on the one side and a gross sensual element on the other, there is perpetual warfare. The struggle leads to a dénouement both tragic and sublime. Subordinated to the central theme, is the story of Leonard's love for the rector's daughter.

"Though excellent in many ways, 'The Rector of Maliseet' in others is decidedly mediocre. The unreality of the love-scenes, the irregular tempo of the narrative, and the theatricality of the rector's character will be influences against the books' success."

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 5 '25 330w

"Altho well written, and showing decided talent, Leslie Reid's first novel, 'The Rector of Maliseet,' is on the whole a disappointing book.
 So much is skilfully prepared for, and never eventuates." L: Moore

+ Int Bk R p680 S '25 300w

"It is satisfying to come upon a first novel of such exceptional quality."

+ Nation and Ath 36:864 Mr 21 '25 200w

"Everyone with a taste for the English note in fiction will enjoy this novel."

+ New Repub 44:78 S 9 '25 150w

"One is in debt to the author of this refreshing story. The lack of originality of conception is natural to a beginner and is more than compensated by the breadth of treatment of the material used and by the use of good English."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 2 '25 1160w

"There is a charm and persuasion in Mr.
 Reid's writing. The love of Leonard Carr and Miriam Clare is told with a true simplicity and reticence, and adds to, rather than takes away from a story in which it would otherwise be out of place."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:90 Ag 29 '25 360w

"The author himself is not certain enough of the central motive of his story for this book to be very convincing."

+ Spec 134:733 My 2 '25 80w

"It is a great thing to create at the outset
 a sense of safety and satisfaction in the reader's mind. Mr. Reid creates it by his obvious sincerity and by his delicate perceptions of natural beauty. He takes these qualities with him throughout the book, with a certain grave and leisurely manner of narration that one might almost call Quakerish. The plot, in its essentials, is not quite strong enough for a full-length novel."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p118 F
 19 '25 400w

REILLY, JOSEPH JOHN. Newman as a man of letters. 329p $2.50 Macmillan

B or 92 Newman, John Henry, cardinal
 25-11335

Believing that the existing biographies of Cardinal Newman have not given sufficient study to his literary work, Dr Reilly supplies this lack with a book whose chief aim is to estimate the value of his work as literature.
 Newman's theology is not dwelt upon nor his conversion except as it bears upon his literary career, but his work as a man of letters, poet, historian and novelist, is carefully studied.

Booklist 22:159 Ja '26

Bookm 62:223 O '25 240w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p4 J1 11 '25 1600w

"One of the finest volumes of 1925. In this book Newman has been adequately treated, for the first time in English, as a man of letters, and Dr. Reilly has done it most delightfully, with an insight rarely met with in Newman's commentators, and with a balance and niceness of judgment that will make his work of criticism endure." J. F. W.

+ Cath World 122:126 O '25 1100w

"Of penetrating analysis there is little. The book, however, gives an intelligent and absorbing account of the Cardinal's spiritual struggles, and is characterized throughout by tolerance and the absence of sectarian bigotry."

+ Dial 79:434 N '25 120w

"That Dr. Reilly admires Newman enormously becomes immediately apparent; he writes about him because he thinks him worth writing about, not because he finds him a showy mark for the display of his powers of irony. But love has not made him blind—this is no collection of superlatives, no Watsonian worship of supreme intelligence, but an honest and fair-minded estimate of Newman's literary ability."

W: L. Phelps

+ Int Bk R p9 D '25 850w

"A charming and scholarly study of one of the most fascinating personalities in English literature." E: J: O'Reilly

+ Lit R p4 Ag 22 '25 280w

"Mr. Reilly is decidedly partial. He loves his Newman this side idolatry. His grand passion is evident on practically every page of his study. Ardor and intelligence walk hand in hand through this book, and the result is perhaps the best short appreciation and exposition of Newman that we can lay our hands on. Mr. Reilly overvalues much of Newman's work in letters because he fails to separate the man from his efforts, but no one can read Newman and pass under his clear and exalted spell without so doing." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y Times p8 J1 12 '25 1700w

"When an admirer feels that the object of his study has not met with adequate appreciation there is danger that he will exaggerate the neglected virtues. For a time the wary reader is disarmed by Dr. Reilly's candor, by the proof of a just literary taste, discriminating judgment and discreet expression. But this judicious attitude is not uniformly maintained." Jacob Zeitlin

+ — N Y Tribune p9 S 13 '25 900w

Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 10w

Spec 135:552 O 3 '25 540w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 6 '25 900w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p586 S 10 '25 40w

REMIZOV, ALEXEI. The clock; tr. by John Cournos. 222p $2.50 Knopf [7s Chatto & W.]

[25-6932]

The first English translation from the work of one of the most original of the younger Russian writers "The Clock" is the tale of the downfall of a provincial merchant family, hounded by the Erinyes of bankruptcy, disease and madness. A half-demented boy's messianic notion of annihilating man's tyrant, Time, by stopping the cathedral clock, is a running accompaniment to the narrative." (N Y Tribune)

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Bookm 61:223 Ap '25 80w

Cleveland p123 D '25

Living Age 325:217 Ap 25 '25 250w

"Remizov," says Mr. Cournos, "differs from the author of 'Crime and Punishment' chiefly in that he is more conscious of his style—a statement which would seem to imply that he is a greater Dostoevski. In reality he lacks almost completely the thing which makes the writer with whom he is so casually compared great; namely, his passion. His despair was wrung from him by the bitter results of his heroic efforts, but Remizov takes as a matter of course all that Dostoevski protests against, and he wrings no emotion from his tale because he is so far beyond struggle." J. W. Krutch

— Nation 120:163 F 11 '25 450w

"Interesting for connoisseurs, but a literary by-way. He makes the flesh creep, but he doesn't touch the soul." J: Franklin

— New Statesman 25:205 N 22 '24 230w

"His work is largely in the tradition of Dostoevsky and Turgeniev and the other Russian classic novelists, and he is not unworthy of being rated as a disciple of these masters; he displays a breadth of vision, a bleak power, a gift of sympathy and an analytical ability that would make him an asset to the literature of any land; yet he is peculiarly Russian in the sombre eyes with which he regards life."

+ N Y Times p17 Ja 13 '25 420w

"It is a thankless effort, this, to introduce Remizov to the English public. It is conceivable that a receptive, even if a foreign, audience might be touched by his semi-hysterical sensitiveness. But at his best Remizov uses a language so utterly peculiar, so idiosyncratic, that he is locked within it." Avraham Yarmolinsky

— + N Y Tribune p11 Mr 15 '25 320w

Reviewed by Kenneth Fuessle

N Y World p8e Ja 18 '25 780w

Spec 133:sup838 N 29 '24 1200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p683 O 30 '24 1000w

RENWICK, WILLIAM LINDSAY. Edmund Spenser; an essay in renaissance poetry. 198p $3.75 (10s 6d) Longmans

821 Spenser, Edmund

[25-13091]

"Professor Renwick not only shows how Spenser was soaked in the classics, in Italian and French poetry, but proves that the 'Faery Queen' and, indeed, Spenser's whole theory of poetry were largely determined by humanist critics. . . . Another point, well made by Professor Renwick, is the close relation of Spenser's rhythms and dexterity in world harmony with Elizabethan music. . . . Another most interesting contribution is the exposition of the enormous philosophic and ethical task which Spenser set himself in writing the 'Faery Queen.' . . . Professor Renwick knows his subject so well and has his 'knowledge so controlled that he remains quite cool, and is therefore able to make plain all the essentials of a very complex subject.'"—Nation and Ath

Reviewed by J. T. Shipley

Lit R p5 Je 27 '25 380w

"Criticism of Spenser has latterly been dull beyond endurance. Mr. Renwick breaks the spell with a learned but unpedantic discourse upon the ideas and the art—conceived in their terms—of this most serious great poet."

+ Nation 121:77 J1 8 '25 40w

"This essay in Renaissance poetry ought to be read by all students of the Renaissance, by poets who make an intelligent study of their art, and by most people who care for this English poetry. The book is priced too high, but that is the inevitable result of the public preference for illiterate fiction over books as interesting, as thoughtful, and as well-written as this." R: Aldington

+ Nation and Ath 37:107 Ap 25 '25 950w

"We feel that to cope with the erudition crowded into this book of two hundred pages one must pray the Muses for 'ten tongues and a heart of bronze.' And the style is often as tough as the matter. But, as we went on we were reconciled. The book has a very definite purpose, and a useful one. It aims, not so much at the direct appreciation of Spenser, as at providing us with the means of duly appreciating him. It is not criticism, but the raw material of criticism; and it will be a bad day when a prohibitive duty is laid on raw materials of this kind."

+ — New Statesman 25:202 My 30 '25 1300w

"The half of 'The Faerie Queene' seems childish, and we demand to know why it did not seem childish to the grown man who wrote it. There is an answer to these questions, and Professor Renwick has made it a labour of love to give it more fully and exactly than it has been given before. It would have been a still better answer if he had more vividly remembered the reasons why it had to be supplied; but then, perhaps, he would have been less moved to give it."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p296 Ap 30 '25 1800w

RETNER, BETH A. That's that! 156p 11 $1.50 Doubleday

25-9021

"This is a volume of fourteen short fairy tales—each with a lesson of its own. There is the tale of Do and Did, and how the rich Dids learned that children made laughter when gold eggs could not; and there is the story of Minna, who told her woes to the big oak tree so that it died of grief, and when Minna returned from visiting the king with a pleasant tale to tell, the old oak tree was no longer able to hear. So these queer little people are like some queer real people after all, and through their contacts with each other and the adventures they have, they each at some time discover that 'that's that.'— Sat R of Lit

RETNER, BETH A.—Continued

Booklist 21:387 J '25

"Begins rather amusingly, but the stories are trivial for the most part." M. G. Bonner
— + Int Bk R p623 Ag '25 100w

"The tales themselves are unusual and very charming, simple in theme and construction, but told with freshness and whimsicality and humor."

+ N Y Times p6 J1 19 '25 300w

Sat R of Lit 1:750 My 9 '25 120w

REVELL, NELLIE. Fightin' through. 157p
$1.50 Doran

B or 92 Conduct of life 25-10410

The author tells of her courageous battle against ill health, won after three years of confinement to a hospital bed, thru a determined resistance to disease and discouragement. These pages contain glimpses of her fightin' philosophy.

"A uniquely helpful book."

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 3 '25 420w

Cleveland p80 J1 '25

Lit R p5 Ag 1 '25 60w

"Unless memory is greatly at fault, this book is much better than the first one by Miss Revell. For one thing, it is shorter. For another, it carries a better title than 'Right Off the Chest.'" T: L. Masson

+ N Y Times p13 Je 14 '25 600w

Outlook 140:566 Ag 19 '25 30w

REYMONT, WLADYSLAW STANISLAW. Autumn; from the Polish [by Michael H. Dzięwicki] (Peasants, v 1) 261p $2.50 Knopf

24-28889

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Reviewed by V. D. Scudder

Atlantic's Bookshelf Mr '25 320w

Cleveland p82 J1 '25

"Reymont's psychology of talk is marvelous. One never has the impression of written conversations; every word has the dramatic weight of an action, its meaning being carried by a will. His imagery is never metaphysical it always compares object to object. 'Autumn' is a book, not of dreams, not of fantasies, but of triumphant realities." M. S. Gudernatsch

+ Int Bk R p172 F '25 1050w

Nation and Ath 37:742 S 19 '25 280w

"Patient work it is, and often beautiful, but always photography, with an occasional comment beneath to explain the inset." Katherine Keith

New Repub 44:sup9 S 30 '25 300w

N Y Tribune p14 O 18 '25 280w

"'Autumn' is not merely a narrative of Polish lands and men; the same emotions, the same impulses are alive in the breasts of the tiller everywhere. Yet in spite of this universal aspect, there is still that wealth of local color, full of vivid detail and sometimes morbid contrast that makes 'Autumn' essentially Slavonic." F. V. Roman

N Y World p9e N 23 '24 650w

Reviewed by Gerald Bullett

Sat R 140:263 S 5 '25 220w

"Quiet, well-balanced story."

+ Spec 135:420 S 12 '25 620w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Ag 27 '25 560w

REYMONT, WLADYSLAW STANISLAW. Spring; from the Polish [by Michael H. Dzięwicki]. (Peasants, v 3) 329p $2.50 Knopf

"Spring" is the third volume in Reymont's powerful drama of peasant life. As a result of their uprising the men of the village have been cast into prison, leaving their families to suffer cruelly in their absence. Every household feels the heavy touch of sorrow. Spring returns at last to the land, but not to the hearts of the peasants who see their farms, their cattle, and their homes ruined for lack of care. With Antek in prison and out of reach of Yagna's wiles, Hanka's problem grows easier, tho she waits for her husband's release with smouldering jealousy and resentment.

Reviewed by V. D. Scudder

Atlantic's Bookshelf Ag '25 400w

Cleveland p82 J1 '25

"There are endless dialogues. The simplest action has to be told indirectly, through the gradual reproduction of all the talk preceding and accompanying it. The simple, sad fact is that the book could be cut in half, easily, without a vestige of its significance or its story being lost, while by such a process its artistic value would be multiplied any number of times. Ethnographically, his work is quite admirable and of the highest value. From a purely artistic point of view, I must insist that it combines touches of absolute magnificence with pages of indiscriminate mediocrity." Edwin Bjorkman
— + Lit R p3 My 23 '25 680w

New Repub 44:sup9 S 30 '25 300w

"Reymont's work is welcome. In a swirling tide of propaganda, reforms, creeds and social movements masquerading as literature, in a welter of literary cults and intellectual flickerings that seem to emanate from the dead dust of an expiring cycle of romanticism, this work by a man who has followed the purity of his own artistic vision shines like a beacon. For Reymont turns us again to nature and the soil in which all great art is rooted."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 19 '25 800w

N Y Tribune p14 O 18 '25 280w

REYMONT, WLADYSLAW STANISLAW. Summer; from the Polish [by Michael H. Dzięwicki]. (Peasants, v 4) 287p $2.50 Knopf

With "Summer" Reymont's four-volume epic of Polish peasant life comes to a somber and tragic finish. The forces which have been steadily gathering during the preceding volumes here converge and break with the violence of a summer thunderstorm. The volume opens with the death of Matthias Boryna, the foremost man in Lipka and ends with the closing of the vengeful forces about Yagna, whose beauty has made her a lure and a prey to the men of the village.

Atlantic's Bookshelf Ag '25 400w

"There is an atmosphere of unpleasant duty about it. It smacks conspicuously of the best room of an old New England house, where one was expected to admire but never to enjoy oneself. Nor could one honestly suggest 'The Peasants' as entertaining reading. To begin with, it is much too long and too remote in subject matter. If you can give yourself sufficiently to this long novel to be swept away on the swirling tide of its passions, you find yourself in a different world, elemental, cruel, ruthless, terrible, and yet human, too, for here is humanity with all the clothing of civilization removed. It is, all told, a rather terrifying picture." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 15 '25 1050w

Cleveland p82 J1 '25

"Under the circumstances it is the more to be regretted that a work so rich in values of many kinds should be marred by weaknesses that cannot be overlooked, and that must stand in the way of the full appreciation of this great epic by many readers. These weaknesses might almost be summed up in a single word—redundancy. The number of words wasted by M. Reymont on needless conversations and no less needless natural descriptions would make a large-sized volume in themselves. The four volumes could be cut into two without loss of any kind, and if that were done judiciously 'The Peasants' would probably rank among the greatest works of its kind ever produced." Edwin Bjorkman

+ — Lit R p2 Ag 22 '25 520w

New Repub 44:sup9 S 30 '25 300w

"Discursive in method and diffuse in substance, it aims at a series of more or less disconnected impressions rather than at a single vivid and unified bit of portraiture; and, since it is more or less dependent upon the three volumes that precede it, is apt to prove a trifle baffling and in places pointless to the reader who has not followed the other three books of the series. The author writes not only as one who knows the Polish peasants and is capable of depicting them vividly, but as a man who feels deeply and contrives to convey something of the strength and poignancy of his emotion."

N Y Times p8 Je 21 '25 680w

Reviewed by W. A. Drake

N Y Tribune p14 O 18 '25 280w

Reviewed by F. V. Roman

N Y World p4m Je 14 '25 600w

REYMONT, WLADYSŁAW STANISŁAW. Winter; from the Polish [by Michael H. Dziewicki]. (Peasants, v 2) 284p $2.50 Knopf

The second volume of Reymont's four-volume epic of Polish life pictures the hardships of the peasants during a severe winter, and gives glimpses of their customs and festivities at Christmas tide. The tragic love story of Yagna and her step-son Antek grows in tenseness and the book concludes with a revolt of the peasants against the manor-folk.

Reviewed by V. D. Scudder

Atlantic's Bookshelf Mr '25 320w

Booklist 21:234 Mr '25

"A novel of great elemental force, it is occasionally overstrained. The author piles on the agony, rubs in the impression of the dirt and dumb ignorance of the peasants, makes nature not only inimical but malicious and filthy. Even the clouds become 'a black seething flood of squalor and grime.' Still, it is an achievement in the grand style, a true epic." Isabel Paterson

+ — Bookm 61:86 Mr '25 250w

"A very fine book. There is about it the breadth and sweep of great literature."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 21 '25 300w

Cleveland p82 Jl '25

Dial 78:427 My '25 100w

"Dziewicki's English version of 'Winter' is no less an artistic achievement than that of 'Autumn.' His vocabulary, tho not always idiomatic, is highly individual, colorful, and powerfully expressive." M. S. Gudernatsch

+ Int Bk R p486 Je '25 700w

"There can be no question of the desirability of having 'The Peasants' made a part of the literature accessible to the English-speaking world. As a vivid and faithful record of human life, seen collectively and comprehensively at a given time and place, it deserves high praise and is well worth reading. Judged as a piece of art pure and simple, as a masterpiece worthy of the world's highest literary distinction, it is to me not without grave flaws." Edwin Bjorkman

+ — Lit R p3 Ja 24 '25 1000w

"If one may judge from the two volumes already published, 'The Peasants' is a work which will be read with growing respect. It is obviously intended to present a complete panorama of the life of the Polish peasant, and it gathers force somewhat slowly because it is planned upon a truly gigantic scale; but the interest mounts steadily, and one finishes the instalments already published with the feeling that from the first page to the last there has been slowly built up a structure which becomes more and more impressive as it is seen more and more as a whole." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 120:73 Ja 21 '25 1000w

New Repub 44:sup9 S 30 '25 300w

"This is an extraordinary novel of a kind that cannot yet be written in America. It is primarily a folk-tale, epic, much as the Iliad is a folk-tale. In America we have no folk. We have population in process of amalgamation into a people. But the deeply set incrustation of tradition and ethnic character, as treated by Knut Hamsun in 'Growth of the Soil' or by Reymont in 'The Peasants,' is impossible to us. It should be read therefore with all the greater interest."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 11 '25 1500w

N Y Tribune p14 O 18 '25 280w

"If 'Autumn,' the first volume of the series, was notable, 'Winter' is doubly so, for it far excels its predecessor, 'Autumn.'" F. V. Roman

+ N Y World p9e Ja 11 '25 660w

Pratt p40 autumn '25

"The strength of the book lies in its sweep, its comprehensive, god's-eye view of the starved, poverty-stricken, frozen village." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 140:629 N 28 '25 230w

"Extremely sombre but fine book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p754 N 12 '25 480w

Wis Lib Bul 21:91 Mr '25

REYNARD the Fox. Epic of the beast; consisting of English translations of The history of Reynard the Fox and Physiologus. (Broadway translations) 278p il $3 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

Bestiaries. Physiologus

[25-1696]

"The first part consists of an English translation of the history of Reynard the Fox from the Caxton print with an introduction by Dr. William Rose of the University of London. The second part is devoted to the sermons of 'Physiologus' translated, with an introduction by James Carllil. Mr. Carllil, like his colleague, Dr. Rose, has made a thorough study and apt condensation of his subject."—Lit R

"A really valuable contribution to the Broadway Translations. Kaulbach's robust and imaginative illustrations are a truly significant part of the work." Rae Richter

+ Lit R p9 Ja 24 '25 250w

"The editors of the Broadway Translations have never had a happier idea than that of bringing together the two works which constitute the present volume. Each is delightful in itself and each furnishes a corrective to the other." J. W. Krutch

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 15 '25 1250w

REYNOLDS, GERTRUDE M. (ROBINS) (MRS) LOUIS BAILLIE REYNOLDS. Spell of Sarnia. 336p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-19165

Sarnia, the ancient isle of Guernsey, is the scene of this story of mystery, witchcraft, and love. Aymon Vauxlaurens returns to the island at a time when most of his ancestral holdings have passed into the hands of Quigley, a suave middle aged man who passes as a rich American. There is missing from the family papers the formula for a delectable perfume, discovered by Aymon's great-uncle, a chemist. There is a fortune in the missing formula. But Vauxlaurens is not the only person searching for the paper. Quigley wants it and has bought the services of wicked old Anne Bougourd the island witch. Orione Vidal wants it also, and Aymon finds himself at once drawn and repelled by this strange creature of mystery and fire. The search for the formula links together these widely different beings in scenes of dramatic intensity heightened by the atmospheric spell of Sarnia.

REYNOLDS, GERTRUDE M.—Continued

"This is an exciting tale of melodramatic happenings in Guernsey, the very book for a slack mood, a long pipe (or a box of candies) and a winter evening."

Sat R of Lit 2:322 N 21 '25 150w

"This romance of Guernsey, or Sarnia, is of unusual merit, for Mrs Reynolds shows a rare understanding of the historic island, reveals its rich insular charm and strange intensity of lingering customs and beliefs: and gives us a plot of which only the solution is conventional."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p864 D 10 '25 280w

REYNOLDS, HENRY. Spanish waters. 304p il $4.50 Lauriat [18s Hurst & B.]

910 Voyages and travels

"Mr. Reynolds, the author of this book, has roamed the seas in small boats for more than forty years, which, on the face of it is evidence of his fondness for boats and winds and sea and sailing adventures. This book begins with his purchase of the Winnie, a nine ton yawl dependent for her movements upon canvas alone. On one of the early pages of the book he expresses—quite politely—his scorn of motors as a means of locomotion for a sailing vessel. He could not more completely express his scorn of those who take this means of finding their way through a natural difficulty."

—Boston Transcript

"Most noticeable of all is the atmosphere of joy which surrounds the story, a joy which makes the author break out in verse from time to time, which varies from Shakespeare to doggerel!" D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 11 '25 500w

"For those who 'agree with the opinion of the egregious Dr. Johnson that life in a ship compares ill with even life in a jail,' this record is perhaps a little too technical; but Spanish Waters has its appeal to the lay reader not only for its glimpses of unfrequented ports, but also as a true tale of adventure."

+ — New Statesman 24:578 F 21 '25 180w

"The author is a nice, kindly man, who has roamed the seas for more than forty years in small craft. He loves his boats and his cruises. Perhaps a reader with like enthusiasms might enjoy the chronicle of his 'Spanish Waters.'"

— + Sat R of Lit 1:938 J1 25 '25 400w

RHOADES, JAMES. Collected poems. 196p $1.50 Wilson, H.W. [7s 6d Unwin]

821

This selection from the works of a Victorian poet includes lyrics, sonnets and short narrative pieces, a group of war-time poems and some choruses written for pageants. The poems are prevailingly religious in tone.

"He employed the archaisms and the stiff expressions, the moralized or sentimentalized conclusions of the mediocre versifiers of his age—although in the lyric section of his book there is much that is delicate and unaffected. Generally, however, expression is patently subordinated to a sincere but rather stereotyped idealism, so unquestioning that it seems almost quaint in this questioning age." Garreta Busey

+ — N Y Tribune p9 S 27 '25 280w

"The note throughout is tranquil and conventional. Rhoades was free from a certain kind of self-knowledge which goads the artist as a rule into the effort to say some new thing, that effort which is so often spasmodic, so often futile; he was content to repeat on his unassuming plane what greater poets had done more commandingly."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p265 Ap 16 '25 400w

RICCIARDI, NICHOLAS. Boy and his future. 119p $1.25 Appleton

173 Boys. Vocational guidance 25-7453

In this little volume dedicated to the author's son and pal, those who love boys and are working with and for them will find a simple statement of the boy's problems and how to help him meet them. The book is especially concerned with the matter of vocational guidance. Every sort of boy has his prototype here, and there is a special message for each.

"Teachers, fathers, mothers and other folks, would do well to read, and act up to the advice in the book. It is no dusty treatise, it is as living as Young America himself."

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 26 '25 220w

"Although written throughout in a sketchy, patchy, rambling style, the booklet is, on account of its anecdotal style, very readable. It contains a lot of good common sense on boy training, and it convincingly presents its two main theses, the value of 'talking things over,' and the need for vocational advisement." J. M. C.

+ Cath World 121:572 J1 '25 300w

Cleveland p91 S '25

N Y Times p20 Mr 29 '25 450w

Wis Lib Bul 21:192 J1 '25

RICE, ALICE CALDWELL (HEGAN) (MRS CALE YOUNG RICE), and RICE, CALE YOUNG. Winners and losers. 300p $2 Century

25-17662

Winners and losers is a collection of short stories written alternately by Mr and Mrs Rice. They are very different in type, from the first, Phoebe, the story of a disturbing little tomboy who learns the feminine arts, to the last, Gull's nest, a domestic tangle in a California setting. Contents: Phoebe; Out of darkness; Miss Gee; The commonwealth's attorney; Mourning à la mode; Environment; Between trains; Heroes; two stories; In the day of resurrection; Gull's nest.

"While there is nothing very remarkable about any of these tales, they are agreeable and cleverly told, with a humorous appreciation of their own comedy element which is pleasantly diverting. When the author chuckles the reader smiles with her."

+ N Y Times p18 S 27 '25 550w

"They are remarkable more for the variety of scenes presented than for anything distinctive in plot or character portraiture. Here and there an unusual note is struck in situation or human value, but not often. All are sweetly wholesome and free from sex problems except the last, (our choice of the best in the book). The tale is out of the ordinary. So much cannot be said for its nine companions."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:228 O 17 '25 120w

RICE, CALE YOUNG. Bitter brew. 135p $1.50 Century

811

25-6912

The mood of these poems is somber and thoughtful but few are of really "bitter brew." Rhyme is used sparingly.

Boston Transcript p2 My 2 '25 200w

"'Bitter Brew' is well worth attention for its metrical devices, though by no means for these alone. The book is interesting, as 'Troilus and Cressida' is interesting, for the pungency of its thought, somber but not untender brooding on experience." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p6 Ap 25 '25 650w

"Mr. Rice is less, perhaps, a poet than a critic of the body social; verse is for him a medium of expression rather than an art. But thinking persons will wish to read him. Unthinking persons would profit by reading him. And there are several pieces in lighter vein to balance the book."

+ N Y Times p6 Ap 5 '25 320w

Reviewed by G. H. Busey
N Y Tribune p10 Ap 19 '25 300w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman
Outlook 140:112 My 20 '25 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p559 Ag
27 '25 300w

"Although marked by a more sombre note than is usual in his work, there are many poems in this book to please the author's admirers."

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

RICE, STANLEY PITCAIRN. Challenge of Asia. 256p $2.25 Scribner [7s 6d Murray]
915 Civilization, Oriental. Asia

"Mr. Stanley Rice plunges beneath the surface of the troubled waters to seek for the cause of what is euphemistically termed Asiatic unrest. He prefers to regard it as a challenge to Western supremacy rather than as a revolt against it. The challenge, as he describes it, has all the elements and implications of a revolt."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"If the reader will be considerate enough to forego rigorous logic and convincingly demonstrated conclusions, he will find the perusal of the volume profitable. Practically all the observations and deductions are accurate for large groups, they can not always be accepted as safe generalizations for a whole national unit, much less for all Asia." G. M. Dutcher

+ — Am Hist R 31:175 O '25 500w
Am Pol Sci R 19:655 Ag '25 60w
Booklist 22:28 O '25

"There is much to provoke thought, much that should be said clearly and fearlessly as Stanley Rice has said it, in this book in regard to the relations between Europe and Asia."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 25 '25 300w

"Nothing seems to have escaped him. He gives us an essay in a masterly style, with a wealth of allusion, and with a judgment conservative and reassuring." H. K. Norton

+ Int Bk R p514 Jl '25 120w

"This able essay is written by a man who, while a Britisher to the core, has removed himself to the Olympian heights and proceeds to discuss those relations with a detachment and a lack of bias quite out of the ordinary. After a discourse which charms us with its style and its erudition he arrives at the not startling conclusion that the challenge of Asia is political."

+ Nation 121:174 Ag 5 '25 120w

"A very remarkable little book. His analysis of the underlying differences between the European and Asiatic conceptions of life and civilization is singularly impartial. He is acute and fair-minded both in his account of the events leading to the political supremacy of Europe, and in his description of the inevitable reaction."

+ Nation and Ath 37:144 My 2 '25 160w

Reviewed by James Luby
N Y Times p3 My 31 '25 1600w

"The book is not for the beginner in the study of things Asiatic. He will find himself lost between two whirling worlds. But for the man who has learned his way about between the Orient and the Occident, this volume holds the promise of several hours of delightful speculation." Karlene Kent

+ N Y Tribune p11 My 24 '25 530w

Outlook 140:160 My 27 '25 10w

Sat R 139:250 Mr 7 '25 180w

"One might pick flaws in this little book without weakening the force and value of it entire. It is to be read rather for the stimulus it gives to the imagination and to one's impulses; and as one discovers no bias in it, so, it may be hoped, will it leave the reader without a bias." Sydney Greenbie

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:195 O 10 '25 560w

"His table of contents is appetizing, the text is unsatisfactory. There is too much speculation and assertion and too little investigation of the facts. The mixture is too weak and gives little driving power. He never gets to grips with the subjects discussed."

— + Spec 135:837 N 7 '25 60w

"This is a thoughtful and stimulating little book. He sees clearly the fundamental antithesis between religious and social conceptions in the West and in the East, but he is apt to overlook some of the links in his own chain of evidence."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p111 F
19 '25 420w

"This summary of Europe's Asiatic adventure is given with lucidity and with conspicuous fairness. Certain statements, however, will provoke dissent." H. H. Gowen

+ — World Tomorrow 9:27 Ja '26 620w

RICE, STUART ARTHUR. Farmers and workers in American politics. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law)
231p $2.50 Longmans

329 United States—Politics and government
24-29312

"The author, who is now assistant professor of sociology at Dartmouth College, has sought by careful examination of facts to ascertain the probability or improbability of a durable farmer-labor alliance in American politics. The investigation is timely. The facts under examination are the usual public records of political behavior. The writer approaches his subject without bias and applies 'exact methods of analysis.' A large quantity of information is collated, for the several States and for the Federal Government, from which are deduced conclusions as to the attitude toward various measures and policies of farmers and workers respectively. Professor Rice explains with care the precise methods he employs, and he tabulates his results so that other investigators may check them."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by I. Lippincott

Am Econ R 15:95 Mr '25 220w

"The book is a very creditable scientific achievement." H. D. Lasswell

Am J Soc 31:108 Jl '25 240w

"Professor Rice has supplied us with a psychological chart, carefully buoyed by the twenty-seven tables which mark the channels of investigation which he has followed, and equipped with sailing directions for future voyagers—the results of his own soundings. Let us have more charts like this one as aids to a scientific understanding of the group-ways of our Great Society." Phillips Bradley

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:405 My '25 500w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '25 250w

R of Rs 71:111 Ja '25 80w

"Politicians in general and national chairmen in particular may gain useful points on planning campaigns. Counting votes afterwards as brilliantly as Prof Rice has done it here is an excellent way to learn how to count them beforehand in the next election." P. B.

Springf'd Republican p5a S 13 '25 360w

RICE-OLLEY, LEONARD. Oxford renowned.
291p il $6 Doran [18s Methuen]

378.42 Oxford university

Beginning with a discussion of the best ways of getting to Oxford and the arrival there, a graduate and lover of Oxford makes a very complete tour of its colleges and halls, its streets, churches, libraries, inns and taverns, linking the story at every point with English history and literature. Illustrated in color and monotone by A. B. Knapp-Fisher, fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

Boston Transcript p8 N 25 '25 360w

RICE-OXLEY, LEONARD—Continued

"Rather guide-bookish in style and construction, but then it seems mainly intended as a guidebook, so perhaps that can't be helped; and the literary reader will find compensation in the personal, intimate, and ridiculous aspects of Oxford, with which Mr. Rice-Oxley sets off his heavier material." Robert Graves

+ — Nation and Ath 37:735 S 19 '25 1150w

"A very discursive, curious and entertaining book."

+ New Statesman 26:24 O 17 '25 400w

"The casual tourist can never catch the charm of Oxford—her mellowness, her dignity, her immemorial repose; and the casual reader will not exhaust the interest of Mr. Rice-Oxley's chronicle. For it is both a guide-book and in a way, a history."

+ N Y Tribune p14 D 13 '25 350w

RICH, WESLEY EVERETT. History of the United States post office to the year 1829. (Harvard economic studies) 190p $2 Harvard univ. press

383 Postal service—United States. United States. Post-office department 24-22903

"An account of the establishment and development of the post office from colonial times through the early years of the Republic. It contains many interesting side lights upon early American ways of life, history, politics, and economic conditions."—Ind

Am Econ R 15:318 Je '25 200w

Reviewed by J. A. Krout

Hist Outlook 16:86 F '25 300w

Ind 113:241 O 4 '24 40w

R of Rs 70:670 D '24 180w

Reviewed by S. D. Spero

Sat R of Lit 1:306 N 22 '24 950w

"The most thoroughgoing study yet attempted of a subject of piquant interest as well as social importance."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 Ja 16 '25 1450w

"Dr. Rich has written a valuable study."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p211 Mr 26 '25 550w

RICHARDS, IVOR ARMSTRONG. Principles of literary criticism. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 290p $3.75 Harcourt [10s 6d K. Paul]

801 Literary criticism 25-120

"Mr. Richards has sought in this book to strengthen the foundations of critical thought by psychological analysis." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The book is really a psychological treatise on the nature and valuation of the experience of contact with works of art. It is not confined to literature; there are chapters on painting, sculpture and music." (N Y Tribune)

Bookm 61:471 Je '25 70w

"Mr. Richard goes far toward placing criticism on the high plane of duty which it owes to art, but which seems here in America at least to be hardly appreciated."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 16 '25 150w

"Mr Richards' doctrines are eclectic; they are arranged and applied with much deftness, his equipment including not only a keen sense of artistic values, but also a grasp of allied problems, a knowledge of the psychology laboratory, and a gratifying skill at definition."

+ Dial 79:79 Jl '25 150w

"His definitions of pleasure, emotion, memory, attitude, and communication explain many things which, so far as I know, have never been explained so intelligently before. But the heart of his argument is as dead as any other dogma." Mark Van Doren

— + Nation 120:386 Ap 8 '25 550w

"Mr. Richards's book is a crowded one—perhaps too crowded for wholly successful statement, or for what he would term 'communicative efficacy.' On a great many points, and at a good many levels, of his theme, he is illuminating. On the function of rhythm, on the distinction between symbolic and emotive statement, in his destructive analyses of the many divergent views of art which have been held in the past, in his analysis of the mode of thought and its relation to language and art, he is extremely helpful. His difficulty has been in giving, to material so complex and diverse, an arrangement." Conrad Aiken

+ — Nation and Ath 36:585 Ja 24 '25 1300w

"Mr. Richards is erudite and he is intelligent; he makes the courageous attempt to be at the same time scientific and psychological; and he has the great advantage of having at his disposal a knowledge of semantics. His terms are clear, useful, and conveniently few. Whether they would in all items be approved by all psychologists is perhaps immaterial. The lay or literary critic can find here no cause for complaint. His disagreements can profitably be only on matters more general." Conrad Aiken

+ — New Repub 42:102 Mr 18 '25 1350w

"One gets the impression that Mr. Richards might have been a stimulating critic if he had not got lost in psychology. He has got lost chiefly because he forgot the humble truism that criticism is an art." H. E. Woodbridge

— N Y Tribune p8 Ap 5 '25 620w

"Complete and, on the whole, convincing." R. H. E.

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Jl 19 '25 700w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p874 D 18 '24 320w

RICHARDS, LEONORE, and TREAT, NOLA. Tea-room recipes; a book for home makers and tea-room managers. 147p $2 Little

641 Cookery. Restaurants, lunch rooms, etc. 25-10746

The recipes in this book will be useful not only for managers of tea rooms, clubs, etc., but also for home makers entertaining at luncheon and tea.

Booklist 22:16 O '25

Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 200w

"There are so few quantity cookery books of any value on the market that we welcome any new ones—especially we are pleased to have those backed by such experience as 'Tea-Room Recipes.'" R. S. Godfrey

+ J Home Econ 17:459 Ag '25 300w

N Y Times p28 My 24 '25 250w

"'Tea Room Recipes' will appeal, of course, only to a limited public, but as it is quite up to the high standard set by 'Quantity Cookery,' by the same authors, this book will be looked upon with confidence by every member of that special group."

N Y Tribune p8 S 6 '25 180w

Outlook 140:116 My 20 '25 30w

St Louis p34 S '25

Spring'd Republican p10 Jl 1 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

RICHARDSON, MRS ANNA STEESE (SAUSER). Standard etiquette. 557p il $4 Harper

395 Etiquet 25-10900

The book covers very carefully the broad field—at home, in the office, in public—of the correct thing, correctly done.

Reviewed by Ralph Bergengren

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 3 '25 1700w

"It is an eminently practical etiquette book." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p6 Jl 5 '25 2300w

Reviewed by Lettie Gay

N Y Tribune p15 N 8 '25 1350w

N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 120w

"'Standard Etiquette' is written with vigorous common sense and a most practical imagination."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:111 S 5 '25 260w

"The 557 pages of the thick volume are teeming with instruction. The claim on the jacket of its 'unmatched completeness of its information' is borne out by its contents."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 Jl 24 '25 460w

RICHARDSON, ANTHONY. Ransom. 308p $2 Small [7s 6d Constable]

25-12175

"The story of a man who postpones marriage during the pleasures of a vigorous life until the approaching fifties call his attention to a certain incompleteness in his mode of living. The girl he chooses to cheer the middle distances carries the appeal of unsophistication—she is distinctly 'different' from the others he has known. The marriage affords opportunity for an interesting study in opposites and for the expression of a certain amount of sound, worldly wisdom which brings the story well above that of the average novel."—Ind

"What is recorded between the covers of 'Ransom' is true and well worth telling. The author has had an abundance of material to utilize and in many ways his manner of telling the story is excellent." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 26 '25 760w

Ind 115:367 S 26 '25 80w

"It not only interests from the standpoint of a good story, but it fascinates by virtue of its balance and reserved writing that combines well drawn character study, thoughtful and convincing psychology and artistic and forcefully presented situations." E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R D 26 '25 300w

"The Byronic gloom of this master of men, brutal in strength and tender and spoiled in heart, can hardly be taken seriously; there is altogether too much chiaroscuro in his character."

— Nation and Ath 36:690 F 14 '25 220w

"Taken as a whole, the book is one of promise more than of performance; but if it is the work of a young author, still inexperienced in the ways of men and women, then it is one which should seem to indicate exceptional ability in the future."

— + N Y Times p17 D 20 '25 460w

"Those whose sanguine dispositions crave a mood of felicity at the end of a novel doubtless will find fault with 'Ransom'; but to persons affected with a cankerous curiosity about life, whose concern lies not with happy endings, but rather with the ironical relationships of things, it will have the force of an acrid wisdom."

+ — N Y Tribune p12 N 8 '25 350w

"Mr. Richardson knows just how much uplift goes to how much cynicism, and where the sob-stuff ought to come. I see no reason why he should not bestsell with the best; there is scarcely a note of the appeal struck by recent popular favourites that is not already audible in 'Ransom.'" Gerald Gould

Sat R 139:162 F 14 '25 460w

"As he has a good sense of dramatic situation, makes good use of suspense, and keeps a surprise till the last the reader will probably close the book feeling thoroughly satisfied."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 12 '25 200w

RICHARDSON, DOROTHY M. The trap. 240p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Duckworth]

[25-19174]

"In The Trap Miss Dorothy Richardson tells us more about Miriam Henderson: this much more, at most—that she went to share rooms with Miss Holland. That may seem an inadequate amount of incident for more than 200 pages; but it might have been of capital importance. It might have been an occasion for some sort of growth or development or change in Miriam Henderson. It was not. Miriam Henderson in the new surroundings is exactly the same as she always was; and the story of her sharing rooms with Miss Holland might come anywhere in the longish series of books about her."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 22:119 D '25

Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 1200w

"Those who enjoy scrupulous accuracy in psychological detail will find here an adventure much keener than that of Ulysses, and spoil richer than the crude ore mined with such difficulty by our native explorers." B. D.

New Repub 44:264 O 28 '25 100w

"Miss Richardson says plenty of witty things, and some that are better than witty; but they are incidental; and the general effect is of much ado about little." P. C. Kennedy

— + New Statesman 25:229 Je 6 '25 150w

"Like most of the seven other volumes of the apparently interminable series to which it belongs; Dorothy Richardson's new novel may be summed up as much ado about very little, if not quite about nothing."

— N Y Times p9 Ag 30 '25 600w

"James Joyce and Marcel Proust have a largeness of conception beyond Miss Richardson's, but in execution her novels are the most perfect of the three. She has developed a method of presentation of the material of consciousness that is as precise and flawless, as completely a joy to read as the very different method of Jane Austen. Each new volume of her series is a delight and a necessity to all who savor this method." Ruth Suckow

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 22 '25 1300w

"No, it is not exactly tedium that closes in on one's mind as the last page is turned, but a painfully growing suspicion that Miss Richardson has no definite knowledge of where she is leading us. And by now this is becoming a serious complaint. Eight times now we have been left in midair. A ninth stage, marked 'Oberland,' is promised us. But nine, nineteen, ninety, what does it matter if we are left with nothing but a distant glimpse of the Waste Land?" Hamish Miles

— Sat R of Lit 2:135 S 19 '25 850w

"A thousand more books about her, and still there can be nothing new, nothing even more or less than it was. For Miriam herself is nothing but the screen. And Miss Dorothy Richardson, who invented this method of storytelling, has already exhausted its possibilities."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p293 Ap 30 '25 350w

RICHARDSON, EDWIN HAUTONVILLE.

Watch-dogs; their training and management. 3rd ed 280p il $3 Houghton

636.7 Dogs—Training

[24-20957]

An expert of many years' experience writes of the training of dogs for mantrucking, house protection, life-saving, and for war, police and messenger service. Chapters on the care and feeding, breeding and kennelling of dogs, are included.

"The training and management of dogdom will excite fanciers, as well as some others who will enjoy the author's 'buttonhole' style."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 8 '25 80w

"The author's information is so wide and varied and he writes with so much skill and charm that any lover of dogs will find his book fascinating."

+ N Y Times p24 Je 14 '25 460w

RICHET, CHARLES ROBERT. Idiot man; or, ² The follies of mankind; [L'homme stupide]; tr. by Norah Forsythe and Lloyd Harvey. 172p $2 Brentano's [7s 6d Laurie]

151 Inefficiency, Intellectual. Superstition. War [25-25017]

"A noted scientist, Professor Richet, attempts to prove in this slender volume that mankind is not only far more stupid than the animals, but more cruel, and wholly detestable besides." (Lit R) "He collects the obvious imbecilities of mankind—their wars, their self-poisonings with drugs and stimulants and opiates, their religious fears and follies, all the cowardly, stupid, imbecile things that men do, and then announces smugly—'animals do not do these things.'" (Ind)

"Dr. Charles Richet should, under more favorable auguries, have had something more important to say and should have said it more effectively. If his thesis in 'Idiot Man' is likely to raise the loud laugh that speaks the vacant reader, the reaction may perhaps be traced to the fact that he has chosen to rehearse the many faults of Homo Stultus without benefit either of wit or of humor, thus depriving himself and his book of the honors accruing to those who have touched these same weaknesses in another literary mood, whether with or without the deadly poisons of irony and satire."

— Bookm 62:348 N '25 220w

Boston Transcript p3 D 26 '25 300w

"M. Richet has written a fundamentally stupid book rather brilliantly and very plausibly. He is wrong on almost every page."

— + Ind 115:364 S 26 '25 180w

"When Professor Richet begins to enroll our follies he is quite convincing, but here and there he errs on the side of overstatement, which is peculiarly unfortunate, since it is so entirely unnecessary. A bitter dose like this is needed occasionally—we stand too close to our follies and they are too interwoven with our emotions for us to realize our idiocy until it is so definitely pointed out to us." Herschel Brickell

— + Lit R p4 S 19 '25 200w

"Professor Richet was doubtless suffering from a prolonged fit of ill-temper when he wrote L'Homme Stupide, now accessible to younger people of like feeling in this translation—twenty-three brief chapters of violent protest and abuse. All true, of course, and pathetically obvious. But not worth a Richet's while."

— New Statesman 25:350 J1 4 '25 150w

"Professor Richet scolds us unmercifully, calls us all the insulting names he can lay his scientific tongue to, lets loose the vials of his scorn and contempt upon our futile heads and unregulated bodies; but he makes amends to a degree by saying he is no reformer, that he has no hope or plan of transforming us into the image of what he would have us." H. I. Brock

N Y Times p5 S 6 '25 1300w

"Dr. Richet might well have restrained his desire to write a book on the follies of mankind, since he evidently does not possess even the rudiments of the satiric gift necessary to an effective treatment of the subject. He utilizes the medium of the common scold."

— N Y Tribune p12 D 27 '25 180w

"He writes simply and clearly. He castigates mercilessly, but without the delusion that his physiological Jeremiahs will exorcise the devils of stupidity. He is consistent, for he does not believe that Idiot Man will alter his conduct of thirty centuries because one M. Richet has written a book. He has neither hope nor faith, yet does not depress us." H. S.

— + N Y World p4m S 13 '25 650w

"One does not look for either melodrama or sentimentality in the dissertations of a Nobel Prize winner in Physiology (Professor Richet received this award in 1913), but the entire cast, content, and manner of the present volume, Professor Richet's evaluation of human intelligence, is melodramatic and sentimental. The only exception to be taken to this general statement is an admission that a certain mass effectiveness has been occasionally achieved, as in the chapter on War, where the materials at hand were such as would lend themselves for impressive presentation to any person of imagination."

Adrian Richet

— + Sat R of Lit 2:316 N 21 '25 550w

"This book ought to be depressing, being a catalogue of human ineptitudes; but it is, in fact, rather stimulating. This is because Professor Richet, on holiday from his physiological laboratory and the sobriety of scientific method, is obviously enjoying himself thoroughly."

Spec 134:1059 Je 27 '25 160w

RICHMOND BROWN, LADY. See Brown, Lilian Mabel Alice (Roussel), lady.

RICHMOND, GRACE LOUISE (SMITH) (MRS NELSON GUERNSEY RICHMOND). Red of the Redfields. 314p $2 Doubleday

24-29828

"The story opens when Dr. R. P. Burns, alias 'Red Pepper Burns,' receives a letter from a friend requesting him to find a reliable family with whom to lodge a certain young man, Felix Rowe by name, a youth suffering from a peculiar malady that defies analysis, an apathy so thoroughgoing that he apparently does not care whether he lives or dies. In response to his friend's appeal, 'Red Pepper' duly installs the unfortunate Mr. Rowe with his cousin, Marcia Redfield; and, since nothing in the world apparently matters to the ailing youth, he takes up his abode with the Redfields as indolently as he does everything else in life. But no one becomes very gravely concerned about him, as he has expected and perhaps hoped; and in the course of time a change sets in, and Felix finds himself on the road back to the normal. It must be admitted that Marcia's young daughter, 'Rusty,' is not entirely unconnected with the sick man's eventual recovery."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:199 F '25

"Nothing in the whole book seems to strike a forced or hollow note, and yet everywhere through it there lurked temptation for an author of lesser skill to have waxed sentimental and over-sweet." E. C. Beckwith

— + Lit R p9 Ja 10 '25 380w

"The book makes good reading and is entirely wholesome and unobjectionable in subject-matter even if none too original in theme."

— + N Y Times p17 D 21 '24 470w

Sat R of Lit 1:514 F 7 '25 300w

RICHMOND, LEONARD, and LITTLEJOHNS, JOHN. Technique of water-colour painting. 73p il $6 (21s) Pitman

751 Water-color painting

The authors tell how to obtain certain results in water colour painting. The various methods and experiments described in the text are illustrated in color plates, and there are other illustrations from paintings by the two artist-authors.

"Well printed and illustrated with handsome color pages."

— + School Arts M 25:320 Ja '26 80w

"Severely practical. For what it sets out to do the book can be recommended, though there is always a risk in introducing the young student to 'recipes.' He is apt to rely on them for easy effects instead of mastering the general principles of drawing and painting."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p863 D 10 '25 200w

RICHMOND, MARY ELLEN, and HALL, FREDERICK SMITH. Child marriages. 159p $1.50 Russell Sage foundation

347.6 Children—Charities, protection, etc. Marriage 25-7572

Miss Richmond brings out the fact of the surprising number of child marriages in the United States and discusses their social causes, the marriage laws of different states and the matter of parental consent.

"The study is a section of a larger investigation of marriage law administration. It undoubtedly throws light on the deficiencies of legislation and wide-spread laxness in administration. It suggests needed reforms. It will therefore be valuable to various classes of social workers." A. B. Wolfe

+ Am Econ R 15:778 D '25 200w

Booklist 21:362 J1 '25

"This suggestive report does not claim to be conclusive, but it covers several years of investigation into the marriage of minors. The results, while treated in a wholly unemotional way, will startle and astound all who have been inclined to question the need of restrictions in this direction." A. C. Dimock

J Home Econ 17:459 Ag '25 520w

"The best book yet written on the subject and the beginning of what will probably be our best treatise on the subject of better marriage laws."

+ J Religion 5:447 J1 '25 30w

"It would help to get more readers for their findings if they would drop the meagre, report-like form affected in this study and produce a book with imagination in it. Miss Richmond has proved in other works that she can write. In the name of needed social reform, let her do it." W. D. Lane

N Y Tribune p10 My 31 '25 650w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 10w

St Louis p339 S '25

"Anything which helps to stabilize and harmonize our shifting views about 'a child' in terms of rights, responsibilities, claims for protection, and social investment is more than welcome." N. R. Deardorff

+ Survey 54:456 J1 15 '25 760w

Wis Lib Bul 21:192 J1 '25

World Tomorrow 8:286 S '25 80w

RICHMOND, WINIFRED. Adolescent girl; a book for parents and teachers. 212p $1.25 Macmillan

136.7 Girls. Adolescence 25-11332

"The Adolescent Girl is based largely upon actual clinical studies. In addition to a touch of history, and of the more commonly treated phenomena of puberty and of the succeeding adolescent years of girlhood, the book is distinctive for the following facts: it uses and applies with restraint, and with consequent effectiveness, the more assured results of the psycho-analytic school; it undertakes to discover what is normal in girlhood by way of studies of abnormal and delinquent girls,—again with necessary restraint and correction; and it recognizes that the difficulties of the girl in making her adjustments effectively are always largely emotional in character."—World Tomorrow

"Dr. Richmond has handled skillfully the difficulties presented by her purpose of making a short and popular exposition of the most important of these problems. Without much doubt the result, although so well informed in the matter of modern psychology and so skillfully done, will be somewhat bewildering to the average mother and father of girls already a bit dazed by the difficulties of the situation."

+ — N Y Times p16 J1 26 '25 600w

N Y Tribune p11 D 13 '25 350w

"An organized campaign to get such a book read by thousands of men and women might well be made a definite part of a social work program in the American community."

+ Survey 55:265 N 15 '25 100w

"A very timely and wisely written book." T. W. Galloway

+ World Tomorrow 8:313 O '25 280w

RIDEOUT, HENRY MILNER. Dulcarnon. 230p $1.50 Duffield

25-17153

Dan Towers finds the man he has crossed the world to seek disguised as a jute spinner in an Indian jail. A small gold key is passed to him with the whispered instructions to go to Mayaganj and wait. There in an empty bungalow near the Maharajah's palace Runa joins him and explains his dangerous enterprise. He is searching for the missing Maharajah's gold. An old copy of Chaucer furnishes a cryptic clue to the treasure, and the search for it furnishes mystery and excitement for the friends.

Booklist 22:164 Ja '26

"What he has done and what he probably tried to do is to give us some sound and well-considered writing in a tale which will live its day with honor and whose day will be a little longer because it is a well and capably written book."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 21 '25 460w

"A fine, improbable, exciting yarn concerning a treasure hunt in India with its plots and counterplots and its unravelings of mysteries."

+ Ind 115:304 S 12 '25 60w

"The lack of exciting complications in the story may be due to the enervating Indian climate. It is really too hot for red-blooded action. There is the constant feeling of dank, steaming heat, tropical rains, fever and ruin, mildew and decay."

N Y Times p25 Ag 30 '25 500w

"'Dulcarnon' is one of his best adventures in the fairland of the Orient which still has plenty of romantic glamour and more tangible loot for those who can find." H. W. Boynton

+ Outlook 141:126 S 23 '25 180w

RIDER, ARTHUR FREMONT, ed. Rider's California; a guide-book for travelers; comp. under the general editorship of [the author], by Frederic Taber Cooper. 667p $5 Macmillan 917.94 California—Description and travel

25-20713

This very complete and detailed guide to California contains, in addition to the usual guide-book material, much general and historical information. The editors have also been able to draw on most useful manuscript material concerning routes, new roads, trails, camping places, etc. There are 28 maps and a full index.

Booklist 22:157 Ja '26

"Over 600 pages in length, exclusive of the long index, this is probably the most detailed and well-mapped guide to California ever issued. More than 100 pages are devoted to San Francisco alone."

+ Outlook 141:489 N 25 '25 180w

R of Rs 72:666 D '25 100w

"It is as concise as Baedeker, and enriched with historical comment that is intelligent and well selected. It seems to be accurate, and is excellently up to date. The introduction is useful and the book as a whole most satisfactory."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:485 Ja 9 '26 150w

Springf'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 180w

RIESENBERG, FELIX. Bob Graham at sea. 337p il $2.50 Harcourt

25-17065

"This tale presents a complete account of a boy's training on the schoolship Newport from the bewildering day of examination to the proud moment of signaling 'Full Speed Ahead' as Junior Fourth Officer on a giant liner. Bob Graham, a high minded youth from Up State, is the hero upon whom one can rely for everything from making post of honor on the first cutter to defending a seasick pal against the pork-and-string hazing of a senior bully."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:123 D '25

RIESENBERG, FELIX—Continued

"Bob Graham, the hero, is simply the arch-boy of all boys' books, and the tale is almost without a vestige of plot. What carries it along and makes it readable is its genuineness; it has the proper tang of the sea. A good, straightforward, simple book which will be relished by youngsters clever enough to distinguish between a love for sea adventure and a love for the sea. A sailor's book, this, for a sailor-minded boy." H: Boston

+ Ind 115:350 S 26 '25 160w

"Its lack of a land-lubber's trimmings, its non-hysterical but truly visualized description of a hurricane, its variegated lingo, in which some land slang mingles with phraseology distinctive of the seaman, its background of sea comprehension—these make of it a book that is manifestly sincere." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p746 O '25 220w

N Y World p7m N 8 '25 40w

"It is rather an uneven book, becoming at times, almost as instructive as the 'Rollos.' It is in his narrative of the sea and sailing that the author is at his best and there are chapters vividly exciting and full of Dana-esque charm."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:283 N 7 '25 420w

RIESENBERG, FELIX, P. A. L., a novel of the American scene. 340p $2 McBride

25-18063

Pal is a financial wizard, the sort of man who pulls a full-fledged business out of a silk hat, or snatches gilt-edged investments from the air. His secretary records these feats of financial legerdemain understanding how they are done as little as the man who does them, but bewildered, fascinated and repelled by him in turn. These skyscraper enterprizes built on buncombe are foredoomed to crash, and when they topple their ruin is spectacular and complete.

"The idea behind Mr. Riesenbergs' book is a splendid one. It would make a good play. In a play possibly the author could think of a better climax. The book as it stands today is about one hundred pages too long." D. F. G.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 N 7 '25 700w

"One of the year's worst books. Described in the official blurb as 'an American "Tono Bungay".' It has no relation whatever to reality, no genuine feeling for life."

— Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 50w

"In 'P. A. L.' the author of 'Under Sail' has penned the saga of money-mad America. The scenes he depicts, no less than his methods of depicting them, are often daringly realistic. His detractors—and he will have detractors—will find themselves forced to read the book through to the end." H. A. Jaggard

+ — Lit R p10 N 28 '25 300w

N Y Times p24 D 20 '25 820w

"Marakoff-Markham is at his best in the earlier pages, when to his nautical and alien eyes Tangerman and his fellow citizens appear utterly strange and thus with outlines of Swifitian clearness. This telling contrast, together with the satirical method connoted, disappears as the narrator takes on the color, though not the character, of his surroundings. In the end, the erstwhile Russian is a smart business man himself, which might well be a part of the satire."

+ N Y Tribune p14 Ja 3 '26 250w

"There is vigor and suspense in Mr. Riesenbergs' book. Tangerman, it is to be suspected, will take his place beside Babbitt in that gallery of modern American types that will some day become figures of mythology. By which no comparison is intended." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y World p4m O 4 '25 920w

"This might better be called 'Bunk.' It deals with every species of humbug by exploitation. The satire would be keener if there were less exaggeration and more discrimination."

— + Outlook 141:676 D 30 '25 80w

"Without producing a great novel or even doing anything notable as a writer Mr. Riesenbergs has turned out a book that I think nearly anyone would read with pleasure. It is a document well worth the honest toil and keen thought so lavishly invested in it by the author." C. T. Crowell

+ Sat R of Lit 2:491 Ja 16 '26 900w

RIGNANO, EUGENIO. Social significance of the inheritance tax; tr. and adapted by William J. Shultz; with an introd. by Edwin R. A. Seligman. 128p $1.75 Knopf

336.2 Inheritance tax

24-29098

In the introduction to this little volume the translator defines Professor Rignano's position thus: "Professor Rignano contends that while all the property acquired by an individual during his life and by his own exertions should be virtually free from taxation, that part of the estate which he has inherited from someone else should be subject to heavy taxation. By increasing the rate according to the degree or time of acquisition, the result would be an automatic turning over to the government of a continually increasing fund of capital." This will tend to strengthen the laboringman's incentive to work, to save and to accumulate, thereby advancing the material and social welfare of the laboring class and of the nation.

"Every one should read this suggestive work before condemning it. To the present reviewer the central thesis appears sound and desirable, economically and socially." R. G. Blakey

+ Am Econ R 15:145 Mr '25 900w

"The device has difficulties enough; yet any plan of this sort offered to the American public with even the carefully guarded blessing of as wise and cautious a scholar as Professor Seligman deserves the attention of that great body of students who wish to preserve the benefits of private management and initiative and who yet realize the incompatibility of political democracy with cumulative economic inequality." H: R. Mussey

+ — Nation 121:389 O 7 '25 250w

"Translation of a work by an Italian economist that has attracted much attention in Europe. For larger libraries."

Wis Lib Bul 21:228 O '25

RIMINGTON, FRANK C. Motor rambles through France. 250p il $5 Houghton [15s Constable]

914.4 France—Description and travel

[25-21432]

The record of a leisurely motor trip across France from Monte Carlo to Dieppe and from Boulogne to Grenoble, then back to Nice along the earlier route reversed. The author describes the country traversed, giving especial attention to the famous old cathedrals on the way. There is a concluding chapter on "French mediaeval architecture" by the Rev G. H. West.

Booklist 22:114 D '25

"Delightful, ambling tales of travel."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 17 '25 140w

"As a whole the book is a delightful trip with an opinionated but interesting guide. Those who have motored through this country and those who plan such a trip should especially enjoy it. Many, of course, will only accompany the author vicariously—thanking him for being a gracious and charming host and companion."

+ N Y Times p11 S 20 '25 550w

"Mr. Rimington proves himself an entertaining and illuminating guide to the French countryside in this account of his leisurely hastening along historic roads."

+ N Y Tribune p14 O 11 '25 120w

Sat R of Lit 2:144 S 19 '25 150w

"Mr. Rimington writes with gusto and charm on Romanesque and Gothic architecture, though nothing will induce him to bestow a kindly word on the finest specimens of Renaissance. Mrs. Rimington's illustrations in colour have considerable charm, and the photographs are good."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p306 My 7 '25 420w

RINEHART, MARY (ROBERTS) (MRS STANLEY MARSHALL RINEHART). Red lamp. 317p $2 Doran

25-16602

"'The Red Lamp' begins, as so many mystery stories do, with a murder in the library, and goes on through spiritualism, dark hints of Black Magic, suggestions of infra-red rays, the spilling of animal blood, the characteristic cross-currents of suspicion involving the innocent, and hair-raising incidents in a haunted house."—Lit R

"In playing the game of cat-and-mouse, Mrs. Rinehart has few equals. Her book kept one reader sitting up almost all night, and that she would probably consider an excellent test of its quality." R. M. Gay

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '25 660w

Booklist 22:35 O '25

"The most remarkable feature of The Red Lamp is the style in which it is written. All of it is in the words of one William A. Porter, a professor of English literature and a gentleman of considerable culture and poise. And after reading a few pages one becomes immersed in this delightful personality, this man of quiet taste and whimsy who finds himself involved suddenly in an extraordinary adventure. Reading the book through, I found not one single word or phrase that would not satisfy a purist, nor any deviation from the integrity of the character."

+ Bookm 61:xx Ag '25 460w

"The best mystery story I have ever read, and it is more than that; it contains at least one of its author's finest characterizations, that of Professor William A. Porter."

+ Bookm 62:75 S '25 350w

"With her gleanings from East and West she can no longer write only one or the other. With her versatility there is nothing she cannot do next. We await results with enthusiasm. Meanwhile we enjoy this." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 19 '25 1450w

"A first-class piece of writing and the characters are wonderfully drawn and true to life."

+ Cath World 122:286 N '25 140w

